THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 1. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY M. W. BENNETT. | New York, Saturday, January 6, 1883. | NO. 21 CLINTON PLACE, NEAR BROADWAY. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

One of the professors in a medical college in Philadelphia, in a lecture, told his students that "nearly all of the leading scientific minds of the day are Materialists."

How these Christians love one another! The sexton of Romsey, England, church refused recently to toll the knell for the corpse of a dissenter. Even in death they are divided.

Dr. Yates, of Shanghai, says the Chinese pay $155,752,000 annually to quiet the spirits of their ancestors. It would be a more economical method to allow the spirits an opportunity to be heard.

The poet John G. Saxe, now livs in Albany with his son, and is a helpless sufferer from neuralgia and dyspepsia. It is denied that his mental strength is impaired, or that he is suffering from softening of the brain.

A good story is told of Talmage. While away from home recently he felt ill and called a strange physician. After a long examination he was advised to "exercise his lungs!" This is equalled only by the counsel of the doctor who advised a letter-carrier to walk more.

One of the pillars of a Wisconsin Baptist church has been tried on the charge of irreligious conduct in attending a negro minstrel performance. He was let off with a reprimand, as he started for a temperance lecture, got into the wrong hall, and his carnal delight overcame his moral scruples.

The Rev. Alfred J. Bray, pastor of the Second Congregational church of Montreal, has followed Mr. Beecher's example by making a formal declaration of his disbelief in the Trinity, as it was explained in the Athanasian créed or as laid down in the Westminster Confession, and in eternal punishment.

The sultan of Turkey has had an armored carriage built, proof against bullets and hand-bombs. His majesty had a trial of the carriage a few days since; but before trusting himself in it he had it taken to pieces in his presence and put together again, in order to assure himself that no diabolical engins were concealed between its plates. It is a great privilege to be a sultan and commander of the faithful.

A half-ton hog was raffled for at Womelsdorf, Pa. Two thousand tickets were sold, and among the purchasers were deacons, Sunday school superintendents, a judge, two pastors, and many children. A justice of the peace presided over the dice, the throwing of which lasted two days and nights, and drew a multitude from several counties. Lager beer, card and pool tables, and various side shows were kept running during these proceedings.

The Central Baptist thinks there are "too many wasps in the Lord's vinyard." This may be so, but still it is better to be a wasp in the vinyard of the Lord than a bumblebee in the hayfield of the ungodly. And again, however deplorable the fact, it is more gratifying to the editor of the Central Baptist that the wasps should be in the Lord's vinyard rather than up the leg of his (the editor's) trousers. There is a world of Christian consolation in the thought.

We hav come across a copy of the examination-paper pupil-teachers of the first and second year in the Winchester Diocesan Inspection. One question is very funny—"Giv instances of David's tenderness, piety, and love for his people." David's tenderness was shown to other men's wives. As for the husbands, he burked them. Witness the cases of Nabal and Uriah. His tenderness toward his own wife, who foolishly saved his life on one occasion, was shown in his cursing her for being a modest woman. His piety was shown in dancing indecently before the ark. His love for his people was shown in his getting seventy thousand of them killed by profanely taking a census. If these answers do not suffice we can giv more. We should really like to compete in a good Bible examination, and we fancy we should get the first prize, if our paper didn't kill all the examiners.—Freethinker.

The suggestion that on account of "intellectual and physical fitness" women should be employed as pharmacists is not favored by medical journals. One of them states that as women "will talk while doing business" they are unfitted for pharmacy or other work requiring concentration of thought and mental isolation. But it should be borne in mind that women are filling with credit to themselvs positions for which, ten years ago, they were presumed to be wholly unfitted.

The Neue Ereie Presse published the following communication, addressed by Victor Hugo to the emperor of Austria, seeking a reprieve of the sentence of Overdank, the Trieste conspirator: "Paris, Dec. 12th. I hav received within two days eleven telegrams from the universities and academies of Italy. All of them implore that the life of a condemned man may be spared. The emperor of Austria has an opportunity of performing an action of mercy. Let him sign that pardon, and he will show himself magnanimous. Victor Hugo."

A Methodist church was opened to the Salvation army at London, Canada, and the pastor., with several other ministers, occupied seats on the platform. The captain, who was a woman, announced at the outset that the meeting was for "blood and fire experience," and the section of the army present made the occasion extremely lively. Three speakers made remarks disapproving of this manner of carrying on revival work, but their voices were drowned by vociferous singing. The pastor said that the church had been placed at the disposal of these evangelists, and that the captain must be allowed to conduct the meeting in her own way, however odd it might appear. A riot seemed imminent until policemen were brought in, after which the army concluded what they called "a hallelujah time." One detachment of the Salvation army meditates an East Indian campaign, and the Mohammedans are activly organizing for a combat.

That old Bible and pistol story seems to hav a new boom this fall, and it is with the utmost reluctance that we aim a blow at the venerable tradition by the following cold statement of facts. It seems that a young Deadwood City miner named Hogdon was in the habit of frequently reading from a hymn-book, the gift of his mother, which he almost invariably carried in the breast-pocket of his coat. One day last week, while said garment was hanging on a bush at a little distance, a party, familiar to the reader as the typical bold, bad man, came by, appropriated the coat, and impudently put it on at once. As it contained all the exemplary youth's money, as well as the hymn-book in question, a fight was inevitable, and both men opened fire without loss of time. The bullet that should hav killed the thief lodged in the hymn-book, and enabled the desperado to walk off with a sacrilegious grin on his wicked countenance. The good young man was killed as dead as Guiteau. Now what are the writers of Sunday-school books going to do about this entire new deal?—Argonaut.

The annual report of the Board of Directors of City Trusts of Philadelphia and the superintendent of the Girard estate shows that the estate is in a prosperous condition. The estate comprises the grounds and buildings occupied by Girard College, valued at $2,888,974.88; banking houses, dwellings, stores, wharves, and farms in the city, assessed at $3,734,900; real estate in Schuylkill and Columbia counties, assessed at $1,511,917, and other property valued at $9,529,204.92. These compose the residuary fund. In addition to this there is a legacy fund from the estate of Lawrence Todd of Illinois, for Girard College, amounting to $45,065.92. The financial report of the estate shows that the receipts, with a balance on Jan. 1, 1882, of $91,512.20, amounted to $1,022,807.96; expenditures of estate, $526,295.58; of college, $567,799.45; leaving a balance in the treasury on Dec. 31, 1882, of $28,712.93. The college now contains 1,110 pupils, with 532 applicants for admission. Nothing is said in the report about the crowning outrage of the management, which by a disgraceful perversion of Girard's will permits the teaching of theology in the college which he founded and so munificently endowed.

In a Cincinnati law-case three judges hav decided that "damn" is a profane word, and that therefore the Telephone Co. was justified in "plugging" the communication of A. H. Pugh, who, according to the testimony of several veracious witnesses, had been guilty of sending that word over the wires. A fourth judge, however, dissented from the view taken by the previous three, and held that "damn" was not profane, according to either the Decalog, common law, statute law, or dictionary. He admitted that it was a "pretty violent adjectiv," but it was certainly not "profane." He also took the higher ground that what the court was to consider was not what is "good taste," or what is "profane," but "What are the rights of the parties?" When the insignificance of the word "damn" is taken into consideration, together with the fact that a man may as well be damned as blessed for all the harm or good it will do him, the absurdity of the whole discussion becomes apparent. The case should hav been hooted out of court, and the Telephone Company obliged to perform the offices for which it was chartered and for which it is paid.

Frank Wilkeson, a correspondent of the New York Sun, writing from St. Helena's Island, a parish in East Louisiana, has this to say of the colored men of God in the South: "The preachers plant a little patch of cotton, and then, leaving their families to tend the crop, they hitch their horses to their buggies and ride around pastorally visiting women whose husbands they know to be at work in distant fields, or absent at the phosphate fisheries, or at the gin houses. These preachers manage to sponge one or two meals every day off of their poor parishioners. Wherever they feed they debauch the wives or daughters of the men whose food they hav eaten. They hav no understanding of things political; but, with the confidence that belongs to ignorance and stupidity, they never fail to advise the negroes how to vote. They constantly interfere in the bargains made between the negroes and the men owning the gin houses. They talk fairly to the faces of the white men, and then lie about them to the blacks. They are a dangerous, unscrupulous class, and they tend to degrade the colored race." It would seem from this that what is true of the colored preachers in the South is not entirely inapplicable to some of their white brethren farther north.

Very interesting were the statements recently made before the California Academy of Science concerning the discovery of enormous human footprints in a sandstone hill at Carson City, Nevada. It was in quarrying out this hill that the tracks were discovered, in a deposit of shale underlying the sandstone. At the time the tracks were made the shale was mud—soft mud; and there are also tracks of mammoth and other creatures in the same place. The supposition is that these tracks represent an ancient pathway to a lake-shore, where beasts were wont to resort for water, and where ferocious primitiv hunters doubtless waited for them. But the remarkable thing is that the human feet which made these marks wore sandals—sandals nineteen inches long, six inches wide at the heel, and eight at the middle of the sole. The date of the tracks is supposed to be pliocene or quaternary. The European scientists who assign an antiquity of 450,000 years to man will no doubt hav been greatly impressed by this announcement. If the tracks prove pliocene, their antiquity must be prodigious. Geology has not, indeed, yet been able to trace back the history of man beyond a certain point with absolute certainty; but it has discovered that his existence in Europe no doubt antedated the last glacial epoch, which occurred some 240,000 years ago.

News of the Week.

Happy New Year!

The Earl of Wemyss and March, England, died on the 1st.

Alfred C. Chapin is Democratic nominee for speaker under Cleveland.

The Truth Seeker's new dress is of the latest and most approved type.

The Jesuits driven from France hav established themselvs in considerable numbers in Turkey.

Governor Cleveland of this state, and Mayor Edson, of this city, went into office on Monday.

Count Von Wimpffen, Austro-Hungarian embassador at Paris, committed suicide on the 30th ult.

Arabi, the unsuccessful Egyptian rebel, who was sentenced to banishment to Ceylon for life, embarked for that island on the 27th ult.

It has been noticed at post-office stations in New York that there was a marked falling off in Christmas business this year, both in packages sent by mail and in postal orders.

The Rev. S. H. Desbon, for thirty-five years rector of a church in Meridan, Conn., died Monday from blood poisoning caused by an ulcerated tooth extracted a few days before.

The czardom of Russia is said to begin the New Year under the most distressing financial condition. Prophecies that the goverment will go down are freely indulged in about St. Petersburg.

A large cannon filled with powder and stones was fired at the Reformed Evangelical church of Reading, Pa., on News Year's night, staving in the front wall and shattering most of the window-panes.

Mayor Grace has refused to authorize the performance of the Passion Play, founded on the life and death of Christ. This is another triumph for bigotry. When will the world see the the last one?

A large convocation of Buddhist priests was held in the famous temple of Kayasan in the province of Kii, Japan, for the purpose of abolishing the ancient rule forbidding the clergy to marry or eat flesh meat.

The term of office of the Hon. Samuel Colley, mayor of Salem, Mass., expired at 12 o'clock on Monday, the 1st. Two hours later his lifeless body was hanging in a chamber in the house of his daughter. He had committed suicide.

Two young men of Salt Lake City went out with pistols to fight a duel, but threw away their fire-arms and fought the battle with fists. Both were badly used up, but their example in substituting fists for pistols is worth the emulation of duelists generally.

Judge Elisha Allen, dean of the diplomatic corps, and Hiwaiian minister, paid his respects to President Arthur on the 1st, retired to the cloak room, and fell dying upon the floor as he was putting on his overcoat. In a few moments life was extinct.

New Year's Day was remarkable for being more like a day in April than in January. It was celebrated in this city by an immense amount of horn-blowing, bell-ringing, call-making, liquor-drinking and other practices peculiar to our advanced civilization.

Oscar Wilde, the apostle of beauty and esthetics, has returned to England, leaving the people of this country in much doubt whether his visit here benefited any body but himself or not. There is also considerable uncertainty existing as to what "esthetics" means any way.

M. Leon Gambetta, the French statesman and journalist, died on the morning of the 1st. He had been barrister, deputy, president of the chamber, and premier of France. He was accounted the foremost politician of France and perhaps of all Europe. As a statesman he was radical and uncompromising. In religion he was a Rationalist. His age was 44 years.

In Memoriam.

Encomium.

Paine, by his unwavering fidelity to freedom, earned the homage of a world. Thoreau's reply to the question why he was behind prison bars comprehends glory sufficient to redeem the race. The name of DeRobigne Mortimer Bennett, by his vindication of the cardinal principles of our republic, incurring the harsh penalties of a brutal law, is preserved in the salvatory of the gratitude of millions. Other names familiar blaze and scintillate upon the scroll of honor, through a defense of the conception of the right, and sacrifice of personal feelings to the cause of liberty.

Deeds such as these are the imperativ want of humanity. The silvery tongue of oratory, giving a pleasing coloring to ideas, clothing beautiful thought in beautiful language, charm the sense and excite admiration; but the surpassing eloquence of heroic acts strikes the key-note of a higher civilization, and vibrates with entrancing cadence upon the ear of coming generations. The test of worth is the sacrifices we make, and the people, seldom wanting in just discrimination, estimate accordingly. Our subject—Mr. Bennett—may be safely weighed in the balance. He knew—none knew better than he—the post of duty was no sinecure; that to toil, sweat, and grow weary was the stipulation. Accepting the advice of Hercules, inconsiderate of self-preservation, he plunged into the mire with ungloved hands, put his shoulder to the wheel, and in the briefest space accomplished what supplication never could. Understanding the demand of the present was for completeness, considering that nothing was done while aught was left undone, he attested his sincerity by uniquely practicing his own precepts. Baring his brow to the scorching heat of summer, the cutting blasts of winter, fearless of the contamination of proletarian contact, abnegation his watchword, with firm, unfaltering tread he marched toward his ultimate of universal emancipation.

Honored for his intrepidity, trusted for his integrity, the sheen of his spear was the beacon of hosts of followers. Brave and gallant leader that he was, he dared every danger, threw himself into the thickest and hottest of the contest, and died in armor. Like a true soldier "he never drew his sword without cause, nor sheathed it without honor." Though frank, ingenuous, generous almost to a fault, by popularity made invidious, he was assailed by vindictivness and vituperation. "Stabbed while helpless!" When the opportunity came, believing in the law of retaliation as well as reciprocity, he returned sting for sting, and made his foes know that "they who wield may sometimes feel the rod."

In his writings he has bequeathed a priceless legacy. There he is to be found in his best estate; there in his mental and moral superiority best defined. In his books may be traced that nobility which make true greatness. To the readers they disclose that he was refined, esthetic, cultivated, investigating, discriminating, analytical. Could they be universally read and understood, the song of liberation from the bondage of ignorance might be heard from every shore.

His views with regard to a continued existence, cheering, solacing, opportune, reveal deep thought and an unbounded confidence in the capabilities of nature—neither Spiritualism nor Materialism, but a harmonious blending, demanding a name that should forever reconcile the differences. We make a few extracts from an extract: "Having then received such proofs as convince us that intelligences disconnected with physical or crude bodies do exist, we hav been led by degrees to believe that there is a domain in the universe peopled with beings invisible to us, but nevertheless having an existence as really as we hav, and as really as all the unseen matter and forces we know do exist. We hav gradually come to believe that our existence is dual, that this is the rudimental, and that the ultimate is beyond." Again: "Grand and glorious as the universe is in its crude and more tangible forms of existence, the recognition of the possibility of a continued life for man exalts and enlarges its grandeur and gloriousness immensely. In fact, this may be considered the grandest and sublimest part of the infinit whole, and we embrace the belief or theory with undisguised satisfaction." These words are hope, the aureole of life, the divinity within speaking to the humanity without. They assist us in dissociating the dead from their dark repository and contemplating them joyous and exalted in the purer spheres of possibility. Write them, you who are burying your loved ones, in gems that glitter, and encircle in burnished gold.

But whatever disposition nature has made of that transcendent intellect, that supreme "thinking principle," with us she has left the souvenir of his remains. Every particle of earth that covers them is consecrated earth. Above them should be raised a cenotaph that would touch the sky. Mr. Bennett gave himself to the people. With open arms the people received him, in close embrace the people hold him. At once with the dead and with the living, his name is spoken with a throb of sorrow and a thrill of joy.

VIRGINIA E. VANCE.

Concord, Ky., 282.

MEMORIAL MEETING IN ROCHESTER, N. Y.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: On Wednesday evening the 2d inst. the numerous and earnest friends of Mr. Bennett met together in the spacious parlors of Mr. and Mrs. Gault, on Emerson street, to express their regard and do honor to the man who founded THE TRUTH SEEKER, and who spoke so fearlessly in the cause of freedom from priestcraft and foolish superstitions.

As the company, with smiling, intelligent countenances, exchanged thoughts, I could but contrast the scene with orthodox assemblages upon like occasions. With the latter, such woe-stricken faces, gloomy forbodings, and long-drawn sighs were always a sufficient reason for me to hate God, if I had believed in such a being. With the former, the smiling tenderness, the entire trust in nature's laws, the earnest desire for more knowledge in all departments of life, and the intelligent sympathy manifested for all kinds of sorrow, make life worth living for, and human nature a grand success instead of a failure, as Christian teachers proclaim.

Dr. C. F. Farlin called the meeting to order, and explaimed its objects in a few well-chosen words, and then introduced Mr. Jay Chaapel as the first speaker, who spoke substantially as follows:

MY FRIENDS, Ladies and Gentlemen:

> Better is death than life; ah, yes! to thousands
> Death plays upon a dulcimer and sings
> That song of consolation, till the air
> Rings with it and they cannot choose but follow
> Whither he leads. And not the old alone,
> But the young also hear it, and are still. —Longfellow.

We hav assembled together in these pleasant and spacious parlors to honor and commemorate the life and works of our friend D. M. Bennett, late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is a fit place, for our host and hostess were valued friends of his, and his life-like face, along with Ingersoll's and Paine's, looks down from the walls, amid the odor of flowers, causing pleasant memories to float through our minds of the noble trio who hav done so much for the freedom of the race from mental slavery, and for the spread of Freethought literature.

"D. M. Bennett dead!" was the conspicuous heading of an article in a paper that I glanced over in the office of the Ithacan, at Ithaca, N. Y., on the 10th inst. It gave me a pang of sadness, but not of surprise. When he was here, in July last, on his way home from his long and useful journey around the world, I noticed his weary spirits, though he assured me he never enjoyed better health. We occupied the same room together one night and talked till after midnight on the topic so dear to us—the enfranchisment of men and women from every form of superstition. He arose before four o'clock next morning, made a hasty toilet, then, seating himself by the open window, wrote rapidly and steadily until eight o'clock, when we took a walk along the banks of this famous Genessee river.

As his pen glided over the paper, sending forth the thoughts that hav caused the churches to tremble and gnash their teeth throughout the land, I cautioned him against this unnatural and excessiv labor, for I had had a sad experience by an entire prostration of the nervous system, from such prolonged work at night. He smilingly answered that he had often commenced writing at two o'clock in the morning since he had been gone from home, and thought himself good for ten years more of work for mankind.

He was mistaken, as many other great and good men hav been. Their earnest desire to do good has made them unmindful of the fact that the mind and body need much more rest than they often giv it.

When you think of the immense amount of labor he performed on THE TRUTH SEEKER, the long discussions he held with ministers, the great number of tracts and books he wrote and published, the misrepresentations and slanders he had to endure, for speaking truthfully and plainly his noblest thoughts, and the long and agonizing sufferings during his trial and imprisonment, can you wonder that at last, at the age of sixty-four, he sank down under the oppressiv weight into the grave, where all that was mortal of him lies under the snow in Greenwood Cemetery? His work was very hard, I know, but I am sure he would hav been spared to us for a number of years yet, only for the malignant and cruel persecutions of our ignorant and common foes, who hav all along down the ages been nursed in the school of slander and intolerance. Slanderous words often sink deeper into the soul, cause more pain, and shorten life more rapidly than physical suffering.

My sadness on reading of his death, or what is called such, was not on his account, for the change was looked upon by him as a change simply from one sphere of existence to that of another. You can call it a selfish sadness if you choose, for I loved his brave, fearless, and self-sacrificing spirit, with all the ardor of my nature. I had hoped he might go on a number of years yet in his iconoclastic work of demolishing idols, unmasking and tearing into shreds the erroneous, barbarous, and soul-shriveling teachings of the clergy and the churches, that so hinder the advancement of the arts and sciences, and the general impulses of human nature.

As I thought of the great struggles our noble friend had passed through, and while his friends were looking upon his face for the last time, the eloquent words of one of the greatest and best of authors—Victor Hugo—over the lifeless body of Madam Sand, came to mind, as follows: "I weep for the dead and salute the immortal. I hav loved, I hav admired her; I hav venerated her; to-day, in the presence of the august serenity of death, I contemplate her. I felicitate her, because what she has done is good. I remember that one day I wrote to her, 'I thank you for being so great a soul.' Hav we lost her? No; these lofty figures disappear, but they do not vanish. Far from it. One can almost say that they are realized. By becoming invisible under one form they become visible in another. A sublime transfiguration! The human form is occultation. It masks the real and divine usage, which is the idea. George Sand was an idea. She escaped from the flesh, and behold she is free; she is dead, and behold she is living."

So with him whom we knew and loved so well, along with thousands of others, from the rock-bound coasts of New England to the sunny slopes of the Pacific: he has escaped from the flesh, and behold he is free; he is dead, and behold he is living. Do not mourn for him—why should you? Nature has taken her admiring child, whose love for his fellows was great, and whose love was sweet. Would you transcend the laws of nature? Study them instead, and obey their sublime teachings. I hav often heard him say he wanted no one to mourn over him—that death was a natural and welcome friend, and that only the ignorant feared it. His magnanimous soul cast aside all the robes of superstition, and he courageously but calmly followed wherever reason directed the way. He sought vigorously for the truth, and discarded error as soon as he discovered it.

The universe is in some senses a mystery. Life appears an everlasting problem. From whence did we come? What are we? and where are we going? are questions that hav been puzzling the brains of the wisest metaphysicians of all the ages. He whose voice is hushed, and whose pen lies waiting for other hands to take and battle for freedom and justice, believed it was not only his privilege but his duty to attempt, for himself at least, the solution of these great questions. He did it with no fear of gods or men, nor with any sanctimonious, long-drawn countenance, but with a cheerful, smiling earnestness to know only the truth, and follow there, though it led over burning coals.

I would not hav you consider him a saint; I do not like them. He was a man striving after the good and true; and each day of his life was a step on the ladder of progress. He has passed from among us while at his post of duty. This is a pleasant thought. He was a born general in mental warfare; and let us each and all see to it that his successors on the brave old ship—THE TRUTH SEEKER—are sustained and encouraged as though he were still leading us in the thickest of the battle, to victory. This is our duty; let us not falter for a moment.

When Smith O'Brien was on trial for treason in poor, downtrodden Ireland, and while he was in the prisoner's box, he was solicited for his autograph, and he wrote as follows:

> Whether on the gallows high,
> Or in the battle's van,
> The fittest place for man to die
> Is where he dies for man.

This is a noble sentiment, and exemplifies the life of D. M. Bennett. Like Smith O'Brien, he was willing to die for the truth, and when the loathsome prison stared him in the face he faltered not.

Others hav done the same and are doing so, for even here in this boasted land of liberty we still imprison men for opinion's sake. When shall it cease?

One after another the months hav fled rapidly by, each beautiful with its refulgent summer, autumnal tints, and drifting snows of winter, since I last said "good-morning" to our friend at the west window, where the August breeze swayed the curtains and rustled the corners of the paper as he wrote; then it went soaring away through busy streets, out across meadows of new-mown hay, fanning the brows of strong noble men and women and beautiful children, who owe so much to him for the freedom they now enjoy. Thanks—a thousand thanks—to him and all like him who hav done so much to free the minds of the people from the nightmare of woe-begone creeds and the fear of death. Nothing is more degrading and oppressiv than the teachings of the church, that death is a grim monster, and that we should approach it with lamentations and in black crape.

D. M. Bennett needs no eulogy at my hands. His works speak for him more clearly and forcibly than any words of ours. Yet it is both a pleasure and duty to pay this tribute to him. His true worth will be more widely known and more highly appreciated as the seasons roll onward and general intelligence and free thought spread, as they must.

I thank the friends for their presence here this evening, and for their earnest sympathy with the cause of Liberalism, and with the hero of THE TRUTH SEEKER; hoping that each and all of you will continue your efforts to break the shackles of mental slavery, as you in the past hav done in breaking the shackles of physical slavery.

And now, amid the driving blasts of winter, with the returning blossoms and singing birds of spring, with the glow and heat of summer, with the dropping fruits and golden hues of autumn, with changeless sun and sparkling stars, with ebbing oceans and moonlit nights, with all that is beautiful and hopeful in humanity, we leave him, with our kindest, calmest, and bravest thoughts ever clustering around him and the cause he held so dear.

Dr. Farlin followed Mr. Chaapel with a glowing tribute to the memory of one who gave his time, his money, and his reputation, that we might be free. His well-rounded sentences and invincible logic held the audience with rapture and admiration. He spoke but briefly, and I am sorry I am unable to giv even a synopsis of what he said. His lecture, "The Pillars of the Liberal Republic," at the Watkins Convention last August was among the best efforts there. It swept clear around the horizon of reform, and furnished a vast field for thought.

The Rev. C. B. Reynolds, a Baptist minister, who has outgrown the narrow grooves of his church, and who dares speak his thoughts like a brave and fearless soul as he is, was then called upon.

He is a man about fifty years of age, with an activ, sanguin temperament, pleasant, genial manners, and not afraid to investigate any subject. He commenced reading THE TRUTH SEEKER about a year ago, and now stands up amid Spiritualists and Materialists and speaks in behalf of universal mental liberty. He is a forcible, easy speaker, and I hope his voice may hereafter be frequently heard from the Liberal platform. I take pleasure in introducing him to the friends of Freethought throughout the country, and hope those who think like him—in his profession—will do as he has done, regardless of bread and butter. He said:

I am grateful to our liberal-minded, generous-hearted host and hostess that in their kind partiality they hav honored me with an invitation to participate in this memorial meeting. It enables me to bear testimony that Mr. D. M. Bennett was loved and honored; and his self-sacrificing labors in behalf of Freethought, appreciated not alone by those who embraced his views, but by all sorts of people of all shades of opinions.

Whether Materialism of Spiritualism is true, Mr. Bennett still livs, for the good men do livs after them; and though his body lies moldering in the grave, he yet livs in the hearts of his friends, and for all time his noble example of self-sacrifice and courage shall arouse to emulation the yet unborn, and incite to do battle for the cause of Freethought, right, and truth.

Men create creators. Men's gods are always created after their own image, and their own likeness—fashioned and endowed after their own imaginings.

Mr. Bennett's god was nature, and his faith was love; not the narrow, stingy sectarian love taught in creeds and catechisms, but Liberal love—a love as broad, comprehensiv, grand, and boundless as great nature's self.

His creed, "Put yourself in his place," is founded on nature's own great, first, fundamental law—a law promulgated long ages before the cross had become a symbol of religious faith.

We are told Freethought sweeps away all that is good and moral; takes away every incentiv to hope and virtue, and leaves only negations. Mr. Bennett's life gave the contradiction to this off-repeated assertion. He demonstrated that Freethought gave him nature's grand old law, "Love your neighbor as yourself"—an all-sufficient rule of faith and practice. Rich or poor, he regarded all as of the same great human family; all journeying the same road to death; all alike subject to trials, cares, pains, sorrows, and temptations; all alike needing each others' love, help, and sympathy. His neighbor embraced not only the "brethren and sisteren" of our church, but every fellow-creature.

The rich he never envied, but rejoiced in their prosperity, for well he knew it is not always the happiest hearts that beat beneath diamond bosom-pins. Freethought convinced him that no man's worst enemy could ever do him half the hurt he does himself who cherishes hate and envy.

The poor—"A man is a' man for a that." Not for his clothes or wealth, but for the love of truth—the brave, honest defense of right—the gentle, loving heart, he prized his friends.

Rich or poor, if he could do a service, help, or benefit, he did it, for he belived in and lived of out his faith of Liberal love.

Liberalism teaches forbearance, gentleness, and patience; awards to every one the same honesty of opinion you claim for yourself. Club a person out of error into truth, and never yet was such a one worth the cost of the club.

Liberalism teaches to love your neighbor though he differ with you in belief. Let your benevolence, your pitying tenderness to the unfortunate, your forbearance with those who ill-use you, your courage and fortitude in your time of sorrow and affliction, prove your faith and truth of priceless value, and you will eagerly seek to learn, and most gladly embrace it. Liberalism teaches to love even the erring. A poor, frail one in an unguarded moment yields to the cruel tempter's wiles; discovery comes, and at once every heart and every door is shut against her. In the hour of her bitterest need, with pharisaical horror all turn from her, drawing aside their skirts as though there were contamination in her touch. It may be Christian duty to shun. It is the Liberal's duty to sympathize and help—win back by love to virtue, hope, and happiness.

If Materialism is true, we need this faith of Liberal love, that our memory may be cherished in the hearts of our loved ones, and that from the grave we may extend an influence for truth and right. If Spiritualism is true, we must strive to live out this philosophy of Liberal love, for only by so doing can we gain that experience which would enable us when we hav passed to the "brighter sphere" to overcome all obstacles in holding sweet communion and continuing our ministrations of hope and cheer to those we love on earth.

His speech was the crowning event of a pleasant evening. A Miss Delano, from Minnesota, who was visiting in the city, and who was very unexpectedly called out, and who spoke very pathetically of Mr. Bennett, said she wanted to shake hands with him, and, suiting the action to the word, turned and took him by the hand, as he gracefully arose, while she said she wished every minister had the bravery and manhood to speak their best thought as he had done.

J. C.

HONOR TO THE DEAD.

At a meeting of sorrow for the death of D. M. Bennett, held at Freethought Hall, in Liberal, Mo., on Sunday evening, Dec. 17, 1882, the following proceedings were had, and at the conclusion of which a resolution was passed that the same be sent to THE TRUTH SEEKER. SOLON C. THAYER, Pres. pro tem.

D. P. GREELEY, Sec.

THE SERVICES.

On opening the meeting, Solon C. Thayer, president pro tem., said:

KIND FRIENDS: One week ago to-night Mrs. Worthington and myself were chosen as a committee to arrange a program for this evening. Little did we dream of our task. After setting out as such committee, we were suddenly apprised of the death of one of the grandest men known to human liberty and Freethought, D. M. Bennett; hence this change. In this sad event, friends, we could not do less than devote the whole evening to eulogizing the lamented deceased.

After which the choir sang a beautiful and appropriate piece. Hannah M. Allen, M.D., being called on, took the rostrom and said;

A few days previous to his demise, in referring to the death of a friend, D. M. Bennett said, "I regret to hear of the death of this valued friend, as the world needs more instead of fewer of such people."

How significant these words! What a truth they contain! A befitting encomium to his memory are his own words, "The world needs more instead of fewer of such people." It is said, "Death loves a shining mark." It would seem that this is true, for we daily see the great and good taken, while those whose lives are full of evil deeds are left. To see one who was activ in useful labors called away and those left who could well be spared, makes one doubt the justice of this.

D. M. Bennett was one of the few men who move the world, a champion of mental liberty. He labored zealously for the cause he espoused, exhibiting the beauty of a pure philanthropy whose highest aim was the well-being of his fellow-man. Possessed of a vigorous intellect and great versatility of thought, he gave to the world ideas which hav helped to mold the character of this generation, and which will liv in generations to come, securing to him an exalted position in the world of letters, and denominating him "one of the great men of the age."

He was an original, a deep thinker; a man who lived a century ahead of his time, occupying an advanced position, with rare powers of discernment, he foresaw the changes the world of thought must undergo in the advancement of human progress. He fearlessly advocated the most Liberal opinions, whose "master chords were manhood, freedom, brotherhood," laboring faithfully and unselfishly for the support of truth and what he believed to be right, denouncing the wrong even in the face of prejudiced critics through whom he suffered the most bitter and unjust persecutions.

If he failed in his measures to benefit humanity, the fault was not his, but in those who refused to be benefited, and who could not bear the truth. "Hav I done something for the general interest? Then I hav had my reward," wrote a wise emperor of Rome nearly two thousand years ago.

D. M. Bennett did much for the general interest, much to elevate and better the condition of the human race, for which he was rewarded in part by the plaudits of a grateful people, who now cherish his memory, while the recorded proofs of his noble efforts, his pen-paintings, offsprings of his reflectiv brain, will descend to posterity to perpetuate his remembrance.

Men die and their bodies pass away, but the good they do livs after them. They liv in their example, and will liv on in the influence of their acts, their principles, and their opinions hav exercised.

"We liv in deeds, not years,
In thoughts, not breaths,
In feelings, not in figures on a dial;
He most livs who thinks most,
Feels the noblest, acts the best."

D. M. Bennett thus lived a long and useful life, reaching the age of three score years and upward. He passed away like the glory of a gorgeous sunset, with the halo of a great life around him. His loss will be widely felt. We hav all lost a brother and a friend. The public will miss him. The laborers in the field of Freethought will miss him. His associates in private life and those with whom he was most familiar will miss him. We who were accustomed to read THE TRUTH SEEKER, and who eagerly perused his writings, will miss him in the weeks to come. However ably the paper may be edited, as our eyes go down its columns we cannot help saying these thoughts are not his thoughts. This style not his style.

Ah, no, his graphic pen is stilled forever! A leader has fallen! D. M. Bennett is no more.

"All things grow, and all decay,
All things are passing, passing away.
Scenes that are dear to the heart and the eye,
Passing away as the time goes by.
Changing, changing day after day,
Near ones, dear ones, are passing away."

Realizing the truth of these poetical lines, and that we too ere long must pass hence, it is well to consider the words of Marcus Antoninus, "Since it is possible that thou mayest depart from life this very moment, regulate every act and thought accordingly." Death is the end of mortal existence. Such is the nature we inherit, such the elements of decay in our organization, that death is but a relief from a state that otherwise would of necessity become a burden. Therefore we must needs die. How, we do not know, when, we cannot tell, where, we know not.

"Leaves hav their time to fall,
And flowers to fade
At the north wind's breath;
But all—all seasons are thine own,
O Death!

As one by one our loved ones depart we wait upon the verge and look out into the empty space whither they hav gone, unable to solve the problem of a future existence.

May the mysterious fact of the life that now is teach us our incapacity to grasp the sum of all truth. And the remembered ties of affection once broken by death, with the memory of him whose loss we now deplore, encourage the belief that our parting is for a day, and our meeting will be for evermore.

"We mourn o'er the clay that reposes in dust,
So calm and so still in eternity's sleep;
The soul has returned to its heavenly trust.
We bow in our sorrow, remember, and weep."

G. H. Walser, being called on, said:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: We hav assembled for the purpose of expressing our sorrow and mingling our grief for our dead, DeRobigne Mortimer Bennett; a sorrow that is not expressed by words, but is written in our hearts and read in the features of all liberty-loving people. We claim Mr. Bennett in common, with the struggling millions as our dead. While living he toiled, endured wrong, and suffered for the enthralled of the so-called Christian nations everywhere, that the great crime of mental slavery might be exposed and the barriers placed on the human intellect broken down, and man placed in his true position as an absolutely free, mental, moral, and self-controled being. He worked, wrote, thought and suffered for us while living, therefore he belongs to the intellectual classes now that he is dead. At least we will claim the honor and right of expressing our sorrow at the death of the man we loved while he was with us, and whose memory we will always cherish in our greatful hearts as we take up the conflict where he left off. He has passed away, but is not dead. That pure, child-like, impressiv nature of his has imprinted itself upon all who knew him, and will liv as a monitor of goodness with this generation, to be engrafted on the next as a part of the ennobled nature of man, evolved by the example and teachings of our departed friend.

I wish that I had the linguistic power to do justice to the memory of the man we hav met to honor to-night, but my words are too meager to express the deep feelings of the heart on this occasion, or place the worth of this great man in its true light. As I cannot embalm his name with flowers of flowing eloquence, or move the heart by thrilling words as others can, I must be content to refresh your minds with some of the leading incidents and efforts of his life in my plain, unostentatious way. What I fall short in words I hope to compensate in the sincerity of my heartfelt sorrow at his death.

On the 23d of December, 1818, just sixty-three years eleven months and thirteen days before his death, on the eastern shore of that beautiful limpid water, Otsego Lake, in the state of New York, a new creature, though weak and fragil, came by the unfoldments of nature into being.

His parents were poor, and what was worst, owing to the infelicity of temperaments, the home relations were broken up; and, at an early age, he was thrown upon his own resources, and to his fight with nature for a life existence was added a struggle with the world for a place with the human family; a struggle which millions of able-bodied men are unequal to. Possessing an indomitable will, based on an integrity of purpose, he made himself equal to any emergency that might arise in his pathway. His was always a life of activity. His early advantages for an education were limited, only having the advantage of a district school until he was twelve years old. From that on his time was more occupied in making a living than in storing his mind with the rudiments of an education; yet he drank in knowledge as he went. Everything that transpired within his view he absorbed and turned into a practical lesson of life. He learned everything better than how to read the designs of men; being by inclination and impulse honest himself, he took every one else to be as honest as he was, and hence he was often imposed upon by others.

During his life he engaged in various things, acting as salesman for a New York house for a while, then the proprietary medicin business again in Rochester, New York, then the drug business in Kansas City, Mo., the drug and seed business in Paris, Illinois.

At Paris, Illinois, he got into a newspaper controversy with some Christian gentleman over the question of prayer. The proprietor of the paper published the Christian side of the question, but refused to publish Mr. Bennett's articles. This onesidedness made Mr. Bennett indignant, and he concluded to start a paper of his own, in which he could publish what he pleased, without wearing a Christian muzzle. The result was a little monthly called THE TRUTH SEEKER. It was published for three months in Paris, when he went to New York, and bearded the lion in the great metropolis of the nation, in the year 1873. THE TRUTH SEEKER soon became a power in the land. The bold and fearless manner in which Mr. Bennett presented his arguments in the advocacy of truth and the exposure of falsehood attracted the attention of the preachers, priests, and hypocrits of the country, and they threw up their hands in holy horror, and said: "What shall we do? This man is exposing our dogmas, he is agitating the common people, he is inducing them to think for themselvs, and by this means estranging them from our ranks and endangering our hold upon their minds and purses. It must be stopped." They saw plainly that the work of two thousand years would come to naught and seventy thousand ministers to the ignominy of making an honest living by the labor of their hands, if Freethought be not prohibited in this boasted land of liberty; and to do that they thought it best to weed out the tallest flowers, and then the smaller ones could be handled at their leisure. D. M. Bennett became the great central object of their hate and fear. He was to be silenced. His paper was to be suspended; but how to do it was the question.

It was a big undertaking for the church to attempt to muzzle the press, deny a man the right to choose his own religion, and to think, write, publish, and speak on any question he wished to without molestation, or anyone to make him afraid. Yet the emergency had come, and this disturber of the placid water of superstition had to be silenced at all hazards. Infamy was boiling in their hearts, but a tool to accomplish their crime against the fundamental principles of our government, by denying its citizens the rights guaranteed to them by the constitution and laws of the land, was the question. This step took a bold and bad man; but there is no crime so great that Christianity will not perpetrate it to keep itself in place, and nothing so low but it has its minions to serve it. So in this case, the church was not without its Comstock and its Benedict.

Assuming an espionage over the conduct of Mr. Bennett, he resorted to many subterfuges to get him to commit some indiscretion, that he might get him into the meshes of the law. Mr. Bennett went on in his legitimate business, and it seemed that there was no way to check him or avert his heavy blows on their dogmas. Yet infamy had its tool in Comstock. Mr. Bennett having a book-store, Comstock sought to inveigle him in a violation of the postal laws, conceived by the church as an engin for the destruction of Freethought. A little pamphlet called "Cupid's Yokes" was thought to be the bait to catch the great Infidel with. But how to induce him to violate the law—that was the question. Comstock and the church deemed any means justifiable to accomplish the ends they sought, even to the crime of forgery. To that end Comstock forged a letter to Mr. Bennett, inclosing some money and ordering from him a bill of books, among which was "Cupid's Yokes," which is a silly pamphlet written in the advocacy of free love, by E. H. Heywood, but which is not obscene or sensible. Mr. Bennett filled the order, as any book-man would, not dreaming that the letter was a forgery, and that a head man of the church was the forger. But alas! Comstock's great crime was construed into a crowning virtue and Bennett's virtue into a great crime, by a Christian judge and a corrupt jury. Mr. Bennett was arrested for sending obscene literature through the mails. An indictment was found against him and he was placed on trial for the offense. The counsel for the government read garbled extracts from the book which he called obscene, and upon them rested his case. The counsel for Mr. Bennett offered the entire pamphlet in evidence, claiming that the book, as a whole, was not obscene, but a simple treatis on a scientific question, and perfectly legitimate for the mails. This the court refused to permit, and Mr. Bennett was accordingly convicted, on the oath of the man who through forgery and crime induced the wrong. If D. M. Bennett committed a crime by sending that book through the mails, Anthony Comstock induced the crime, and was, therefore, particeps criminis to it and should hav been punished as such. But participation was a virtue. He was a Christian, and interested in enforcing Christian laws made for Infidels alone.

Mr. Bennett was condemned by the jury and sentenced by the court to imprisonment in the Albany penitentiary for thirteen months.

This was a crushing blow to an innocent man, and well nigh did it do its work. This cruel and inhuman treatment implanted in his body the heart disease, which, in part, took his precious life. When I met him at the Watkins Glen convention he spoke of the outrage, and his mild eye moistened as he recounted the deep wrongs inflicted upon him by that blow.

While Bennett was the direct subject of this wrong, the blow was struck at the liberties of us all. That trial was of a more serious import than many believe. All must admit that it is an outrage against the freedom of the mails and the press; and, what was worse, that outrage was procured through the corruption of the judiciary of the country. People may well look with alarm when the courts become corrupt; that is the turning point of all declining nations, and the tocsin of alarm to all liberty-loving people. What was very portentous, too, was the fact that the executiv of the nation refused an interference at the command of the church, notwithstanding a petition of two hundred thousand names asking him to do so.

My friends, this attack on American liberty only tells us too well the danger we are in, just so long as the system prevails which bribed the powers of the nation by its smiles and influence to commit this crime against individual liberty in the name of Christianity. There was a time when such conduct was indorsed by the people, but that time has passed, as the church has learned with sorrow from the upboiling of indignation from all quarters. It was a sweet morsel for unprincipled Christians to cry out, "Bennett is in the penitentiary," the answer was, "Through Christian infamy." Bennett's name will go down the corridors of time wreathed in laurels of glory. In his shadow will liv as an accompaniment the names of Comstock and Benedict, draped in the robes of infamy and shame. Children will rise up to curse them. Decency will shun them. Respectability will despise them, honor flee from them, and justice vomit upon them. Their names will be fetid dung.

While waiting for a new trial he was kept in Ludlow-street Jail for two months. His body was confined in a low, dingy cell, yet his great mind defied their walls, bars, manacles, and chains; it burst through them; he seized his pen and wrote a large book called "Behind the Bars," which recounts enough of Christian persecutions to cause the cheek of a Benedict jury to blush for shame. If you hav not read it get the book and learn of "loving Christianity."

His appeal was abortiv, of course, and the victim of Christian jurisprudence and Christian love was consigned to a living tomb among cutthroats, murderers, thieves, robbers, and scoundrels. But the stain intended for him fell on the parties whose corruption sent him there, and they will never be able to wash it away. Jesus may reward them for their dirty work, but man will never respect them for their corruption

OCT 11 '41 Theodore Lechner

977376

During his eleven months in the penitentiary he compiled two large volumes of about twenty-three hundred pages—"The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," besides his daily work as a convict, and while in the hospital as an invalid—a work that James Parton said "was enough for twenty-five years' work."

On his release from prison a large delegation met and escorted him home and gave him a reception at Chickering Hall that any man might well be proud of. They then sent him to the Brussels International Congress of Freethinkers. While on his trip he wrote a large book entitled, "A Truth Seeker in Europe," which contains a fund of information not found in any other book.

A fund was then raised by the Freethinkers of America, and Mr. Bennett was sent around the world, and what he did and saw is found in four large volumes. His entire trip was made in one year, lacking twenty minutes.

There is no man living who could hav performed the work that Bennett did, under the circumstances. But the work, trouble, mental and physical strain were too much for nature to bear, and he was taken from us, and we can but sorrow at the treatment.

"There is a reaper whose name is Death,
And with his sickle keen
He reaps the bearded grain at a breath,
And the flowers that grow between."

The grain was ripe for the sickle, and we should affectionately garner it in our hearts.

As to Mr. Bennett's religious belief we will let him speak for himself. I read from an autobiographical sketch written by himself:

"Bennett has thrown off all allegiance to fables, myths, and superstitions. He considers himself free to embrace truth wherever he finds it, and to discard errors and fallacies from whatever source they may come.

"He believes in the eternality and infinity of the universe, that it contains all existences and forces, that there could hav been nothing before it, can be nothing above it, nor outside of it. That every result that has taken place has been the product of pre-existing and sufficient cause, something has never been produced from nothing. He regards the superstition of the belief in a God, who devised the universe, formed it of nothing, and now keeps it running by his personal superintendence as the central superstition around which all other superstitions cluster, and the superstitions that hav been most detrimental to the human race.

"He regards the worship and adoration that hav been bestowed upon an imaginary, unknown being, somewhere above the stars, as labor entirely thrown away. Such a being can neither be benefited nor injured by anything we can possibly do. Like the sun, he is entirely beyond our reach or influence. If all the emotional fervor and worship that hav been bestowed upon this unknown deity could hav been directed to humanity, to beings who really hav an existence and are susceptible of being benefited by the services of others, the world would hav been vastly better off. If, instead of killing each other for the love of God, nations had aided each other for the love of man, the results would hav been immensely better.

"He has a high veneration for humane actions, moral rectitude, disinterested motivs, noble deeds, the efforts to disseminate scientific knowledge among men, and every measure calculated to increase the happiness and well-being of the human race.

"The men who hav done the most to benefit the world, the men who hav done the most to lead mankind out of darkness and mental night, are the men who hav taught real, living truths, the men who hav taught science. This class of men discard mythical fables and mythical legends, and base their investigations and their conclusions upon the facts which the closest scrutiny fully establishes. One such man as Franklin, Humboldt, Darwin, or Haeckel, has been of far more value to the world than all the St. Pauls, Constantines, John Calvins, and Pio Ninos that ever lived. A scientific course of study of the operations of the universe, the nature, and the material of which the globe is composed, and the endless combinations it enters into, with the results thus reached, is the foundation of education and knowledge. In a word, ignorance is the devil which has cursed the world for thousands of years, and science is the savior which alone is able to lead mankind to truth and consequent happiness. Bennett rejoices to see the light of science and demonstrated knowledge spreading over the earth. As this glorious light illumins the mental horizon of the world, so the myths, the fallacies, and the superstitions of primitiv times must assuredly retire to the dark recesses of oblivion. So far as priestcraft and the existing systems of religion interfere with this inevitable evolution, and so far as they tend to burden and enslave the human intellect, he is persistently opposed to them, and has devoted his feeble efforts, for the remainder of his life, to their ultimate destruction."

In this short platform of principles Mr. Bennett is silent on the question of a future existence, and I do not intend to say positivly what his belief was on that question, but my best impression is that he believed in a future existence. I think he could hav said with all candor:

"There is no death! The stars go down
To rise upon some fairer shore,
And bright in heaven's jeweled crown
They shine for evermore.

There is no death! The dust we tread
Shall change beneath the summer showers,
To golden grain or mellow fruit,
Or rainbow-tinted flowers.

The granit rocks disorganize,
And feed the hungry moss they bear;
The forest leaves drink daily life
From out the viewless air.

There is no death! The leaves may fall,
And flowers may fade and pass away—
They only wait through wintry hours
The coming of May day.

There is no death! An angel form
Walks o'er the earth with silent tread,
And bears our best loved things away,
And then we call them 'dead!'

They are not dead, they hav but changed
From one form to another;
Hav passed unto another life
Which nature guards forever."

As has well been said by Dr. Allen, "He was one of the deep thinkers of the age." He was not only a thinker but a worker and actor. His death has caused a void among the great men that will be felt for years. Science and progress hav lost a friend, ignorance and superstition an enemy.

There is nothing that addresses itself to our esteem so much as that of a true man. The life of a truly great and good man is typical of all that is noble, grand, and sublime in the excellencies of nature. We should pay our adoration to them, our worship should be at their shrine. We should emulate their conduct and take their lives as our guide; they will prove as golden sunlight by day, leading us on to greater exertions, and, as lamps to guide our feet at night, keeping us from the pitfalls of error. How truly Longfellow said:

"The lives of great men, all remind us,
We can make our lives sublime;
And, departing, leave behind us
Foot-prints on the sand of time;

Foot-prints that perhaps another,
Sailing o'er life's stormy main,
A forlorn and ship-wrecked brother,
Seeing, may take heart again.

Let us then be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate,
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait."

A VALIANT COMRADE GONE.

From Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

A monthly periodical is a poor medium for conveying news in these days of telegraphy, steam, and daily papers. Hence most of our readers will hav learned ere this of the death of our esteemed friend D. M. Bennett, the Liberal editor, who departed this life on the morning of December the 6th. Perhaps we can giv some facts which hav not yet appeared and which will be interesting. The remote cause of Mr. Bennett's death was unquestionable his eleven months' imprisonment at the State Prison at Albany during 1879-'80. This was cruel and outrageous torture of the excellent man and planted in his system the seeds which ultimately developed the disease causing his demise at the age of sixty-four, while he had a constitution which should hav carried him in good health to the age of at least eighty ripe years. He really fell a martyr to American freedom—a victim to the American Inquisition. It will be a consolation to his friends to know that he passed over the dark border peacefully, like a child going to sleep. We were present with his afflicted wife when our good friend breathed his last. On his return from his trip around the world, several circumstances conspired to develop the fatal disease. He removed his office from 141 Eighth street to 21 Clinton Place—a change attended with much perplexing and confusing labor. At about the same time he contracted a cold to which he did not giv the attention he ought to hav done. Meanwhile he worked with his usual earnestness on his books of travels. A gastric fever with malarial complications ensued, and he was carried down rapidly after he took to his bed on the first day of December.

We feel sure that all our old time subscribers, whatever may be their religious proclivities, will mourn the untimely departure of one who had endeared himself to all who heartily believe in free speech, free press, and free mails. None will hav forgotten how that, in the summer of 1878, he, with others, was arrested for simply doing a neighborly act in selling from a book-booth at the Liberal convention at Watkins, in the absence of the lady proprietor, a book called "Cupid's Yokes;" nor the indignant man's return to New York with the determination publicly avowed in his paper that he would vindicate the right of an American citizen to not only sell but to mail the book; nor the second arrest, in 1879, for mailing the work; the farce called a trial in the U. S. court; the conviction by a prejudiced jury; the sentence to thirteen months' imprisonment; the petitions containing two hundred thousand names, praying President Hayes to release him; the foul conspiracy to smirch his good name; the failure in the face of misrepresentation and sectarian prejudice to secure his pardon; the triumphal reception of the wronged man at Chickering Hall when he had served the term of his imprisonment less the usual deduction for good conduct; the crowds which thronged the building on that occasion to vindicate the character of an honest and truthful man; his appointment as delegate to the Liberal International Convention at Brussels; his subsequent trip around the world at the expense of his friends who wished in this way to testify to their appreciation of his sterling worth; his return last June, and the banquet which was given in his honor at Martinelli's—none of these events will hav passed from the minds of our attentiv readers. And now this champion of human rights sleeps peacefully in Greenwood.

In these days, when all beliefs are undergoing marked change, let no one of what is called "the orthodox faith" cast reproach on the lamented Bennett because he was a radical writer and thinker. He was an honest man—the noblest work of God—and one who had the courage to write and print his convictions. Moreover, he was willing to imperil his personal liberty in defending the right of publication by those with whom he was not in sympathy, at a time when the American Inquisition was doing its worst to fasten an intolerable and inexcusable censorship upon the press of this country. For his heroism he will ever be remembered by a large circle of warm personal friends; while it is more than probable that the real merits of the man will sometime re the hearty recognition of all his countrymen. Already there is on foot a movement for raising an appropriate monument over his remains at Greenwood, and, if possible, to erect a memorial building in New York.

MEETING AT ST. LOUIS.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 25, 282.

MR. EDITOR: I am instructed by St Louis Liberal League to forward you the following:

The St. Louis Liberal League held its regular meeting Sunday afternoon, Dec. 24, 282. In place of the usual order of business the time was devoted to the memory of Mr. D. M. Bennett. The attendence was large, and frequent applause testified how thoroughly the audience indorsed the sentiments of the speakers.

I regret the impossibility of sending full reports of the addresses. I can but indicate the general tenor of the remarks.

Mr. Frank Rivers was the first speaker. He said: "It is with a feeling of inedaquacy I approach this subject. My knowledge of Mr. Bennett, extending, as it does, over a number of years, enables me to speak positivly of his honesty, his purity, his singleness of purpose; and at the same time compels me to feel my own littleness as compared with him. If I could but put Bennett right before the public, if you knew him as I did, you would love him as I do. To illustrate how he has been misjudged: At the last National Liberal League congress held here in St. Louis, as I was passing out of the hall after the first morning's session I heard one reporter say to another, 'I was glad to see that miserable old loafer, Bennett, come in for a dig.' Now, if reporters form public opinion, and they think so falsely, what must be the general opinion? I come not to flatter, but merely to tell the truth. Mr. Bennett is accused of being licentious, of debasing the youth, of scattering broadcast the vilest and most infamous literature. The whole charge is absolutely false. Comstock secured his conviction on the charge of mailing 'Cupid's Yokes.' The single copy he sold was diposed of merely to prove his rights, to assert freedom of the press and speech. 'Cupid's Yokes' is not an obscene publication. Further, I assert (and my knowledge of the book trade justifies me) not a single obscene book has been sold in this country in the last twelve years, excepting possibly the sale from a private library of books printed twelve or more years ago. 'Cupid's Yokes,' as I said, is not obscene, and the circulating of it cannot be legally punished; and such was the opinion of Senator Hoar and the attorney-general of Massachusetts. Bennett was persecuted because he was doing too much for liberty and Liberalism.

"During the past eight years no man has done more in the cause of Freethought than has D. M. Bennett. It required a brave man to start a paper like THE TRUTH SEEKER eight years ago. I know the time when he could hardly giv away two hundred copies, and he leaves it now with a circulation of six thousand.

"I remember, when in the darkest days of the struggle to maintain THE TRUTH SEEKER, one remark of Mr. Bennett, 'The good I will do if I can make the paper liv.' Thanks to Bennett's untiring energy, his wonderful power of endurance, THE TRUTH SEEKER livs. Let us, as Freethinkers, see to it that it never dies. I can say with Bennett it was reading Paine's 'Age of Reason' that freed me from the church; and to show the desire on the part of Comstock is less to suppress obscenity than to suppress Freethought, he, Comstock told me four years ago, 'If you send the "Age of Reason" through the mails I will prosecute you.' D. M. Bennett was hated by the rogues and hypocrits which a degenerate theology always brings to the surface."

In closing, an appeal was made for funds to raise a monument worthy the exalted glory of the man.

Dr. W. Perkins said: "I can only say, 'truth crushed to earth shall rise again.' Bennett, though crushed by that scoundrel, Comstock, rose again; such was the power of the truth he represented."

After seconding the monument appeal, and making an earnest and affecting speech of sympathy for Mrs. Bennett, the doctor closed.

Mr. J. J. Jackson contrasted Bennett with some others who work in the cause of Freethought for six dollars per minute. Bennett built upon the cornerstone of truth, and, though ostracized and persecuted by Christians, by his adherence to truth, made himself a beacon-light that will ever shine for the lightening of mankind.

Mr. William J. Gorsuch, of Baltimore, was next introduced, and spoke as follows:

"We who hav met here to-day to do honor to the memory of D. M. Bennett hav not gathered for lengthened argument or eloquent oration. We wish in our simple way to voice the sorrow every true man and woman must feel that one so grand, so noble, and so true is no more. But yesterday a monument of strength, evolved through conflict, fierce, intense, and long, he shadowed forth the peace that is to be. To-day a shattered column, overthrown by priestly hate, the fragments speak alone of tears and saddened hearts.

"He was a man who stood alone, self-poised, and free. He asked not praise, while sympathy was sweet to him as gentle dew to parched and withering leaf. His life a simple, perfect poem, sings unto us the rhythmic march of good.

"We think of such a man as this dishonored and disgraced. We see him back of prison bars unconquered, unsubdued. His weary heart is longing to be free, and yet his fearless soul says, 'I'll accept no pardon.' We think of all that he has endured and never once complained; and then we think of that disgrace to man, named Comstock, and of that puppet who, in his charge, said: 'If you find the parts read you might hav a tendency to call up immoral thoughts into the minds of those into whose hands the book might fall, you must bring in a verdict of guilty.' We think of 200,000 citizens crying, 'This crime shall never be; this man is wrongly held, and must go free;' and Mrs. Hayes, the woman president, answering, 'No.' In this nineteenth century, in this free (?) republic, a man, whose only crime was too unselfish love unto his fellows, was racked and dogged to death. All this do we remember. Then can you wonder we forget not nor forgiv?

"Now Bennett is no more. The hatred that pursued with tireless zeal is sated. He is dead, yet he can never die. With Paine and Volney, Bennett e'er will liv, beloved and honored, when his caluminators and detractors are buried beneath the shadows of the past; are hidden by the mists of the forgotten. There is one good that this man's life and death can do to us to-day. He lived for what he held was highest truth, and careless or regardless of result pushed onward. He never considered 'Will it pay?' but 'Is it true?' We know what he endured, what he achieved. Let us, then, here to-day, re-dedicate ourselvs to truth and human progress. Let us swear, come weal come woe, come honor and fame or come infamy; come heaven or come hell, we firm will stand for right. By our future lives we'll prove that we are worthy comrades of the one who's gone.

"I submit to you the following resolution:

Resolved, With deepest sorrow we learn of Mr. D. M. Bennett's sudden death. Losing him, Freethought has lost one of its bravest and purest champions, superstition and tyranny a most uncompromising foe. His cruel, unjust, and relentless persecution by Christian moralists we execrate and condemn. His unflinching courage and heroic fortitude we can but humbly admire and aspiringly emulate. To his family and associates we extend our heartfelt sympathy. With them we mourn our dead."

After unanimously adopting Mr. Gorsuch's resolution the League adjoined. J. A. RANDALL, Sec.

St. Louis, Mo.

D. M. BENNETT.

From the San Francisco Universe,

The death of D. M. Bennett, one of the most famous Liberals of the country, occurred on the morning of the 6th inst., at his home in the city of New York. Deceased was in the 64th year, and was hale and hearty almost up to the hour of his death. He passed away from earth quietly and in an unconscious condition. This extraordinary man had built up the largest and most extensivly circulated Freethought journal, THE TRUTH SEEKER, in Europe or America, and founded a Freethought publishing house larger than any other in the world, and all this in a brief space of less than ten years. He did not commence to write on his favorit topics until he was in his 54th year, and since then he has written more works of a religious character than any man who ever lived. His works of all kinds would in themselvs make a fair library. At the time of his death he was engaged in writing his celebrated history entitled, "A Truth Seeker Around the World," the third volume of which was given to the public a short time ago. At an early age deceased was adopted by the Shakers. He afterward married an estimable and intelligent wife, who mourns him in her sorrow and widowhood. Mr. Bennett was a most aggressiv opponent of Christianity, and the church repaid him with thirteen months in the bastile or penitentiary at Albany. The recent visit of the deceased to this city is remembered by our readers. His death is mourned by thousands who knew him to be a benevolent, humane man and a dauntless advocate of the truths of nature.

THE LUTHER OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

From the Doylestown Democrat.

The departure of D. M. Bennett, of New York city, to the future life, on the 6th inst., will be regretted by the many Liberal readers of the Democrat. He was the editor and proprietor of the New York TRUTH SEEKER, and widely known as one of the most radical writers in relation to the theological ideas of the present era. By some, of course, he would be heretic and Infidel; by others, a great and truthful man, but too far in advance of the mass of humanity to be generally understood and properly appreciated. We viewed him as the Luther of the nineteenth century. A hundred years hence he will be known as the man falsely accused, calumniated, and persecuted, as one of the martyrs and great men of his day. His life has been one of labor and usefulness.

DEATH OF D. M. BENNETT.

From the London Freethinker.

It is with great regret we hav to record the sudden death of Mr. D. M. Bennett, editor of the New York TRUTH SEEKER. America has many Freethinkers of note, but it can ill afford to lose one so sterling and unswerving as the late Mr. Bennett. To Mrs. Bennett, who faithfully stood by him during many trials, we beg to offer our sincere condolence.

THE SAN FRANCISCO LEAGUE.

At a regular meeting of Auxiliary Liberal League No. 190 of this city, held last evening, Dec. 11th, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That in the death of D. M. Bennett, the late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, humanity has lost a firm leader, true friend, and one of the best exponents of Liberalism.

Resolved, That as members of the grand brotherhood of truth seekers we deeply feel his loss, and truly sympathize with his bereaved widow in this her hour of sorrow.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to THE TRUTH SEEKER for publication.

J. L. HATCH, Pres. L. L. 190.
H. W. FAUST, Cor. Sec. (pro tem.)
San Francisco, Dec. 11, 282.

TESTIMONIALS TO D. M. BENNETT.

From the Boston Investigator.

The following letters of respect for the late Mr. Bennett, and sympathy with the Liberals of the country for the great loss they experience by his death, were sent to the meeting that was held in Paine Hall on Sunday evening, Dec. 17th, to express its appreciation of his labors and its regrets for his decease:

NEWBURYPORT, MASS., Dec. 11, 1882.

MY DEAR SIR: It is with sincere regret that I decline (for physical reasons only) to attend the meeting to be held in Paine Hall in commemoration of that faithful (if sometimes a little rough) soldier in the noblest of all causes, the emancipation of the human mind from the bondage of superstition. Mr. D. M. Bennett was a man wholly extraordinary, and his career was not less so. He was not a perfect character, as he well knew and frankly acknowledged; but his merits, considering all things, were very great and very rare; and they were his own, while his faults were due in great measure to the grossly false and profoundly immoral religion from which he had the courage and the mental force to escape. His wonderful labors hav made the escape of others easier than he found it. He embraced an unpopular cause; he made it less difficult for others to do so.

I wish your meeting the greatest possible success. You honor yourselvs in paying honor to a comrade fallen with his arms in his hands, his face to the foe, and that foe the mightiest thing in the universe except the omnipotent truth which shall supplant it.

Very truly yours, JAMES PARTON.

MEDFORD, MASS., Dec. 17, E.M. 282.

DEAR BROTHER AND SISTER LIBERALS: A hero has fallen in our war. I would be with you to commemorate him if I could say anything worthy of the occasion. The event speaks to our hearts and to the world with a voice beyond the power of any words of mine. It is no ordinary mortal who has now met the inevitable destiny of all.

"Our innocent mirth is chastened for the sake
Of the brave heart that never more shall beat,
The eyes that smile no more, the unreturning feet."

He was made the victim of a theologically-instigated law, of which the United States will yet be ashamed—an absurd, hypocritical, contemptible, and essentially wicked law. Yet I almost thank that law and its unreasoning administrators, so nobly did he bear the cruel penalty they inflicted. The grand work he wrote in prison will liv, it may be hoped, till prisons shall be only things in the past.

Like the immortal work of Thomas Paine, that was partly written in prison, and which first aroused Bennett's soul to battle with the tyranny of a sham theology, it will never be answered; it will cut its way through all the deserts and jungles of superstition to a better land in which human love and brotherhood shall prevail, and universal justice shall banish crime. It is ours to perpetuate his name by not letting his work stop.

Very cordially yours, ELIZUR WRIGHT.

Parker Pillsbury to T. B. Wakeman.

MY DEAR MR. WAKEMAN: I thank you for remembering me even in a card. The times are indeed phenomenal, and the sudden removal of the indefatigable editor and owner of THE TRUTH SEEKER is among the mysteries. I hav been quite poorly from overwork, but was able to be in Boston to hear Mr. Chainey's excellent discourse and add my honorable witness to its truth and fidelity at the close. Few men since Capt. Cook ever circumnavigated the globe to better material purpose. And surely, from a moral and spiritual standpoint, he stands unrivalled among all discoverers and travelers. How he was able to perform so much intellectual labor in the short time abroad, irrespectiv of its character—I mean of the subjects treated—was to me a wonder, as he went along, and remains a marvel still.

I was glad to hear Mr. Chainey say he did not deny a future existence. To light up such an orb as was he, and then extinguish him in eternal night just as his light had traveled down to earth, like the far remote stars in the vastitude of space, would be such sad economy that I dare not charge it to creativ wisdom and power and love.

A mind mightier than the whole solar system, able in time to fathom all the mysteries of the solar system, is not to be so shocked by that system as not to survive it. I could plan a better universe myself than would such prodigality reveal, as annihilation of my sublimest work.

No, dear friend, in my humble opinion and belief, our friend has but evolved one more step, and only one, to be succeeded by yet others, until one day it will be much further from Bennett back to Albany prison than it was from him there back to Bornean baboons.

It doth not yet appear what man shall be. But man is here in the infinit space and duration, with powers and possibilities commensurate with both. Perhaps he can commit moral and spiritual suicide as well as material, if he will. I do not know. But being here, I counsel man to do his best each day and hour, not as though he must die as an end, but be born rather to better being, leaving this when this leaves the brutes, the trees, the earth, out of which they, but they alone, derive all their subsistence.

Even Col. Ingersoll loves life, and has dreams that life may after all mean and be more than death. He has said many beautiful as well as many wondrous things. But over the sleeping dust of his beloved brother he uttered one of his most hallowed inspirations. Nothing is more divine in Isaiah, nor more consoling in the Evangels of the Saint John:

In the darkest night Hope sees a star;
And listening Love can hear the rustle of a wing.

The church preaches nothing more holy than that in her most millennial moods. "We are sustained by hope" is a true scripture utterance; but even that the church has spoiled by wrong translation, and so much of the book as to hav made it a scourge rather than benefit and blessing to the human race.

But, pardon me; I forget to whom this is to go, and my pen rushes on. I hav received copies of the much improved and more manly Man, and will try to put them in the right hands.

And with renewed thanks for your kindness in writing me, I hasten to subscribe, faithfully and fraternally, Yours, PARKER PILLSBURY.

Concord, N. H., Dec. 23, 1882.

Kind Words.

From the Investigator.

THE TRUTH SEEKER, in its last number, is largely filled with letters of sympathy on account of the death of its former editor, Mr. Bennett, proving that he had a great many friends. The paper is now published by Mrs. Bennett, and edited by E. M. Macdonald. He is a young man of marked ability, and was editor when Mr. Bennett was in prison, and also when he was on his journey around the world. Having had this editorial experience, and being likewise a practical printer, Mr. Macdonald will be successful in his management of THE TRUTH SEEKER, which has our best wishes for its prosperity and permanency.

We are already indebted to friends Mendum and Seaver for many acts of friendship and words of cheer, and now they hav put us deeper in their debt. We hope to liv long enough to repay them, in part at least.—ED. T. S.

The Future of The Truth Seeker.

From the Liberal, of Liberal, Mo.

We are glad to be able to inform our readers that THE TRUTH SEEKER, the paper published by D. M. Bennett, is to be continued in the name of his faithful wife, M. W. Bennett as proprietor and publisher, and E. M. Macdonald as editor. Mr. Macdonald conducted the paper during the persecution of Mr. Bennett and his absence in Europe and around the world. The paper will be conducted with the same vigor, and as faithfully to the cause of man, woman, and child, as before. Friends, giv it your hearty support.

Meeting in Paine Hall.

From the Hampshire County Journal.

We attended, on Sunday evening, Dec. 17th, memorial services in honor of the late D. M. Bennett, editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, at Paine Memorial Hall, Boston; and one of the most eloquent tributes paid to the memory of the deceased on that occasion was, in our judgment, that of J. M. L. Babcock, Esq., of Cambridge, well known likewise in this vicinity.

Mr. Babcock's eulogy of the departed was based upon the grand work which the deceased had performed for the cause of free speech and a free press. Whatever faults Mr. Bennett may hav had, the great work which he accomplished in this respect was entitled to the grateful remembrance of humanity evermore. Horace Seaver prefaced the exercises of the evening with one of his plain, clear, and forcible speeches.

More Kind Words.

From the Winsted Press.

The death of D. M. Bennett will not interfere with the publication of his paper, THE TRUTH SEEKER. That periodical is given to his wife by will, and she is announced as its present publisher. His faithful associate, and manager during his absence in prison and journeying around the world, E. M. Macdonald, has been appointed editor, a position which he is fully competent to fill. THE TRUTH SEEKER, founded by D. M. Bennett, is to-day perhaps the strongest foe with which superstition has to contend, and a long future of great usefulness is, we trust and believe, before it.

Back Numbers Wanted.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I would like to bind THE TRUTH SEEKER in a volume to put on the center-table for my "Family Bible." I took good care of all the numbers I got, and but few are soiled or missing. I would like to hav the following numbers very much: Nos. 3, 15, 18, 25, 27, 28, 29, in Vol. IX.; and as I just subscribed with No. 48, Vol. VIII., I would like to hav all numbers from No. 48, Vol. VIII., back to the time when D. M. Bennett started away on his tour around the world. You will do me a great favor if you will try and secure the desired numbers. If I get them on time I will try and hav them bound by Paine's birthday anniversary, as we intend to celebrate that day as our Christmas, Thanksgiving, etc.

Hoping you can secure the desired numbers, I remain Your friend, L. W. LIGHTY.

Mulberry, Pa., Dec. 27, 282.

We regret we hav not the required numbers on hand. If any friend has them to spare, he will do Mr. Lighty a favor by communicating with him.—ED. T. S.

PUBLIC school property may not be used for Sunday-schools, is the decision of an Ohio court, and it is a sound decision. A religious society having obtained the use of the school-house, complaint was made that such use was illegal and tended to damage the building and to injure them as tax-payers of the district. The defendants claimed that such use was not illegal; that the Sunday-school tended to the moral and musical education of the scholars with facilities which could not otherwise be afforded to the children of the district. In rendering his decision, Judge Connor said: "I cannot believe it was the intention of the law to authorize the use of public school property for purely religious education. That property is maintained, or should be maintained, simply for secular education. No one will deny that instruction in morals and music may be given in public schools, but it must be a part of the secular education. It must not amount to simply religious education. It seems to me clear that school property cannot be used for religious purposes or Sunday-school purposes, which by the very fact of its being religious in character, might well debar all, or portions, of the children of the district from attending by reason of the religious convictions or conscientious scruples of such children or their parents. The injunction will be made perpetual, restraining the Board of Education from permitting said school-house to be used for Sunday-school or other religious purposes."

Communications.

Clement of Rome and Paul.

At the beginning of Vol. I. of the Antenicene Christian Library are two anonymous epistles accredited to Clement of Rome, a supposed fellow-laborer of Paul (Phil. iv, 3). The first of these epistles is generally accepted as genuin. The writer praises the Corinthian church for its piety, sobriety, and good works in earlier days, but deplores its present departure from righteousness. Then after citing examples of holiness and wickedness, from Abel and Cain to David and Saul, the author says:

"But not to dwell upon ancient examples, let us come to the most recent spiritual heroes. Let us take the noble examples furnished in our own generation. Through envy and jealousy the greatest and most righteous pillars [of the church] hav been persecuted and put to death. Let us set before our eyes the illustrious apostles. [Petr]os, through unrighteous envy, endured not one or two, but numerous labors; and when he had at length suffered martyrdom, departed to the place of glory due to him. Owing to envy, Paul also obtained the reward of patient endurance, after being seven times thrown into captivity, compelled to flee, and stoned. After preaching both in the east and west, he gained the illustrious reputation due to his faith, having taught righteousness to the whole world and come to the extreme limit of the west, and suffered martyrdom under the prefects [egoumenon]. Thus was he removed from this world, and went into the holy place, having proved himself a striking example of patience."

We hav transcribed all of chapter v. There are numerous lacunæ in the MS., one of which we hav inclosed in brackets. See our argument against Petros being the original name in this lacuna (Rev. of Ant., pp. 110, 197, 388; Life of Simon Kepha, chap. lxi). We will now append several editorial notes to the above chapter:

"Seven imprisonments of St. Paul are not referred to in scripture."

"Some think Rome, others Spain, and others Great Britain, to be here referred to."

"That is [prefects], under Tigellinus and Sabinus, in the last year of the Emperor Nero [A.D. 68], but some think Helius and Polycletus referred to, and others both here and in the preceding sentence regard the words as denoting simply the witness borne by Peter and Paul to the truth of the gospel before the rulers of the earth."

And now for some notes by "Antichrist."

The earliest date to which the composition of this epistle is assigned is about A.D. 69. It could not be earlier than 68 if Paul died in the last year of Nero. But for apparently sufficient reasons the great mass of critics hav decided against this early date, and in favor of A-D. 95–100; and some think it may hav been written as late as A.D. 120–125 (Supernatural Religion). But if Paul lived 63 years B.C., not only do the objections to the early date all vanish, but there are cogent reasons for carrying it back prior to the year 1. For if Clement was contemporary with Paul, as is generally believed, he could hardly hav survived until the beginning of the Christian era. In this light, then, let us consider numerous passages in the epistle that hav perplexed the theologians:

"Let us take the noble examples furnished in our own generation. . . . Let us set before our eyes the illustrious apostles" (ch. v).

"It behooves us to do all things in [their proper] order, which the Lord has commanded us to perform at stated times. . . . Those, therefore, who present their offerings at the appointed times, are accepted and blessed; for inasmuch as they follow the laws of the Lord they sin not. For his own peculiar services are assigned to the high priests, and their own proper place is prescribed to the priests, and their own special ministrations devolve on the Levites. The layman is bound by the laws that pertain to laymen" (ch. xl).

"Not in every place, brethren, are the daily sacrifices offered, or the peace-offerings, or the sin-offerings, and the trespass-offerings, but in Jerusalem only [Jerusalem was destroyed, A.D. 70]. And even there they are not offered in any place, but only at the altar before the temple, that which is offered being first carefully examined by the high priest and the ministers already mentioned" (ch. xli).

"The apostles hav preached the gospel to us from the Lord Jesus Christ; Jesus Christ [has done so] from God. Christ, therefore, was sent forth by God, and the apostles by Christ. . . . They went forth proclaiming that the kingdom of God was at hand. And thus preaching through countries and cities they appointed the first fruits [of their labors], having first proved them by the spirit, to be bishops and deacons of those who should afterward believe. Nor is this any new thing, since indeed many ages before it was written concerning bishops and deacons. For thus saith the scriptures in a certain place, I will appoint their bishops in righteousness, and their deacons in faith" (ch. xlii. See note, and Revelations of Antichrist, p. 197).

"Our apostles also knew, through our Lord Jesus Christ, that there would be strife on account of the office of the episcopate. For this reason, therefore, inasmuch as they had obtained a perfect foreknowledge of this, they appointed those [ministers] already mentioned, and afterward gave instructions that when these should fall asleep, other approved men should succeed them in the ministry. We are of opinion, therefore, that those appointed by them, or afterward by other eminent men, with the consent of the whole church, and who hav blamelessly served the flock of Christ, in a humble, peaceable, and disinterested spirit, and hav for a long time possessed the good opinion of all, cannot be justly dismissed from the ministry. . . . But we see that ye [Corinthians] hav removed some men of excellent behavior from the ministry, which they fulfilled blamelessly and with honor" (ch. xliv).

"Take up the epistle of the blessed apostle Paul. What did he write to you at the time when the gospel first began to be preached? Truly, under the inspiration of the spirit he wrote to you concerning himself and Kephas [not Petros, as presumed in chapter v] and Apollos [1 Cor. iii, 13], because even then parties had been formed [Paul is supposed to hav written the epistle between A.D. 56 and 59]. But that inclination for one above another entailed less guilt upon you, inasmuch as your partialities were then shown toward apostles [Apollos, Kepha, and Paul] already of high reputation, and toward a man whom they had approved. But now [A.D. 692] reflect who those are that hav perverted you, and lessened the renown of your far-famed brotherly love. It is disgraceful, beloved, yea, highly disgraceful and unworthy of your Christian profession [literally, 'conduct in Christ'], that such a thing should be heard of as that the most steadfast and ancient church of the Corinthians should, on account of one or two persons, engage in sedition against the presbyters" (ch. xlvii).

An apparently strong objection urged against the early date of the epistle (A.D. 69) is the expression "most steadfast and ancient church of the Corinthians." If the Corinthian church was founded by Paul about A.D. 54 (Acts xviii), it was only fifteen years old in 69. But how is this objection removed by dating the epistle A.D. 95–100? Surely a life of even 46 years does not make a church ancient. Nor is the case much better if you add even 25 years to that, by dating the epistle A.D. 125.

Those who urge this objection hav not yet broken their ecclesiastical fetters. Paul was essentially a Jew, even according to the fabulous book of Acts, and the extracts we hav given from Clement's epistle show that he also, as Paul's disciple, observed the Mosaic rites and ceremonies. At Corinth Paul began preaching in the synagog, as he did everywhere else, according to Acts. But his new doctrin of remission of sin through the death and resurrection of the Messiah, offended many, and he was often expelled from the synagog, as at Corinth, for heresy. But his liberal Judaic creed extended salvation to gentiles as well as Jews, and so when they turned him out he straightway organized a new congregation (sunegoge) of seceders, who doubtless claimed, as all seceders do, to be the true church (ecclesiâ) founded on the holy scriptures.

At Corinth, Crispus, the president of the synagog, seceded with Paul (Acts xviii, 8), and Paul says he baptized Crispus (1 Cor. i, 14). At Corinth Paul "entered into the house of a certain man named Titus, one who feared God, and whose house adjoined the synagog" (Acts xviii, 7). So says the Peshito or Syriac version; the Greek has Justus, and the Vulgate has Titus Justus. Here, then, perhaps Paul first met his beloved companion, Titus, an Aramaen (falsely called a Greek in the Greek version, Gal. ii, 3), who joined the seceding church at Corinth and became Paul's assistant there (2 Cor. viii, 23).

According to Acts Paul made his longest stay in Greece at Corinth, preaching there a year and a half, and did not visit that city again. But Paul says in his second epistle to the Corinthians (xii, 14, xiii, 1), that he was about to come to them a third time. And in his first epistle (v, 9) he speaks of a former one which he wrote to them.

But to return to Clement's epistle: whether the split in the Corinthian synagog occurred fifteen or fifty years before, it was perfectly consistent with the theology of the writer to speak of the congregation of seceders as "the most ancient church of the Corinthians."

Paul may hav suffered martyrdom at Rome and under the prefects. But "prefect" is a doubtful translation of egoumenos. The office of prefectus urbi existed at a very early period of Roman history, and was revived and enlarged under Augustus, whose reign began 31 B.C.

Clement of Rome may possibly be a myth. Irenæus says the epistle was written from Rome, and Eusebius adds that it was written by Clement. We are willing to believe it, only it must hav been written before the Christian era.

ANTICHRIST.

An Englishman's View of Ingersoll.

From To-day in America, by Joseph Hatton.

If there had been reporters, and interviewers, and newspapers in the days of the apostles, much controversy would hav been spared us to-day as to the interpolations of reverend revisers of the scriptures. Theology would certainly not hav become such a difficult study as it has, had the chronicles of the dawn of Christianity been set forth by rival newspapers in morning and evening editions.

Possibly we might, in that case, never hav heard of Ingersoll's lectures on religion. But he would hav talked. Nothing could hav kept him quiet. He was born to "orate." He has "the sublime gift." You can see it in his eloquent mouth, his full, bright eye, his strong jaw, his intellectual forehead.

They hav all a kindred physiognomy, these public speakers—Gladstone, Beecher, Spurgeon, Bright, Ingersoll, the entire race of great talkers, who think upon their legs, in contradistinction to the men of conversation, such as Thackeray and Douglas Jerrold. They are not to be confounded with gabblers, with wind-bags, with men who sit down after an hour's speech, leaving you without an idea or a thought to take home for reflection.

Ingersoll is unlike any talker I hav ever heard before. He reminds me a little of Spurgeon, whose Saxon-English and broad, homely similes are akin to the Ingersoll method. He has not the dignity of Bright nor the polish of Gladstone; but he has the earnestness of both, coupled with a boldness of metaphor and a vigor of style that are peculiarly American.

He represents to-day a great movement, concerning which it is not my purpose to express opinions, but to illustrate it with interesting facts, and with examples of the manner and teaching of the facil and influential orator whom the pen of America has called the "Apostle of Unbelief."

It cannot be doubted that he is the mouthpiece of vast multitudes who hav gone beyond the anecdotical phase of skepticism, and find sympathetic interpretation of their doubts and fears in the vigorous open speech of the American preacher.

Robert Ingersoll is their John preaching in the wilderness, and for weal or woe they accept his gospel—the gospel of justice, the gospel of intellect, the gospel of good cooking, the gospel of true friendship, the gospel of cheerfulness, the gospel of happy homes. No more priestly dictation, no more hell. The liberal churches of the world would not mind this so much if the new preacher did not take away heaven also. "I do not wish to rob any man or woman of their hopes in the future," he says. "When we lose a person who is dear to us, it is a consolatory and cherished wish that we may meet again." But evidently he does not believe in a future life himself, though he does not profess to war against the belief of others in this direction. He is opposed to hell and the power of fear, which priestcraft has established for its own purposes.

In this respect the greatest thinkers of the age are with him. Huxley and Darwin are with him; the scientists of Germany and England are with him, and his doctrin is as old as thought. "Hav you a devil still in England?" said a German professor visiting Oxford a dozen years ago, referring to some points in a sermon one of the shining lights of a certain college had preached. "Dear me, we hav had no devil in Germany for twenty years and more!" He exaggerated the progress of German thought, but it may be said of the activ liberal intellectuality of Europe that it has long since deposed the devil.

It was on a Sunday in Chicago, the day after Maud S.'s wonderful performance, that I heard Robert Ingersoll for the first time. Four thousand miles away I had read reports of his speeches in New York papers. One often exaggerates the importance of the seemingly unattainable. Sarah Bernhardt in London, a shadowy something indicated by cable dispatches, is a more wonderful woman than Sarah Bernhardt eating oysters in New York and sitting for her photograph at Sarony's. Ingersoll preaching in the wilderness of the West was to me, sitting by a London fireside, with his printed speech in my hand, a more mysterious power than when I found myself in the same street with him on the American side of the Atlantic. I had read and repeated some of his anecdotes in London to English friends. "Giv him a harp!" had become a stock phrase in a little circle of mine, where cant is not a virtue, and skepticism does not consign a good-hearted neighbor to the flames. But had the American journalists given undue importance to the man and his audiences? Recognizing in his style something original when it seemed almost impossible that anything new could be said upon subjects which Thomas Paine and his imitators had worn threadbare, I was prepared to hav my judgment discounted, and to find that "Godless Bob," as the Chicago Times irreverently calls Ingersoll, was not the giant I had imagined him to be when some thousands of miles of salt sea rolled between us.

It was a bright Sunday afternoon. The street-cars were full of church and chapel goers. Bells were ringing here and there for afternoon service. Some of the church and chapel goers alighted at McVicker's Theater. They were pointed out to me by a friend. Chicago orthodoxy is heterodoxy compared with the orthodoxy of New York and London. Besides the church and chapel goers, there stepped out of the cars people who ignore the steeple-house and the clergyman. There was not a vacant seat in the house—one of the finest and handsomest theaters on this continent of beautiful playhouses. . . .

Ingersoll livs his sermon of domestic tenderness. He preaches fraternal affection, love of home, duty to children, do unto others as you would they should do unto you, and his theory of life is that man makes his own heaven or his own hell; that it pays best to be a good fellow; that if you get worldly prosperity in a dishonorable way you are sure to be unhappy whether you believe in God or not; that, in short, honesty is the best policy. "You cannot help God in any way," he said. "He is beyond anything you can possibly do for him; but you can plant a flower daily in the path of your child from its earliest years, until the day comes when you die in that child's arms." There were homely touches of this kind from the beginning to the end of his address, and there were tears in the eyes of many of his hearers as he contrasted with the uncertain bliss of heaven the certain happiness of kindly deeds and domestic duties well fulfilled on earth. . . . . .

"What Must We Do to be Saved?" was the subject of his lecture. He came on from the prompt side of the stage, and was received with round upon round of applause. A middle-aged man, he was attired in evening dress, "the custom of an afternoon," it seems, on the American platform. He held some notes in his hand. They turned out to be the Creed of St. Athanasius and other extracts from the English

Prayer Book, and from the New Testament. He began just as I could hav fancied him sitting by my London fire. . . . . He went on with a wonderful facility of eloquence. He hit priestcraft blow upon blow, and he relieved the seriousness of his theme by epigram and anecdote.

Ingersoll has a full and practical knowledge of the artifices of oratory. He was never at a loss for a word, though he would occasionally pause, half-hesitatingly, to giv emphasis to a telling phrase. His action is great when compared with the repose of English speakers. He walks about the stage as Father Gavazzi does, only that the Italian is almost melodramatic in his actions, flinging his cloak over his shoulders like a bandit, while Ingersoll is simply emphatic in his gestures. He laughs at his own jokes; laughs with his audience; they with him; it is as if he and his audience were on close and intimate terms; as if he slapped them on the back and they him; as if they were real intimate friends; and it is in moments when they are closest together over a good joke—the bacon story, for example—that he suddenly pours out upon them the eloquent warnings of his better nature, of the responsibility that rests upon every man to liv a pure and manly life. He is one of the most natural of orators, natural in the sense that Mademoiselle Bernhardt is natural in the interpretation of characters which suit her physique. His voice is not musical, his manner is uncultured, but his matter is original, his treatment unique, and he has the magnetism of all great speakers who sway and dominate multitudes.

There was rough, bludgeon-like logic in his analyses of the gospels, and he showed to the evident satisfaction of his hearers where churchmen had tampered with them, and how they had overloaded the simple teaching of Christ with commandments and promises which he never gave. He carefully criticised every gospel. . . . . .

His reasons are too many to be printed in this sketch. They were put with great force. They were full of analyses, the kind of searching inquiry which belongs to the legal examination of evidence before a bench of English judges. Mr. Ingersoll is himself a lawyer of eminence. After an exhaustiv review of the gospels, and the exhibition of a remarkable list of so-called interpolations into the original text, and referring generally to the powers which the interpolators had made Christ profess to hav given to his disciples in the way of casting out devils, and the necessity of men who would be saved giving away their money and leaving father, mother, wife, and child to follow him, he said:

"Keep the Commandments," said Christ to one inquiring for a way of salvation. "Which?" answers the inquirer. Christ didn't tell him to keep Sunday, nor to believe in the Bible. He did not mention Jonah, not a word about snakes swallowing each other for exercise. But he told him to go and sell what he had and giv to the poor. I think the man who wrote that must hav been pretty hard up, although the church has always been willing to swap off treasures in heaven for cash down; and I think the church must hav been dead broke when it interpolated these words, "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven." Did you ever know a Christian to unload on this account? Oh no, your Christian millionaire hangs on to his gold to the last minute, and then lets it out at five per cent to start a theological seminary, and thus compromise with God. But I don't believe Christ ever said any of these things. The commandment to forsake all things for Christ's sake I for one will not follow. I will not desert my wife at the bidding of any Christ or any God. Love your children more than Christ. If he was a man, he is dead; if he is a god, he doesn't need your love. According to this doctrin an applicant for admission into the realms of bliss is asked by the recording secretary, "What hav you done to be saved?" "I deserted my wife and six children," answers the applicant. "Go right in," says the secretary. I notice that the men with the smallest souls make the most noise about their salvation. When the great ship of life goes down I won't desert my wife and friends, and sneak ashore in some orthodox canoe. No, I will stand by them and go down with the ship."

He spoke without effort. From declamation to narrativ; from anecdote to simile; from simile to epigram; and thence to pathos of the most touching character. He was easy all the time; he spoke without effort, and when he delivered his peroration one felt that the long address was too short, that the speaker could not hav been wearisome however extended his discourse might hav been. He chuckled over his illustration of the fussiness of perverts and converts.

His hatred of the Presbyterians is greater than his hatred of the Catholics. He says their sect was started by a murderer whose idea of God was an infinit John Calvin.

And so he went on with his beliefs and with illustrations of their good amidst thunders of applause, the vast audience holding him silent for some seconds at his reference to the schoolhouse, to the cathedral, and to the gospel of justice.

The most successful drama, theatrical managers tell you, is that which sandwiches in its scenes laughter and tears. Audiences like to laugh and cry almost in the same breath. Ingersoll's addresses are modeled on this principle. Laughter, enthusiasm, heartfelt emotion, are the responses to his catching eloquence. I call to mind his closing words; the spirit of them remains with me as orthodoxically as the sacred music of a cathedral choir.

"Oh, but you say I take away immortality. I do not. If we are immortal it is a fact in nature, and we are not indebted to priests for it, nor to bibles for it, and it cannot be destroyed by unbelief. As long as we love we will hope to liv, and when the one dies that we love we will say, 'Oh, that we could meet again!' And whether we do or not, it will not be the work of theology. It will be a fact in nature. I would not for my life destroy one star of human hope, but I want it settled that when a poor woman rocks the cradle and sings a lullaby to her dimpled darling she will not be compelled to believe that ninety-nine chances in a hundred she is raising kindling-wood for hell. One world at a time. That is my doctrin. It is said in this Testament, 'Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof;' and I say, 'Sufficient unto each world is the evil thereof.' And suppose after all that death does end all; next to eternal joy, next to being forever with those we love and those who hav loved us, next to that is to be wrapt in the dreamless drapery of eternal peace."

And these words that follow were those that stirred the hearers into a shout of enthusiastic indorsement of the humanitarianism of his eloquent discourse:

"Next to eternal life is eternal death. Upon the shadowy shore of death the sea of trouble casts no wave; eyes that hav been curtained by the everlasting dark will never know again the touch of tears; lips that hav been touched by eternal silence will never utter another word of grief. Hearts of dust do not break; the dead do not weep; and I would rather think of those I hav loved, and those I hav lost, as having returned, as having become a part of the elemental wealth of the world; I would rather think of them as unconscious dust, I would rather think of them as gurgling in the stream, floating in the clouds, bursting in the foam of light upon the shores of worlds, I would rather think of them as the inanimate and eternally unconscious, than to hav even a suspicion that their naked souls had been clutched by an orthodox God."

Without for a moment pretending to indorse the doctrins of Ingersoll, there can be no doubt that on the whole he is doing an important work, and possibly a good work. One of the most enlightened of Chicago clergymen, in discussing the subject with me, took that view. A change is coming over the spirit of the churches. The church of England must modify the damnatory clauses of its leading creed in presence of the new movement represented by Ingersoll; and the other churches, if they are to hold the respect and reverence of the next generation, must rule more and more by love and less and less by fear.

I found the same kind of indifference among cultured men and women that obtains in England touching theological controversy, with just sufficient leaning toward the rooting-up of dogmas to make them very tolerant of the preaching of Ingersoll. "If he would not deny a future state of rewards and punishments," said a Western preacher to me, "Ingersoll would be perhaps the greatest and most useful man in this country."

Among the people in America who acknowledge no church and attend no religious services it is a good thing that the Materialist-Infidel, or whatever he may be called, Mr. Ingersoll, is a teacher and missionary; for while he is grinding at creeds and dogmas he is preaching a gospel of kindness, of charity, of domestic love, of manly duty, the gospel of Christ without the ecclesiastical conditions and threats of the churches. I am not upholding his opinions, nor is it my business or inclination to controvert them. A good deal of what he says is a straightforward explanation of the views of many good men, both inside the church and outside, in America and in England. Unknown in England, except by those who regularly and attentivly study the American papers, I take pleasure in acquainting the English public with his existence, and with some of his opinions.

He is a man in the best and broadest sense of the word. "I do not pretend," he says, "to tell what all the truth is; I do not pretend to hav fathomed the abyss, nor to hav floated on outstretched wings level with the hights of thought. I simply plead for freedom, I denounce the cruelties and horrors of slavery, I ask for light and air for the souls of men. I say, take off those chains, break those manacles, free those limbs, release that brain. I plead for the right to think, to reason, to investigate. I ask that the future may be enriched with the honest thoughts of men. I implore every human being to be a soldier in the army of progress. I will not invade the rights of others. You hav no right to erect your toll-gates upon the highways of thought. You hav no right to leap from the hedges of superstition and strike down the pioneers of the human race. You hav no right to sacrifice the liberties of man upon the altars of ghosts. Believe what you may, preach what you desire, hav all the forms and ceremonies you please, exercise your liberties in your own way, and extend to all others the same right."

It was in a lecture on "Ghosts" that the eloquent preacher said these words; and I recall some of the notable points of his belief and the purpose of his lectures. He is doing according to his idea what he can to make this world just a little better; to giv a little more liberty to men, a little more liberty to women. He believes in the government of kindness; he believes in truth, in investigation, in free thought; he does not believe that the hand of want will be eternally extended in this world; he does not believe that the prison will forever sear the ground; he does not believe that the shadow of the gallows will forever curse the earth; he does not believe that it will always be true that the men who do the most work will hav the least to wear and the least to eat. He believes that the time will come when liberty and morality and justice, like the rings of Saturn, will surround the world; that the world will be better, and every true man and every free man will do what he can to hasten the coming of the religion of human advancement.

Ingersoll has an aptitude of anecdotical illustration which carries all before it. I hav seen nothing like the enthusiasm which his oratory evokes, not in multitudes of thoughtless people, but in vast assemblages of educated and resposible men and women who hav paid four shillings each for their seats. One of his rhetorical episodes occurs to me. It was to point his argument against eternal punishmeut.

"A house is on fire, and there is seen at a window the frightened face of a woman with a babe in her arms, appealing for help. Humanity cries out, 'Will some one go to the rescue?' They don't ask for a Methodist, a Baptist, or a Catholic; they ask for a man. All at once there starts from the crowd one that nobody ever suspected of being a saint; one, maybe, with a bad reputation; but he goes up the ladder and is lost in the smoke and flame, and a moment after he emerges, and the great circles of flame hiss around him; in a moment more he has reached the window; in another moment, with the woman and child in his arms, he reaches the ground and givs his fainting burden to the bystanders, and the people all stand hushed for a moment, as they always do at such times, and then all the air is rent with acclamations."

So also is the atmosphere of the great hall in which he is speaking. When the surging crowd is still again, he exclaims: "Tell me that man is going to be sent to hell, to eternal flames, who is willing to risk his life rather than a woman and child should suffer from the fire one moment. I despise that doctrin of hell! Any man that believes in eternal hell is afflicted with at least two diseases—petrifaction of the heart and putrefaction of the brain."

This blow at superstition having hit the mark hard, having gone straight home, he delivers another in the same direction. "I hav seen," he says, "upon the field of battle, a boy sixteen years of age struck by a fragment of shell. I hav seen him fall. I hav seen him die with a curse upon his lips and the face of his mother in his heart. Tell me that his soul will be hurled from the field to eternal torment! I pronounce it an infamous lie! And yet, according to these gentlemen, that is to be the fate of nearly all the splendid fellows in this world."

It is not necessary that I should repeat his arguments or his facts; they are indicated in his rhetorical flights. Nor do I care to bring down upon my humble head the thunders of orthodoxy by what may be considered an undue exploiting of the logic of an unbeliever. Of course the churches can answer him, and do. They are answering him all this time from one end of the States to the other. Sermons precede and follow him wherever he goes.

And the following was his peroration;

"Why should we sacrifice a real world that we hav for one we know not of? Why should we enslave ourselvs? Why should we forge fetters for our own hands? Why should we be the slave of phantoms—phantoms that we create ourselvs? The darkness of barbarism was the womb of these shadows. In the light of science they cannot cloud the sky forever. They hav reddened the hands of man with innocent blood. They made the cradle a curse and the grave a place of torment. Let the ghosts go—justice remains. Let them disappear—men, women, and children are left. Let the monsters fade away—the world remains, with its hills, and seas, and plains, with its seasons of smiles and frowns, its springs of leaf and bud, its summer of shade and flower, its autumn with the laden boughs, when

> The withered banners of the corn are still,
> And gathered fields are growing strangely wan,
> While death, poetic death, with hands that color
> Whate'er they touch, weaves in the autumn wood
> Her tapestries of gold and brown.

The world remains, with its winters, and homes, and firesides, where grow and bloom the virtues of our race. All these are left; and music, with its sad and thrilling voice, and all there is of art, and song, and hope, and love, and aspiration high. All these remain. Let the ghosts go—we will worship them no more. Man is greater than these phantoms. Humanity is grander than all the creeds, than all the books. Humanity is the great sea, and these creeds and books and religions are but the waves of a day. Humanity is the sky, and these religions and dogmas and theories are but the mists and clouds changing continually, destined finally to melt away. Let the ghosts go, we will worship them no more! Let them cover their eyeless sockets with their fleshless hands, and fade forever from the imagination of men"!

THE Rev. Joseph Cook says that "the religious tone of Harvard [College] has changed wondrously within the last fifteen years, and for the better." Upon what does he base this statement? Statistics show a constant decrease in the number of Harvard men entering the ministry. The records of each graduating class show a significant proportion who openly acknowledge themselvs to be Agnostics or Freethinkers. Would Mr. Cook say in the face of our empty churches that educated young men throughout the country are becoming more religious? But the young men at Harvard are more intimately influenced than those outside by a spirit of skepticism which is in some respects peculiar to this university. This may be attributed partly to youth and to the almost perfect freedom from restraint enjoyed by Harvard students, and doubtless it is in many cases shaken off in after years. But whatever be the cause there is no foundation for the statement that Harvard of late years has assumed a more religious tone. On the contrary the prevailing tone among the students as regards religious matters is one of indifference.—Tribune.

WORSE than all other mean acts are those performed by hypocrits under the cloak of purity and virtue.—D. M. Bennett.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. Macdonald, - - - - - Editor.
Mary W. Bennett, - - - - - Publisher.

21 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing seven hundred square inches more reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

All Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders should be made payable to MARY W. BENNETT.

SATURDAY, - - - JANUARY 6, 1883.

In Memoriam.

We continue this week to print reports of the Liberal Leagues and other Freethought bodies which hav united to do honor to the late editor of The Truth Seeker. From societies and individuals alike come heartfelt expressions of sorrow at the great loss sustained by the Liberals. Very few men hav been so near to the people as was Mr. Bennett. He was one of them. He worked with them and for them. He associated with the workers. His life was one of constant toil, and he had the feelings and sympathies of a working man. Whether traveling as a salesman, dispensing medicins to the sick, or tilling his farm, he was the same unremitting toiler. When he started The Truth Seeker he brought the habits of the farmer into the editorial room. He labored from four in the morning till nine or ten at night, and the oft-repeated cautions of his associates could not deter him. He was a good friend to everybody but himself. In his own office he was much loved, and if any of his employees were in trouble they invariably came to him, and he helped them out. When friends from out of town came in they always found him ready for a chat. He met every one on his own ground. He had theology, medicin, chemistry, and the various sciences at his tongue's end. His reading was prodigious, and his memory wonderful. Besides, he had been in so many avocations and professions that he might hav been called a "Jack-at-all-trades." But the rest of it would hav to be changed, for he was good at all. Occasionally a Christian would drop into the office, and when he was holding his debates with the Rev. Humphrey and with Mr. Mair they were frequently in, and at such times we in the office were always treated to a theological discussion. At the close he would tell them they were good fellows, but deceived, and commiserate them. He hoped to convert them both, and he undoubtedly did make much impression on them, and both Humphrey and Mair are more Liberal to-day than they were.

These qualities of simplicity and earnestness endeared him to his friends who came into personal relations with him, and they made themselvs manifest in all his writings, so that people who never saw him felt as though they had known him personally. The one trait which dominated all others in him was honesty. In his business dealings, in his conversations, in his writings, in his life in all its paths and duties, this trait was prominently manifest. This gave to all his utterances an added force and weight, and commanded respect from all but the most miserable of mankind.

His power as a Freethought advocate has been exceeded by none. Voltaire, perhaps, in his lifetime was as cordially hated by the church and its satellites, but Voltaire's influence was reduced by the very lack of the animating force of Mr. Bennett's life. Dissimulation characterized his age, and he had to play the hypocrit sometimes to save his life. But history would hav placed him higher in the temple of fame if he had been grand enough to rise above the hypocrisy of the church. It was the infinit superiority of his character over the Christians that made Mr. Bennett's fame. He would be honest if he was ruined. He would be true to his own convictions if he spent his life in a dungeon. In this he was more like Thomas Paine, and, like Paine, his fame will be greater, his memory more loved, in fifty years than now. During his life, and at his death, Paine was hated by the church as intensely as D. M. Bennett, and to-day the people are but finding out how deeply indebted this republic is to the author-hero. So it will take many years for the general public to find out how much they owe to D. M. Bennett for breaking shackles as galling as those which were forged by George the Third for the people of America. Although not devoting his great talents to politics, Mr. Bennett was as sturdy an advocate of the rights of man as Paine. His violation of the Comstock law was as much a protest against Federal usurpation of powers not delegated to it by the Constitution as against the exercise by the Christian church of power to which it has no moral or legal right. He was the deadly enemy of tyranny in whatever form it appeared—whether it wore the crown of kingship, the robes of priests, or paraded in the garb of republican simplicity. He saw where such misgovernment would lead, and, like Jefferson, protested in the beginning.

It was all these grand and unselfish characteristics which so endeared him to the people and call forth such words of honest and heartfelt sympathy. Never was a bigger lie uttered than that by a Christian paper of this city that his influence would die with him. His influence will grow as his sincere, unostentatious, honest life and work become better known. No man who sees a great wrong and tries to sweep it away but will leave his impress on those who come after him. He did his work so manfully and well that when the great fabric reared by the church shall hav tottered and fallen he will be honored by the benefited world as one of the mightiest workmen engaged in its destruction.

To the Leagues, to the individuals all over the country who hav sent sincere sympathy and paid their tributes of love, we return thanks. The dying year took with it Freethought's best friend. May the new-born one raise up a host to take his place.

A New Volume and New Type.

This number begins Volume X. of The Truth Seeker, and with it the price is reduced to $2.50. When Mr. Bennett announced the change he did so with the hope that many new subscribers could be added to the list. He well knew he had not made any money by its publication, and he did not want to. He wanted to do the most good possible, and furnish the Liberals of the country with a paper at a price within the reach of everybody, and this idea is the one that actuates his successors. This reduction will reduce the income many hundreds of dollars, which must be made up by new subscribers. It is hoped that this will be done. Mr. Bennett promised, and we renew the promis, that if the list can be doubled the paper shall be furnished for two dollars. It costs just as much to set the type for one copy of the paper as for thousands.

This paper also is printed on the new type promised for the beginning of the year by Mr. Bennett. This of course has involved a large outlay, but the paper presents an improved appearance and will satisfy our friends better.

We shall soon resume the publication of Mr. Wakeman's "Harmony and Meaning of the Scientific Gospels," which is so instructiv and entertaining. For this volume we shall hav also the contributions of the many earnest and able writers whose names are familiar to our readers as household words. The Truth Seeker is the free forum of the Freethought party of the United States, and its broad columns will remain open to the discussion of all subjects pertaining to the welfare and civil and religious rights of mankind. We shall continue to show up the rottenness of the church and priesthood, their false pretenses in selling a heaven they cannot find, and threatening a hell which has no existence; their hypocrisy in claiming that they are called of God to discourse of things not earthly, when they are the most intent of any people upon the fleshly things of life. The church has been a perpetual stumbling-block to progress in science, and it will be the cherished purpose of The Truth Seeker to remove it. In this good work we confidently look for the aid of all true Liberals.

Heredity Meeting.

The parlor meetings of the patrons and members of the Institute of Heredity residing in New York hav been resumed. The first of this winter's series was held at the residence of Dr. Foote, 120 Lexington ave., on the evening of the 28th. Mr. S. P. Pntnam, the president, opened the exercises with an excellent address showing the difference between the scientific and the theological methods of dealing with the question, and the necessity of being guided by the former. As Dr. Foote, Sr., was a delegate to the convention in Boston, he presented a report of what took place there. Letters were read from Mrs. Lucinda B. Chandler, Albert Chavannes, editor of the Sociologist in Knoxville, Tenn., and from the Rev. Jesse H. Jones, North Abingdon, Mass. Comments were made upon the reports and the letters by Mrs. Cynthia Leonard and Dr. Garter. The next parlor meeting will take place on the last Thursday evening in January at the same place.

An Intolerant Decision.

Judge Briggs, in an opinion delivered on Dec. 30th, ruled that Atheists and all others who do not believe in a divine being and divine rewards and punishments are incompetent as witnesses. The question was brought up on a motion for a new trial in a suit, the ground for the motion being that Judge Briggs had admitted the testimony of Robert Becker, who said that, although he believed in the creator of the universe and in a supreme power which would punish him here for false swearing, he did not believe in God as commonly understood by the people, nor in a personal god, nor in God as an entity. There was no other evidence in support of the objection to the witness. In his opinion, Judge Briggs said that it was with some doubt that he admitted the witness. After quoting authorities, he continued:

It follows that the faith of a witness should be a religious belief of some kind in the existence of an omniscient being who will reward and punish either here or hereafter for good or evil deeds. A belief in a power as exhibited by the forces of nature, and call it supreme and yet ignore that that power is the handiwork of the omniscient and omnipotent God, is totally insufficient to meet the law's requirements. Nor is any advance gained by asserting that he who violates the laws of nature will be punished, for admittedly such punishment will follow with unerring certainty. If one jump overboard in mid-ocean, or thrust his hand into a raging fire, or violate any law of his natural existence, he would be immediately punished just in proportion that he violates these natural laws. A belief in such a punishment is not a belief in divine punishment, and clearly insufficient to render one entertaining it competent to testify under our law. While the witness said he believed in a supreme power that would punish him here for false swearing, he would not say that he believed that power was divine, and he totally denied the personality of God as generally understood by people. With such a belief how can he be said to be in fear of divine punishment for testifying falsely? His belief being defectiv in this respect, it falls short of one of the legal reqirements which is indispensable to exist to entitle him to be examined as a witness in the courts of this state. It follows that I erred in receiving his testimony, and that a new trial should be ordered.

A man capable of delivering an opinion like this is not fit to be a judge. It is equivalent to saying that a witness must believe a lie before he is competent to tell the truth. For blind stupidity, and pig-headed and obdurate disregard of the dictates of common sense and reason, this opinion of Judge Briggs cannot be surpassed.

Not of Much Account.

A Kentucky patron asks the following question:

Hav you read "The Problem of Human Life," by A. Wilford Hall? If you hav, let me know through The Truth Seeker what you think of it. What denomination does Mr. Hall belong to? By answering the above you will very much oblige, Yours truly, A. B. Briney.

We hav not seen the book, but we hav seen a paper of his which we consider very trashy. And in the Christian Union of Dec. 21st we see some one has asked the same question, and the editor, who, being a Christian, has been favored by Mr. Hall with a copy, replies:

Wilfred [sic] Hall's "The Problem of Human Life" is a book of very curious learning, the scientific value of which has yet to be tested. The author has undertaken to prove the immortality of the soul by demonstrating that all the so-called principles of the forces of nature, including the vital and mental powers, are really substantial entities, and since science has determined that no substance in the universe can be annihilated, he maintains that the eternity of the soul as a substance is scientifically established. In the course of this argument he strikes upon the supposed fact that sound is produced by waves of air, and he enters into a long argument to prove this theory false and to establish the doctrin that sound consists of corpuscular emissions, and is, therefore, a substantial entity like everything else. Whatever may be said of the scientific argument, we do not attach much value to the theological argument; for though matter is indestructible it varies in its form and its identity, and Mr. Hall's argument, if his premises are conceded, and his logic accepted, only goes to show that spiritual existence does not come to an end; but it does not in the least militate against the idea that the individual may lose his identity and become merged in universal being, as the drops of water in the ocean or the cloud.

As Mr. Hall wrote his book to prove Christianity, the above is not very complimentary to him. He is probably some Ishmaelite of the church, who is welcome nowhere.

A Valuable Suggestion.

A Congregational minister in Michigan was not much used to engaging in lawsuits, yet he thought he would go to law against an Infidel who had said some unpleasant things about him. He sought to recover damages from this Infidel for defamation of character. This was several months ago. After suffering the customary delays of the law, the suit has now been brought to trial. The result is a victory for the clergyman, which, though it brings him money, is nevertheless a very barren victory. The verdict in his favor is one hundred dollars. This represents four or five months largely devoted to preparing for the suit, to say nothing of the worry and the wear and tear of mind. Had the good parson spent the same amount of time and effort in sawing wood at a dollar and a quarter a day he would hav been better off in mind, body, and estate. His character, which he considered to hav been damaged by what the Infidel said about him, would hav been quite as highly esteemed by the good people in the community as it is now that he has received the hundred-dollar award for its supposed damage.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER will readily recognize the parties involved in this suit as our good friend, M. Babcock, and the Rev. Mr. Richards, of St. Johns, Mich. The foregoing extract is from the New York Sun, and the suggestion it contains as to the sawing of wood at a dollar and a quarter a day, or even a quarter without the dollar, might be acted upon by the majority of ministers, with equal profit, whether they go to law or stick to gospel.

THE Detroit Evening News has the following: "The Sun says it is positivly alleged that Gen. W. T. Sherman has recently been received into the Roman Catholic church. The ceremony of the occasion was rather private. Mrs. Sherman has long been a Catholic, but the general has always been known as a Freethinker." This is incorrect. It is the general's son who has made a fool of himself by joining the Jesuits. He recently lectured in Baltimore on the Inquisition and defended that hellish institution to the best of his limited ability. Whether his father is a Freethinker or not we do not know, but it is only justice to one of America's greatest soldiers to acquit him of the infamy of having allied himself to one of his country's most dangerous enemies.

THE Philosophic Inquirer is the sharpest thorn that pricks the missionaries of India. It was started simultaneously with the appearance of Jo Cook in that country, and the disgust excited by his visit appears to hav made Freethinkers enough to sustain it. It ought to devote a few of its issues to showing up the fraud of sending missionaries to convert a people who hav a philosophy more sublime, a religion more pure, and morals infinitly better than the church can show among all its saints and parsons.

THE London Republican, edited by George Standring, is publishing the biography of Mr. Bennett which appeared in these columns. The Republican is devoted to republican principles, and hopes to see the day when the reigning sovereign of England will giv place to one chosen by the people. Mr. Bennett made many warm friends among the Freethinkers of England on his two visits who will be glad to see this sketch in one of their own papers.

THE valiant Freethought orator, John E. Remsburg, of Atchison, Kansas, is coming East in a few weeks on a lecture tour. He will speak as he has calls in Iowa, Missouri, Illinois, Wisconsin, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, the New England states, and even as far east and north as Canada. We hope he will be kept busy, as he is both able and eloquent, and will do our cause much good. Address him at once at Atchison, Kansas.

SOME time ago Byron Adonis severed his pleasant connection with the Jewish Times, and retired for awhile from activ journalism. He has now returned to the work with a paper of his own called the Universe. Although it is a local paper, Byron has devoted it to free thought and free speech, and hits the Christian church upon every available opportunity. It is published at 615 Kearney street, San Francisco, at $3 per year.

OUR friend Albert Chavannes, of Adair Creek, East Tennessee, has started a little monthly paper for the dissemination of "knowledge of the natural laws that control human happiness." He calls it the Sociologist, and will send sample copies free to all who drop him a postal card asking for it. The essays in it are good and much profit can be derived from their study.

THE Woman's World is the name of sprightly little paper published by Helen Wilmans, at 256 State street, Chicago, Ill., at $1 per year. It is the ablest of the many distinctivly woman's rights journals published, and we wish Miss Wilmans success in forcing from the state and church the recognition so long unjustly denied the women of this country.

MRS. LAKE will speak for the Pittsburgh League on Paine's Anniversary. She will also be at Linesville, Pa., on the 30th. Parties wishing lectures will address her, after Jan. 25th, at Linesville, Pa. Until that time, address at 219 Grand avenue, Milwaukee, Wis.

THE Banner of Light has our thanks for courtesies extended. Also the Kansas Liberal, published by Messrs. Harmon and Walker. May it be long ere we hav to reciprocate in kind.

E. H. HEYWOOD'S trial has been postponed till March.

Remsburg's Image Breaker.

I hav received the first six numbers of the Image Breaker, and hasten to express my admiration of them. First, their size adapts them to be sent through the mail in a one cent wrapper. This will help to scatter them among the people at small expense. Secondly, the type is large and legible, which is a great matter for the reader. Thirdly, the author is careful to cite authority for every important statement made. I think that the reader who feels the force of his argument cannot evade it by cavilling. Fourthly, what is politic, and very admirable, he don't stuff a tract to repletion with a multitude of ideas, but hammers out one point at a time and finishes it. No. 1 is a model in this respect. A. B. BRADFORD.

Enon Valley, Pa.

Our Directory.

I hav just finished reading H. L. Green's "Freethinkers' Directory," and am ever so well pleased with it. It is not only a long list of the names and addresses of Liberals, but it is filled with interesting and useful reading matter, valuable suggestions, items of news, and good advice. I hope every one who receives it will order No 2, and set about getting a few new names to add to the roll of honor. The splendid lot of premiums ought to induce hundreds to work for names, and the satisfaction of knowing who and where our friends are should be a still greater inducement. Right here let me say I shall be glad to forward names and stamps (twenty-five cents each) for new memberships, and I hope to hav that pleasure every mail between now and the next issue. I'm not entirely unselfish in soliciting them, either, as I want a copy myself, and also to pay in that way for getting my advertisment in it. I sent in only five names for No. 1, but hope to forward five times as many for No. 2. Come, one and all, and join in the good work. Let your names stand as emblems of progress and reform and of the increased measure of happiness that will grow out of increased liberty and goodness. We are "Clearing the ground for broad humanity, the true America,

Heir of the past so grand,
To build a grander future."

Snowville, Va. ELMINA.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Names of Liberals sent me before the 10th of January will be published in the second edition of the "Freethought Directory," which will be issued Jan. 15th. Those who desire the second edition must order it before that time to receive it. Price 25 cents.

Salamanca, N. Y. H. L. GREEN.

Liberty and Morality.

From Truth.

Will you allow me space in your valuable paper to say a few words in favor of W. S. Bell's speech, delivered at the New York State Freethinkers' Convention at Watkins, Aug. 26, 1882? "Liberty and Morality" is a neatly covered pamphlet of thirty-six pages, and throughout its entirety displays the literary acumen for which its author is distinguished. The gist of the book, plainly perceived by the reader, is that true liberty is but individual sovereignty, minus infringement upon the rights of others; and pure morality is: Do thyself and others no harm. But the author's most happy hits are under "Christian Morality," a few of which are here appended: "No hateful parent can teach his child to love him, nor will a mountain of commandments warm his child's heart into love. The masses lay off, to some extent, their religion when they lay off their Sunday clothes. Here (the atonement) the moral government of society rests upon a fabulous tradition, which is supposed to hav had its origin some six thousand years ago." "It (prayer) is an effort to persuade God to do better than he otherwise would." In criticising the Sermon on the Mount, Mr. Bell says: "'Take, therefore, no thought for the morrow' is a sentiment which no intelligent person accepts." Again, "It may seem a sweeping assertion to say that all distinctly Christian doctrins are immoral. More than this, the people were immoral who invented them, and what is still more fundamental, the god they worshiped was immoral. It was he who ordained evil. What for? To show his mercy. He created the universe for his own glory. In fact, we find he has failed in all he has ever undertaken. He created Adam and Eve, but they proved an utter failure, drowned the world, turned himself into his own son, and died to save the world; but here, again, he has signally failed. His own people are now deserting him by denying the story about creation; they hav dared to close the doors of hell in the face of heaven."

The pamhplet may be had of the author, at Paola, Kansas, and at THE TRUTH SEEKER office, 21 Clinton Place, New York. Price, 15 cents.

ELLA E. GIBSON.

Errata.

In a notice of "The Bible of the Religion of Science," printed last week, there are two typographical errors.

1. The basic principle taught in this book is that spirit matter, force, and motion, and the laws of growth, maturity, and decay are eternal (not external) substances or principles.

2. And last of all the great mass of religionists worship a word (not wood) God. The Christians hav declared that "the word was God." This I consider the thinnest God man ever made. H.

We would call the attention of our readers to this new book, which is elsewhere advertised.

The Rest is Silence.

From the Kansas Liberal.

D. M. Bennett is dead. Upon the hearts of thousands of American Liberals this announcement fell as would hav fallen the tidings of the passing away of a loved brother or father. For D. M. Bennett had endeared himself to the readers of his paper to a degree almost unprecedented in the annals of journalism. It was not the "editor" who spoke through its columns, but the man, D. M. Bennett. This, to a great extent, was the secret of his success. It was to the man, not to the journalist, that the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER addressed their letters. He made warm friends and bitter enemies. So must every man of positiv convictions and sincere purpose. Woe be to the hypocrit pretending to the possession of a virtue he did not possess when this man turned upon him. Terribly direct were his blows. He wielded no blade of lath in mimic battle, but sent his heavy broadsword straight down, cleaving sure and certain the brazen front of fraud.

He was not always right in his estimate of fundamental principles; he did not always see clearly what was embraced in the demand for the sovereignty of the individual, and he clasped to his heart a system whose devotees sought frantically to blacken his name and murder his reputation because of his asserted failure to liv up to the requirements of their and his creed. But they falsified and perverted the record, for he was no hypocrit, and to the last remained true to the unnatural and cruel system which, but for his inherent strength and nativ manliness, would hav utterly destroyed him when the "leaders" whom he subsequently unmasked perfidiously and with intolerable insolence attempted to make his private life a matter of public concern.

The fearless thinker, the candid searcher for truth, the indefatigable worker, the valiant rebel against authority whose injustice he perceived, the great journalist and publisher, the martyr for free publication, the MAN, D. M. Bennett is no more with us to do battle for the right. But his work survives, his memory livs in mind made free by his struggles and his sufferings; the words he has spoken, the volumes he has written, the paper he has established, all these remain to us, and incalculable is the good they will yet accomplish.

And for us who are left his life has many valuable lessons. Unconquerable determination, sincerity of purpose and candor of expression, capacity for work carefully husbanded by care of the physical, and strict integrity made the Prisoner of Albany what he was. Our work lies onward in the way he traveled; our mission is the same as was his, the destruction of superstition and injustice, the enthronement of Reason and Equity. We only are his true disciples as we grow into the stature of a fuller manhood and womanhood, as we with swinging step advance into broader liberty still more earnestly and intelligently. Let this be the inspiration we draw from the life and labors of our comrade, the untiring worker, the soldier of Freethought, the martyr, D. M. Bennett, now passed into everlasting silence. W.

THE TRUTH SEEKER will be sent three months to new subscribers for half a dollar. Those interested in the spread of Freethought should exert themselvs to further the circulation of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Communications.

Immortality—The Idea Very Old—Singular Error.

A remarkable statement was made by H. W. Beecher at the supper to Herbert Spencer. It was that "the doctrin of immortality was not known in the Old Testament days, and that not a soul had ever heard of a future five thousand years ago."

Let us see. What said Job? After indulging in some hopeless remarks, he concludes that, "though the worms shall destroy his body, yet in his flesh shall he see God." What says Ecclesiastes? After in a like manner indulging in declarations as to the vanity of all earthly things, he givs us the "conclusion of the whole matter," the last of which is, "The spirit shall return to the God who gave it." Moses givs us nothing in his laws to show he had much idea of immortality; and so, if one looks through our own statutes, he will find no reference to a future state. Still he legislates against "witches and those who hav familiar spirits." If we hav any doubt as to what sort of people he meant, we can ascertain from Saul's visit to the witch of Endor. Samuel was dead, and Saul in great trouble. He visits the woman in disguise, and asks her to consult the spirits. She refuses, and refers to the law; Saul promises to protect her; she begins her incantations. Samuel appears; he asks, "Why hast thou disquieted me?" and he says, "To-morrow thou and thy sons shall be with me." And yet men knew naught of a future in Old Testament days!

Who were the Pharisees and the Essenes? Their sects existed long before Christ. In Acts we are told that the Sadducees deny the resurrection, but the Pharisees confess it. The Pharisees were the oldest sect and the most popular, because "they clung to the traditions of the elders." There are a thousand sayings in the Old Testament to show that a future was deemed as a matter of course. There is no doubt as to whence the Christians get their peculiar idea of hell and heaven. Homer described it, and Plato, in his "Phedo," tells all about it. Virgil's sixth book of "Eneid" is full of it. The fact is, we are in the habit of regarding the Jews as being the most ancient of people, and the depositories of all ancient wisdom, whereas they were comparativly a new people and almost destitute of any literature till after their return from captivity. About 1400 years B.C., according to their own account, they emerged from Egypt. Now Egypt, we know, had been for thousands of years prior to that time a land of high civilization. "Moses was learned in all the knowledge of the Egyptians." Far back of Moses's day we find the Egyptians with a highly perfected system of religion. They had as clear an idea of a future state as ever any people had. By consulting Spinetto's lectures, the reader will find their whole system clearly explained. Long afterward they had degenerated from monotheism to polytheism, which is the natural course.

Leaving Egypt and going to India, we find a still more ancient civilization, and a religion that taught a future state. There we find the source of all the most ancient traditions. There is where the Egyptians got the story of creation and deluge; of Adam, Noah, Ham, Shem, and Japhet, and of A-Brahm, or Brahm-a.

The following quotation from a work written while Egypt and Greece were in their infancy ought to satisfy any one that, no matter what we may hav attained in the material world, the mind of man has never reached higher in its search after the infinit and the future. It is from "Shirin and Ferhid," an allegorical poem found in Vol. IV., Asiatic Researches—"Philosophy of the Asiatics:"

"There is a strong propensity which dances through every atom and attracts the minutest particles to some particular point. Search the universe from its base to its summit, from fire to air, from water to earth, from all below the moon to all above the celestial spheres, and thou wilt not find one corpuscle destitute of that natural attractability; the very point of the first thread in this seeming tangled skein is no other than this principle of attraction, and all principles beside are void of a real basis. From this propensity arise all motions in heavenly and terrestrial objects. It is this that taught hard steel to rush from its place and rivet itself on the magnet, and impels the light straw to join the amber. It is this quality that givs every substance in nature a tendency toward another, and an inclination forcibly directed to another object."

And yet the age that developed the mind of that writer had never conceived of immortality!

The statements of Manetho, once so much derided because they showed that Egypt had thirty-two dynasties of kings prior to Alexander the Great's day, hav been confirmed so that there is not a shadow of doubt as to their truth. At the beginning of the sixteenth dynasty Egypt was at her greatest enlightenment. This takes us sixteen dynasties back of Alexander.

Spinetto—a Christian, too—says in his lectures (introduction, lecture 1st):

"For the religion of Egypt, in its primary institution, was Deism and the immortality of the soul. The certainty of a future life was its chief dogma. In fact, many of the hieroglyphics on the MSS. or sculptured on the temples and ruins are a repetition of these important truths."

In the papyrus found with some of the oldest mummies we find this doctrin alleged. Those remains take us to an age back of five thousand years before Christ, let alone five thousand years ago. Philo, who wrote nearly 1800 years ago, was indoctrinated in all the old learning. Speaking of Moses's decease, he says (vol. iii, "Life of Moses," p. 39): "And when he was about to depart from hence to heaven and take up his abode there, and leaving the mortal life to become immortal," etc. Evidently wherever Philo speaks of immortality he speaks of a matter well known, as he supposes. So Elijah says of the widow's child, "Let this child's soul come into him again."

But against the assertion of Mr. Beecher surely it is enough to state the single word "Pharisee"—the name of the oldest sect of the Jews. The Sadducees, like our modern Atheists, were a later development. In fact, the ideas of Atheism and non-immortality are much later than those of their opposits.

Much as we surpass antiquity in our stronghold on physical nature—and which is due solely to the advantages science has given to civilized man over the savage, thus preventing all interference with progress in that direction—we are not one whit ahead of a reflecting savage in the ideal; in fact, civilization confuses the ideal. In metaphysics our master is yet Aristotle, whose ideas we may well believe were received from India, and these belonged to a time so ancient as to surpass tradition, in that land so faithful to tradition.

It is consistent, doubtless, to believe that blind, dumb, mindless nature developed the mind from an oyster, infinitesimal or otherwise, and so has developed the idea of immortality, and that such idea may be false, but must of course be a late development. With these ideas, it is also consistent to believe that the wires will deliver intelligence at one end, yet having only the blind, dumb, mindless battery at the other. When I can believe the one I can the other—but not yet.

HOLT.

A Letter from London.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: A glowing eulogium on Joseph Cook, of Boston, appears in an English religious paper this week.

According to the report, copied from an Australian journal, he has again proved himself the invincible champion of Christianity, and confuted all his opponents, no doubt in his usual style, by refusing to meet one on a public platform. We are told that "humor in Mr. Cook occasionally serves all the offices of logic," and I hav no doubt that is about right—his average audiences would not know the difference between the two. "His dissection of Prof. Bain's definition of matter was resistless in its mirth-compelling power, and he made Herbert Spencer's definition of life as amusing as anything in Artemus Ward by simply repeating it." What an acquisition this new Jo Miller will be to the celestial regions, and vary the monotomy of the everlasting solitary song known there. He has put to utter confusion and rout Haeckel, Huxley, and all other scientists who dare to differ from him, beating them all on their own ground. From his vast and overwhelming knowledge he must really be the long expected messiah, for he possesses more learning than any one else living or dead, so his admirers say. Jesus Christ would sink into nothingness beside him, and Jehovah would hav to take a back seat. When he gets to heaven he will want to prove that he has a better right to the great white throne than the first person of the trinity, and if he succeeds in proving his case, the ungodly Infidel may look out for a bad time of it; there will be a new hell made for certain, and Joseph will see that there is a good strong bottom to it, and a lid on the top, with a plate-glass window in it, so that he can see the fun inside. No one would better enjoy watching Atheists burning in unquenchable fire, which will be the fate of all who refuse to "hear the word." He has logically demonstrated it, and therefore it must be true.

The Lord being busy now in Australia helping his apostle Joseph, the faithful in this country hav been somewhat neglected. On Sunday the Presbyterian church at Plymouth was burnt down, and a Roman Catholic nunnery was injured by the fire. On the same day the senior deacon of a Congregational chapel and an attendant at a Wesleyan Methodist church fell down dead during the services. Last week a woman suffering from religious excitement committed suicide, and a parson in London was fined for being drunk and disorderly in the street; so you see the great enemy of mankind has been busy among the elect. It isn't safe to leave them alone for five minutes. Pious folks want a wonderful deal of looking after. A reverend canon of the Roman Catholic church is now waiting his trial at Tournay for absconding with the treasure belonging to the diocese, amounting to some millions of franks; the police hav succeeded in recovering about three millions, and as there is a question as to the right ownership, the diocese not being a legal corporation, the government will probably take charge of the money, and apply it to some useful purpose. It would be satisfactory if all religious bodies could be compelled to disgorge their ill-gotten plunder.

A member of the aristocracy yesterday presided at a cattle show, and in the course of a speech mentioned the late archbishop of Canterbury, whom he extolled for his many virtues and immense intellectual powers; "he was a most large-hearted and liberal churchman, and believed that others were going to heaven beside himself, though they might not be going by the same path." Such vast liberality is quite overpowering.

Your correspondent, the Rev. John Smith, appears to know as little of his own or any other religion as the majority of spiritual guides. He certainly cannot mix much with his own party or he would hear plenty of curses and denunciations heaped upon the devoted heads of Freethinkers, with many regrets that the elect cannot exterminate them. There is plenty of persecution going on, though it does not get so far as burning at the stake. The Christians need not brag about their tenderness to unbelievers, they would do just the same as they hav done before if they had the power. Your opponent probably does not read the papers, or he would hav seen that there are actions for blasphemy, so-called, pending against certain Freethinkers here. Fortunately we hav a champion in Charles Bradlaugh, who is fully equal to the occasion, and we look forward to securing through him a glorious victory for our cause. While hoping for the best we shall be fully prepared for the worst; and if we are defeated this time, we shall not be crushed out of existence, but gain many more adherents, and the downfall of bigotry and supernatural religion will thereby be hastened.

I am glad to hear that Charles Watts is meeting with appreciativ audiences, and gaining friends wherever he goes, and trust the seed he is sowing in new ground will bring forth a plentiful harvest.

Trusting that you and your readers will hav a good share of happiness and prosperity the coming year, I am fraternally yours,

J. D.

A Rational Sabbath.

Rev. Robert Collyer, Sunday evening, the 24th, spoke upon "A Defense of Sabbath Breaking." There was a very large congregation, and at times during the vigorous blows which the dealer dealt the Sabbatarian leagues there was a disposition on the part of the people present to applaud. The question, he said, had been forced very strongly upon the people of New York for some weeks past whether they wished to hav the ghost of an old Puritan Sabbath revived for their special discomfort. They hav been required to bow down to and pay a proper deference to this dead thing of a misty past. A very small body of men with very strong convictions hav resolved to hav their notions carried out by the rest of their fellow-citizens. They hav set up as censors of the morals of their neighbors, and if you will not hav their blessings they are bound that you shall hav their bans.

Dr. Collyer said that this revival of the antiquated Sabbath rules and observances reminded him of the opening of a hymn much used at funerals forty years ago, which ran, "Hark, from the tombs a doleful sound." The hymn and the words had acquired for him a new significance within the past few weeks. The city was full of pathetic examples of how harsh and unjust a bigot could become, and how one-sided and blind a hide-bound, double-distilled Sabbath champion could be. He told the story of the poor little brown-eyed crippled bootblack of Union Square, who supported an aged mother on his well-earned dimes, and who looked upon the Sabbath as a harvest day, as he had a right to do in carrying out God's injunction to liv the life which had been given him and to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow. The big policeman could not sink to the level of the law-enforcing fanatics, and so he warned the little lad. "Sure the Sabbatarian scouts are out. Look out for 'em, now."

The rich, said Dr. Collyer, may look upon the Sabbath as a time to spend in church, but the poor, many of them, look upon it as a time to earn money for their stomach's sake, and if that money is not earned their stomachs go unprovided for. The preacher said he was not quite satisfied with the way the feasts and fasts of the church were kept. The rich keep all the feasts, while the poor keep all the fasts. There is a great giant which has been chained down by these pigmies of the Sabbatarian league. He is good-natured, and has not yet flung off the fetters which hav been put upon him. The law courts hav given the people some very choice bits of practical gospel rendering within the past few weeks, and hav enforced the broad church article of that prince of preachers when he declared that the "Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath." A law should be made to punish somebody, but that punishment should not fall upon a class, and especially should the cruelty and injustice of this special legislation not be felt in this free land of America. A law for the rich and another law for the poor is not a thing to be tolerated under any circumstances, and those who think it can speak without the book. There is no telling what may come after what has been seen during the past few weeks. "The groggeries hav been closed, or rather the authorities hav attempted to close them, and no one should complain of that," said the preacher, "but the poor man is then cut off from his indulgence, while the rich may go down to their private wine cellars and swim in wine if they wish. Then outside they can visit the hotels or the well-guarded hostelries, and it amounts to just this, that you pay twenty-five cents a drink instead of five cents a drink. And then the poor little news lads; they are chased about here and there, while the big workers on the newspapers are let alone. I should like to see these Sabbath defenders hit somebody of their own size—somebody who can hit back. Let them storm the stronghold of the Herald, drag out the men who are to-night doing a work which, in the eyes of these guardians of a defunct notion, is neither a work of necessity nor of mercy. But they are ghosts of the past, and ghosts always are timid, fit only to frighten women and children. Let them bag such game as I hav mentioned and they would soon discover they were not in the Boston of a hundred years ago, nor the Edinburgh of to-day, but in New York, where men hav a taste for civil liberty not easy to be overcome.

Dr. Collyer gave some amusing instances of the absurd enforcement of the Sabbath blue laws in Scotch towns and declared it to be the spirit which would "kick the man who is down." There was, he said, no authority for any such day in scripture. I plead for the Sabbath, he said, for a day of rest, but let that be arranged by agreement between the employer and employee. If they cannot fix upon what we style our Sunday let them take some other day, when they will not offend any of those who respect and wish to observe the Sabbath as we now hav it. I am afraid some of our working people think they hav too much rest already, judging from their incomes, and I agree with them, judging from the use some of them make of their spare time. I plead for recreation in its broadest sense. If boys wish to swim on Sunday instead of going to Sabbath-school —and judgment shows that they will profit more by it—why, let them go into the crisp salt water about the city and hav free baths on that day. If they wish to play ball, open fields and bid them go there. Let the music halls be open, for music can never be other than refreshing except when it is linked to bad words. Let science take the day and bid the lecturer on the wonders of creation as welcome as the preacher. You hav no more right to stop my going to a theater than I hav to stop your coming to church. Your private coaches are permitted to run, and I demand that the cars and steamboats, which are my private conveyances, when I hav paid my fare, be allowed to run as well; and then, too, the very worst lesson which could be set before the lawless is open to-day in the fact that they see a law so generally and unevenly broken. I ask in the name of our common freedom and of the vast majority who are used to a rational Sabbath and know how to keep and observe it, that this dangerous mockery cease. I say "dangerous," for once get the blood of the people up and there will be new laws which will open the way to a license which every man and woman will view with extreme regret.

Mind as the First Cause and Paramount Potential Force in the Universe, for Infinit and Finite Uses of Unconscious Matter.

The decision of the great question of the primal cause or origin of universal phenomena, to our minds, depends upon satisfactorily explaining, and so of determining what is, self-evidently, adequate for the universal effects observed. There are but two possible hypotheses, viz., inherent potency in unconscious matter, as self-derived, and so having no design or purpose, yet are assumed by some to be adequate for all phenomenal acts; or that such adequacy is exclusivly due to a co-operativ impress of a conscious intelligent force, having a design and impelling dynamical power to enforce its coherent edicts upon unconscious matter for a purpose. In either case the power must be dynamical, i. e., mechanical in its acts; so such force must be material, or the function of an element, as science determins that matter can only be moved by matter.

The first hypothesis of the self-acquired and self-possessed potency of unconscious matter would be admitted by science if its adequacy could be explained; but science knows no such explanation or adequacy, for every known or supposable act of unconscious matter requires a preceding or prior cause to account for its doings; and, thus, no primal or original force in any kind of unconscious matter is known to science as having such exclusiv self-potency to move all or any phenomenal matter into its known unerring combinations and performances. And least of all, can our minds discover or imagin such self-potency in any kind of purposeless matter, which can impel all other equally impotent matter into its coherent phenomenal acts of wondrous mechanisms and harmonious adaptotions; with that crowning glory of thus supernaturally evolving from unconscious materials all conscious finite minds, unconscious matter begetting conscious matter, capable of high abstract intelligence in conception, invention, and judgment, with will-force power to dictate obedience from unconscious matter, its anomalously supposed origin and master, something so infinitly different and transcending such unconscious materials that such assumption must be relegated to the supernatural magical fancy of dreamers.

All admit that "conscious mind is something, a reality, an existence;" then, by necessity, all must concede that mind is a something really existing as a material, and, as really occupying space, cannot be an immaterial spirit, neither can it be an unconscious material, like brain-matter. And the only remaining possibility is that mind is the function of a special entity or subtil-material, separate from and foreign to our organisms, as are oxygen, solar light, food, liquids, etc., which build and sustain our organizations in working order for the mind's use, having its independent life and immortality.

Finite minds are undoubtedly a conscious material in necessary co-operation with unconscious matter for all their coherent works, and such conscious material must as readily and aggregately co-operate universally with all unconscious matter in interdependent dynamical association to giv coherency to all its works, as with the finite mind for the coherent governance of a part of such unconscious matter. In other words, that the same cosmic mind-matter in its entirety constitutes the infinit mind, and is individualized in finite organisms, and thus the first force animates all its organic creations.

As we know that finite minds are dynamically moved or impressed into cognition of motions of unconscious matter, outside of our organisms by impacts upon our sense-nerves, centering in and forming our brains, and that our minds dynamically cause outside matter to be moved by our mental force, acting through nerves and muscles, it thence follows that our minds must be the functions of a special material or element of some kind, having a mechanical cooperativ and interdependent association with all matter which is cognizable to our senses for both impressions and expressions. Finite mind is thus proved to be a dynamical, mechanical force in nature, capable of moving and being moved materially by other matter. Therefore mind is not a spirit, for that is incapable as a non-entity (in not occupying space) to move or be moved by matter, and so can not be a dynamical or mechanical force, which mind is just proved to possess in all art performances upon unconscious matter, and so mind is shown to be a material moving power, and that unconscious matter of itself only has no power to accomplish such exclusiv mind purposes, nor are the unconscious materials of our organisms capable of supernaturally elaborating conscious intelligence.

Therefore finite minds are the sole paramount, potential forces in art works, which thus impel and control much unconscious matter into useful and esthetic combinations and forms by their co-operativ and co-creativ minds, analagous to nature's grander works of all unconscious matter as equally requiring a primal mind-impress for all its laws of action and accomplishments.

Knowing then that finite minds in their limited co-operating powers are alone paramount in their disposition of some matter for art purposes, is it not, analogously and logically, a self-evident conclusion that an infinit, unlimited mind-power in co-operativ interdependence with all matter is equally needed and alone adequate for all dynamical devices and dispositions of unconscious matter into its coherent potential acts of wondrously ingenious mechanisms and evolutional adaptations? So exactly corresponding to finite mind control of some matter, that a similar process must inductivly and analogously be extended to all unconscious matter for its control by candid investigators of cause and effects in the doings of unconscious matter everywhere, knowing that unintelligent matter can hav no choice of actions. So we must rationally conclude that as unconscious matter cannot of itself perform art works for us, and does not resist our paramount use of such materials in unnatural ways, that it has no unalterable natural ways of its own, an exclusiv self-potency, and so cannot resist our mental dispositions. That unconscious matter everywhere must be equally impotent, and so as equally needs co-operating mind everywhere to impress its laws of actions for every coherent purpose and accomplishment, which unthinking matter of itself is powerless to effect, and imagination cannot conceive of such adequacy in senseless and unintentioned matter anywhere.

The two kinds of matter, intelligent and non-intelligent materials, both of which we know exist (as proved by my philosophy), and so comprise the universe of coherent cause and effects everywhere which are the only adequate explanation of the universe of phenomena, i. e., its intelligent first cause of such dispositions of all intelligent matter for an evident purpose, of the origin of all finite minds as parts of that cosmic mind-material, and so of our equal immortality as individualized co-creators in our limited capacities.

All acts of unconscious and so of unintentioned matter must, self-evidently, be the effects of conscious intentions and intelligent impress, for coherent purposes, which the thoughtless materials of nature everywhere displays, and could not, otherwise, effect; as exemplified in all art performances, with the same materials, by finite mind impress.

As unconscious matter—like brain—cannot be supposed to become conscious; as such two characteristics of matter, we know, are infinitly different and imcomparable in their capacities. The one possessing conscious feeling, thought, judgment, invention, and is capable of inciting to useful and esthetic acts of the other, as unconscious materials. Therefore, brain-matter cannot evolve intelligent characteristics, which are, exclusivly, the functions of a special element. So conscious intelligent-matter must be highly-subtil cosmic entity, in connection with all organisms, which are fitted to attract their individual minds from such conscious materials, as parts of the same; and thus become as co-creators in their limited spheres for the disposition of their unconscious bodies and much other like matter, while such conscious cosmic mind-matter in its entirety is the infinit creativ mind in giving disposition to universal unconscious matter, which is the only fact of creation; not in making matter out of nothing. Such are the only rational elucidations of the origin of coherent phenomena everywhere abounding, of its author, and of our minds as intelligent co-creators—being parts of the same mind-element, and so are equally immortal. Thus one mind-element animates all its own organic creations.

Our organisms are as much fitted to attract and utilize in association that foreign entity, mind-material, by their sensitiv nerve structures as they are fitted to utilize those other foreign materials of oxygen, solar-light, food, and liquids as necessary sustainers; and without all of such foreign attachments our organisms would be useless. And why should not minds be as foreign to our organisms as are their sustainers of oxygen, etc.?

Thus, in my philosophy, I prove that mind is a cosmic conscious material, or element, and that its function of intelligence in conception, invention, and will-force originates the only dynamical—i. e., mechanical —potential force in the universe, which is alone capable of adequately impressing and enforcing laws of actions upon unconscious matter for the coherent production of all phenomena—as analogously enforced by finite minds upon some matter. In nature coherency is the gist of its actions, and mind is the only coherent power.

In thus proving the dominant, paramount potency of mind-matter, in impressing or enforcing the disposition of all unconscious matter, I thus trace the necessary interdependent relations of both kinds of matter, which exclusivly comprise the universe. The first to conceive, invent, and, by co-operativ will-power, to enforce its edicts, dynamically, upon its metaphorical body—being in co-relation for expressions and impressions with all unconscious matter, which can hav no purpose or choice of actions in itself, and therefore is in itself impotent, and so has primarily and eternally received from mind-impress all its coherent laws for the production of all phenomena, as our minds exclusivly enforce the coherent acts of our bodies and much other unconscious matter for our intelligent purposes.

These views simplify and exalt our perceptions of the unity and harmony of nature in its adequate intelligent origin, and of the existence and origin of finite minds, as well as of their thus assured immortality, as material forces and parts of cosmic mind-matter, which no other philosophy can explain as adequate cause and effects for all phenomena and our perpetuity; my philosophy of mind and matter, being based exclusivly upon unbiased reason, science, induction, and analogy, which cannot be fairly disputed, or any other consistent adequate doctrin of accounting for what exists can be advanced. Such happy culminating proofs of the intelligent origin of all phenomena elevate our minds to a rational adoration of and gratitude to its great author as the sum and substance of all our religion, with our proved participation in nature's intelligently prepared bounties through all time, should stimulate intelligent acquirements and moral well-doing to all sentient beings.

In conclusion, it may be modestly stated though finite intelligence—in this life—is always connected with individual organisms it does not thence follow that our "minds hav no existence disconnected with our organisms," which, though connected or associated, are infinitly different in their characteristics; the one being conscious, having thought, feeling, and will-power; and the other as the unconscious tool to the mind. While solar-light, heat, oxygen, food, liquids, etc., are all necessary to keep our bodies in working order, as machines, for the receptiv and expressiv manifestations of our minds, it is a great mistake to suppose that such necessary associations, as organic sustainers, "are converted into minds and thoughts," when their only office, or assimilated functions, are to keep the mind's medium—our bodies—in order for mental manifestations. No such miracle or supernaturalism can apply to food, as "its conversion into mind" by any machine or body instrument which supposes a mystic transmutation infinitly excelling the alchemists' dreams—too dreamy for even a poet's vision.

Neither can science detect any such anomaly as "life of rocks, of ores, of crystals, of water, of air," or of any unorganized matter; nor is there life in any organized matter unless associated and vivified by that conscious element, mind, which is as foreign to its unconscious organized compounds as are their environing sustainers of solar-light, heat, oxygen, food, liquids, etc. Again, mind is not produced by any organism; but by that sensitiv organism is simply attracted to and instructed of its surrounding matter and phenomena, and conveys the behests of that mind for desired works. And certainly air, or atmosphere, or any of its components cannot be considered "to impart life"—which would be to communicate it, to grant it—when such are only to sustain organisms, through which our associated lives or minds are manifested. CHAS. E. TOWNSEND.

Locust Valley, N. Y., Nov. 10, 1882.

Letters from Friends.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Dec, 23, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: Please put me down for $1.00 toward the monument for Mr. Bennett. Money ready whenever you want it. R. H. CRESSINGHAM.

ROCHESTER, N. Y , Dec. 23, 282.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: We are all mourners. We feel we hav lost a friend. We had a visit with him last July, and I was wishing we could hav the pleasure of one this winter, when you could come with him, but we will meet in the summer-land.

MR AND MRS. E. H. GAULT.

MT. CLEMENS, MICH., Dec. 24, 282.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $2.65, which pays for the balance of this year, and next. I hope you will be able to carry on the grand old TRUTH SEEKER in its noble work of battling superstition and error, and though its brave old editor has gone and left us, we will hope that his mantle has fallen on shoulders that are not unworthy. AMOS BUTTON.

LACROSSE, WIS., Dec. 18, 1882

FRIEND MACDONALD AND MRS. BENNETT: I cannot express the sorrow I feel at the death of our hero, D. M. Bennett. This is a sad blow to the Liberal cause. I hope THE TRUTH SEEKER will liv. I am for a Bennett Hall, and a statue of Bennett in its entrance, and will do all I can for that object.

Yours with all sympathy and gratitude,

J. PETTY.

LA SALLE, N. Y., Dec. 10, 282

DEAR EUGENE: It is with inexpressible sorrow that I read of the death of our dearly beloved Bennett. It really seems as if a dearly beloved member had passed from our household. My prayer is that THE TRUTH SEEKER will liv, as a lasting monument to his memory.

Please convey my love and heartfelt sympathy to Mrs. Bennett in this her hour of deep sorrow.

Yours respectfully, ELIZA H. FALES.

AUGUSTA, WIS., Dec. 24, 282.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will please find $7 Send me Truth Seeker Tracts such as a man needs that is living among a barbarous set of Christians. It is impossible to express our feeling when we saw the notice of the death of our old hero and leader, D. M. Bennett. If he could only hav lived to see the churches wiped out I should hav been glad. But he is gone, and I hope you will fill his place.

Yours truly, SILAS PERRY.

TIPTON, MICH , Dec. 17, 1882.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: I wish I might say something that would lighten your grief, and I do not know of anything truer to say than that you are not alone in your sorrow, for we all deeply mourn our, as well as your, loss. My pen cannot tell my grief. But words are mere nothing when bread is wanted, so please find inclosed $5—$3 to apply on THE TRUTH SEEKER for 1882, $1 for two lithographs of Mr. Bennett, and $1 to apply on THE TRUTH SEEKER. My prayer is that the paper will be kept going. From one who has ever been your friend, OTIS WHELAN.

ONEIDA, N. Y., Dec. 21, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed four stamps, for which please send me the obituary of that brave and noble apostle of truth, D. M. Bennett, who has gone to the spirit world. Although that noble, brave, and good man has departed, he still livs in the affection of every Freethinker. I hav faith enough to believe that he will hold a light from the spirit world that will still cheer and instruct us here on earth. He commenced a work here that cannot stop; and, like the "father of his country," he can never cease to do good. I consider THE TRUTH SEEKER the best paper that I ever read, and I shall take it as long as I can pay for it. Respectfully, G. BEEBEE.

HATBORO, PA., Dec. 24, 1882.

MR. E. M. MACDONALD: The death of Mr. Bennett first came to my notice through a Philadelphia daily on the Friday following his death. It shook me like a clap of thunder from a bright sky. I could scarcely believe it to be true. When my TRUTH SEEKER arrived in mourning I felt I had lost a friend. My heart and hand are with the Liberal cause, and I feel kindly and friendly toward all honest Freethinkers. But Bennett, in my opinion, was the greatest of all. Liberalism will deeply feel the loss of so great a man. Hoping THE TRUTH SEEKER success in the future, I remain, Yours respectfully,

A. J. READING.

CYNTHIANA, KY., Dec. 16, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed post-office order for $3.00; $2.50 is to pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER one year, and 50 cents for three months. The prompt renewal of my subscription is sufficient evidence that I like the paper. It is the only paper of which I ever read every word. Long may it liv to lighten, brighten, and enlighten the pathway of life. I would like to say something in regard to the death of Mr. Bennett, but I find it too sad a subject for me to write about. All I can do is to send condolence and sympathy to his stricken friends.

Yours for Freethought, H. A. BEAMER.

MITCHELL, D. T., Dec. 16, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find post-office order for $1 50 in payment for the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World." Hope I am not to late. Should hav sent before, but hav been from home. It it with the deepest sorrow that I hear of the death of that earnest worker in the cause of humanity, D. M. Bennett. Why could he not hav been left us yet a little while! Surely death loves a shining mark! I extend to Mrs. Bennett my heartfelt sympathy in this her greatest loss. May spirit friends surround and support her is the prayer of,

Yours as ever, L. M. LOGAN.

VINELAND, N. J., Dec. 11, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: You printed announcement of the 7th inst., stating the death of D. M. Bennett, was read with profound sorrow and deep regret. It seems hard to part with such a grand and noble man whose whole life has been spent to free mankind from the curse of Christianity. So it is, and will be; but the world is better for his sixty-four years of life in it, and the future generations will find his name in the list of the Paines and Voltaires. It was my great wish to be with you at the funeral, but circumstances would not permit.

Very truly yours, R. P. FELLOWS.

VERONA, PA., Dec. 19, 1882.

MR EDITOR: Inclosed find money order for $5.25 to renew my TRUTH SEEKER for 1883. We will never giv up THE TRUTH SEEKER for the sake of our dear old friend, Mr. Bennett. We could hardly realize his death. We got our Vol. II., the one that was lost, and we got Vol. III., so we want Vol. IV., if it is not too late. I was waiting to see if I got the lost one, or else I would hav sent sooner.

I want to hav my name down for one dollar for a monument fund. My wife and I deeply sympathize with Mrs. Bennett and the managers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and we will do our humble best to sustain the paper. Yours truly. WM. FRAY.

MULBERRY, PA., Dec. 19, 282.

DEAR FRIEND MACDONALD: I got THE TRUTH SEEKER of last week with the funeral services, and so grand and noble they are that I inclose some stamps for extra copies, as I wish to do some missionary work with them.

I say erect a "Bennett Hall," if possible. I cannot do much, but I hereby pledge at least one dollar. Let me know through the paper when you want it. The Paine Memorial is an example for all to see without much explanation. If any person deserves a memorial it is D. M. Bennett.

To keep THE TRUTH SEEKER floating is one object, and to build a home for the paper is another. Let us act. Your friend, L. W. LIGHTY.

WOODLAND, CAL., Dec. 16, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: With grief I write you, at the loss we hav met with in the death of one of nature's noblemen—D. M. Bennett. What a calamity has befallen not only our own land but other lands! His place cannot be filled; our loss is irreparable. My soul cries out, What shall we do without that noble man? Please convey my heartfelt sympathy to Mrs. Bennett. She mourns not alone; thousands all over the land to-day mourn for your loss. Words fail to express my feelings and I must close.

Inclosed I send $1 to start a fund for Mrs. Bennett (the widow of our chief). Let Liberals all over the land do the same.

Yours for truth, MARY J. BENNETT.

MILWAUKEE, Dec. 25, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: I was very surprised when I read in THE TRUTH SEEKER that my friend Bennett had left us so suddenly. I went from Liberal, Mo., to Watkins Glen to see him when he came back from the Round-the-World trip, and was very glad to find him in good health—as he assured me. And now he is gone! It seems to me as if my very brother is taken from me. But it is nature's course, and we hav to submit. We hav lost one of the best friends humanity had. My hearty sympathy is with his sorrowing wife.

I send you post-office order for $5; $1 to Bennett's memorial, $1.50 for the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World," which you will send to Superior, Neb.; for the balance giv me credit on THE TRUTH SEEKER. A. MINSKI.

EDEN MILLS, VT., Dec. 25, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: In relation to the death of D. M. Bennett, that great and good man—great because he was good—I cannot think of words with which to form sentences to express my grief, or to convey the sympathy I hav for Mrs. Bennett in her great grief, nor the sadness I feel for your loss, and my loss, and the loss to the whole Liberal world. As I cannot help the dead, pecuniarily, I thought possibly I could help the living; therefore find inclosed $3 50 for seven three-months'-trial subscribers. May you all hav happiness, health, and long life, and may THE TRUTH SEEKER liv long and be able, as heretofore, to deal death blows to the hydra-headed Christian myths, is the earnest wish of one who is ever with you, heart and hand, now and evermore—or at any rate until I die, and longer if I can.

Truly and respectfully yours, C. A. WHITE.

GREENVILLE, CONN., Dec. 24, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: I never saw Mr. D. M. Bennett or yourself, but respect both very highly. I think mankind has lost a very great guide in the death of Mr. Bennett. But his works are here. I hav great sympathy with Mrs. Bennett in her bereavement. Set down one dollar for me toward her relief fund, also five dollars for the Monument Fund.

I hope you will get enough to build a hall also.

I received your pamphlet, "Matter, Motion, Life, and Mind," by D. M. Bennett. I inclose a post-office order for $10—$5 for the Monument Fund, $1 for Mrs. Bennett's relief fund, $3 for my subscription for THE TRUTH SEEKER for 1883. My time does not expire until February, but you may call it January. Also send the "Truth Seeker Collection," advertised in THE TRUTH SEEKER for Dec. 23d. The remaining twenty-five cents you may keep for postage.

Yours truly, JOHN EARNSHAW.

NUNDA, ILL., Dec. 17, E.M. 282.

MR. EDITOR: I herewith inclose order for five dollars. I cannot send this small order without expressing my sincere sorrow for the great loss sustained by the Liberal cause in the death of D. M. Bennett. My true and heartfelt sympathy is extended to Mrs. Bennett in her great bereavement and sorrow. May good and true friends extend the hand of sympathy to her in her desolation, and weep with her in her great sorrow. The great prime factor of Liberalism (THE TRUTH SEEKER) must be maintained, and its investigating echoes must continue to rebound from every hillside and plain from East to West, from North to the sunny South. Although our life is almost irreparable, still let us stand shoulder to shoulder and move on in our work of investigation and research, and hold nothing sacred but the truth.

I am ever in sympathy, J. S. BECKLEY.

CENTER BELPRE, O., Dec. 21, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: I cannot find words to express my sorrow for the loss of our leader, Mr. Bennett. He was certainly one of the noblest of men, and our greatest man. He has done more for the Liberal cause than any other person. He lived to be almost three score and ten years old, but it does seem to me that a man who was so capable of and was doing so much good ought to be permitted to liv three times three score and ten years. There is one consolation, and that is, his works will liv and liv forever. There is not one person in a hundred thousand that accomplishes as much in a lifetime as he has. There are no words sufficient in the English language to express the praise he deserves. I do not know of a person more capable of keeping his pet, THE TRUTH SEEKER, up to his ideas than yourself, and I hope you will continue to publish it as long as you liv, which I hope may be many years. My wife and I sympathize deeply with Mrs. Bennett in her loss. I once lost a companion myself, and I know how lonely she will be. I can truly sympathize with her. MORGAN E. LEWIS.

WORCESTER, MASS., Dec. 20, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: It is with feelings of sadness that I write at this time, for I feel that I hav lost a friend, and it seems that every seeker after the truth must feel that they hav lost (or parted with) a friend, in the transition of D. M. Bennett. We speak of him as dead, but how can such a man be dead! He still livs, and will liv in the hearts and minds of the people; and I feel that he will still march on in the cause of truth and humanity. But when I think of him as gone from the mortal sight my feelings go out in sympathy for Mrs. Bennett, for none can feel that loss that is hers. So, with sincerest sympathy for Mrs. Bennett, I close. Yours truly,

LIZZIE ADAMS.

P. S.—I inclose $1.50 for the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World;" and will you please send me the last paper—Dec. 16th. I wish to send it away to a friend in California who would be interested in reading it.

FRANKFORT, MICH., Dec. 19, 1882.

EDITOR of THE TRUTH SEEKER: We feel we hav lost a dear friend, and mankind a brave champion for the right, in the death of our chieftain, D. M. Bennett. The shock is so sudden and so great that it cannot fail to affect with sorrow the Liberal element among mankind throughout the civilized world.

While we cannot and would not depreciate the grand work that is being accomplished by thousands of noble men and women to disenthrall the minds of the millions from their superstitions and idols, and lift them up to a higher plane of thought and philosophy, yet it is just to say there was but one D. M. Bennett, and that there is no other man in this age or time that has accomplished so much in spreading among the masses a knowledge of the truth, as he saw it, as our fallen chieftain. Peace be to his ashes while he rests from his labors. We can at no time do him higher honor than to endeavor to carry forward the work of disseminating the truths he has suffered and sacrificed so much to bring to the knowledge of blinded humanity so long as they tend to influence mankind for their good and to better its condition. In sorrow I am,

Fraternally yours, N. A. PARKER.

SOUTH ROCKWOOD, MICH., Dec. 18, 282.

DEAR MADAM: The friends weep with you throughout the land. How could it be that our dear Mr. Bennett could be cut down so suddenly? Oh, how his benignant countenance comes up before us! and oh, how deeply we condole with you! My good wife, Mrs. Andrews, is absent in another part of the state, but she writes me that Mr. Bennett's death casts a deep gloom over her, and she tells me she looks and sees him exactly as he looked at the breakfast table at the Essex Hotel in London, Eng., the last time we saw him, and we three took breakfast together. He sat at a little table in front of us, and was cheerful and spirited—full of life and hope. How nobly he did his work! He seemed to hav finished it, and, like Abraham Lincoln, seemed to hav forebodings of his death, when he wrote the account of his life for the paper and gave afresh his belief in a possible future life. You, my dear lady, must reflect that his chair was ready first and that we must all soon follow him; that he did a noble work and is now beyond all arrests and sad trials, which might possibly hav been repeated had he lived longer. He died honored and loved by all. Mrs. Andrews and myself hav always thought much about you personally since we last saw you, and I think deeply of you now.

Sincerely and most truly, T. S. ANDREWS.

SOUTH DARTMOUTH, MASS., Dec. 23, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: Of course, in one sense, death is always very sudden, but when we near of the demise of a friend whose last sickness was unknown to us, we naturally say, "How sudden and unexpected is this news!' In the case of Mr. Bennett, I must say that although when seeing the broad columns of mourning up and down the pages of the paper I felt a sensation of surprise, still, when I look back to the time when the editor of the paper made his tour of the world, and recall to mind the mention which was made in the letters, which we all read with so much interest, profit, and instruction, of several ill turns which he experienced, I am afraid that the result of the journey was detrimental to his health, and perhaps paved the way for his demise.

You know I was one of the few who discouraged the round-the-world journey. But we cannot change anything by vain regrets. All we hav to do, now that the founder of our paper has left us, is to do all in our power to help and sustain those who succeed him. Let us all, friends of Freethought and Liberal ideas, do our best to continue the publication of THE TRUTH SEEKER. And may the result be that it will continue to do valiant service for the cause we all so highly regard. My sympathy, deep and heartfelt, is extended to Mrs. Bennett.

Very truly yours, EDWIN H. BARTLETT.

MT. LEBANON, N. Y., Dec. 21, 282.

MR. EDITOR: Please send me a copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER for Dec. 16th, containing the funeral services over the remains of Dr. Bennett.

Mr. Wakeman's address was a grand and masterly effort, and his eloquence has very nearly converted a very pious, orthodox church-member to whom I read it. It, and the other speeches, and also the hymns sung at the funeral ought to be published in pamphlet form, and I predict for it a large sale. Mr. Wakeman's closing remarks at the grave of the dead philosopher are simply beautiful, and nearly, if not quite, equal to Col. Ingersoll's best production. The pious man to whom I hav referred, after hearing it, declared that he "did not know that Infidels had so much heart and brain." I told him that was owing to a lack of the same on the part of their orthodox cousins.

A shocking accident which has just occurred here has thrown a gloom over the entire community. On the evening of the 19th the office of the second family was burnt, and Ann Eliza Coburn, the most prominent woman in the [Shaker] family, was so badly burnt by her clothing taking fire as to cause her death before noon of the following day.

Please say to Mrs. Bennett that she is kindly and affectionately remembered by many here, and expressions of sympathy and sorrow are made on all sides. Hoping THE TRUTH SEEKER may liv and flourish, I remain, Yours for tru W. C. LANGBRIDGE.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Dec. 26, 1882.

MY DEAR MRS. BENNETT: Circumstances which I could not control prevented me from writing to you on that sad 23d, the birthday of your dear husband, whom I remembered with so much love. I wish to think of you as my sister in sorrow; for I believe all of the suffering, toiling, struggling ones of life are sisters and brothers in sympathy, and should ever prove it as much as it is possible for them to do so. It is a bond that holds all together in heart, and if it could be made possible for all to extend actions of help and sympathy, much of the suffering of life might be mitigated. It is through sufferings we learn the needs of others when the same come into our life. If ignorance or selfishness has kept these needs from us it is still the more important that we practice our convictions of duty, and be cheered by our efforts to lighten others' sorrows, and help them bear their burdens. I hope that all the truth seekers will rally, and show their loyalty to our hero and martyr (Oh, how that cursed modern name echoes in my memory), and let us not stop in our march until we stop that wretch's career for killing our leader, whose heart he broke and thus ended his valuable and so much needed life. I am so full my heart nearly bursts, and no words can express my feelings. I will join in your sad Christmas and New Years. Please accept this New Year's gift ($2.00) as a token of love, respect, and admiration.

H. M. LYNDOLL.

BALTIMORE, MD., Dec. 22, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find check for $4.50—$2.50 for subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER for 1883. I think my time expires with the close of 1882. If it runs over into next year, you can keep that; and if it is already out, I will send the needed amount to make it even. Let me commence with the first of 1883. One dollar and fifty cents is for the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World." The balance is for postage; and if anything is left, send the tracts, "The Fear of Death" and "An Open Letter to Jesus Christ." I hav presumed that the subscription price would be in accord with the promis of friend Bennett; but if it is determined to continue it at the old price, I will forward you the difference.

Allow me to say that I hav yet scarcely realized that the hand which wrote those four volumes of his journey around the world is now cold in the embrace of death. Notwithstanding this great loss, I hope THE TRUTH SEEKER will go right straight on in its course, maintaining the truth and the right as it sees the truth and the right. Bennett may be dead, but the cause he advocated—common sense versus superstition—is not dead, but will survive and liv on, and increase in force till the bright sun of truth and correct knowledge shall shine amid a clear sky, with the black clouds of superstition and error fast receding into the far-off horizon.

Yours for truth and fraternity, C. GARWOOD.

EAST RODMAN, N. Y., Dec. 26, 282.

MR. EDITOR: It is with the most sorrowful feelings that I commence this. Liberalism has lost one of its most indefatigable workers. He spoke to the common people in a good, sensible way. There was but one meaning to his words, and that could be understood; independent and ever ready to stand up for his principles regardless of friend or foe. Policy was not his motiv-power, but principle; a true Liberal, allowing others to think as they wished, and only wanted their reasons for thinking as they did. But he has gone the way of all life; his elements were gathered from or through other death, and other life will be gathered from his death. Another life, a spirit life, a life in another sphere, is something beyond the ken of mortal man. Many believe, but when they explain, their explanations are ignorance worse confounded, no two agreeing—as many views as persons, each after all a vagary of the mind. They hav only exposed the ruling motiv thought of their mind.

All this does not prove there is not a life hereafter. What we want is the proof there is a life hereafter. I hold it will only be known through death.

That which is called Spiritualism is a branch of science not understood, but will sometimes be demonstrated as fully as electricity, or other branches of science which were thought to prove a future life in times past.

D. M. Bennett has gone, but what he has done remains. It will last, and continue to work, unless the bigots should get everything to suit themselvs—full power to do as they please; then the dark ages would as surely return as once they existed. I do not look for another such a damnable curse to humanity to happen again; the conditions can never be the same.

Please find inclosed $4—$2.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER another year, and $1.50 for the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World." I will giv something toward the monument or building, or whatever is decided upon. Yours truly, M. E. ROSE.

BERRIEN SPRINGS, MICH., Dec. 19, 282.

MR. EDITOR: Jesus wept, and so hav I. The black line announced the "Death of D. M. Bennett." The word "gone"—the saddest one in the universe—came to me in all its force. You cannot know how much I loved that man; I "measured him by his soul." Soon came a letter to me from Abbie Knapp, of Cass Co., Mich., a woman of warm he rt and noble soul. Every word of her letter was couched in the deepest grief. It was full of sisterly affection for the memory of our dear brother, D. M. Bennett.

She had invited me to their house to share a visit with him while on the home-stretch of his great circle around the world. She said she was arranging for Mr. Bennett to lecture at her village on his contemplated tour. He would visit their family, and then they would bring him to visit me, knowing my infirmities the year past. This was not to be, and I am sad—deeply sad.

I hav read the biography of D. M. Bennett, also the obsequies and evening services, in tears; in fact, I attempted to read them to my friends, and, notwithstanding my will power, I broke down. I cannot add to the meed of eulogy he has received, and will receive, and will not attempt it.

Has it not occurred to you and the Liberals that our dear brother died by overwork of the brain, and body, too? No other living man has ever performed the physical activities, and done the mental labor of his last three years. The volumes he wrote in that time, under the conditions of his writing, will be a marvel in history. He was organized out of Mother Nature's best materials, and, like the "One Horse Shay," went down suddenly, having exhausted the inherent strength of the materials of his composition.

Dear Bennett, long loved, and gone!

> "As into air the purer spirits flow,
> And separate from their kindred dregs below;
> So flew the soul to its congenial place."

Dear Eugene, you may not be able to publish this, as you will hav such an avalanch of letters from the friends of the dear departed; however that may be, be sure to hand this letter the dear, loving, constant wife and woman, Mary Wicks Bennett.

Speed the Bennett monument. Speed the Truth Seeker Hall. Consider what the Liberals did for that tour around the world. I say, may the grand work speed grandly. Yours ever, WORTHY PUTNAM.

WILKES BARRE, PA., Dec. 23, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: I hav this day been looking into the microscopic world, and hav noticed some of the most wonderful products of nature. To bring into view these life-germs, which seem to enjoy their condition fully as well as we do, in a different sphere, is truly wonderful; and when we reflect that we are made up of this life-principle in its various forms and stages, we are reminded of the absolute littleness of even man, notwithstanding all his achievements.

The little creatures in a drop of apparently clear water were made up of numerous forms, and appeared to be in various stages of development, and some portions seemed to be dead or devoid of motion, while other portions could not be brought fully to view. Often as I hav examined these things, they are always interesting and instructiv, and I would recommend every person who can to procure a microscope. But what we find in the water is contained in other forms in the air we breath. How absolutely essential to health and life is the purest air we can get! It follows from these facts in nature that we are liable to inhale or take into the system from this unseen and unfelt world around us, unconsciously, what may at any time lead us into the jaws of death. And if our departed and lamented Bennett subjected himself to the escaping odors of a broken sewer-pipe, as stated, he may hav inhaled death by every breath he took. I am too sorry that one so well aware of the effects of such a course as Brother Bennett was would for any time subject himself to such treatment. It serves to remind us that "in life we are in the midst of death;" and also of the subjection that each one is in to the operations of laws that govern us and shape our end, independently of our ken or consent. We come into being by law, we liv by law, and we die by law, just as surely as the animalcules do that inhabit the unseen world of which we are made up.

I had but a short personal acquaintance with D. M. Bennett—only a few years—but I was favorably impressed with the expression of his honest and earnest face, and the cordial grasp of his hand, when I first met him, and I am sure that in all my life I hav never felt so much interest in any person before, and hav not been so much disturbed at the loss of any reformer as at his demise. He seemed to fill a place so well calculated to reach the general reader, from his straightforward and unostentatious way of treating every subject he touched. Even Mr. T. Winter could not help sending in his kind words of regret at his loss, although he thought that Brother Bennett had soundly scolded him in his editorial reply. And this shows, too, that while Brother Winter may hav a somewhat rough exterior way, he is at heart a good and kind soul, whose heartstrings are ready to throb in sympathy for any case of distress. Let, then, the death of Brother Bennett unite us all as common mourners, and in memory of him let us not only respect him for what he has said and suffered, but let his death unite the living as a common force to do the work he has left with us to do. When I met Mr. Bennett at Watkins I pledged him my support, voluntarily, and I now renew that pledge to Mrs. Bennett and Mr. Macdonald, believing as I do that in the conduct of THE TRUTH SEEKER, in the future as in the past, every person who has an idea to state will hav a full and fair hearing.

As an earnest of what I say, I inclose $5—$2 for Mrs. Bennett and $3 toward a suitable monument for Brother Bennett. Yours truly, J. R. PERRY.

Thoughts at the Grave of D. M. Bennett at Greenwood.

BY HENRY A. STONE.

Kindly, yes, tenderly, we laid him to rest,
As the clouds gently weeping passed by,
And the bosom of earth in pure white was dressed
When we lowered him down with a sigh.

And we thought, Is it sad when labor's well done
To recline by the wayside and rest,
Surrounded with wreaths and laurels well won,
In the memories of thousands be blest!

'Tis a beautiful spot, that home of the dead,
Where loved ones lie down by the way,
So tranquil and silent in their low, narrow bed,
From anguish and care far away.

Then why should we mourn for him who has gone?
'Tis our aching hearts that are sad,
While we hope for our friend a glorious dawn,
In garments of mourning we're clad.

And yet shall not hope, that radiant star,
Its effulgence and comfort still shed?
When friends dearly loved pass the gate that's ajar,
Shall we then that journey so dread?

For we too must pass at no distant day,
Where we trust with our friend all is well.
Like him may we strew bright flowers by the way.
Till then, dearest friend, fare thee well.

The Secular Union Church.

A SONG, A SERMON, AND A PRAYER.

A walk this sunny Sabbath day,
Amid the woods, across the fields,
To hear what nature has to say,
And count the gifts her bounty yields;
To note the forest's changing hues,
The leaves in green and crimson drest,
To watch the varying landscape's views,
This is the church I love the best.

The silence stealing over all,
Unbroken, save by song of bird,
Or timid pheasant's plaintiv call,
The only music to be heard.
A withered plant, a faded flower,
To tell of summers past and gone;
This is the lesson of the hour,
The text I love to dwell upon.

To know that life, like early spring,
Is full of promis to the young,
To learn that later years will bring
A tear for many an early song;
To feel that true and noble thought,
Matured, its harvest full shall see,
That life's a battle nobly fought,
This is the sermon, preached to me.

That I may love my neighbor well,
In time of need giv helping hand,
That peace within my home may dwell,
Nor covet other's house and land.
And when my winter's sleep shall come,
And in my narrow bed I lay,
Oh, let me bring such harvest home;
This is the prayer I try to say.

And so my temple wide and vast
Extends above, beneath, around,
Takes all mankind within its grasp,
On heathen or on Christian ground.
And ne'er a soul of rich or poor
Need wait for invitation given;
Wide as the earth the open door,
And free as air this road to heaven.

The First Political Platform.

From Liberty.

WHEREAS, I am the Lord thy God, which hav brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage, and am steering thee to the land of Canaan, where there is milk and honey, and every man shall hav forty acres and a mule; and

WHEREAS, I, the Lord thy God, am a jealous God, and opposed to competition in the deity business, insisting upon a monopoly of admiration and worship; and

WHEREAS, I visit the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me, and thus get square with the whole family; and

WHEREAS, In six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, including sin and sorrow, and loafed the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath-day and made the saloons close up; therefore, be it

Resolved, That thou shalt hav no other Gods before me, inasmuch as I am the great and only original, and all others are base imitations;

That Jehovah vieweth with alarm the constant encroachment of stone gods, wooden gods, mud gods, and little tin gods on wheels, upon the prerogativs and perquisits of the big boss God, and therefore declareth that thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of anything that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth; thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them;

That thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain, for too much familiarity breedeth contempt, and the Lord will endeavor to make it sultry or him who waxeth too fresh;

That the Sabbath-day shall be remembered and kept holy, and devoted exclusivly to the giving of taffy to Jehovah, who is a vain God and pointeth with pride to his record on the labor question, which lieth in the first chapter of Genesis. As the Lord made everything in a six-days' go-as-you-please race with nothing, thou shalt do no work on the seventh day;

That the time-honored principles of eternal justice, which were recognized by men before the Lord thy God was invented, be reaffirmed and included in this platform, for the sake of appearances and to giv countenance to the preceding resolutions, as follows:

That thou shalt honor thy father and thy mother;

That thou shalt not kill—provided, however, that the Lord may suspend this commandment when he deems it advisable to hav Philistines, and people who disbelieve in him as the only original God, slaughtered for his eternal glory;

That thou shalt not commit adultery (certain reservations will be made in favor of prophets and holy persons);

That thou shalt not steal—but, for the sake of harmony, the Lord declareth that plundering the Amalekite is not stealing;

That thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor;

That thou shalt not covet anything that is thy neighbor's;

That the foregoing platform and resolutions be lithographed and published by Secretary Moses, under the title of "Ten Commandments."

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25

In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25

Including, "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child;" "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois;" "The Great Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, $1,00; cloth, $2.00.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

Address D. M. BENNETT.
21 Clinton Place, New York.

The Iconoclast.

A WEEKLY

FREETHOUGHT JOURNAL.

Published at Indianapolis, Ind.

It will oppose superstition in every form. Its purpose will be to aid as best it can in freeing mankind from the power of priestcraft and bigotry of every kind. It will publish everything of interest from the pen of Col. R. G. Ingersoll and other leading Liberals of the age, and will be a five-column paper in quarto form.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:
One year.....$1.50 | Six months....75 cents.

Each subscriber will be entitled to a life-size lithograph picture of Col. Ingersoll. Sample copies 5 cts.

Address LAMASTER & JAMIESON,
52 Indianapolis, Ind.

THE BIBLE
OF THE
RELIGION of SCIENCE.

By H. S. Brown, M. D.,

Author of "A Permanent Republic cannot be established by Despotic Family Laws," "Scientific Spiritualism is the Basis or a Scientific Religion and Government," and other works.

"This volume is most respectfully dedicated to those persons who will cordially unite with others to establish the religion of truth and a just government, by the scientific methods of reason, experience, experiments and observations. For this is the way to wisdom, and to the material, mental, moral, social, and spiritual sciences, that make peace on earth and good will among men."

The work is divided into five books, containing twenty-five chapters, is printed on clear white paper, in large type and embraces over four hundred pages.
Cloth. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

SOCIALISM
—AND—
UTILITARIANISM.

By John Stuart Mill.

PRICE 1.50. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE.

PRICE REDUCED TO $1.00.

The BRAIN and the BIBLE,

OR,

The Conflict between Mental Science and Theology.

By Edgar C. Beall,

With a preface by

Robert G. Ingersoll.

"This book, written by a brave and honest man, is filled with brave and honest thoughts. The arguments it presents cannot be answered by all the theologians in the world!"—R. G. Ingersoll.

Price $1.00. For sale at this office.

Correspondence Solicited.

A Liberal young man, twenty-six years of age, wishes to correspond with a Liberal young lady, musical and jovial. Address H. S VOTAW,
26 Havana, Minnesota

80 Court st. Brooklyn

THE

"WILSONIA,"

TWO YEARS AGO

WILLIAM WILSON,

THE INVENTOR OF

WILSONIA,

AN ENGLISH SCIENTIST, MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN, LECTURER ON ELECTRICAL THERAPEUTICS, AUTHOR OF THE "TRIAL OF MEDICIN," THE "LANGUAGE OF DISEASE," "MEDICAL FALLACIES," ETC.,

Introduced to the People of the United States His

MAGNETIC GARMENTS

For the cure of Disease without Medicine or Medica Treatment. The Statement made by him at that time that his Magnetic Clothing, if worn for any form of Disease (and as advised), would cure ninety per cent of the so-called Incurables, has been verified, he having Clothed and Cured Thousands of Persons of all Forms of Disease. Positive proof of this has appeared in all the leading Newspapers by Testimony of many of our most Prominent and Wealthy Citizens, who, having been Cured by the

Wilsonia Magnetic Garments

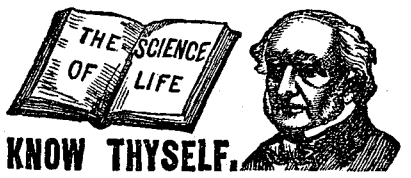
After all other Treatment had failed, were pleased to assist the Inventor in giving confidence to the Suffering Invalids of America by allowing him to use their well-known and respected Names as Reference; and it is now admitted by many most highly accompolished Scientists and Physicians that the Success and Cures attending the introduction of "Wilsonia" Magnetic Clothing has been unprecedented in the history of Electrical Therapeutics In the face of such Positive Proof as given by us no person can doubt the value of this Invention in all cases.

Therefore why continue the Suicidal System of taking Drugs?

SEND $1.50 FOR A PAIR OF
"Wilsonia" Magnetic Insoles.

Sure Preventive of Cold Feet—the Forerunner of Al Kinds of Disease.

Consultation Free.



Send for Pamphlet and Information to the only Office where the Inventor can be seen.

Address all Communications to

DAVID J. COTTER,
80 COURT STREET, BROOKLYN

KNOWLEDGE IS POWER

READ.

KNOW THYSELF.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life; or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man, Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full glit, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now.

Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. 1y38

The Busts of
PAINE and VOLTAIRE.

By the celebrated sculptor

CLARK MILLS.

Price, . . $1.50 each.

Address D. M. BENNETT.
21 Clinton Place, New York.

STANDARD BOOKS.

Sold at The Truth Seeker Office.

MEDICAL and HYGIENIC WORKS

Sent on Receipt of Price.

Trall's Sexual Physiology. A Scientific and Popular Exposition of the Fundamental Problems in Sociology. Price $1.

What Our Girls Ought to Know. By Dr. Mary J. Studley. Price $1.

Hygiene of the Brain and the cure of Nervousness. By M. L. Holbrook. Price $1.50.

Parturition Without Pain. A Code of Directions for Avoiding most of the Pains and Dangers of Child-bearing. Edited by M. L. Holbrook, M.D. Price $1.

The Relations of the Sexes. By Mrs. E. B. Duffey. Price $1.

Fruit and Bread. A Natural and Scientific Diet. By Gustav Schlickeysen. Price $1.

The Better Way. An appeal to men in behalf of Human Culture through a Wiser Parentage. By A. E. Newton. Price, paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

New Hygienic Cook Book. Containing Receipts for Preparing a Hygienic Food. By Mrs. M. M. Jones, M. D. Price 30 cents.

Talks to my Patients. Hints on Getting Well and Keeping Well. By Mrs. R. B. Gleason, M.D. Price $1.50.

Chastity; or, Our Secret Sins. By Dio Lewis, M.D. Treating of the Sexual Relations in their Higher Aspects. Price $2.

Prenatal Culture. Being Suggestions to Parents. By A. E. Newton. Price 25 cents.

Aids to Family Government; or, From the Cradle to the School. By Bertha Meyer. Price, cloth, $1; paper, 50 cents.

The Diet Cure. The Relations of Food and Drink to Health, Disease, and Cure, By T. L. Nichols, M.D. Price 50 cents.

Youth: Its Care and Culture. By J. Mortimer Granville. Price $1.

Eating for Strength. Including the Science of Eating; Five hundred Receipts for Wholesome Cookery; One Hundred Receipts for Delicious Drinks; One Hundred Ever-Recurring Questions Answered. By M. L. Holbrook, M.D. Price $1.

Muscle-Beating; Or, Active and Passive Home Gymnastics. By C. Kiem. Ten Illustrations. Price 30 cents.

Marriage and Parentage. In their Sanitary and Physiological Relations and in their Bearing on the Producing of Children of Finer Health and Greater Ability. By M. L. Holbrook, M.D. Price $1.

Our Girls, and Some of the Things they Ought to Know. By Dio Lewis, M.D. Price $1.50.

Dr. Foote's Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. By E. B. Foote, M.D. Price $1.50.

Vegetarianism the Radical Cure for Intemperance. By Harriet P. Fowler. Price 30 cents.

INGERSOLL'S SPEECH ON TALMAGIAN THEOLOGY.

The ICONOCLAST, Saturday, Dec. 23, 1882, will contain the Great Speech of Col. Ingersoll on "Talmagian Theology," delivered at Indianapolis, Ind., Nov. 11, 1882. The paper containing the speech can be procured at 5 cents a copy. Twenty-five copies and over at 3 cents a copy.

Address
LAMASTER & JAMIESON,
Indianapolis. Ind.

The Great Discovery!

DR. PECK'S
EXCELSIOR
LIVER PILLS.

PURELY VEGETABLE.

Cure Malaria, Neuralgia, Jaundice, Rheumatism, Gout, Dyspepsia, and all Bilious and Liver Affections, etc., etc.

Descriptiv circulars, testimonials, etc., mailed free on application.

Price single box, 25 cents. Five boxes for $1.00.
45

If you cannot get them of your druggist, address the proprietor, W. H. PECK, 222 Washington street, N. Y.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.

Being 3,000 questions propounded to his Jewish Godship upon a great variety of subjects.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

THE BOSTON INVESTIGATOR,

The oldest reform journal in the United States,

Is published every Wednesday at the Paine Memorial Building, Boston, Mass.,

By JOSIAH P. MENDUM.

Edited by HORACE SEAVER.

PRICE, $3.00 per annum; single copies, seven cents. Specimen copies sent on receipt of a two-cent stamp to pay postage.

The Investigator is devoted to the Liberal cause in religion; or in other words, to universal mental liberty. Independent in all its discussions, discarding superstitious theories of what never can be known, it devotes its columns to things of this world alone, and leaves the next, if there be one, to those who hav entered its unknown shores. Believing that it is the duty of mortals to work for the interests of this world, it confines itself to the things of this life entirely. It has arrived at the age of fifty-one years, and asks for a support from those who are fond of sound reasoning, good reading, reliable news, anecdotes, science, art, and a useful family journal. Reader, please send your subscription for six months or one year, and if you are not satisfied with the way the Investigator is conducted we won't ask you to continue withus any longer 2n33

STANDARD BOOKS.

Sold by D. M. Bennett 21 Clinton Pl., N. Y.

CYCLOPEDIAS.

The People's Cyclopedia of Universal Knowledge; 2 royal octavo vols.; over 1,000 pp. each, bound in leather, the whole the work of thirty of the able t men of our times, treating upon almost every conceivable subject, and brought down to the year 1881; illustrated with numerous colored maps and over three thousand engravings; said to contain thirty thousand more articles than any other cyclopedia. The Appendixes alone contain a wonderful fund of knowledge, and among the subjects treated may be named the following: Biographical Classification of Distinguished Men, including Artists, Actors, and Novelists, Authors and Historians, Agriculturists and Manufacturers, Composers and Musicians, Engineers and Builders, Founders of Institutions, Explorers and Founders of Countries, Financiers and Capitalists, Inventors, Journalists and Publishers, Lawyers and Jurists, Lexicographers, Commentators and Philologists, Military and Naval Officers, Ministers and Theologians, Orators and Essayists, Philanthropists and Reformers, Philosophers and Physicians, Physicians and Surgeons, Poets, Scholars and Educators, Sovereigns and Rulers, Statesmen and Diplomatists, Distinguished Women, with a good showing of miscellaneous and scattering. Next follows a Dictionary of Literary Pseudonyms, alphabetically arranged; Origin of Familiar Words and Phrases; Societies and Institutions; Orthography, Punctuation, Correspondence; The Ruling Dynasties of the World; Historical Data of the Republics of History; Classification of Existing Sovereignties; Standing Armies of the World; The Lost and Ruined Cities of the World; Art Galleries of the World; Area, Population, and Wealth of Nations; Monetary Statistics of the World; State School Systems in the United States; Educational Statistics of Various Countries; Alphabetical List of all Inventions; Great Plagues and Distempers of History; Origin of Orchard and Garden Fruits; Governmental Support of Rulers; Banks and Banking; History of Presidential Elections in the United States; Chronological Outline of Historical Events from 1492 to 1882; Remarkable Trials; The Treaties of the World; Principal Bridges of the World; Interesting Geographical Tables; United States Census of Cities and Towns for 1880; Religious Newspapers of all Denominations; Religious Summaries for all countries; Currency, Stock, Insurance, and Interest; Practical and useful measures; Great Church Buildings of History; Great Libraries of the World; Salaries of United States Government Officers; Federal and State Judiciaries; United States Imports and Exports; State Officers' Official Time and Salaries, Fleetest Horses of Current Record; United States Postal Regulations; United States Census; United States Copyright Regulations; United States Patent Office; Business of the General Land Office; United States Public Land System; Table of United States and Territories; Statement of United States Public Debt; National Militia Laws of the United States; Army and Navy of the United States; Religious Denominations of United States and Canada; Our National Domain; Statistics of Cotton and Cereals in the United States; Statistics of the Daily Press of the United States; Marvelous Developments of the Great Western States and Territories; Outstanding Bonded Indebtedness; Indian Agencies and Census of the Indians; Recent Discoveries in Science and Explorations. This entire work by express for $15.00. Regular price $20.00.

Chambers's Encyclopedia of 1880, with Copious Additions of American Editors. In Fifteen Volumes, Octavo, entitled the "Library of Universal Knowledge." There is no Cyclopedia that outranks Chambers's, and to one who reads of American affairs, this is far better than the foreign editions. This very valuable work, of nearly one thousand pages per volume, is offered at the extremely low price of $1 per volume, or $15 for the entire set, the same by express; postage, 18 cents per volume additional. More information cannot be had for the money.

Chambers's Encyclopedia of English Literature. A Selection of the Choicest Productions of English Authors, from the Earliest to the Present time, Connected by a Critical and Biographical History. Elegantly Illustrated. Edited by Robert Chambers, Editor of the Edinburgh Journal. Two Octavo volumes in one. Rich and full gilt. 1400 pages. $4. Postage 44 cents.

Chamber's Information for the Million; or, One Thousand and one Things Worth Knowing. Comprising the History and Mystery of Everything Worth Knowing. 12mo. Price, 65 cents; postage, 11 cents.

The Same, in Acme Edition, 4 volumes, Plain Binding, at the low price of $2. Postage 34 cents.

The Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature; edited by John Kitto, D. D., F. S. A., assisted by noted Biblical writers. Illustrated by numerous engravings. Two volumes, 8vo., of over 900 pages, compact type. A valuable work. Price of 2 vols., $2.50. Postage, 34 cts.

The Handy Bible Cyclopedia and Bible Reader's Assistant, containing a new and complete Dictionary of the Bible, a complete Concordance to the Old and New Testaments, and an Explanatory Index to the Persons, Places and Things in the Scriptures. Illustrated, 1 vol., 12mo., 742 pages. Price 65 cts.; postage, 14 cts.

The World's Encyclopedia of Wonders and Curiosities of Art, Science, and Literature, representing Physiology, Phrenology, Astronomy, Botany, Geology, Natural History, Ichthyology, Mythology, Ornithology, Meteorology, Mineralogy, Chemistry, Zoology, Entomology, Biography, etc., etc.; and containing a Full and Authentic Description of the Most Remarkable and Astonishing Places, Beings, Animals, Customs, Experiments, Phenomena, etc., of both Ancient and Modern Times, in all Parts of the Globe; comprising correct accounts of the Most Wonderful Freaks of Nature and Arts of Man; with an Appendix, containing curious experiments and amusing recreations. By I. Platt, D. D. Illustrated with one hundred and forty engravings. Price, $2; postage, 30 cts.

CHANDOS CLASSICS.

A series of standard works in poetry, history, and general literature. Fine binding.

	Price	Post
Legendary Ballads of England and Scotland. By John S. Roberts	.65	.08
German Literature. Richter, Richler, Zschokke, Tieck	.65	.0
Complete Angler. Isaac Walton and Charles Colton	.65	.08
Lives of Novelists and Dramatists. By Sir Walter Scott	.65	.0
Poetical Works of Eliza Cook	.65	.08
Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire. By Edward Gibbon. In four volumes	2 60	.32
Poetical Works of Charles Mackay	.65	.08
History of England. By Henry Hallam	.65	.08
Lockhart's Spanish Ballads and Southey's Chronicle of the Cid	.65	.09
The Romance of History. England. By Henry Neele. Illustrated	.65	.06
The Romance of History. India. Hobart Caunter, B D	.65	.08
The Romance of History. Italy. C. Macfarlane. " " Spain. Don T. de Trueba	.65	.08
Doctor Syntax. His Three Tours in Search of the Picturesque, of Consolation, of a Wife. With colored Illustrations	.65	.08
Homer's Iliad	.65	.08
" Odyssey	.65	.08
Life and Remains of John Clare. By J. L. Cherry	.65	.08
Selections from the Talmud. By H. Polano	.65	.08
Everyday Book of Modern Literature. By C. H. Townsend	.65	.08
Johnson's Lives of the Poets	.65	.08
Milton	.65	.08
Essays on Chivalry, Romance, and the Drama. By Sir Walter Scott	.65	.08

SHAKSPERE'S WORKS.

	Price	Post
Complete. Fireside Edition. Crown octavo. Large type. Morocco, gilt edges. Illustrated. With a full and Comprehensive Life, Notes, Glossary, etc	4 00	.50
Crown Octavo,	3 75	.48
The Avon Edition. Sheep, marbled edges, library style	3 00	.42
In three volumes. Comedies, Histories, Tragedies. Half Russia, gilt top	3 00	.48
The same, in cloth	2 50	.48
Dramatic and Poetic Works, complete in one volume. Illustrated, with life by Alexander Dyce. Sheep, marbled edges	2 50	.38
Scarlet Border Edition. Illustrated. Complete, red and green. Morocco, gilt edges	1 50	.20
Handy Volume, Shakspere complete, in 13 vols. Green cloth, red edges	5 00	.35
Arundel Edition. From the text of Clark and Wright. Illustrated	1 50	.24
In 8 vols., brown cloth, edited by Clark and Wright	1 50	.27
Complete from the text of Johnson, Stevens, and Reed. Octavo. Paper Binding,	60	.18
Large quarto edition, bound in gold and black. Illustrated	1 00	.24
Arlington Edition	60	.13

STANDARD BOOKS.

Sold by D. M. Bennett, 21 Clinton Pl., N. Y.

DICTIONARIES.

Webster's Pocket Dictionary, 40,000 words Illustrated. Price, 15 cts.; postage, 5 cts.

Webster's Dictionary, 50,000 words. Price, 25 cts; postage, 5 cts.

American Diamond Pronouncing Dictionary, 700 pages. Price, 30 cts.; postage, 5 cts.

The American Comprehensive Lexicon of the English Language, on the basis of Webster, containing 50,000 words and much other information. 768 pages. Illustrated. Price, 50 cts; postage, 6 cts.

American Popular Dictionary, containing every useful word in the English language, and much other useful information. Price, 50 cts; postage, 8 cts.

The American Standard Dictionary, containing all needed English words, with the exact definitions, proper spelling, and true pronunciation, as given by Webster, Worcester, Johnson, and others, with Chronology, Grammar, Proverbs, Scripture names, History, Laws Relative to Land, Interest, Census Returns, Debt, Population, Manufactures, Productions, Wealth, with Ancient Mythology, etc. Illustrated, 717 pages, 12mo. Price, $1; postage, 17 cts.

The Same, in leather binding, $1.75; postage, 18 cts.

The Useful Dictionary of the English Language, compiled by Austin Nuttall, LL.D., based on the labors of Webster, Worcester, Richardson, Goodrich, Johnson, Walker, Craig, Ogilvie, Trench, and other eminent Lexicographers. Comprising many thousands of new words, which modern Science, Literature, Art, and Fashion have called into existence and usage. 900 pages, 12mo. Price, 90 cts; postage, 14 cts.

The Same, half morocco, $1.25; postage, 14 cts.

Webster's Primary Dictionary, 65 cents; postage, 8 cts.

Webster's Pocket Dictionary, new edition, cloth, 70 cts.; postage, 8 cts.

The Same, roan flexible covers, 80 cts.; postage 8 cts.

The Same, with flexible covers and tuck, 90 cts.; postage, 8 cts.

Army and Navy Dictionary, cloth, 80 cts.; postage, 10 cts.

The Same, with tucks, $1.15; postage, 10 cts.

Common School Dictionary, 85 cts; postage, 10 cts.

High School Dictionary, $1.20; postage, 12 cts.

Academic Dictionary, $1.75; postage, 15 cts.

Counting House Dictionary, sheep, $3.00; postage, 20 cts.

Webster's Unabridged Dictionary. 118,000 words, 3,000 engravings; four pages Colored Plates; a Supplement of over 4,600 New Words and Meanings, including such as have come into use during the past fifteen years, many of which have never before been placed in any English Dictionary; also added, a New Biographical Dictionary of over 9,700 names of noted persons, ancient and modern, including many now living—giving Name, Pronunciation, Nationality, Profession, and date of each. Sheep, marble edges, plain or stamped sides, $10; (publishers' price, $12). Cloth, and in 3 vols., same price.

Half Turkey or Russia, extra marble edges, $11.50.

Full Russia, marble edges, $14.

Full Russia, vermilion edges, $14.50.

Turkey Morocco, vermilion edges, $14.50.

Turkey Morocco, gilt edges, $18.

These are usually sent by express, but if by mail, 80 cts. additional must be sent.

Webster's National Pictorial Dictionary, in one volume, 1,040 octavo pages, 600 engravings. Cloth, $4; Sheep, marble edges, $4.50; Half Turkey, vermilion edges, $5.50; postage, 40 cts.

Reid's English Dictionary, half Morocco. Price, 85 cts.; postage, 10 cts.

A Brief Biographical Dictionary, thoroughly revised up to the year 1880. Price, $1; postage, 14 cts.

Masson's French Dictionary (French-English and English-French), with a list of the principal diverging derivations. Price, 75 cts.; postage, 9 cts.

Zahner's Dictionary of the English and German Languages, giving the exact meaning of English words in German, and of German words in English, with correct spelling, pronunciation, and definition. Price, 50 cts.; postage, 6 cts.

Dictionary of the English and Italian Languages, price, 60 cts. each; postage, 6 cts.

CHARLES DICKENS'S COMPLETE WORKS.

Illustrated. 12mo. 15 vols. Volumes bound uniform in green and gold. Large type. Comprising,

1 Pickwick Papers,
2 David Copperfield,
3 Martin Chuzzlewit,
4 Nicholas Nickleby,
5 Bleak House,
6 Little Dorrit,
7 Dombey and Son,
9 Oliver Twist. Pictures from Italy, and American Notes,
10 Old Curiosity Shop, and Hard Times,
11 Tale of Two Cities, and Sketches by Boz,
12 Barnaby Rudge, and Edwin Drood,
13 Great Expectations, and Uncommercial Traveler,
14 Christmas Stories, and Reprinted Pieces,
15 Child's History, and Miscellaneous.

The above only in sets. By express, $12. By mail, $14.25.

Dickens's Works in Single Volumes.

	Price.	Post.
Child's History of England	65	.11
Dickens-Collin's Christmas Stories	65	.11
Martin Chuzzlewit	65	.11
Our Mutual Friend	65	.09
Oliver Twist	65	.12
Edwin Drood	65	.11
Charles Dickens's Parlor Album of Illustrations	1 25	.15
Uncommercial Traveler	65	.10
Dombey and Son	25	.16
David Copperfield	75	.14

WAVERLEY NOVELS, BY SIR WALTER SCOTT.

Illustrated. 12mo. 12 vols. Uniform in green and gold. Large type. Comprising,

1 Waverly, and Woodstock,
2 Rob Roy, and Heart of Midlothian,
3 Bride of Lammermoor, Legend of Montrose, and Chronicles of the Canongate,
4 Peverill of the Peak, and The Betrothed,
5 Fortunes of Nigel and Count Robert of Paris,
6 Ivanhoe, and The Talisman,
7 Fair Maid of Perth, and The Antiquary,
8 The Monastery and the Abbot,
9 Guy Mannering, and Annie of Geierstein,
10 Kenilworth, and St. Ronan's Well,
11 Black Dwarf, Old Mortality, and Quentin Durwood,
12 Red Gauntlet, and The Pirate.

Sold only in sets. Sent by express for the very low price of $10. By mail, $12.

Macmillan Library. Edited by Charlotte M. Yonge. Large type, fine paper.

A Storehouse of Stories. 2 vols.
Ruth and Her Friends.
The Heroes of Asgarde.
When I Was a Little Girl.
Agnes Hopetown.
The Runaway.

The set by express for $4. By mail, $4.60.

ARLINGTON EDITION OF POPULAR WORKS.

Very fine binding.

	Price	Post
Schiller	.60	.13
Goethe	.60	.13
Milton	.60	.13
British Female Poets	.60	.13
Pope	.60	.13
Burns	.60	.13
Dante	.60	.13
Moore	.60	.13
Shakspere	.60	.13
Arabian Nights	.60	.13
Pilgrim's Progress	.60	.13
Robinson Crusoe	.60	.13

Red Line Edition of the Poets. 12mo. Illustrated. Colored covers, Embossed in Gold, Full Gilt, Red Border around the pages. A Beautiful Book, and remarkably cheap at 75 cents per volume. Postage 15 cents per volume extra. Every lover of poetry should buy the entire set.

Milton,	Tennyson,
Pope,	Mrs. Hemans,
Byron,	Schiller,
Goethe,	Scott,
Burns,	Moore,
Dante.	Poets of America,
Owen Meredith,	British Female Poets.
Jean Ingelow,

STANDARD SCIENTIFIC WORKS

Sent by mail on receipt of price.

Every Freethinker should read them.

Sold by D. M. BENNETT, 21 Clinton Place, New York.

WORKS OF CHARLES DARWIN.

Origin of Species	2 00
Descent of Man	3 00
Journal of Researches	2 00
Emotional Expression	3 50
Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols	5 00
Insectivorous Plants	2 00
Climbing Plants	1 25
Orchids fertilized by Insects	1 75
Fertilization in the Vegetable Kingdom	2 00
Forms of Flowers	1 50
Power of Movement in Plants	2 00
Vegetable Mould, etc	1 50

WORKS OF PROF. THOMAS HUXLEY.

Man's Place in Nature	1 25
On the Origin of Species	1 00
More Criticisms on Darwin, and Administrative Nihilism	50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals. Illustrated	2 50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Invertebrated Animals. Illustrated	2 50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews	1 75
Critiques and Addresses	1 50
American Addresses	1 25
Physiography	2 50
The Crayfish	1 75
Science and Culture	1 50
Elements of Physiology and Hygiene. By T. H. Huxley and W. J. Youmans	1 50
Introductory Primer	45

WORKS OF PROF. JOHN TYNDALL.

Heat as a Mode of Motion	2 00
Sound	2 00
Fragments of Science	2 50
Light and Electricity	1 25
Lessons in Electricity	1 00
Hours of Exercise in the Alps	2 00
Faraday as a Discoverer	1 00
On Forms of Water	1 50
Radiant Heat	5 00
Six Lectures on Light	1 50
The above 10 vols., 12mo. Cloth,	19 75
Banquet at Delmonico's. Paper,	50
Belfast Address. Paper,	50
Essays on the Floating Matter of the Air in Relation to Putrefaction and Infection. 12mo. Cloth,	1 50

WORKS OF HERBERT SPENCER.

First Principles	2 00
Principles of Biology. 2 vols	4 00
Principles of Psychology, 2 vols	4 00
Principles of Sociology Parts I., II., and III.	2 00
Ceremonial Institutions: Being Part IV. of "Principles of Sociology."	1 25
Political Institutions: Being Part V. of "Principles of Sociology."	1 50
Data of Ethics; Being Part I. of the "Principles of Morality."	1 25
Study of Sociology (International Scientific Series),	1 0
Education	1 25
Paper,	50
Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals	2 00
Universal Progress	2 00
Essays: Moral, Political, and Esthetic	2 00
Social Statics	2 00
The above 14 vols., 12mo.	25 25
Philosophy of Style. 12mo. Flexible Cloth,	50

Descriptive Sociology. Published in folio with Tables. Eight Parts now ready, namely:

English.
Ancient Americans.
Negritto and Malayo-Polynesian Races.
African Races.
Asiatic Races.
North and South American Races.
Hebrews and Phœnicians.
French.
Price of the first Seven Parts ... Each 4 00
Part 8 7 00

WORKS OF DR. J. W. DRAPER.

History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. 12mo	1 75
Intellectual Development of Europe. 2 vols	3 00

WORKS OF H. T. BUCKLE.

History of Civilization in England. With a complete Index (not published in the English edition). 2 vols., 8vo. Cloth,	4 00
Half Calf, extra,	8 00
Essays; with a Biography of the Author. 12mo. Cloth,	1 00
Half Calf, extra,	2 50
The Life and Writings of Henry Thomas Buckle. By Alfred Henry Huth. 8vo	2 00

WORKS OF PROF. ERNST HAECKEL.

The History of Creation; or, the Development of the Earth and its Inhabitants by the Action of Natural Causes. A Popular Exposition of the Doctrine of Evolution in general, and of that of Darwin, Goethe, and Lamarck in particular. The translation revised by Professor E. Ray Lankester. Illustrated with Lithographic Plates. In 2 vols., 12mo. Cloth,	5 00
The Evolution of Man. A Popular Exposition of the Principal Points of Human Ontogeny and Phylogeny. 2 vols., 12mo. Cloth,	5 00
Freedom in Science and Teachings. From the German. With a Prefatory Note by T. H. Huxley, F. R. S. 12mo. Cloth,	1 00

WORKS OF PROF. W. E. H. LECKY.

History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols., small 8vo. Cloth,	4 00
Half Calf, extra	8 00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols., 12mo. Cloth,	3 00
Half Calf, extra,	7 00
The Leaders of Public Opinion in Ireland: Swift, Flood, Grattan, O'Connell. 12mo. Cloth,	1 75
History of England in the Eighteenth Century. 4 vols., small 8vo. Cloth,	9 00
Half Calf,	18 00

WORKS OF SIR JOHN LUBBOCK.

Origin of Civilization and the Primitive Condition of Man. Cloth,	5 00
Prehistoric Times, as Illustrated by Ancient Remains and the Manners and Customs of Modern Savages. Illustrated. 8vo. Cloth,	5 00
Ants, Bees, and Wasps. A Record of Observations on the Habits of the Social Hymenoptera (International Scientific Series). 12mo. Cloth,	2 00

WORKS OF PROF. OSCAR SCHMIDT.

The Theory of Descent, and Darwinism. With 26 Woodcuts. 12 mo	1 50

WORKS OF PROF. E. L. YOUMANS.

Class Book of Chemistry. New edition. 12 mo	1 50
Hand-Book of Household Science 12 mo	1 75
The Culture Demanded by Modern Life: A series of Addresses and Arguments on the Claims of Scientific Education. Edited with an Introduction on Mental Discipline in Education by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 12 mo. Cloth,	2 00
A Series of Expositions by Prof. Helmholtz, Dr. Mayer, Dr. Faraday, Prof. Liebig, and Dr. Carpenter. Edited, with an Introduction and Brief Biographical Notices of the Chief Promoters of the New Views, by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 12 mo. Cloth,	2 00

WORKS OF PROF. ANDREW D. WHITE.

President of Cornell University.

The Warfare of Science. 12 mo. Cloth,	1 00
Paper,	50

HISTORY PRIMERS.

Edited by J. R. Green. 18 mo. Flexible cloth.

Greece. By C. A. Fyffe	45
Rome By M. Creighton	45
Europe. By E. A. Freeman	45
Old Greek Life By J. P. Mahaffy	45
Geography. By George Grove	45
Roman Antiquities. By S. A. Wilkins	45
France. By C. M. Yonge	45

SCIENCE PRIMERS.

18 mo. Flexible cloth.

Introductory. By T. H. Huxley	45
Chemistry. By H. E. Roscoe	45
Physics. By Balfour Stewart	45
Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie	45
Geology. By Archibald Geikie	45
Physiology. By M. Foster	45
Astronomy. By J. Norman Lockyer	45
Botany. By Dr. J. D. Hooker	45
Logic. By W. S. Jevons	45
Inventional Geometry. By W. G. Spencer	45
Pianoforte-Playing. By Franklin Taylor	45
Political Economy. By W. S. Jevons	45
Natural Resources of the United States. By J. N. Patton	45

STANDARD BOOKS.

Sold by D. M. Bennett, 21 Clinton Pl., N. Y.

	Price.	Post.
Dickens's Parlor Album of Illustrations	1 25	.14
Barberine; or, a Woman's Devotion. By Mary Nal Sherwood	60	.10
Sunshine in the Shady Place. By Edith Milner,	50	.09
Our Red Coats and Blue Jackets. By H. Stewart,	50	.10
Journey of Discovery	50	.08
Stars and Stripes in Rebellion	25	.07
Three Eras of New England and Other Addresses. By George Lunt	25	.09
Broken Bracelet and other Poems. By Mrs. C. H. W Esling	25	.08
Fancy's Frolic; or, Christmas Stories. By Harriet Farley	60	.09
Biographia Literaria; or, Biographical Sketches of my Literary life and Opinions. By Samuel Taylor Coleridge. Two volumes in one,	1 00	.15
Clever Jack and Other Tales. By Anne Bowman	75	.11
Famous Boys, and How They Became Great Men	1 00	.11
Famous Stories. By Various Authors. 2 vols.,	1 70	.22
Balzac's Comedie Humaine	75	.10
Life and Times of Sir Walter Raleigh. By M. A. Thomson	75	.09
The Splendid Advantages of Being a Woman. By Charles J. Dunphie	60	.10
Blue and Red Light. By S. Pancoast, M.D.	50	.10
Scottish Life and Character. By E. B. Ramsay, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S.E., Dean of Edinburgh	75	.10
Home Scenes During the Rebellion. By Eiggan Strebor	50	.12
Old Probabilities. By Josh Billings	75	.14
Rob Roy. By Sir Walter Scott	60	.08
Glendower. A Novel. By Deane Roscoe	50	.08
In the Camargue. By Emil Bowles	50	.08
How to Become a Carpenter	50	.06
Hyperion. A Romance. By Henry Wadsworth Longfellow	50	.06
Outre Mer. A Pilgrimage Beyond the Sea. By Henry Wadsworth Longfellow	50	.06
Willy Reilly. By Wm. Carleton	70	.12
Tom Brown's School Days. By Thomas Hughes,	75	.12
Last Days of Pompeii. By Sir Edward Lytton, Bart	75	.10
Scottish Chiefs. Miss Jane Porter	75	.12
Kenelem Chillingly; his Adventures and Opinions	80	.12
The Sketchbook of Geoffrey Crayon, Gent	75	.12
Ivanhoe. A Romance. Sir Walter Scott	75	.12
Peter the Whaler. Wm. H. G. Kingston	75	.12
Erling the Bold. R. M. Ballantyne	75	.12
Dick Chiverly; his Adventures and Misadventures	75	.13
Last of the Mohicans. J. Fenimore Cooper	75	.10
The Red Eric; or, the Whaler's Last Cruise. R. M. Ballantyne	75	.12
Is the Pope Infallible? John Schuyte, DD., Ph. D	50	.11
Life and Letters of Madam Swetchine. Count De Falloux	75	.09
Madam Swetchine's Writings. Count De Falloux	75	.08
Memoirs of Madam Desbordes-Valmore. With a Selection from her Poems	75	.10
Biography of Alfred de Musset. Harriet Preston	1 00	.12
Troubadours and Trouveres, New and Old. Harriet Preston	1 00	.10
Noctes Ambrosiane. Christopher North	75	.08
" " " " Extra,	85	.11
Ante Bellum. Southern Life as it Was. Mary Leunox	50	.08
Spiritual Wives. Wm. H. Dixon	60	.13
Victor Latourette. A Novel. By a Broad Churchman	50	.09
Modern Diabolism. M. J. Williamson	50	.11
The Golden Tress. Translated from the French of Fortune Du Boisgobey	60	.11
Janet. A Novel	50	.09
For Each Other. A Novel	60	.08
Drawing-Room Plays. An Evening's Amusement	50	.09
Dickens and Collins's Christmas Stories	75	.11
Flemish Life, in Four Stories. By Hendrick Conscience	75	.15
Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1878	50	.21
Essays in Biography and Criticism. By Peter Bayne, M.A.	1 00	.12
Complete History of the Great Rebellion in the United States. By Dr. James Moore	75	.11
Children of the Abbey	75	.12
Vicar of Wakefield	60	.09
A Good Fight and Other Tales. By Charles Reade	50	.08
The Book of the Ocean and Life on the Sea. Illustrated	65	.12
London by Day and Night. By D. W. Bardett	65	.08
Paris with Pen and Pencil " "	65	.08
Life of George the Fourth. By John Canvard	65	.12
Taine's History of English Literature	90	.11
Life of Bonaparte and the Bonaparte Family	65	.12
Flowers from Fairy Land. By Albert Smith	65	.08
Merry Rhymes and Puzzles	65	.09
Russian Fairy Tales	65	.12
Life of John C. Calhoun. By John S. Jenkins	65	.12
The Wooing of the Water Witch. By J. Moyr Smith	75	.12
The Prince of Argolis. By J. Moyr Smith	75	.10
Life and Letters of Lord Macaulay. By Trevelyan	1 00	.12
Hours with the Bible. By Cunningham Geike, D.D	65	.10
Biographical Sketches. By Harriet Martineau	69
Man and Beast Here and Hereafter. By Rev. J. G. Wood	85	.12
Life of Gen. John C. Fremont. By Samuel M. Smucker	65	.12
Works of George Herbert in Prose and Verse	60	.08
Inexorable, or the Wages of Sin. Angelo	75	.08
Dancing Imps of the Wine. Angelo	1 15	.10
Adventures of an Atom. Angelo	1 15	.2
Dickens's Child's History of England	65	.10
Handy Bible Cyclopedia. By John Brown	75	.14
Life of Jefferson Davis and Stonewall Jackson	75	.2
History of the Mexican War	75	.13
Life of Benjamin Franklin	75	.13
Life and Public Services of Daniel Webster	75	.13
Life of Thomas Jefferson	75	.13
Life of George Washington	75	.12
Life of Galileo	75	.10
How Women can Make Money, Married or Single	75	.13
History of Palestine. By John Kitto	75	.09
Life of Henry Clay	75	.12
Life of Alexander Hamilton	75	.12
Heroic Women of History	75	.12
John Smith and Pocahontas	75	.13
The Railroads of the United States	75	.14
Life of Pauline Cushman	75	.12
Secret Service in the Late War	75	.14
Personal Life of David Livingstone	75	.13
The Russo-Turkish War. Illustrated	75	.15
Twelve Years a Slave	75	.12
Life of General Jackson	75	.14
Our Boys in the Army	75	.13
Cook's Voyages Around the World	75	.10
The World in a Pocket-Book	75	.13
Life and Adventures of Haji-Babi	75	.12
Cattle and Their Diseases	75	.14
Napoleon and His Campaigns	75	.13
India, and the Indian Mutiny	75	.13
Stories of Infinity. By Camille Flammarion	75	.08
Modern Christianity a Civilized Heathenism	1 25
Physiognomy; or, How to Read Faces. By Mary O. Stanton	2 00	.12
Handbook of Christian Evidence. In two parts	1 00	.08
Ancient Symbol Worship. Illustrated	3 00
Lives of the Popes	1 50	.12
Half-hours with Modern Scientists. Illustrated	1 50	.08
The Story of the Manuscripts. By George E. Merrill	1 00	.08
The Catechism of Positive Religion. By Auguste Comte	2 00
Kidder's Secrets of Bee Keeping. Cloth,	75
Paper,	50
The Institution of Marriage	2 25
Hafed, Prince of Persia: His Experiences in Earth and Spirit Life	1 75	.18
A Mad World and its Inhabitants. By Julius Chambers	1 25
French Wine and Liquor Manufacturer	3 00
Common Sense Theology. By D. Howland Hamilton	1 00	.08
Critical Essays on Physics, Metaphysics, and Ethics. By Lawrence S. Benson	1 50	.10
The Bible for Learners. With map	2 25
Xenophon's Complete Works. Nimmo Library	1 50	.20
Treasury of British Eloquence. Nimmo Library	1 50	.17
Byron's Poetical Works. Nimmo Library	1 50	.18
Fielding's Works. Nimmo Library	1 50	.19
Treasury of Modern Biography. Nimmo Library	1 50	.18
Treasury of English Literature. Nimmo Library	1 50	.19
Shakespere's Complete Works. Nimmo Library	1 50	.20
Defoe's Works. Nimmo Library	1 50	.20
English Essayists	1 50	.18
Homer's Iliad. People's edition. Illustrated	45	.07
Don Quixote. People's edition. Illustrated	45	.07
Arabian Nights Entertainment. People's edition. Illustrated	45	.07
Swiss Family Robinson. People's edition. Illus.	45	.07
Pope's Poetical Works People's edition. Illus.	45	.07

Gems of Thought.

ALL honor to the judge who sits in judgment and holds the scales of justice truly and fairly; who will not be swerved by favoritism, prejudice, and bigotry to deprive a fellow-citizen of the honor and liberty which are dearer even than life. But shame and infamy rest upon that judge who will use the position which the money of his country-men pays him to to fill, to wreak revenge and injury upon a man far better than himself. Cursed be the memory of that judge who executes injustice in the name of religion, and who aids the villain to blast the innocent.—D. M. Bennett.

SUPERSTITION without a veil is a deformed thing; for, as it addeth deformity to an ape to be so like a man, so the similitude of superstition to religion makes it the more deformed; and, as wholesome meat corrupteth to little worms, so good forms and orders corrupt into a number of petty observances. There is a superstition in avoiding superstition, when men think to do best if they go farthest from the superstition formerly received. Therefore care should be had that (as it fareth in all purgings) the good be not taken away with the bad, which commonly is done when the people is the reformer.—Bacon's Essays.

WE began life with so many companions, and now the greater part of them would hardly care to cross a muddy street to speak to us. What brought this about? Sometimes religion. The gayest and most thoughtless of our "set" suddenly became "serious;" so serious that he could not believe we had any religion at all unless we spoke of it in precisely the same jargon that he did. We seemed to think his way of speaking irreverent and presumptuous; he bade us adieu for life! There was something in his manner of doing it which reminded us of a hymn, a painfully jubilant one, which we remember to hav heard in childhood. Involuntarily we found ourselvs repeating,

> And now, my dear companion,
> I'll bid you all farewell;
> For I am bound to heaven,
> And you are bound to ——.

We forbear to state the exact amount of divergence specified, but it is a fact that we saw our friend no more.—London Spectator (Feb. 18, 1882).

WHEN men are poor in spirit, then do the proud and haughty in spirit oppress and trample upon them, but when men are true in spirit and determined (as true men should be) to resist and, as far as possible, prevent evil, wrong, and injustice, then is there greater opportunity for happiness here, and even Christians ought to admit no lesser fitness for he enjoyment of further happiness in some may be heaven hereafter.—Bradlaugh's What Did Jesus Teach?

IF it were necessary to find any proof that Addison's classical knowledge was confined within narrow limits, the proof would be furnished by his "Essay on the Evidences of Christianity." The Roman poets throw little or no light on the literary or historical questions which he is under the necessity of examining in that essay. He is, therefore, left completely in the dark; and it is melancholy to see how helplessly he gropes his way from blunder to blunder. He assigns, as grounds for his religious belief, stories as absurd as that of the Cock-Lane ghost, and forgeries as rank as Ireland's Vortigern, puts faith in the lie about the Thundering Legion, is convinced that Tiberius moved the senate to admit Jesus among the gods, and pronounces the letter of Agbarus, king of Edessa, to be a record of great authority. Nor were these errors the effects of superstition, for to superstition Addison was by no means prone. The truth if that he was writing about what he did not understand.—Macaulay's Life and Writings of Addison.

NOTE.—Let the thoughtful reader remember that these same evidences were the universally received text-book till Paley's Evidences superseded them. Addison's Evidences, in their day, satisfied deans and bishops that they were justified in holding on to their benefices, and Paley's hav long performed the same useful service. The exact value of Addison's work is fairly enough stated by Macaulay, himself not a great authority in philosophy or theology, but an ordinary common-sense critic, and one not to be imposed upon by mere rhetorical wind. Paley, in his turn, is now pretty well used up, and the hour loudly calls for new evidences. "You may call spirits from the vasty deep, but will they come?" Christianity is well able to pay for evidences, and of course as long as she is so, she will get them; but as the "high chief of Scottish song" says,

> The man of independent mind,
> He looks and laughs at a' that! —Hylax.

BEGIN the new life now. Whatever has been wrong in the past clear it away now. As Mohammed well said, "Better to blush in this world than in the world to come." Whatever is evil, whatever will not bear the light, clear it away now, even though it be like cutting off the right hand or plucking out the right eye! Then is life true, and it will grow upward and find blessing as it grows and be like the pathway of the just, "that shineth more and more unto the perfect day."—Brooke Herford's Day of Judgment.

I REMEMBER that when I was a boy there was a family in the corner of the parish supposed to entertain eccentric opinions on theological matters. They were harmless and respectable, but they did not go to church, and naturally were called Atheists. We looked at them with a vague terror. If we passed their door we hurried by as if the place were haunted. At last the old mother died. The husband asked that the body might be buried without being taken into the church. It would then, I believe, be illegal. At any rate, the request was refused, and I recollect, when the matter was talked over, hearing it said that people who did not believe in God believed often in the devil, and that inside the church the devil had special power to take hold of an Atheist. Some months after, one summer evening, I saw the husband stealing down to the church-yard to visit his wife's grave. His look was gentle, sad, abstracted, full of human sorrow and human sensibility. I recollect a sense of startled pity for the poor old man, mixed with doubts whether it was not impious to entertain such a feeling.—Froude's Science and Theology.

Odds and Ends.

YOUR husband is a staid man now, is he not?" asked a former schoolmate of her friend, who had married a man rather noted for his fast habits. "I think so," was the reply; "he stayed out all last night."—Cincinnati Saturday Night.

A WESTERN editor received a letter from an indignant subscriber, who said: "I don't want your paper any longer." To which the editor mildly replied: "That is all right; I wouldn't make it any longer if you did, because in that case I should hav to buy a new press. The present length just suits me, and I am glad it suits you." It is to be hoped this "soft answer turned away wrath."

"YAS, sah, I'se obnosdecated de mos' ongreeable winter dat de oldest inhabitant can dismember," remarked a Virginia gentleman of reconstructed privileges, in front of the National Hotel the other day.

"Why so?" queried an interested bystander.

"Well, sah, boss, de fact am, when de chicken he roost in de cedar tree on de souf side of de big house, clost to de front winder, yer can bet yer bottom dollar ders gwine to be a hard winter. Dat am a fact, shoah."—Dalton Argus.

"I HAV come in to kill you," said a man, entering an Arkansas newspaper office, drawing a pistol, and confronting the editor. "You published an article derogatory to my character, and it is my duty as a husband and father to kill you." "I am glad of it," the poor editor replied; "I was thinking of committing suicide." "Well, if that's the case, let's go down and take something." "Now you move me to emotion," and the two deadly enemies went out together. And yet some people are in favor of prohibition.—Arkansaw Traveler.

COLONEL INGERSOLL said at Omaha the other day that he hated a dignified man, and that he never knew one who had a particle of sense; that such men never learned, and were constantly forgetting something. Josh Billings says that gravity is no more the sign of mental strength than a paper collar is the evidence of a shirt. This leads us to say that the man who ranks as a dignified snoozer, and banks on winning wealth and a deathless name through this one source of strength, is in the most unenviable position we know. Dignity does not draw. It answers in place of intellectual tone for twenty minutes, but after a while it fails to get there. Dignity works all right in a wooden Indian or a drum-major; but a man who desires to draw a salary through life, and to be sure of a visible means of support, will do well to make some other provision than a haughty look and an air of patronage. Colonel Ingersoll may be wrong in the matter of future punishment, but his head is pretty level on the dignity question. Dignity works all right with a man who is worth a million dollars, and has some doubts about his suspenders; but the man who is to get a large sum of money before he dies, and get married, and accomplish some good, must place himself before his fellow-men in the attitude of one who has ideas that are not too lonely and isolated. Let us therefore aim higher than simply to appear cold and austere. Let us study to aid in the advancement of humanity and the increase of baled information. Let us struggle to advance and improve the world, even though in doing so we may get into ungraceful positions, and at times look otherwise than pretty. Thus we shall get over the ground, and though we may do it in the eccentric style of the camel, we will get there, as we said before, and we will hav camped and eaten our supper while the graceful and dignified pedestrian lingers along the trail. Works, not good clothes and dignity, are the grand hailing sign, and he who halts, and refuses to jump over an obstacle because he may not do it so as to appear as a gazelle, will not arrive until the festivities are over.—Bill Nye.

A MOTHERLY old woman, considerably troubled with the asthma, and also lame, called at the Twentieth Street Station the other afternoon to state her case. She made the sergeant in charge place his hand on a copy of Brown's grammar, which happened to be lying there, and swear that he would never tell anybody, and then she began:

"I hav a daughter."

"Yes."

"And my daughter has a beau."

"Perfectly natural."

"They are engaged, and the wedding-day has been set three times, but he flunks out of it every time. The first time he claimed that his father was dead; the second time he was afraid he had smallpox, and the third time, which was yesterday, he said it would bring bad luck when a comet was visible. Now, then, I don't like this fooling around. When me and the old man were ready to marry we walked over to the minister's and were jined, without any backing out or beating around."

"Well?"

"Well, I want to bring this young man to time. Fact is, he's either got to come up to the rack or jump the fence."

"Yes, he must."

"I wanted to ask you how far I could go in the case. Suppose, after he arrives to-morrow evening, I walk into the room with a pistol in one hand and a minister of the gospel in the other; wouldn't that precipitate a climax?"

"I think so."

"If he really loves Susie, I think he would stand up and be married. If he's only fooling around, he'd jump through the window, wouldn't he?"

"Looks that way to me."

"Well, I'll try. I shan't indulge in no threats, you know. I'll hold the pistol carelessly in my left hand, and hang to the minister carelessly with the other, and I'll simply remark that there's either going to be a marriage or a skip. I think that William will marry. It's my opinion that he's waiting for a little coercion, and I'm pretty good on the coerce when I get started."

"Well, don't break the law."

"Oh, no, no! If he skips I shan't do any shooting. I'll let the dog giv him a run across the commons, and send the minister home. I shall be as cool as ice, and it will be all over in five minutes."

Yesterday William and Susie were taking their bridal tour on the elegant new Michigan avenue two-horse street-cars. The young man had been coerced.—Detroit Free Press.

MUCH FOR LITTLE

We hav on hand a goodly number
—OF—
VOLUMES I. AND II.
—OF—
The Truth Seeker,
published in 1874 and 1875,
the same securely bound in good paper covers. The first volume is a monthly, and the second a semi-monthly. Vol. I. contains 160 pp, and Vol. II. 256 pp. We are disposed to send these out to friends who wish them at a trifle above the postage. We will send VOLUME I. FOR 25 CENTS,
—AND—
VOLUME II. FOR 50 CENTS.
THEY CONTAIN
a large amount of reading matter, and are worth nearly ten times the amount asked for them. They also are worth not a little to show what THE TRUTH SEEKER was in the first and second years of its existence. Let those who wish to secure these volumes not fail to make their wants known.
Address this office.

LIFE-SIZE
LITHOGRAPH
OF
D. M. BENNETT.
Heavy Plate Paper,
SUITABLE FOR FRAME OR WITHOUT FRAME.
Sent by Mail for Fifty cents.
ADDRESS THIS OFFICE.

SING, BROTHERS, SING.
USE THE
Liberal Hymn-Book
In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. The LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly commended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and indeed by all who hav examined it. Second edition. Price, half-bound, 25 cents. In cloth, gilt, 40 cents. Sold at this office.

SPECIAL OFFER
TO
TRUTH SEEKERS.
The J. R Perry Piano and Organ Company desire to introduce their instruments to all lovers of music, at the lowest cost to purchasers, by selling direct. The Perry Piano contains the latest and most important improvement yet made—a self-sustaining sounding-board and bridge, which will never permit the board to spring, nor allow the tones to become thin and wiry. The Organs conta 1 more patented inventions than any other make. The Mason & Hamlin are the only Organ Company who are using any of them, they having purchased the use of Perry's Flute and Celeste and Reed Board in 1876. We offer to place these Pianos and Organs by the side of any other ,no matter what their reputation, and will compete both in price and quality. For full particulars address J. R. PERRY, P. O. Box 367, Wilkesbarre, Pa., who will furnish illustrated catalog. 9t47

DEITY ANALYZED
AND
THE DEVIL'S DEFENSE.
By Col. John R. Kelso, A.M.
Not since Hudibras has there been such damaging blows given to these old myths and fables. The colonel has made the sacredness of the scriptures appear as absurd as Cervantes made that of the knights of the age of chivalry. The singular audacity with which he attack, the foundations of Christianity shows the earnestness of his own convictions in regard to its fabulous origin.—L Hutchison.
Price, $1.50. Address D. M. BENNETT, 21 Clinton Place, New York.

THE
BOOK OF THE CHRONICLES
OF
The Pilgrims in the Land of Yahweh.
D. M. Bennett, Scribe.
ALSO
THE EPISTLE OF BENNETT THE APOSTLE TO THE TRUTH SEEKERS.
From Volume II. of "A TRUTH SEEKER AROUND THE WORLD."
Price $1.00 D. M. BENNETT, 21 Clinton Place, New York.

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Rubber Elastic Appliance, in 30 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for Circular. (Say in what paper you saw advertisement.) Address CAPT. W. A. COLLINGS, Smithville, Jefferson Co., N. Y. ptifeb

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.
A TRUTH SEEKER
Around the World.
FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.
With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. I. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.
BY D. M. BENNETT,
Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.
Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.
Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last words penned by the great author were for the fourth volume, which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he has visited, The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter. The work is a
Freethinker's History of the World.
This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.
Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.
21 Clinton Place, New York.

TO TRIAL SUBSCRIBERS
THE TRUTH SEEKER,
With sixteen large pages, will be sent for THREE MONTHS, postage paid,
FOR FIFTY CENTS.
Address D. M. BENNETT, 21 Clinton Place, New York.

BOOKS! BOOKS!
I hav an enormous stock of new and second-hand books on hand, which I offer at very low prices Send for books tried to obtain elsewhere without success. American, English, German, and French books. Catalogs on application, FREE.
A full line of Liberal books always on hand,
C. N. Caspar's Book Emporium,
4t1 35 Oneida street (opp. Opera House,) Milwaukee, Wis.

Wanted.
Correspondence with any lady, not a widow. Must be equally talented, not crose, and of a stout race of people, as I am. Address, H. G. J., Box 55, Moravia P. O., Appanoose Co., Iowa,

Liberty and Morality.
A pamphlet of discourse on these important subjects.
BY W. S. BELL.
A pamphlet of thirty-six well-printed pages mailed for 15 cents. Sold at this office.

"ANTICHRIST."
Proving conclusivly that
THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST
His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth.
Price, $2.00. 21 Clinton Place, New York

SEND FOR
The Crimes of Preachers
From May, 1876 to May, 1882.
TRANSLATED OUT OF THE ORIGINAL NEWSPAPERS,
And with previous Translations diligently compared and revised.
By Col. M. E. BILLINGS.
SECOND EDITION.
Price Twenty-five Cents.
D. M. BENNETT, 21 Clinton Place, N. Y. city.

WHAT OBJECTIONS TO CHRISTIANITY
THE
Bennett-Mair Discussion.
BETWEEN
D. M. BENNETT and G. M. MAIR.
(CONTAINING 969 PAGES.)
The fullest Discussion yet Published, giving the Dogmas and Claims of Christianity a thorough Examination pro and con.
Price, ... $1.50.
Address D. M. BENNETT
21 Clinton Place New York.

SOMETHING NEW.
Cut ½ size.
Brilliant Metal Spoons. Perfect imitation of silver, twice as durable, will always keep bright, just as represented in cut. Special Offer No. 1.—To secure agents at once, we will mail, post paid, one set of 6 spoons, also, give you 25 new style, gold and silver bow cards, (perfect gems) with your name in elegant type, if you send twelve 3 cent stamps; Club of 3 for $1. Special Offer No. 2.—If you do not want the cards, we will mail one set of six spoons and full particulars how you can make $3 to $5 a day in your own town and county, post paid, for nine 3c. stamps. Club of 5 for $1. U. S. Card Co., Centerbrook, Conn.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 2. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY M. W. BENNETT. | New York, Saturday, January 13, 1883. | NO. 21 CLINTON PLACE, NEAR BROADWAY. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

"When once we see the cross," says the Rev. Jo Cook, "it is no cross to bear the cross." When once we see a common liar, it is no lie to call him a liar.

Madagascar missionaries dread the possibility of the French gaining a foothold on the island. For which reason French emigration to Madagascar should be encouraged.

The Christian Messenger says, "We once offended a brother by changing a sentence, and yet the only thing we cut out was the announcement that some old mother in Israel had died of cholera infantum."

December 9th was the fourth anniversary of the Gotha crematory. That date saw the one hundredth cremation. There were 16 cremations the first year, 17 the second, 34 the third, and 32 during the fourth.

A small boy in Maine listened demurely to the story of Samson's tying the fire-brands to the tails of foxes, and then sending them through the Philistine's corn, and at the conclusion of the narrativ asked innocently, "Auntie, did it pop?"

A religious tract, called "Put not your Trust in Princes" was thrown into the saloon of a simple old German. He read the title and soliloquized: "Vell, I dont put some drust in brinces. Dey must pay der cash in dis shop chust der same as vite mans."

The labors of George E. Davis, as a revivalist in Fort Wayne, Ind., were interrupted by the arrival of his wife, who had him arrested for desertion. She proved that his income as an evangelist averaged $30 a week, and the court ordered him to giv her $10 weekly.

The ex-Rev. Mr. Miln, who became an Agnostic and then took to the stage, is said to be meeting with large success in the West. His voice is good, and his personal magnetism is great. His costumes are costly and magnificent, and his enunciation is exceptionally distinct.

The attitude of Gambetta toward Christianity was that of an unbeliever. He would not improperly be called a Voltairean. Years ago he spoke of himself as an adherent of Auguste Comte and the theories of Positivism, the creed of which is said to be, "We believe in three persons and no God."

From attending the services of the Williamsburg wing of the Salvation Army, at the Old Brewery on Ten Eyck street, Thomas Bowick, aged 30, of No. 188 Powers street, became so insane that he had to be sent to the Flatbush Asylum. His lunacy shows itself by a belief that the judgment day has come.

A zealot desired to go to heaven without delay from Reading, Pa., but prayed in vain for death. Then he tried the plan of kneeling in the Schuylkill river, while offering up his petition, but the result was only a violent cold, from which he recovered. His next place for prayer was on a railroad track, before an approaching express train, but he was dragged off in time to thwart his purpose.

A person who signs himself "Civis" has this hit at the Methdists in the Otago Witness. We commend it to the Christian Advocate: An example of the intimate relation of things sacred and things secular may be given in an extract from a letter from the Tonga correspondent of an Auckland paper: "The last time the John Wesley, alias John Whisky, was here, a large amount of spirits, etc., were seized by government while being smuggled ashore. This time she has been on her best behavior. If the Wesleyan Missionary Society only knew what an injury the retaining of the name of the vessel is doing the cause of missions, they would most certainly alter it immediately." So the "John Wesley" missionary ship is known amongst the benighted heathens to whom she carries the gospel as the "John Whisky!" Shade of the great Methodist apostle! has it come to this! the affairs of the world and the church are getting inconveniently mixed.

Some of the Baptist journals do not seem to be deeply in love with each other. The Religious Herald, which is published at Richmond, Va., freely indulges in severe criticisms of the two Baptist organs in this city and the National Baptist of Philadelphia. The Baptist Weekly thus refers to its methods and manners: "We can only say that for thorough blackguardism —no milder expression can be truthfully used —the Religious Herald of last week exceeds anything we hav known."

A Virginia preacher, who bought his butter from his brother Paul, sent for a fresh supply for his Sunday dinner and was in the midst of his sermon when his negro servant returned and took his seat in the church. The preacher had eloquently related what Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John had said in relation to the subject matter of his text, and he then said, in thundering tones, "And what does Paul say?" The negro, thinking the question addressed to him, replied, in the hearing of the whole congregation, "Marse Paul says as how you can't get any more butter till you've paid for dat you got last week."

Some indication of the rapid advance which is being made by the Japanese people in the path of progress and civilization is afforded by the tenth report of the Postmaster General of Japan, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881. The number of books, newspapers, and letters transmitted during the twelve months was upward of 83,000,000, showing an increase of nearly 20 per cent as compared with the previous fiscal year, and nearly 49.3 per cent as against the year 1879. The aggregate length of the mail routes in operation was 48,475 English miles. The total number of post-offices is now 5,819, and the net profit derived from the department amounted for the period named to 76,627 yen ($80,000).

In the middle of his sermon on a recent Sunday a pastor at Smyrna, Ga., uttered the phrase, "Let us praise him." A member of the congregation, innocently or otherwise, understood him to say "Let us pray," and immediately knelt for the final prayer. The movement was naturally contagious, and in a moment all were on their knees. The clergyman had a rare chance to show tact by responding to the expectation of his hearers, but he was not equal to the crisis, and exclaimed instead: "I did not say 'Let us pray,' I am not through yet—we will pray directly." Perhaps the preacher builded better than he knew. If he had allowed his congregation to cut him short in that manner, a precedent might hav been established for bringing to a close subsequent sermons of undesirable length.

The San Francisco Chronicle last September printed an article charging upon the master of the barkentine Emma Augusta great brutality in his treatment of Norwegian emigrants to Hawaii in the North Pacific. This gentleman has written a letter to the Argonaut, in which, after refuting the charges against him, he says: "Now, I will giv you the character of the Chronicle's informant, the Rev. Mr. Lange. A Norwegian who worked with him at Mr. Hitchcock's, on Hawaii Island, worked his passage with me to Humboldt Bay. His name is John Engelrictsen. He states that this reverend gentleman was constantly creating ill feeling between the planters and the working class. His countrymen gathered money to release him from his contract and to pay his passage to San Francisco, in order to get him out of the way. He was recklessly squandering his own money. He went as far as Honolulu, but at that place cast to the winds his passage money, and came to Maui Island to get more from his countrymen. But he appeared in such a drunken condition that they had to complain to the owner of the plantation, who gave him the alternativ of leaving the grounds or being arrested. This individual, and a few others like him, whom the planters are glad to release from their contracts, are the Chronicle's informants. The Norwegians now on the island of Maui are satisfied to remain in their places, and are likely to remain there when their contracts are ended."

Commenting on the decision of Judge Briggs of Philadelphia that an Atheist or Agnostic is not a competent witness, the Telegram says: "If a thinker with the genius of a Spinoza were to be brought, as a witness, before Judge Briggs, in the Common Pleas court of Philadelphia, that thinker would be rejected on the ground that, not believing in a personal God, he could not be depended upon to tell the truth. In other words, Judge Briggs has granted a new trial in a certain case because part of testimony accepted came from a man who declared that he believed in a supreme power that would punish him here for false swearing, but not in a personal God as commonly accepted by the people. It is well to remember that professedly orthodox persons sometimes commit perjury, and that persons who are heterodox do not always do so. To assume that a man is incapable of telling the truth simply because he happens to believe in a certain fashion opposed to the religious faith of most persons, is to accept a conclusion not warranted by the clear-sightedness which a judge ought to hav."

Abijah Green, a devout Philadelphia negro, went to Atlantic City last summer as an evangelist. A rumor came back to the church of which he was a member that he had stolen books from the Seaside Mission, in which he was laboring. A committee went down to investigate, and returned convinced that the charge was unfounded, the missing books having been carried off by their owners. At a church meeting the other night, Pastor Wallace spoke of the case in order to move that Brother Jenkins be formally exonerated. Brother Green arose and shouted that he was opposed to such action. Brother Tomkins said, "Brother Jenkins is too fresh." He was going to say more, when he was seized by some of Brother Green's friends and passed rapidly to the sidewalk. Brother Jenkins insisted upon making a speech on the new and exciting aspect of the matter. He began by calling Brother Brown a liar, and then the fight began. At the end of a lively skirmish Brother Jenkins was thrown out. Then the Rev. Mr. Wallace took the platform, and announced that it was his intention to kill Brother Green. "I want it distinctly understood, he said, that I mean business. The Bible warrants the course I propose to take, so look out for blood." Brother Green has armed himself with a razor, in readiness for defense, but has not had occasion to use it.

It is usually supposed that men of great intellectual powers hav large and massiv heads; but the theory, which Dr. Gilbert, physician to Queen Elizabeth, was the first to suggest, is not borne out by facts. An examination of busts, pictures, medallions, intaglios, etc., of the world's famous celebrities almost tends the other way. In the earlier paintings, it is true, men are distinguished by their large heads, but this is attributable to the painters, who agreed with the general opinion and wished to flatter their sitters. A receding forehead is mostly condemned. Nevertheless this feature is found in Alexander the Great, and, to a lesser degree, in Julius Cæsar. The head of Frederick the Great, as will be seen from one of the portraits in Carlyle's work, receded dreadfully. Other great men hav had positively small heads. Lord Byron's was "remarkably small," as were those of Lord Bacon and Cosmo di Medici. Men of genius of ancient times hav only what may be called an ordinary or everyday forehead, and Herodotus, Alcibiades, Plato, Aristotle and Epicurus, among many others, are mentioned as instances. Some are even low-browed, as Burton, the Author of "The Anatomy of Melancholy," Sir Thomas Browne, and Albert Durer. The average forehead of the Greek sculptures in the frieze from the Parthenon is, we are told, "lower, if anything, than what is seen in modern foreheads." The gods themselvs are represented with "ordinary, if not low brows." Thus it appears that the popular notion on the matter is erroneous, and that there may be great men without big heads—in other words, a Geneva watch is capable of keeping as good time as an eight-day clock.—Journal of Science.

News of the Week.

The new Sunday law is practically a dead letter in New York city.

The Hon. Frederick Robie has been inaugurated governor of Maine.

A snow-storm lasting twenty-four hours has made good sleighing in this city.

It is rumored that Premier Gladstone, of England, is about to retire from political life.

A landslide in Westmoreland county, Va., on the 5th, buried a woman and two children.

Marsh T. Polk, state treasurer of Tennessee, is reported defaulter to the amount of $400,000.

It is promised that the big bridge between New York and Brooklyn will be opened to traffic next month.

The funeral of M. Gambetta, the French statesman, took place on the 6th. Immense crowds followed the body to the cemetery.

The conservatory of the Golden Gate Park, San Francisco, was partly destroyed by fire on the night of the 5th. Loss, about $15,000.

Gov. Butler of Massachusetts was inaugurated on the 4th. No inaugural in recent years has been so popularly attended as was this one. His address provoked much enthusiasm.

The New York post-office sold, in 1882, nine tons of postage stamps, one hundred and thirteen and one-half tons of postal cards, and seventeen tons of stamped newspaper wrappers.

The Democratic City Convention of Buffalo has nominated John B. Manning for mayor to fill the unexpired term of Governor Cleveland. R. R. Herford is the Republican candidate for the same office.

"Lucky" Baldwin, proprietor of the Baldwin House, San Francisco, was shot on the 5th by a woman whom he had ruined. His condition is considered critical. Public sympathy seems to be with the woman.

Counsel for Salmi Morse appeared before Judge Ingraham last Saturday to apply for a mandamus to compel Mayor Edson to grant a license for the place of entertainment at which Prof. Morse proposes to produce the Passion Play.

Anthony Comstock planned a raid on a gambling house in this city last Saturday, but when he arrived the birds had flown. He charges that the gamblers were warned by the police. When a thief is set to catch a thief it is of little interest to justice which comes out ahead.

Mountain Evangelist Barnes has opened fire on the strongholds of Satan in Brooklyn. He has a system of healing bodily ailments which he calls "faith cure." It consists of anointing with oil and praying. Many marvelous cures are reported, though but few are attested.

The Rev. A. Mathews, the Presbyterian minister of Trenton, Ont., who was lately compelled to resign his charge, owing to his increasing mental weakness, disappeared last week. He has become violently insane, and on Monday the 2d attempted to put his wife's eyes out with a red-hot poker.

A man rang the bell of Cardinal McCloskey's house one day recently and demanded admission, claiming that he was the pope, and threatened to call out the papal guard and enforce his authority if he was not admitted. His infallibility was not recognized, and he was arrested. He proved to be a harmless lunatic.

During a New York man's absence from home one day last week, his wife sold an old stove that had been in the cellar for years. On learning of the sale the husband hastened at great speed to the junk man's. His excitement was explained when he opened the stove and drew forth between $500 and $600 that he had placed there for safe keeping.

Communications.

Two Burning Questions.

Shall the reading matter of the people be subjected to the inspection of experts, ecclesiastical or civil, said experts having power to enforce their opinions upon dissentients?

Shall the citizen be debarred from the exercise of the right to choose his own drinks, under the absurd pretense that it is feared he will make a bad use of that right?

These are two very important questions now up for discussion, and which are likely to remain up for some time to come. I hav answered both these questions in the negativ, and because of such answers hav been subjected to much friendly, and still more not so friendly, criticism. In THE TRUTH SEEKER of Dec. 16th two new antagonists are discovered riding into the lists. They are Messrs. Lydiard, of Minnesota, and Lake, of Colorado.

My old acquaintance, J. H. Lydiard, seems to be much out of humor about several things. THE TRUTH SEEKER poetry is not up to his standard. Mr. Heywood did not consult him as to what he should publish. My "labored attempts" to show that the way to make men self-supporting and self-respecting is to take from them the artificial press of the law fills his soul with mingled anguish and contempt; and good friend Winter has been behaving badly.

Mr. Heywood is not a "moral scavenger;" he has not forced any of his publications upon Mr. Lydiard, or anyone else. He is perfectly willing to "take the consequences" of his acts, but his acts do not legitimately involve such consequences as fine and imprisonment; and when such monstrous wrongs are imposed upon him in the alleged interest of morality, he has a perfect right to appeal to the Freethinkers of the country for sympathy and substantial aid. And such he will receive from every loyal Liberal.

No one knowing Mr. Heywood, whatever might be such person's attitude toward that gentleman's opinions, would talk of "his cheap and contemptible effort to be considered a martyr." Such language is cruel in the extreme. I verily believe that even Comstock would concede Mr. Heywood's sincerity. E. H. Heywood may err in the means chosen to accomplish his purpose, but that purpose is in intent a high and true one. He sincerely believes that the fairest flowers of truth, justice, virtue, and honor can bloom only beneath the sunlit skies of liberty. For acting upon that belief he is made a criminal under American law. Shame upon American law!

Mr. Lydiard says the very argument "consists in a mere dead negation." Ah, how familiarly this objection looks out from the printed page! It is the stale retort ever in the mouths of the defenders of time-honored superstitions, of the advocates of a proscriptiv religion or morality. But how trifling it is we realize when a moment's reflection brings to us a consciousness of the fact that when and where error reigns a denial of its claims is the thing first in order. Negation is but the assailing side of affirmation. We deny A's right to steal from B, and in the negation we affirm B's right to the peaceful possession of the fruits of his toil. And in denying the rightfulness of prohibition I affirm among other things:

1. That each individual naturally possesses the right to control his or her own person.

2. That each person has a natural right to obtain by purchase, exchange, or in any other honest way, such food, drink, clothing, etc., etc., as he or she desires.

3. That each man and woman is the proper and sole judge of the extent and legitimacy of his or her wants.

4. That just to the extent that these rights of individuals are secured will "law and order" prevail, and peace and happiness bless the hearts and homes of all.

5. That the highest morality is possible only where each man is thrown upon his honor in reference to all matters within the realm of morals.

6. That temperance is born of the proper conditions of organization, education, and material and moral independence.

7. That these conditions are all lessened in beneficence and effectivness by any statutory enactment with which it is sought to secure by means of fines, imprisonment, and other disabilities, the results which can be secured only through their spontaneous action.

Mr. Lydiard wishes to know "what reform or improvement" I propose in this matter of intemperance. Surely the gentleman has read the articles which he criticizes with but little care, if he does not know intemperance in drink, like intemperance in all things else, cannot be destroyed in a day. Such improvement in the habits of the people as all right-thinking persons desire can only be brought about by slow and gradual changes through more accurate and extended knowledge of the laws of heredity, a keener realization of the terrible evils attending the drink habit, bettered material conditions, lessened mental worry and strain, and a larger liberty and consequent individual responsibility. One or more places in every town fitted up with a library, cheerful reading-room, games, music, flowers, birds, geological cabinets, etc., and supplied with non-stimulating drinks and healthful food, would do more in this cause than all the laws ever enacted or sermons preached. I hav enlarged upon this phase of the subject in an article published during the year in THE TRUTH SEEKER, but of course my critics did not see that.

Mr. Lake evinces a kindly spirit, but he shows that he does not correctly apprehend my position. He is entirely wrong when he supposes that we are standing "idly by" and seeing our comrades "drifting into this whirlpool of destruction without putting forth an effort to save them." His error consists in this, that he considers a statute law the only efficient help that can be rendered, when, in fact, it is a hindrance rather than a help. The truth is, the leading Freethought opponents of prohibition are life-long temperance workers. I do not care to make an appeal which might be considered a reference to authority, but I will mention here, to illustrate what I mean, the names of T. B. Wakeman, Dr. Juliet H. Severance, Matthew Farrington, Mrs. H. S. Lake, Prof. Peck, Horace Seaver, and A. B. Bradford, all of whom are uncompromising temperance men and women. And in this connection I would call the attention of Mr. Lake and Mr. Lydiard to Mr. Bradford's article in the same number of THE TRUTH SEEKER in which their letters appear.

Says Mr. Lake: (1) "One is led to the conclusion that he [I] considers a man a free moral agent, (2) free to eat what he likes, (3) free to drink what and as much as he likes, (4) and do precisely what his pleasure or inclination dictates, without let or hindrance, (5) so long as he keeps within the limits of the law." For convenience I hav numbered Mr. Lake's sentences, and will now notice them in order.

1. Yes, man is a free moral agent in the sense that his neighbors hav no right to attempt to dictate to him in his own private affairs. Do you deny it? If so, where do you get your assumed right to arrest a thief or murderer?

2. Certainly, and do you deny it? If the individual cannot choose his own food, who shall?

3. The same answer applies here. If the unit, the individual, does not know enough to take care of himself in this matter, how shall the state, the aggregation of units, know more? If Smith, Brown, and Jones cannot be trusted with their own affairs, individually, how do they, collectivly, become possessed of the wisdom and virtue necessary to care not only for their own, but for those of Clark and Black as well? But let it not be forgotten that while the individual should be left free from the coercion of statute law, he is not and cannot be freed from the consequences of his own acts. There is a "let," a "hindrance" which does not depend for its operation upon the fluctuating will of the majority. Here man is not a free moral agent; here his transgressions against himself reap their certain fruits of suffering and shortened life?

5. "So long as he keeps within the limits of the law." But this is the precise antithesis of my position. A man has a natural right to the mastership of himself, either within or without the "limits of the law." Law, whether enforced by a king or a majority, does not, in reality, destroy a single natural right or create a new one. A man may keep strictly within the "limits of the law," and yet be the flagrant robber of his fellow. It is the "law" against which I protest.

Because one man becomes a "brawler" through the over-indulgence in stimulants, would Mr. Lake forbid three other men, who never became brawlers, or in any way disturbed the peace, from partaking of such beverages at all? Because a man murders a man for money, shall not B and C be permitted at large for fear they too will be led into crime through their desire to possess property? But I hav fully met these objections of Mr. Lake's in my letter which appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Dec. 9th, and to that I respectfully refer my opponent.

Mr. Lake need never hav written that long paragraph of his concerning the water-course and the mill, and he would not had he understood my position. My impregnable position is this: Each person shall be protected in the exercise of his or her natural capabilities. But no person is so protected when any other individual is permitted to invade his or her personal domain. Therefore no man has any right to interfere with the rights of another, and hence when I speak of a man's rights I necessarily mean his rights in and to himself, not his right to injure his neighbor, for he possesses no such right. The owners of the mill had no right to turn that foul water upon their fellow-citizens' land without their consent, hence they lost no rights when prevented from doing so, and so the conditions of our problem remain untouched. As to the secondary effect of our acts, that is another question entirely, and one to be settled within the domain of morals. I may sell a man a quantity of ammunition; he goes out into the fields and discharges his gun at some prairie-chicken. The report frightens a passing team owned by a poor man; the team runs away, the man is killed. The wife and children become dependent upon the county and the citizens are taxed to help provide for their wants. Query: Am I directly responsible for this distressing affair, and shall I and others not be permitted to sell powder and shot?

It is self-evident that Mr. Lake's Canada-thistle illustration has no bearing here. Men are men, weeds are weeds. I hope the day has forever gone by when men who are obnoxious can be removed with as little compunction as so many thistles or pig-weeds. No sensible farmer would argue in the way indicated by Mr. Lake, but it is very likely that his neighbor, however much he might desire help in eradicating the weeds growing upon his farm, would strenuously object to being forced to do just as his brother farmer thought he ought.

I believe that Mr. Lake means well, that he does not purposely say that which is personally most offensiv, but when he asks me how I can, knowing its evil effects, "stand up for it," that is, "the drinking of liquor," and when he proceeds to state the subject of discussion as properly being, "Is the advocacy of whisky-drinking in harmony with the principles of Freethought?" he gets entirely outside of the question, and groundlessly assumes that because I oppose prohibition, therefore I am in favor of intemperance. Will Mr. Lake point out any sentence of mine wherein I hav "stood up" for or advocated whisky-drinking? Does not a Protestant, a Freethinker, hav a sufficiently clear understanding of the principle of private judgment to realize that I might defend his right to do that which I would hav no desire to do myself? Or is liberty of thought and action only for those who agree with us? Because I defend C's right to marry an Indian squaw, does that logically involve the conclusion that I desire to wed any of the race? Because I defend the right of the farmer to raise hogs, of the merchant to sell their prepared products, and of all persons to eat pork if they so desire, does that establish it as a fact that I advocate the consumption of that abomination, an article of food that I never eat?

That I "stand up" for the rights of men to raise, manufacture, sell, and consume tobacco, one or the other of which four-fifths of the male prohibitionists do, does not prove that I regard it as in any way beneficial or dispose of the fact that I make no use of it whatever. Because I earnestly defend the right of the Catholic to bring up his children in his own faith, instilling into them the principles of that most pernicious theology, to build churches and support the priesthood, etc., certainly does not make me a Catholic.

The seeming utter impossibility of many prohibitionists to comprehend the fact that we can defend the right of other men to sell and drink alcoholic beverages without having a pecuniary interest in the traffic or making use of said stimulants ourselvs, is one of the peculiarities of this discussion, and generates in my mind a shrewd suspicion that they "stand up" for Freethought and liberty in so far only as they are impelled to do by the impetus of a personal grievance.

Gentlemen, please attack my real position, not assail principles and beliefs which are not mine, when replying to my arguments. E. C. WALKER.

A Specimen Sniveler.

Hon. Wm. E. Dodge has recently written a letter to a brother Pecksniff, in which he takes strong ground in favor of protecting the Christian Sabbath against the desecrations of men who would run street-cars on Sunday for those who cannot afford to ride to their places of "worship" in a luxurious private conveyance. The great majority of our people who are just beginning to properly resent this Puritanical interference with popular liberty in this country may well thank Mr. Dodge for his intemperate zeal in endeavoring to force his peculiar views upon the public. We can hav no objection to Mr. Dodge exercising his individual preferences as to how he and his family spend Sunday or any other day of the week. He may worship according to the dictates of his own conscience as much as he pleases, but when he attempts to force others to accept his conscience as their guide it becomes us to hold up that conscience to public view. Who is this Dodge, and what is his record?

It is within the memory of many citizens of New York that the "Hon." so ostentatiously prefixed to Mr. Dodge's name was caused by the fact that he was elected to Congress once by the party of moral ideas. And they remember, too, that during an investigation of the ways and means by which that election was secured, there was some pretty plain evidence that certain palpable "jobs" in the sainted Dodge's interest were "put up" on the holy Sabbath, and that, too, with Mr. Dodge's knowledge and consent. It is also remembered that since the party of moral reform and Comstockian politics held a majority of Congress the pious Dodge was whitewashed, on the principle, probably, that the means justified the ends, and that it was good Christianity to elect a truly good Sabbatarian over an ungodly Democrat, even by jobs put up on Sunday.

Another reminiscence of this same Sabbatarian bigot brings to light the haste with which he "compromised" with the government by the payment of a snug fortune to escape the penalty of a crime which was only revealed by a presumably unchristian employee, then recently discharged from Mr. Dodge's employ.

But the most contemptible phase of the Dodge conscientiousness is seen by those who hav looked upon the pious Pecksniff riding to his church on Sunday in his luxurious carriage, driven by a coachman in livery, who looked down upon the poor car-driver as breaking the Sabbath by rendering an outing possible to five hundred citizens whose piety had not been so profitable as that of the Christian millionaire. Of course Mr. Dodge can answer for the welfare of the soul of his fortunate coachman, for, although he too is denied the privilege of attending church on Sunday morning, is he not abundantly blessed by the privilege of joining with his pious master at family prayers, and thus picking up at second hand the crumbs of grace that fall from the rich man's lips? We can congratulate ourselvs that in the progress of our civilization two things are passing away—Puritanical religion and Puritanical politics.

ANTI-SNIVELER.

D. M. Bennett—A Tribute.

D. M. Bennett's career is so deeply connected with American Liberalism, he has expressed so much of its meaning, that it seems almost a duty for those who hav come into personal relations with his busy life to put on record their impression of his character, that the generations to come may not misunderstand his true worth and value to the cause of humanity.

Mr. Bennett was one of nature's noblemen. He was a vigorous offshoot of the soil. He was like an oak. If he was rough it was because he had met the storm as well as the sunshine, and had wrestled with the elemental forces. He had nothing of the daintiness of fashion. He boasted not of the elegance of the dilettante. He had not the smoothness of insipid culture, nor the superficial grace of inherited custom. There was about him no gloss of insincerity. He was perfectly natural. Whatever he was came to the surface. He was not only a Truth Seeker, but a truth-revealer constantly of his own being. He had no arts of concealment; not a particle of make-believe. His personality was not hid behind any "esthetic sham." He had no reserves, no esoteric faith or virtue. He was a frank illustration of Carlyle's gospel of absolute sincerity. He was so thoroughly in earnest that he paid no regard to appearances. He trusted in his life to vindicate itself, that by its own fire it would purify its way. He labored not for effect, but for a purpose. He did not manage a moral theatrical show. He had no thought of saying, "See how fine my example is." He saw a work to be done, and he did it, even though he used the shovel and hoe and not the silver knife and fork. He did not care for aromatic holiness, for ethical perfumery, and barber-shop morality. He was himself from head to foot. He did not hav an inner and an outer self at odds with one another and playing hide and seek in the masquerades of the world. His outward form was identical with his inward desire. His speech was one with his thought.

It was this absolute sincerity, this indomitable truth-seeking and truth-speaking, that made Mr. Bennett such an invaluable aid to human progress. The necessity of the hour is this utter frankness. The world must not only know the truth but speak the truth. Mr. Bennett was not afraid of the truth though it might lose him many a friend. Truth was to him the first of all. The gospel that he has given is the gospel of plain speaking, and daring all the consequences. His courage in this respect was most bracing. It was like the keen blast of the northern wind. It made our Liberalism more viril. There had been too much daintiness in it—too much avoidance of the real issues of the day. It bore the lily and the sunflower when it should push the breaking plow.

Mr. Bennett brought to our too philosophical Liberalism a smack of human nature; he poured into it the freshness and vigor of the soil. He made it a thing of to-day instead of a poetic dream. His practical feeling was most eminently needed. Without this, Liberalism would hav been a matter of mere rhetoric; a flight of fancy—a play of words—a waxen conventionality—a doll instead of a living man. It was the moral earnestness of Mr. Bennett that compelled it to be manly and defiant and aggressiv amid the fierce demands of this revolutionary age. He was our Thomas Paine, and he spoke words of thrilling common sense. We did not want poetry, but the rough-hewn reality. In this Liberalism found a new life. It left the philosopher's closet and became the undaunted leader of the masses. From this time onward it is a democratic movement.

This is the true glory of Mr. Bennett. He was an honest man; and he helped to make Liberalism a thoroughly honest affair. If he made it more homely it is because Liberalism cannot be a thing of "sweetness and light" so long as it has such disagreeable facts to contend against. We must take things as they are. A rose-water conflict is impossible. If we are in dead earnest, then we must not shrink from any of the issues thrust upon us by the enemies of human progress. Kid gloves won't do; we must fight the vermin.

Mr. Bennett's boldness saved Liberalism from a dastardly flight. Under the leadership of others it was becoming the worst conventionalism of the day—a corpse-like respectability, a galvanized iteration of common-places, a stereotyped froth of philosophic mannerism. That danger has now passed away; but it was the marvelous energy of Mr. Bennett that put Liberalism to its genuin mettle and made it the unflinching champion of human rights. These services cannot be forgotten, and the death of Mr. Bennett only makes them more illustrious. The pulses of his hard-fought battle must vibrate in our blood to-day. The occasional imperfections of his method cannot mar the grandeur of his work. Its outlines are heroic; its substance as undecaying as the marble shaft that shall rise over his honored grave.

He was a steadfast friend, and because capable of a strong affection he was a good hater. He could strike back. He did not believe in Christian meekness. His warfare, however, was open. There was no subterfuge. He did not carry concealed weapons. He hit straight from the shoulder, and gave his enemy fair warning.

The attacks made upon his character were outrageous in the extreme. In substance they were false as hell. They who lent their aid to them will be covered with disgrace. They did an unmanly and a dastard trick. They allied themselvs with the sneak-thief and the traitor. I regard the action of those Liberals who joined in the hue and cry against Mr. Bennett with the utmost loathing and abhorrence. If they did it with honesty, then I pity the narrowness of their minds as I pity and loathe and abhor the narrowness of a Calvin's mind. A more devilish act was not perpetrated under the règime of the Inquisition. They who justify it in any sense are unworthy of the name of Liberal. It was the cruelty of a barbarian.

The hero sleeps peacefully now. He has won the victory. He was the devotee of truth, and truth shall honor him for evermore. It is the virtue of a man that will liv after him—that which was genuin in his work. The hypocrit is soon forgotten, no matter how splendid his name. The world does not care much for veneer. It has little respect for show; but for honesty, sincerity, and truthfulness it has enduring reverence. These things are the precious jewels of life; if not altogether flawless, they are still most beautiful.

To be what we are, to avoid pretense, is the demand of the hour. We cannot smooth things over; the crash will come, and only the truth will survive.

Mr. Bennett cast his lot with the truth—the plain, unvarnished truth. The storm burst upon him because he would not be otherwise than truthful. The sunshine of truth will rest upon him hereafter, for in the end the truth is the most blessed light.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Sympathy.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hardly think it possible that any event could occur which would startle me more than did the announcement of the death of D. M. Bennett. He certainly was a remarkable man—remarkable, inasmuch as in his organization so many qualities were united to giv encouragement to the thinking world of the possibilities of man triumphing over the too common selfish littleness of poor groveling humanity. Personally I had seen him but seldom, and at each interview I came away more strongly impressed that I had been in the presence of a model man—learned without pedantry, cheerful without levity, profound without display, sincere without assumption, and withal a well-bred listener to the sentiments expressed by others.

It is but a few years ago I was introduced to him by my friend Mr. Daniel Mason, now no longer in the flesh. It was a pleasant interview, inasmuch as my friend Mason was a man highly appreciativ of the ennobling qualities of others. In course of conversation on the prominent questions of the day, he remarked, "Mr. Mason, are you a Spiritualist?" Mr. Mason replied in the affirmativ, and he made a few remarks on the subject, stating what an uncompromising Materialist he had always been, and, in fact, was now, but finally had to yield to the evidence of facts, phenomena, and intelligence occurring in his own house. He ended by saying that Spiritualism he considered only an addition to his previous stock of knowledge.

Mr. Bennett, after a respectful pause, addressing me, asked if I also was a Spiritualist. I frankly acknowledged the fact. Like my friend Mason, I prudently avoided the rehearsal of any facts, phenomena, or methods of obtaining intelligence, but briefly said that should I do so, I thought he would be at liberty to think me an idiot, to distrust the evidence of my senses and powers of reason, after I had told him what I had seen, felt, and observed under various conditions. He smiled, said he had heard from others much on the subject, and merely remarked that he "hoped Spiritualism was true."

Now, in common with the rest of the thinking, feeling Liberals, I sincerely mourn his absence from this world and his kindred, the cessation of his earthly usefulness, and the painful vacuity his absence produces. Still, I frankly confess I cannot feel as keenly as some of your Atheistic "eternal sleepers." I hav in my recollection some of the heroes and heroins, writers to our meritorious and cherished TRUTH SEEKER, truthful, honest, and able contributors—alas, how they must feel! Here they are practically brought face to face with the ruin and paralyzation of all their hopes. To them he has gone, and gone forever. For they sincerely loved Mr. Bennett. Now if I did not remember the barbarous, uncivil, and indecent representations they hav ever heaped upon Spiritualists and those who hav confessed their convictions of a continued existence through unmistakable proofs, I could heartily sympathize in their desolation. From the knowledge I hav gathered of the certain continued existence of the human soul or spirit after death, which knowledge has been gathered from an experience of thirty-five years, through various channels, I might also say I know that our respected, esteemed and indefatigable friend, D. M. Bennett, has entered upon that plane of intelligence and usefulness for which his labors here hav duly qualified him.

My earliest acquaintance with the subject of Spiritualism was at the house of a respectable elderly lady in the city of Brooklyn. The manifestations were astoundingly convincing. I well remember a remark the old lady made. In explaining the raps and tipping of the table and the intelligence received through or by the means of the alphabet to her pastor, he, smilingly shaking his head, said, "Electricity—merely electricity, dear sister, nothing more. Beware, beware!" "Well," replied the old lady, "it may be as you say, dominie, all electricity. I shall keep on, however, till I find out who is at the other end of the wires." And she did; and the result was, the church lost a worthy member. Acting on the old lady's suggestion, I can confidently say that I hav found who is at the end of the grand terminus.

Brooklyn, N. Y. D. BRUCE.

THE FREE DISCUSSION SOCIETY.

At the weekly meeting of the Free Discussion Society of this city, held in Lyceum Hall, Sunday, Dec. 24, 1882, the death of D. M. Bennett, late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, was appropriately and feelingly announced, and a motion offered and unanimously adopted that a committee of three be appointed by the chairman for the purpose of drafting suitable resolutions of sympathy and condolence to the memory of the deceased. In accordance with said motion the chairman appointed a committee, who respectfully submit the following: JNO. DIETZ, Sec.

WHEREAS, We hav learned, with sorrow, of the death of D. M. Bennett, a recognized friend, who has devoted the best years of his life to the advancement of Freethought; and

WHEREAS, by the death of Mr. Bennett we realize that the world has lost a friend, whose life was engaged in promoting liberty of thought, truth, and justice; and

WHEREAS, while we recognize that his voice and pen hav been silenced by death, we feel that his memory will be kindly cherished by every lover of liberty throughout the land.

Resolved, That the sincere and heartfelt sympathy of this meeting is fully awakened, and hereby extended to the family of the deceased in their sad affliction, and to the loving friends with whom his Liberal and humanitarian sentiments hav so endeared him in life.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the bereaved family, and placed upon the records of the society.

Baltimore, Md., Dec. 31, 1882.

A TRIBUTE TO THE MEMORY OF D. M. BENNETT. DELIVERED BY MICHAEL PILLING, AT SOUTHWORTH HALL, FARMINGTON, UTAH, SUNDAY, DEC. 17, 1882.

Once more we are met together to pay our parting tribute of respect to one whom we shall miss from our ranks, the hero of the age, and the greatest writer of modern times. Born and reared amongst superstition's mingled throng, he continually advanced in the scale of progression, from the Shakerism of his youth, till step by step he ascended the lofty peak of nature's broad domain.

Many times during his eventful life he has seen the darkness of despair; but with a courage undaunted, a will that knew no defeat, and a determination to be faithful to the cause he loved at heart, the waning years of his life were crowned with the sunshine of success. His travels around the world will crown his name with immortal fame. This is the greatest, grandest, and most truthful history that the pen of man has ever produced, and for which coming generations will ever honor and venerate his name. When Liberalism shall become the religion of civilized humanity his works will be read in every tongue and clime. He has lived to triumph over his enemies, and wielded a powerful influence toward disenthraling the human mind from the fetters of priestly rule. All honor to his name for the noble defense of right over might. He has freed thousands of his fellowmen from the binding chains of a pagan creed, and showed them that in order to liv a good and useful life man must be free.

No prison bars entomb him now; he sleeps serenely in the silent tomb of eternal repose. When the names of those who hav sought thy destruction shall be forgotten, thy name will be honored in every land and upon every sea. The day that gave thee birth will long be cherished and revered by the friends of freedom throughout the world; and as the seasons come and go the labors of thy life will shine with a brighter glow.

Kind friend, we bid thee a last farewell.

THE TRANSITION OF D. M. BENNETT.

From Mind and Matter.

Rare, indeed, are the instances in which men advance through such difficulties as beset the way of D. M. Bennett, from his childhood to the end of his busy and useful life, and yet who hav left as wide an impress upon the times and country in which he lived. His life and labors was one continuous testimony to the inestimable importance which he attached to personal independence, and fidelity to what he believed to be his rights and duties as a man and citizen. Few men hav contributed more largely to liberating the human mind from the thraldom of selfishness, superstition, bigotry, and ignorance which hav so long held it subservient to priestcraft, demagogism, and supercilious hypocrisy of all kinds. The great success of THE TRUTH SEEKER is sufficient evidence of the wide usefulness and influence of his labors. That success is a monument that any friend of human freedom might justly feel proud of; and it is deeply to be deplored that the army of human progress, upon this planet, should be deprived of his unequaled services at this hour of crucial test in the battle for personal, mental, and political freedom for all men and women alike.

No man ever more justly and naturally incurred the enmity and hatred of every ememy of individual liberty than did this fearless advocate for even-handed justice to all. Terrible indeed were the blows with which he shattered their idols, and overthrew their shrines of superstition. How far his herculean labors, in that arduous and zealous work, contributed to shorten his brilliant earthly career, we can only conjecture; but rarely has any man, during a greatly more protracted life, accomplished so vast an individual labor as did D. M. Bennett. His literary labors were truly phenomenal in their magnitude and minuteness; and it is some consolation at his loss that he has left so much behind him that will be useful in the completion of the work from which he has been unexpectedly, if not prematurely, called.

It was natural that Mr. Bennett should hav aroused the envy and jealousy of men who found themselvs unable, as public journalists, to keep pace with him in the march of reform and progress; and that these should hav joined his priestly and bigoted foes in their efforts to drag him down and destroy him, was not unnatural, however deplorable. The opportunity to attempt this dastardly outrage came when his Christian persecutors secured his conviction under a forced construction and misapplication of a proper United States statute, by a prejudiced jury under the judicial instigation of a narrow-minded, bigoted judge. Under that conviction Mr. Bennett was sentenced to undergo a long and disease-engendering confinement, which no doubt contributed to shorten his life. When those prison doors closed upon this martyr in the cause of mental freedom, but one man and one paper could be found in all this broad land to undertake to complete the infamous work thus begun, to destroy the future influence and usefulness of Mr. Bennett. The paper was not a Christian religious journal (at least avowedly), nor yet was it one of the mercenary defamatory secular papers that bid for popular favor by the defamation of the leading advocates for progress and reform. The man found equal to that act of ineffable meanness was John C. Bundy, and the paper used for that infamy was the Religio-Philosophical Journal. Bundy, conscious of his unfortunate lack of moral worth, had been posing as the especial editorial advocate of purity, honesty, and morality, on the part of everybody in any way (whether sincerely or hypocritically) identified with Liberal reform, except himself and those who, like himself, were engaged in that hypocritical performance. Supposing, weakly and foolishly, that he could the better cover up his own true character by striking at the character of a man as much superior to him in every characterisic of true manhood as virtue is above and before vice, Bundy seized upon the imprisonment of Mr. Bennett to strike him a deadly blow, and at the same time exalt himself, by committing one of the most inexcusable and unheard-of journalistic outrages ever perpetrated. It was then that their intended victim showed the true greatness of his soul, and with that straightforwardness which was the grand characteristic of his nature, he faced his foes, fearlessly acknowleged his errors, and, like a lion beset by yelping jackals and howling hyenas, he sent them to their dens, there in silence to brood over the consequences of their temerity. Never from the time those prison doors opened for the release of Mr. Bennett did one of his cowardly assailants so much as whine a desire to learn the lesson again which had cost them so dearly. Bundy and his slandering coadjutors survive in mortal forms the man whom they thought to destroy, but they may well envy the well-earned glory that on earth survives the departure of D. M. Bennett, to receive his reward for duty done in the "life beyond the river."

It is a fact well known that Mr. Bennett and ourself did not agree in many things in the discharge of what we respectivly regarded as the duties devolving upon us as journalists in the field of progress and reform; but we hav every reason to know that we were one in heart and purpose as to the fearless discharge of every perceived duty. We hav no tears to shed at the departure of D. M. Bennett, to report, in the after life, his duty nobly done. His is a well-earned furlough, and one he cannot but enjoy. Friends, let us waste no sorrow on him, for he needs it not; but let us show our appreciation of his worth by emulating the life-work of this arisen, not dead, colaborer and brother.

D. M. BENNETT.

From the Milan, O., Semi-Monthly Review.

We were grieved and surprised upon hearing of Mr. Bennett's death. It seems as though nature had foreordained his greatness, and reserved his usefulness in freeing mankind from the shackles of superstition for the latter part of his life, and take him, after his last crowning effort, to the summer-land when he had reached the zenith of his glory.

D. M. Bennett was a remarkable man, and probably no man is more honored and revered. His honesty and his fidelity to truth not only made him a truly great man, but all who became acquainted with him love and respect him. While at Watkins last summer we saw Mr. Bennett, and were often near him, but did not become personally acquainted with him. We were impressed that he was a grand and good man. There we saw the people appreciated his labors in behalf of reform. We may say that this was largely due to the fact that he lived and wrote for the common people more than for the highly cultured. Had he claimed himself above others he would hav never been the popular man that he became. His name will go down in the future world's history as one of its benefactors, while those of his maligners and persecutors will be covered with infamy and disgrace which they so richly deserve.

He was one of the most industrious men that has ever lived, and has accomplished what very few could in so short a time, having written over fourteen thousand pages in ten years. No one, perhaps, has done more to break the chains of Christian superstition. To him Christianity was a gigantic fraud in origin, theory, and practice.

Mr. Bennett could hav been called a Spiritualist. He believed that the possibilities of this grand universe were in favor of a continued life, and he thought that the spiritual phenomena show an intelligence of something beyond this life. But even if there is no life after death, the name of D. M. Bennett will be immortal.

By virtue of a Will, Mrs. Bennett becomes proprietress of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Eugene M. Macdonald, who was his able assistant, becomes editor.

IN MEMORY OF D. M. BENNETT.

From the San Francisco Universe,

THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 16th instant reaches us in mourning and with very full accounts of the obsequies held in memory of the late D. M. Bennett, who in life was one of the most powerful opponents who ever assailed the bulwarks of theology. The address delivered by Mr. T. B. Wakeman over the body of the illustrious dead is full of beautiful imagery, tender pathos, and devoted friendship to the memory of the departed. The remarks of Mr. Edward W. Chamberlain illustrate the strong and noble friendship which the deceased was capable of inspiring. Many speakers made remarks, and during the services strong men and gentle women wept alike in their grief for the brave old man who suffered all but death for the holy cause of universal mental liberty. Sweet be thy sleep, if sleep it is, dear old martyr of Freethought.

Going On.

From the Kansas Blade.

It has been an earnest question in the minds of thousands of Liberals since the death of Mr. Bennett was known, what will become of THE TRUTH SEEKER, but that question has been answered in that paper of the 23d inst. in the most approved and satisfactory manner—it will continue under the editorial management of Mr. E. M. Macdonald, and Mrs. Mary W. Bennett, wife of the late lamented Mr. Bennett, as publisher.

Mr. Bennett willed to his wife his whole effects, and she is now the sole owner of THE TRUTH SEEKER and all that belongs to the office—books and stereotype plates.

Mr. Macdonald has had the almost sole control of the paper for the last three years, and has been connected with it ever since it was established. He is well qualified to manage the editorial department, and with the help of scores of able friends to write for it we feel confident that it will retain its present position as the leading Liberal journal of the world.

We earnestly hope that no one who now reads that paper will falter in their support of it; on the contrary that they will not only renew their own subscription, but get as many others to subscribe as possible. It would be a most cruel and unjust thing for Liberals to even grow lukewarm in their support of THE TRUTH SEEKER, as Mrs. Bennett has suffered untold hardship that the paper might liv. She is, indeed, entitled to every bit as much credit for its success as Mr. Bennett, and is deserving of the sympathy and support of every Liberal in the land.

The Bennett Monument.

FRIEND MACDONALD: If I may judge from the letters published in THE TRUTH SEEKER, the subscriptions are not coming in as rapidly for the monument as they did for Mr. Bennett's round-the-world trip. May this not be due to the very generous contribution with which our mutual friend, Mr. Ryan, started the subscription? May it not be that many are waiting, as I hav been, to see who would follow with subscriptions to an amount nearly or quite equal to Mr. Ryan's contribution? After waiting a little, and considering the whole matter, I hav decided to inclose my check for $5.00 toward the monument. If it be generally understood that the monument is to be erected by a popular subscription, it will be a far more effectiv testimonial if erected by one thousand admirers, paying $5.00 or $1.00 each, according to their circumstances, than if it should be put up by one hundred persons paying $50 each. If, after the smaller subscriptions are in, the fund should not be sufficient, it would then be the proper time for those who are able to make larger subscriptions; and I should feel inclined myself to be counted among the number. It must be remembered that the Liberals, as a class, are not much given to monument building. They are inclined to think that men and women of character build their own monuments. It is certainly true that our late friend, Mr. Bennett, has built his. Through his indomitable industry and his wonderful ability, with the aid of the "art preservativ of all arts," he has left monuments which will endure longer than any that can be set up in stone or marble. Although the life forces hav left Mr. Bennett's body, they still liv in his voluminous publications; and it only remains for his surviving friends to make them both enduring and effectiv. If we are deprived of his counsel, he still speaks in printed words, and will continue to do so, as Thomas Paine has done. It was a happy thought of Mr. Bennett's to return to his admirers who sent him around the world four beautiful volumes descriptiv of his travels, for the contributions they made to pay the expenses of his journey; for while he is now, so soon after his return, unable to orally relate to us what he saw and how it all impressed him, we can at our leisure travel with our late lamented friend around the world, having him continually with us.

Under all circumstances, however, we want the monument of stone. The waves of calumny are still beating against Mr. Bennett's memory, and we want it as a breakwater, so to speak. It will stand out defiantly as a witness that Mr. Bennett has plenty of friends living even to-day. He will hav more a hundred years hence. For the past two summers I hav lived within a few miles of the Paine monument, and it has been a common pleasure for me to take my friends for a drive in that direction, and point to the monument erected to the memory of one to whom we are so greatly indebted for our free institutions. It always gave me an opportunity to answer all unjust criticisms upon the character of the greatly misrepresented man. A monument to Mr. Bennett in Greenwood will often giv occasion for comment by those who are looking through the beautiful cemetery in which his remains repose. It will naturally provoke remark; and the more imposing we make it, the more likely it will be to set in motion the tongue of slander, thus giving to those who stood by him in life an opportunity to vindicate his memory now that his own lips lie closed in the silent tomb.

Yours truly, E. B. FOOTE, Sr., M.D.

A Freethinker in Palestine.

The December number of the Theosophist, published at Bombay, India, contains this notice of Mr. Bennett's "Book of the Chronicles of the Pilgrims in the Land of Yahweh:"

Of Mr. Bennett's abilities as a writer we hav already had occasion to speak; so that we need only say that his present volume is in his characteristically quaint, strong, aggressiv, and not over-polished style. We hav Bhoja Rája's word for it that "all commentators are perverters of the meaning of their authors;" so, bearing that in mind, we shall not risk a hard-earned reputation for fairness by going into any very extended notice of a work which is at once interesting and instructiv beyond almost any upon Palestine that we hav read. Critics too often criticise books without taking the trouble to read them, but we hav read this one of Mr. Bennett's from the first word to the last. He went to Palestine with two distinct ideas to carry out, viz., to see the country and tell the truth about it. To do the latter without fear or favor, to expose exaggerations of the old fairy stories about its ancient inhabitants, their rulers and the momentous events located there, required no little solid pluck; and our author's sincerity and moral courage will not be doubted by any one who follows his narrativ and ponders his suggestiv criticisms. The ideas of the pettiness of this so over-lauded land, in olden times as well as now, and the impossibility of many things having happened there that we are asked to believe in, force themselvs continually upon the mind. It is a missionary book in the strictest sense of being calculated to do missionary work—against Christianity. Freethinkers, then, will prize it as highly as the great mass of Christians will hate it and loathe its author.

"Keep the Colors Flying."

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: In your able editorial remarks on "The Future of The Truth Seeker," you well say that were it a reality that Mr. Bennett still livs, and could look on from his place in spirit life to things of this world, his first and greatest concern would be to keep The Truth Seeker alive. Don't let it trail in the dirt! That was his voice from the inner walls of the prison; and oft amid the busy, bustling throng, when he and I were together in Europe, he would express his anxiety to me about the paper, and would sometimes ask my opinion about the price, and what way to manage the paper so that it might reach the more people and increase its influence in doing good. The expression of his anxiety seems to haunt my memory like the cry of a naval commander in the midst of the fight—"Don't giv up the ship!" or the commander of an army in battle—"Don't haul down the flag. Keep the colors flying. Close up the ranks. On, boys, to victory!" And I repeat to you, my dear Mr. Editor, that you hav truly said such would be the first and last watchword of Mr. Bennett's heart and soul today; and so let us do. And, too, if all could know the true, noble worthiness of Mrs. Bennett, as my good wife and myself do, the incentiv would be even greater than ever to grandly sustain her, The Truth Seeker, and its still able editor. We will do all we can for the paper and the cause, and we will also do our part toward the erection of a grand monument to D. M. Bennett.

Mr. Bennett died for the cause and for The Truth Seeker. No man could endure what he did and survive. In London, amid the surging multitude, pressing our way through the Tower, Westminster Abbey, the museums, etc., in the heat of summer, the perspiration would stream from his brow, whilst anxiously and patiently gathering facts for his readers. And afterward I think of him upon the backs of horses, mules, and donkeys by day, and sleeping in tents at night, as he pressed on his way over rock-bound mountains, through valleys, and upon plains and deserts, in Syria, Egypt, India, China, and Japan. Enduring not only the excessiv fatigue, he died by ever overworking, but also withstanding the tropical suns, the terrible heat, changes of temperature, food, and water. In England I could not keep pace with him, he was so anxious, energetic, and quick in his movements. At that time I was in poor health, and he full of life and vigor, and he would sometimes say to me, in his ever kindly manner, "Come, let me call a cab, and you go and take some quiet rest, while I go on and finish the day alone;" though much of the time our good friend and able guide, Mr. John S. Dryden, your London correspondent of The Truth Seeker, was with us. While Mr. Bennett was stopping at the Essex House, my wife and self had rooms near him, and one night he brought his stereopticon views and exhibited them for us, in the way of practice for himself in handling them; and he was oh! so lively and witty. He said when anybody saw anything that was really good he liked to hav them clap their hands and applaud a little. This he also applied to the man Bridges, of Indiana, who set out on his great journey with him. He said Bridges was too slow and stoical for him; that he liked to hav a companion who would brighten up and be expressiv when viewing the great things of the Old World. But he said Bridges was ever the same—drone! What a change! My own health is much improved since then, and in the mean time Mr. Bennett has completed his great work, which my wife says he was inspired to do. The casket is broken, his great spirit has departed, but he still livs.

Most truly, Dr. Andrews.

So. Rockwood, Mich., Dec 29, e.m. 282.

Miss Gibson Gratified.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: What a bright, clean face your new volume opens with! Permit me to return your Happy New Year greeting with A Happy New Year for every year of your life, and that life endless!

I can indorse every word of Prof. Bradford in The Truth Seeker in favor of Remsburg's "Image Breaker." I wish we Freethinkers were wealthy enough to put one into every Christian's post-office box in the world (the whole series, I mean). How much such missionary work can every one of us do through this year 283? Let us try and see.

Washington, D. C. Ella E. Gibson.

W. F. Jamieson gave six lectures in Braidwood, Ill., to increasing houses. After his Gardner, Ill., engagement he goes to Durand, Ill., to giv ten lectures, and help celebrate the birthday of Thomas Paine. He may be addressed by those desiring lectures at Durand Station, Ill., until Feb. 1st, or at Lake City, Minn.

Mr. Burnham in Pittsburgh.

It would be a cause for rejoicing if all the Liberal Leagues were as well sustained as the Pittsburgh. This League circulates Liberal books and tracts extensivly, and the result is seen in good houses and respectful treatment at the hands of the secular press. In the Pittsburgh Times of Dec. 25th we find this account of one of its meetings:

Ex-Rev. J. H. Burnham spoke before the Liberal League yesterday afternoon on "How are Faiths Popularized?" He congratulated the League on having their altar illuminated with the lamps of liberal knowledge. He affirmed that much has been said and may yet be written on this subject, for it deals with the past. The records of the past must be handled with care, for they contain the faiths in which men hav lived and died. To speak of them stirs up the memory, and there is nothing people dread more than to hear reflections on the devotees of set opinions. Contrast the modern mode of spreading ideas with that of the days of tradition. The newspapers and books are most powerful. If one wants to find favor for his pet methods or ideas he spends lots of money, and of course finds many supporters. Men receive popular recognition for the most absurd theories, by a lavish expenditure of money. A locomotiv does not require any recommendation; it is one in itself. Who would think of astronomy or geometry needing miracles to prove their principles? Their intrinsic value proves their worth; but the Christian religion always comes to you claiming recognition because it is of divine origin, but not for what it is worth of itself. There is nothing in its structure. Do you suspect God Almighty needs to come here to giv value to a loaf of bread? If the religious belief can command the respect of rational men, it must be because it has something in it worthy of recognition, and not because some one has said it was of divine origin. Do truth and fact need to be backed up by the claim that God has made them and for them will vouch? No rational man will claim that any truth needs a miracle to demonstrate it. All religions hav sought refuge in miracles to prove their scheme of religion. Let them stand on their merits and not on divine credentials. If reasonableness and justice fail them, the scheme possessing them does not deserve recognition. The religious literature, even, is fiction. It can't go before the world without stealing the literature of the world. There is nothing in a scheme that cannot stand upon its merits. Why can't Christianity come before the people with its scheme and get its acceptance without lavishly spending money for eloquent preachers, fine churches, and enchanting music? Superstition should be divorced from the natural. The scheme of the Christian religion has been advanced through blood, and in its name acts hav been committed treacherous to human reason. Its advancement has not been through divine aid, but by the personal power of its social despotisms. With all its false attractions and manufactered recommendations, its blood-stained flag is being trodden in the dust, and Infidelity is gaining the ascendency. Who hav been the devils in every community? Those who swear by the blood of the innocent are the swindling bankers and defaulting cashiers. These are they who with much show profess a belief in the blood of the Lamb, and expect to be saved by it. Be true to yourself and your fellows is the best religion. The speaker was never swindled by any man who was not a saint, and was never robbed but by one who relied on the blood of the Lamb. No matter what one's belief may be, if he but livs up to it, he is worthy the respect of his fellow-men. Demand no exalted opinions.

A champion of the Christian religion followed the lecture in a few remarks, in which he said he wanted a basis of facts for reasoning. He had lived an honest, truthful life and was not afraid to stand up for his convictions. The counterfeiters had sembled religion. He told, in support of that remark, a story of why the Continental money was never redeemed—because of the counterfeits—but spoiled the simile by saying "The counterfeits were better than the original." He did not like "decrimination" in religion and admitted there was fiction in the church. "Human ideas are not heeded." To believe in a part of the Bible and not all of it is no compliment to God or Christ. He does not want skeptics to convert, and as to the faith cure for a snake bite, he "ain't going to git no snake on him." After these clinching arguments he sat down to giv place to a stranger, who did some common sense talking. He said there was a great difference between the Dark Ages and now; a difference between the times when the schoolmaster was not abroad and when, as now, he does walk around a little, especially in places a trifle north of Kentucky. It is a long step from the times when Christians killed and burnt each other for the love of God. Only a few years ago he was afraid to go into a Catholic church, but Liberalism has done away with such religious bigotry. The church has been a good school, and we must not speak unkindly of the bridge that carried us safely over many dangerous places. There are good men in the churches.

Mr. Grundy said that Protestants read of the torturing and bloody doings of those terrible times, laying all blame on the Roman Catholics, the church that had the only standing in Europe. Men were breaking away from religious slavery and were being persecuted, but now the religious descendants of these Protestants will as cruelly persecute anyone who does not think with them. The church fully represents the Bible.

Mr. Martin hit false Christians some hard knocks and remarked that if the doctrins of the orthodox church were true, is not persecution right? Does it not follow as a necessity? If we are doing all we can to upset the church scheme which saves souls, ought we not to be upset? Hypocrits are in the churches and liv for policy's sake. He wanted to see a true Christian, one who obeyed Christ's directions for being one of his followers. Where is the difference between Paul and a radical Infidel? The Christian faith will find credence from women, children, and idiots.

In the Pittsburgh Leader of the same date is an editorial in which it is conceded that all the great reforms hav been inaugurated by the Infidels, and that the church has done nothing but impede progress, from which we make the following extract:

The history of modern moral and spiritual progress during the last five hundred years has been little better than the gradual transformation of the church under the assaults of the Infidels. It was the Infidels that banished witches and witchcraft from the church. It was the Infidels that made the church take back its absurd fulminations against the taking of interest for money. To the Infidels we are indebted for the enfranchisment of the Jews, the proclamation of equal rights of man, the establishment of republican government, the limiting of capital punishment to the murderer. The anti-slavery crusade and the temperance reform were carried on for a long time by the Infidels against the little opposition of the church which, Bible in hand, confronted the reformers with inspired texts. In short, nothing is plainer in the history of morals than that while the church conserves the old morals it is the Infidels that force on the church every new moral idea, and that it is thus that the moral advance is made.

Although the rest of the article is a sop thrown to the Christians, yet this testimony has greater effect coming from unwilling lips.

Paine's Birthday.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Auxiliary Liberal League No. 190 of this city proposes to celebrate, on Jan. 29th, the 146th anniversary of the birthday of Thomas Paine.

We expect to make this a gala day for the Liberals of this coast. We will hav brief speeches in the German, French, Italian, and Spanish languages by the leading Liberals of those countries. The principal addresses will be in English, thus making it really an international affair. There will be song and music between the speeches, with an original poem. Also letters will be read from the prominent Liberals of the country.

We extend to you a cordial invitation to be with us on that happy occasion. If you cannot come please write us a few lines on the natal day of our "author-hero."

We expect by this celebration to increase the interest in that great man and his works, and to show the public how ungrateful they hav been to one of their noblest benefactors, whose motto was, "The world is my country, to do good my religion." Light is dawning, for the grand principles he advocated are becoming more popular every day.

Hoping to hear from you soon, we remain yours for justice to the noble dead.

Committee, { J. L. Hatch, Chairman. / W. S. Wray. / H. W. Walker. / P. Gariepy. / H. W. Faust, Sec. pro tem.

Further particulars can be learned from H. W. Faust, P. O. Box 1049, San Francisco.

San Francisco, Jan. 1, e. of m. 283.

Charles Bright has been giving a series of interesting lectures at Salt Lake City to good audiences. He intends to leave San Francisco by the steamer which departs Feb. 10th for New Zealand and Australia. In his last discourse he spoke of the great loss to Liberalism in the death of Mr. Bennett, of the noble work which had been done, and which will still be done by The Truth Seeker as the organ of Freethought in America. Mr. Bright has shown himself to be a true Liberal, full of the genuin inspiration of humanity, and we wish him health and happiness as he speeds

"O'er the glad waters of the dark-blue sea,
With thoughts as boundless and with soul as free."

Heathen Neglect of the Christian Wonders.—But how shall we excuse the supine inattention of the pagan and philosophic world to those evidences which were presented by the hand of Omnipotence, not to their reason, but to their senses? During the age of Christ, of his apostles, and of their first disciples, the doctrin which they preached was confirmed by numerous prodigies. The lame walked, the blind saw, the sick were healed, the dead were raised, demons were expelled, and the laws of nature were frequently suspended for the benefit of the church. But the sages of Greece and Rome turned aside from the awful spectacle, and pursuing the ordinary occupations of life and study, appeared unconscious of any alterations in the moral or physical government of the world. Under the reign of Tiberius, the whole earth, or at least a celebrated province of the Roman empire, was involved in a preternatural darkness of three hours. Even this miraculous event, which ought to hav excited the wonder, the curiosity, and the devotion of mankind, passed without notice in an age of science and history. It happened during the lifetime of Seneca and the elder Pliny, who must hav experienced the immediate effects, or received the earliest intelligence of the prodigy. Each of these philosophers, in a laborious work, has recorded all the great phenomena of nature, earthquakes, meteors, comets, and eclipses, which his indefatigable curiosity could collect. Both the one and the other hav omitted to mention the greatest phenomenon to which the mortal eye has been witness since the creation of the globe. A distinct chapter of Pliny is designed for eclipses of an extraordinary nature and unusual duration; but he contents himself with describing the singular defect of light which followed the murder of Cæsar, when during the greatest part of a year the orb of the sun appeared pale and without splendor. This season of obscurity, which cannot surely be compared with the preternatural darkness of the passion, had been already celebrated by most of the poets and historians of that memorable age.—Edward Gibbon.

Send for "Answers to Christian Questions." By D. M. Bennett. Price, 25 cents.

Communications.

Weighed and Found Wanting.

The Rev. Dr. R. Heber Newton is rector of "All Souls'" church (Protestant Episcopal) of this city. He stands at the head of the clerical profession, and his pulpit utterances hav probably more weight than those of any other preacher of his denomination. From these facts his recent sermons on the alleged inspiration of the Bible derive their chief importance. Below is printed the gist of what he had to say upon this subject. His text was taken from 2 Timothy, iii, 16, of the revised New Testament, and reads as follows:

Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness.

The Bible viewed as a book let down from heaven, whose real "author" is God, as the Westminster catechism affirmed; a book dictated to chosen penmen, and written out by their amanuenses under a direction which secured them against error on every subject of which they treated; a book thus given to the world to be an authoritativ and infallible oracle for human information on all the great problems of life, naturally calls for uses which, apart from this theory, are gross and superstitious abuses.

It is the wrong use of the Bible to set it in its entirety before all classes and all ages. On the old view of the Bible no man might dare to cut away portions of it in public reading or home instruction. The horrible atrocities and brutal lusts of the early Hebrews, and the coarsenesses of their later days, as unbearable by modern ears as the rough talk of Shakspere's ladies, had all to be read to mixed assemblies of young men and maidens, and be read with blushing face by the pure mother to the purer children at her knees. For us, who see the Bible in its new light, their is no necessity for a minister to offend against the taste of a refined age, or for a mother to introduce the unsoiled soul of her child to evil, by reading straight through the successiv chapters of the Bible. It has been left for Protestant piety to excel Romanists and Jews in superstition. The church of Rome, as you know, discourages the use of the Bible by her laity, erring in the other extreme. The Jewish rabbis had a saying that no one should read the Canticles before he was thirty years of age. If you follow the public readings of the Bible in this church from your own Bibles, you must often appreciate the relief such a rule brings. Use the Bible in this way with children at home. He who cares for his children's innocence will set before them an expurgated edition. No timid soul need fear that impotent threat in the last chapter of the Revelation:

If any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy God shall take away his part out of the book of life.

That sounds like the ruling passion strong in death of the son of thunder, who in youth asked if he should call down fire from heaven upon a hamlet which did not welcome Jesus, and was well rebuked for his zeal by the gracious master. A writer who was surer of his inspiration would not hav appended such a postscript. This book, judged by Mr. Moody's test of inspiration, is one of the least inspired of the New Testament books. Paul would not hav bolstered up his writings with such an imprecation. Heed it not!

It is a wrong use of the Bible to accept its utterances indiscriminately as the words of God, to quote any saying of any speaker in its pages, or any deed of any actor in histories as expressing to us the mind of God. Such use of the Bible is thoughtlessly common. Some time ago before going into a church in whose service I was asked to participate, I ventured to show some slight hesitancy in using certain psalms which were set down in the psalter for the day. When asked why, I mildly answered that I could not ask a Christian congregation to join with me in singing after the embittered Jews in Babylon:

Remember, O Lord, the children of Edom, in the day of Jerusalem. How they said, Down with it! down with it! even to the ground. O daughter of Babylon, who ought to be wasted. Happy should he be that rewardeth thee as thou hast served us. Happy shall he be that taketh thy little ones and throweth them against the stones.

Nor could I ask the people to unite in praying;

Make their nobles like Oreb and Zeeb; yea, all their princes as Zeba and Salmana.

I had in mind the fate of Oreb and Zeeb and of Zeba and Salmana, splendidly brave fellows even in their death, as told in the seventh and eighth chapters of Judges, where you can learn what sort of prayer this of those savage Jews was. Naturally, as I thought, I objected to voicing such heathen imprecations. My good friend, with a look of amazement, replied, "Why, these psalms are in the Bible." That ended the question for him.

So our American slaveholder read the word of the ancient tradition, "Cursed be Ham," and smoothed his troubled conscience. They were fulfilling the divine will in breeding black cattle for the auction block. Piety and profit were one, and godliness had great gain and some contentment also. So the extermination of the Canaanites, for which the Hebrews pleaded long after the divine order, and for which they had substantial warrant in the destined determination to rid the land of these corrupting tribes and make room for the noble life Israel was to develop, has been the stock argument of kings and soldiers for their bloody trade. Thus poor human consciences hav been sorely hurt and troubled as they read, in stories such as those of Jael and Sisera and Jacob and Esau, of acts which better nature instinctivly condemned.

If indeed the Bible is a book let down from the skies, of which God can be called the author, then all such uses of it are correct enough, and in those dark and savage words and deeds I must read the words of God and the deeds he holds up to our admiration and invitation; only then I should reject the Bible and perhaps forswear God, as so many are doing who say with Maurice to the old theologians, "Your God is my devil."

If, however, the Bible is the national library of the Jews, I must expect to find all sorts of early Jewish notions in ethics and religion bodied in the words of the speakers they introduce, and the deeds of the men of whom they tell the tales.

It is a wrong use of the Bible to accept everything recorded therein as necessarily true. If the historians were simply amanuenses of the Infinit Spirit, then of course they could not hav erred in anything they recorded. If they were ordinary writers, trying to tell the story of their peoples' growth, searching court archives, state annals, old parchments of forgotten writers, consulting the traditions of town and village, using the material in the best way their abilities enabled them to do, using all to teach virtue and religion, then all questions of historical accuracy are beside the issue.

Has it been such comfort to us to read the doings of Samson as actual history, slaying a thousand men with the jaw-bone of an ass, that we should resent the translation of this impossible hero into the Semitic Hercules, a myth? Or if, perchance, the historian accepted from remote antiquity the account of great deeds and striking events as they were told at the camp fires of the Hebrew nomads, or in the merry-makings of the Palestine villages, with an ever growing nimbus of the marvelous around them, and if these impossible marvels are reported to us soberly, are we to be compelled to accept them uncritically, or reject the Bible altogether? Perhaps Elisha's iron axe head did swim upon the water. I am prepared to believe almost anything after our spiritualistic mediums and their exposers. Whether it did or did not concerns me no whit. I shrug my shoulders and read on. I cannot make out the historical fact which was at the basis of the Red Sea deliverance, nor do I care much to make out this or any other Old Testament miracle.

It is a wrong use of the Bible to consult it as a heathen oracle for the determining of our judgments and the decision of our actions. The pagans, even such grand old pagans as the Romans, before undertaking any important action would solemnly consult the auspices. Men with reason given them of God would stand anxiously around the steaming entrails of a bird to find out whether the fates were propitious to their undertaking. Great generals would open or delay a campaign according to the intestinal revelations of a goose. Intelligent people use the Bible in some such way. When at a loss how to proceed, instead of calmly consulting their own judgment and the judgments of their wisest friends, and then acting like reasonable beings, men and women will open their Bibles and at random let their eyes rest on the first verse which arrests their attention, and accept any possible bearing on the question in hand as the voice of God. The journals of John Wesley and other eminent men contain examples of this abuse of the Bible.

No prophecy was written centuries ago with reference to your private affairs. All that is there written concerned men and affairs of those days. The principles there applied will help you now, if you will take the trouble to search for them, for principles do not change like fashions.

It is a wrong use of the Bible to go to it, as the heathen went to their oracle, for divinations of the future. The inspiration of an oracle was proven by the success of its predictions. In the same way men hav turned to the Bible as a sort of sacred weather bureau, a book which, if we only could interpret its mystic utterances, would tell us what things were going to happen upon the earth. I remember a number of years ago an eloquent Irish divine who came to this country on a great mission. His first sermon was on Ezekiel's vision by the Chebar. He said this was the age of science, and such a marvelous science could not hav escaped the vision of the prophet. The mystic creature which the prophet saw, with wheels, whose appearance was like burning coals of fire, which turned not as it went, and so on, was the locomotiv! Let any political crisis occur, and some sage will write a book showing how Daniel had foretold just this issue of diplomacy. America, the restoration of the Jews to Palestine, and the church of Rome especially inspire these crazy conjectures.

Prophecy has been taken as a synonym for prediction. There is not much verbal difference between foretelling and forthtelling, but there is a vast difference for the purposes of religion. Take prophecy as the synonym of foretelling, and the essential function of the prophets was predicting. They were supposed to hav been busy in predicting the things which should come to pass in the far future. The success of these long-range predictions was the demonstration of their being charged with miraculous powers. The prophecies constituted the chief evidence for the supernatural character of the Bible. Of course, with this theory in the mind of the church, a predictiv character would be read in everything capable of bearing it, and so the history of the Hebrews, the eloquent orations of their great statesmen, the pious longings of their hymn-writers, became mystic anticipations of everything in the heavens above or the earth beneath. But Hebrew prophecy never was the synonym for prediction. The prophets chiefly spake of things shortly coming to pass upon the earth, the horizon bounded by a very near future. In these predictions they were often mistaken, nearly as often in error as in the right. We never hear of these unfulfilled prophecies, but they are in your Bibles. I believe I know of no one passage of the prophets which can be fairly said to point to any event beyond the near future of the writer. Only in so far as they spoke of the ideal forces, of moral victories, did they launch out upon the far future. But you say, Do they not surely point on to Christ. I answer, Of any mere literal prediction of the events and incidents of his life I know none. The many passages that hav been made to read like predictions of his miraculous birth, his sale for thirty pieces of silver, and so on, refer to passages and experiences in the time of the writers. Isaiah expressly says so about the Virgin—that is, the young bride who was to conceive and bear a son. Before he should be able to distinguish right from wrong the relief of Jehovah to Israel would come. True it is that the gospel called that of St. Matthew goes through the life of Jesus, making such use of Old Testament words; but this was evidently done by some pious Jew, who regarded the Old Testament as our good people still do, and after the fashion of preachers, made application to Christ of words never meant for him. This use of the Old Testament is pushed to absurdity in books over which I hav toiled, which gave one the "Gospel of Leviticus," or "Christ in the Psalms," fitting every word of every Psalm into the lips of the dear Lord, and showing the relations of Christ and the church in the charming love idyl of some ancient Hebrew, known to us as the Song of Songs.

It is a wrong use of the Bible to go to it as an authority in any sphere except in the sphere of theology and religion. The old view of the Bible was that it was given to be a ready, off-hand answer to the manifold questions which the inquiring mind of man raises touching the great problem of life; that it was an infallible guide in everything; that it could answer as to how the world came into being; how it was peopled with life; how the earth is to be destroyed in the end; and many other questions besides. Such use of the Bible is wrong. The old writers were actual historians, searching the documents of the times, deciphering old manuscripts, examining traditions. They were not men of intellectual infallibility, inspired morally and religiously. Do you suppose God gave a book three thousand years ago to be an answer to all questions that are arising to-day? That would forbid to our children the noble disciplin of study, and rob them of the benediction which is richer and rarer than the grasp of truth—the search for truth.

The story of the Garden of Eden is a marvelous tradition which has come down to us from a stream of time in remote antiquity. It is among the thoughts of the profoundest minds and noblest poets, far back in the centuries. We may read to-day on the sand-baked tablets of Babylon the same traditions of the creation, and the Garden of Eden, and the fall of man. But when we analyze them in philosophy they are wanting. As poetry they are beautiful. Hawthorne's story of "The Marble Faun" is simply a rendering of the ancient parable of the history of evil. These old stories are the embodiment of the astronomy, geology, and anthropology of the times when they were written.

Take Paul's expression in an epistle to the Corinthians, discountenancing the participation of women in the Christian ministry. Only a little while ago it was actually sufficient in Brooklyn to decide a question of that kind. And so for ages this remark of Paul has been quoted as authority to prevent women speaking in the churches, although they might hav the talent of Lucretia Mott. Yet in the same letter Paul speaks of the impropriety of women appearing in the public temples, and nobody pretends to hold women to the strict letter of that prohibition. In some matters even the authority of St. Paul falls to the ground.

It is wrong to use the Bible to further plans of theology, and to construct biblical systems of theology after the manner of the churches. This is seen in the marvelously constructed Christian catechisms that are placed in your hands. The makers of these catechisms scan the Bible from Genesis to Revelation for texts to support certain doctrins. Many of these texts are mercilessly and ruthlessly torn from the context—from the thoughts of which they form a part. The sayings of writers of remote periods are collated as if they were written at the same time, and distorted from their original meaning. The most atrocious and abominable doctrins that are preached as Christianity are supported by this sort of texts.

It is a wrong use of the Bible to discard the differences of time in the writings of the Bible in the attempt to construct a biblical system of theology. Apply this test to the claims of the Roman Catholic church and of the Ritualistic Episcopalians, who claim Bible authority for the providential retention of the priestly system. That system may hav been useful and authoritativ 2,500 years ago, but is not adapted to progress and the needs of the present time. So, too, the whole doctrin of the second advent would be entirely cleared up by looking at it from the standpoint of time. Take the epistles of Paul and arrange them in the order in which they were written, and it will be seen that as Paul progresses he states his expectation of the physical second coming of Christ less forcibly, until finally we come to the thought that it is not Christ personally, but the spirit of his teachings, that is to come.

It is a wrong use of the Bible to quote its letters, even in the sphere of theology, as the basis of authority. Suppose you hav three books of political economy on your table. You read one. An idea strikes your attention. You turn to the title page, and find that the book is by John Stuart Mill. You respect it for the name of the author. You read in another book an idea that strikes you as the work of genius, although it differs from the accepted political economy. You find it is by an author hitherto unknown to you, Mr. Henry George, yet you respect the idea for itself, because you recognize the work of the master. You may hav a third book of political economy, of which you may neither like the idea nor know the author to be a man of reputation. We ought to apply the same rule to the biblical writers. Inspiration does not destroy the individuality of the writer.

When you examin what has been taught as resting upon the authority of the Bible you will find that the most startling things hav been taught on the authority of inferior writers. Ancient writers who knew nothing of a future state of existence are quoted as authority on that subject. The New Testament is used to fortify some of the most horrible doctrin.

It is a wrong use of the Bible to manufacture from its writings a system of theology which is to be received as absolutely reliable and final. It is impossible to reconcile the whole Bible with any one system of theology, because it represents many phases of thought. It bears the marks of being written by men of different philosophy. Religion is man's groping after God. Theology is man's thinking that he has grasped God.

Mumbo Jumbo.

The changes that hav taken place in the public mind on questions touching religion, God, and the like, of late, are most sweeping and thorough. We must thank our Freethinkers for this. When one looks back a few years and sees how very familiar people used to be with the Almighty, and compares this day with then, the difference is striking. The truth is, the lower man is the more familiar he is with his God. The Hottentots make him out of a stick or stone; others a little higher, intellectually, make him into a bit of statuary, somewhat ornamented. Some of them even beat and abuse him when irritated at his supposed neglect of their affairs. Methodists and other revivalists even yet imagin him to be present on occasions, and address him with all the familiarity of old Moses. In many of our courts, and other places where oaths are taken, he is treated with great familiarity. Speaking of these oaths, ending, "So help you God," or, "As you shall answer unto God," Bentham nicely says: "The supposition of their efficacy is absurd. It ascribes to man a power over his maker. It places God in the position of a sheriff's officer, and puts him under the command of every justice of the peace! It supposes the Almighty to stand engaged, no matter how, but absolutely engaged, to infliction every one by whom the ceremony has been profaned a punishment, no matter what, which but for the ceremony he would not hav inflicted. The power which leaves omnipotence no alternativ is a power which any one who is rash and foolish enough may exercise at any time at pleasure, on so simple a condition as that of getting a justice of the peace to join in the performance of the instantaneous ceremony" (Rat. of Judicial Ev., 366). Truly Freethinkers more honor God and follow Christ than those self-assumed saints who in their familiarity approach the God-beating Hottentots. If there be a god, that being must be so awfully inconceivable, so almighty, that the very idea of these vain, silly creatures pouring praises into his ear after the style of their great psalmist, David, is too disgusting. The whole system is based on the theory that somewhere among the invisibles is a great, big, overgrown Mumbo Jumbo subject to human passions, "swearing in his wrath," propitiated by "sweet savors," diverted, yes, pleased, by flattery, delighting to be called "great king above all gods," in his bloodiest moods softened by being called good, kind, merciful, blessed—everything he is not. If anyone who gave alms were tickled at the millions of blessings showered on his "swate, gentlemanlike face" by a voluble old Irish beggar-woman, his friends would ridicule him. But the infinit creator of countless suns and systems of worlds is supposed to be delighted at the eulogies and edifying howls of his saints. HOLT.

Mr. Young Rebuked.

[The following communications are in reply to one by Mr. Young, in a late number of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Having been accused of certain lapses, these parties are entitled to a reply, but this will close the subject so far as we are concerned.—ED. T. S.]

STEPHEN YOUNG.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: As your readers hav been treated to a dish of scandal, fresh from the pen of a crank of the above name, I trust you will grant me the privilege to place before them a few facts from the other side, as all intelligent persons will admit there are two sides. In his first remarks I admit there is some truth. Mr. Mott never advertised a line in his life, therefore the traveling public has no claim on him, and he reserves the right to say who shall and who shall not attend his seances. And his endeavor has been to operate as a private instead of a public medium, and to keep his seances select. He has frequently been persuaded to let persons in, to his own sorrow; and the "Pattee" matter Mr. Young refers to was an instance of that kind. But to the earnest investigator I will say that you need hav no fears of your reception at our house, nor yet will you be disappointed in the manifestations that you witness here. He tells your readers that he is not afraid to say to our faces what he says behind our backs, etc. Yet he says nothing to our face, but wrote that slanderous letter which would bring a blush of shame to the cheek of a true gentleman, and, as he says, put it in the office and passed our residence every day. Hence his frankness.

Of the letter I will say but little. It speaks for itself in words too plain to be mistaken. A man that could write such a letter to a woman, so full of falsehood and misrepresentation, could do almost anything. I do not write fearing the result of his libelous letter on many of your readers, but that the truth may be arrived at. What I say in regard to the statements he has made I can prove. Since he has made his grievances known, I will say that he paid us twenty-six dollars, as he states. Our terms were one dollar per seance and one dollar per day for board. He visited us a stranger. He received twelve seances and twelve days' board, and paid the usual rates, amounting to twenty-four dollars, and the other two dollars is for two seances received by his son. After that he became a resident here and received two hundred or more free seances. This was becoming monotonous, both to us and our visitors, and there were some remarks made which he heard, and he then asked me to name a small sum for which he might be admitted, and I named the lowest possible price, which never was asked before, twenty-five cents per seance, and many times told him it made no difference about it, but he always insisted on my taking it. Now my generosity is thrown in my face with language no person ever used to me before. How much has Mrs. Work and her weakly husband to gain from such a patron? I predict that he will be kicked out before he "dead beats" them half so much as he did us. As for Mrs. Work's mediumship I hav nothing to say, having never witnessed it. But if there ever comes a time when handbills are issued to her discredit, neither me nor mine will be found distributing them. He says he has been told that we could hardly obtain a comfortable living before Mr. Mott became a medium. I will say we can furnish a hundred witnesses, if necessary, to the contrary. Although Mr. Mott was only twenty-seven years old and had never given a seance for money, he sold a farm for two thousand dollars, and had plenty of stock besides. I can refer you to H. G. Pitkin, who bought the farm. We never lived a day in a rented house, having money from the first with which to purchase a comfortable home, and by industry and economy accumulated more, perhaps, than we hav in the same length of time since. The next in order is the Col. Eaton statement. Col. Eaton died the nineteenth of September, and a notice of his death appeared in the Globe-Democrat of the twentieth, also the twenty-first, and there are several copies taken here. The communication was not received until the twenty-fifth. Hence, in our interview, I told him this might be a test to him, but it was none to us. The "source of my offending hath this extent, no more." Col. Eaton received his ideas of reincarnation through the mediumship of Mrs. Hollis Billings, and never through Mr. Mott; in fact, we never met him after he entertained those views. He was our warm and personal friend, and whenever he says through any reliable medium that he has changed after being in the spirit world only five days, we will place some credence in it. As we hav lived eighteen years in Memphis, our standing there can be easily ascertained. We hav heretofore furnished evidence of our good standing, and can do so again if necessary. I can say without boasting that our credit is good, and such being the case it is incompatible with dishonesty. I hav heard this large-hearted gentleman, who speaks of penuriousness as if it were a crime, say that he lived at the expense of five cents per day, or fifty cents per week, and he is not so lavish in his generosity that he need call any one hard names. He says we will think he is trying to injure us. It is plain to every thinking mind that that is his object, and to ventilate a little personal spleen; and you can also perceive that this generous man, who is not at all penurious, cares a little for the twenty-five cents. What would professional mediums think of him who receive from two to five dollars per seance? All mediums will suffer at his hands, and those he indorses hav most to fear. An honest skeptic is far more preferable. Those acquainted with the subject know that mediumship is the result of organization, and not based on moral qualifications. And I am sure there are not many, and I could almost say not another, in the ranks of Spiritualism who would gather up foul slander from the mouth of an enemy and publish it to the world against one of the most useful mediums. Away with such a Spiritualist. I think he will certainly receive a "chromo" from the "Young Men's Christian Association." In conclusion, I will say that I will never notice anything from that source again, no matter how villainous it may be. I hope that the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER will excuse me for bringing to their notice a grievance of a personal nature, but the provocation is great, and the attack of Mr. Young was entirely unprovoked. I will leave the subject where he commenced, by saying:

"Oh, wad some power the giftie gie us,
To see oursels as ithers see us!"

MARY V. MOTT.

Memphis, Mo., December 4, 1882.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: In the interest of truth and justice I request you to publish the following reply to Mr. Stephen Young:

In THE TRUTH SEEKER of Nov. 18th Mr. Stephen Young, of Memphis, Mo., indulges in a tirade of slanderous language and abuse of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Mott of that place. I am unacquainted with Mr. Young, and it is only in the unsolicited defense of the parties that I write; otherwise I should not notice the ungentlemanly and libelous attack. Such language used, especially toward a lady, could possibly emanate from none but a crank or a fool, and is therefore unworthy of notice, save in the defense of innocent parties or the interests of truth.

Mr. Young makes the following admissions:

1. The attending of two hundred seances.
2. The recognition of his spirit friends who lied.
3. That Mott's mediumship is genuin.
4. That it may convince many of a future life.
5. That he defended Mott in the "Pattee" raid.
6. That he paid twenty-six dollars for the two hundred seances.

Mott is not responsible for the reputation of Mr. Young's spirit friends who called to see him at that special seance, neither is he responsible for their lying. Mr. Young ought to recognize the fact that he alone is responsible for the class of spirits that are attracted to him, especially so when he acknowledges the manifestations to be genuin.

He should also remember that it is in bad taste, at least in this connection, and entirely gratuitous, to boast of his voluntary defense in the "Pattee" raid.

Comment is unnecessary on the admission of paying twenty-six dollars for two hundred seances.

It is strange Mr. Young has in the past written in eulogy of Mott's mediumship, and just now discovers the cloven foot.

I hav known Mr. and Mrs. Mott now nearly ten years intimately; I hav attended a number of seances with varied results; I hav positivly met my friends and relativs who hav passed to the other life, and fully recognized them, neither did they lie nor exhibit any demoniacal characteristics. Can it be possible that the many hundreds who hav visited Mott's seances from every quarter of the country are the victims of malicious spirits? Is it reasonable to suppose that our fathers, mothers, sisters, brothers, and friends would all assume devilish forms because they return through Mott's mediumship?

Is it even probable that a mischievous spirit could pass for the friend or relativ of any one but a credulous fool? If such be the fact, then that class of persons only would believe the contradictory statements of Mr. Young; and their influence be no more feared than that of any other lying spirit or mortal.

Yours for the truth and the right,

Kirksville, Mo., Dec. 12, 1883. F. A. GROVE.

SEND for "Answers to Christian Questions." By D. M. Bennett. Price, 25 cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. Macdonald, - - - - - - Editor.
Mary W. Bennett, - - - - - Publisher.

21 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing seven hundred square inches more reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

All Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders should be made payable to MARY W. BENNETT.

SATURDAY, - - - JANUARY 13, 1883.

A New Sort of Christianity.

On another page will be found a synopsis of two late sermons by the Rev. R. Heber Newton. Believers in the dogmas of Christianity hitherto taught from Protestant Episcopal pulpits will find much in these sermons to object to, and very little to indorse. According to the Bible which Dr. Newton must hav acknowledged to be divine when he was ordained as a minister of the gospel, "all scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrin, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness" (2 Tim. iii, 16). According to Dr. Heber Newton, "he who cares for his children's innocence will set before them an expurgated edition." These two utterances breath, an entirely different spirit, and there must hereafter be eternal war between Newton and Paul.

Speaking of the so-called prophecies of the coming of Christ, the preacher says: "I believe I know of no one passage of the prophets which can be fairly said to point to any event beyond the near future of the writer. But you say, Do they not surely point to Christ? I answer, Of any mere literal prediction of the events and incidents of his life, I know none." Thomas Paine wrote page after page to prove what is here admitted in a breath by a regularly ordained minister.

Dr. Newton is not yet done with the Bible, but will continue to examin it further in the same light. What will be left "for doctrin, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness," when he gets through with it is uncertain. He may take back all he has said, and rob himself of what little credit he has achieved in a field already thoroughly explored by braver and more enterprising men; but a few steps further in the direction he is now going, and hardly more than that blessed word Mesopotamia will remain for the consolation of those to whom, if we may trust their professions, the Bible has hitherto been both food and raiment. If the Episcopal church does not expel him it will be the first time a heretical preacher has been allowed to remain within its fold. Probably he will be tried by a church council, declared a heretic, and formally handed over to the devil; for when Dr. Newton was ordained he had to subscribe to the creed of his church regarding the Bible, and in common with all Catholic Christendom, and nearly the whole Protestant world, his church receives the canon or decree of the first Council of Laodicea, A.D. 363, as a final and indisputable charter of the authenticity and genuinness of the Bible as it has since been preserved and circulated. In the sixth article we read:

"In the name of the HolyScriptures we do understand those Canonical Books of the Old and New Testament, of whose authority was never any doubt in the church, and here follow the titles of all the several books of our Bible, as they hav stood since the Laodicean Council, without change or comment."

In the eighth article the relation between the Old and New Testaments is set down in these words:

"The old Testament is not contrary to the New, for both in the Old and the New Testament everlasting life is offered to mankind by Christ."

So Mr. Newton can now be fairly regarded as a heretic, and the treatment heretics received is well known to be excommunication. If this shall occur, let him throw away the rest of the rubbish which clings to him like bitter burrs, and come out in the air and be entirely free from his fetters. He will find it better than being a licensed liar to a lot of hypocrits, as many ministers now are who are preaching when they are themselvs convinced that most of their creed is wrong. They know that they are preaching falsehood, and they know their congregations know it. But neither has the courage to say so, and they go on year after year deceiving and being deceived. Beecher has taken his congregation with him in his flight. It remains to be seen whether Mr. Heber Newton can do the same.

Another Christian Answered.

Last year we answered a question very similar to the following, but we suppose it will take line upon line, and precept upon precept, to enlighten all the Christians in the country.

Annapolis, Ill., Dec. 5, 1882.

Mr. Editor: One of my Christian neighbors would like to hav you prove by authentic history where one single nation or people ever became civilized except by and through the influence of the Christian religion.

Hoping that for the gratification of my Christian friend you will notice this in The Truth Seeker, I am very respectfully your Infidel friend and subscriber.

Martin Newlin.

One word would answer that Christian—Greece. Whatever civilization may be measured by—by learning, philosophy, material progress, arts, knowledge of the sciences—Greece is pointed to by historians as the embodiment of a refined civilization. Her people dwelt in palaces. She produced writers and orators who are models for the nineteenth century. Her ships wandered all over the Black and Mediterranean seas. Her commerce was wonderful, and her merchants traveled far and near in the prosecution of their trade. The caravans of Greece penetrated as far east as China. The mercantil operations of Greece gave rise to bills of exchange, and Isocrates mentions a trader who came to Athens with grain having delivered to him a draft of money due to him somewhere on the Euxine Sea, which was negotiated without difficulty.

Draper says she possessed "a perception of the beautiful as manifested in sculpture and architecture to a degree never attained elsewhere, either before or since." Her engineers and architects made Alexandria the most beautiful city in the world.

But there are other civilized countries that are not and never hav been Christian. Civilization is more a question of climate than of creed. If the Puritans had landed in Mexico instead of Massachusetts, they would hav gone to sleep under a banana-tree, instead of whipping Quakers and burning witches, and their descendants would now be Catholics, more given to cock-fights than Congregationalism. Hot climates breed indolence, indolence leads to ignorance, and ignorance is the mother of theology. Even Greece outgrew its gods, and its finest age was its age of skepticism.

Probably no city and its institutions contributed more to the progress of the world than Alexandria and its library and museums founded by Ptolemy Soter three hundred years before Christ. Although China and Mesopotamia had astronomers hundreds of years before, and India had mathematicians of renown, Prof. Draper says the museum of Alexandria was the birthplace of modern science. It was in this museum that Ctesibius invented the fire engin, and his pupil Hero improved it by giving it two cylinders. Here, too, was the first steam engin worked. This museum or academy of science was very similar to our modern ones, and the library was on the grandest scale the world has ever seen. The Alexandrian scientists had correct ideas respecting the globular form of the earth, its poles, axis, equator, Arctic and Antarctic circles, equinoctial points, solstices, the distribution of climates, etc. Ptolemy's treatis on the mathematical construction of the heavens was only displaced by the "Principia" of Newton.

Egypt had its civilization and its religion centuries before the Christian era. Bunsen called it the "monumental land of the earth." He says the people were "the chronometers of universal history." "No people, ancient or modern," says Champollion, "has conceived the art of architecture on a scale so sublime, broad, and grandiose as the ancient Egyptian." Bunsen says, "The Egyptians left imperishable monuments of deep ethical thought, of high artistic instincts, and of noble institutions."

China, too, was a civilized country hundreds, if not thousands, of years before Christianity had an existence. Before Abraham, before Moses even, the Chinese cultivated the soil, and the flax they raised was woven in looms of their own invention, and they held fairs for the better interchange of commodities. They had a regularly organized government. Twenty-three hundred and seventy-five years before the time of Jesus, the Chinese took observations of a planetary conjunction and calculated eclipses. The mariner's compass, gunpowder, and printing are indisputably Chinese inventions, as were paper, silk, and clocks. The plow was used in China two thousand years before the Christian era, and during the reign of one ruler crime was unknown in the country. Has any Christian country since been so highly civilized? It was during the life of this emperor that the great flood occurred in the north of China. A Chinese engineer was employed nine years in draining the country, a stupendous feat never excelled. Could any people not reclaimed from savage life boast of such? Their system of numerals was in daily use several hundred years before Christ. Their language dwarfs into "insignificance the antiquity of Western tongues." Eleven hundred and fifty years B.C. a Chinese political offender wrote a book within prison walls. Confucius's "Book of History" goes back to the twenty-fourth century before Christ. Time and space would fail to enumerate all the works of biography, science, education, and jurisprudence issued by the ancient Chinese. They had language, literature, laws, long before Jesus Christ was born. They had no help nor hindrance from the Bible. They worked out their lives without the aid of the Jewish Jehovah. Even while his chosen people were floundering around, barbaric nomads, this wonderful people had a civilization which it took centuries and centuries for the Jews to attain. It is only the ignorant who deny this. The facts are accessible and easily proved. But there are some people in the world who think the Bible is all there is of history and literature, of morals and law. And China to-day is a civilized country without Christianity. Mr. Bennett traveled through a large portion of it only last year. It has manufactories, stores, markets, theaters, steamboats, botanical gardens, museums. Sochee Chunder Dutt, who has made Asiatic history a study, and who is a Christian, says:

"The evidences of civilization are undeniable. They hav possessed for ages many very curious and useful branches of art, and hav greatly excelled in them; but no one has helped them to them; they hav not learned them by imitation. Several of these arts hav since been introduced into Europe, but the excellence of the Chinese, in some of them at least, has not been surpassed. Mechanical skill has been carried to perfection among them; their ingenuity and skill are unequaled. Their long bridges, great roads, and pyramidal towers are architectural and engineering evidences of this skill, industry, and ingenuity. They dig canals, form gardens, and level mountains more patiently, perhaps, than any other nation. They are also inimitable manufacturers - porcelain and bronze, excellent carvers in wood and ivory, very superior workmen with silk and cotton, and this, considering their peculiar position and exclusivness, is certainly amazing. The fact is, they are able to adapt themselvs to any and every condition of life, and always do so without hesitation. There is a strange union of the past and the present in their character, as in everything else about them, and, while wedded to the past ordinarily, they never flinch from accommodating themselvs to the present whenever it is of service to them to do so. This is a very favorable trait in them to notice, and promises to carry them through as long a future as they hav had of the past."

And Mr. Bennett adds:

"In love of education perhaps no nation presents a better record, and in no nation is more attention paid to it. Here learning is the only road to places of power, of trust, and of honor. A man who cannot pass the most thorough examination in literary branches stands no chance of reaching any commanding position. In no country are there more profound teachers in the various literary branches or a greater number of advanced students. Here knowledge is not only highly respected, but is absolutely required of all those who would occupy the better positions in society or hold any posts under the government. Even the lower classes are pretty well educated, but it must be admitted that here, as in the oriental countries generally, females are disregarded in this respect, it not being deemed essential that they should be learned. Females of the higher classes are somewhat educated, but those of the lower classes are not.

"Anson Burlingame, when he headed a Chinese embassy to our country in 1868, paid, in a speech delivered in New York, the following tribute to Chinese learning and civilization:

"China is the land of scholars and schools; a land of books, from the smallest pamphlet up to the voluminous encyclopedias. It is a land where privileges are common. It is a land without caste, for they destroyed their feudal system over two thousand years ago, and they built up their grand structure of civilization on the great idea that the people are the source of power. This idea was uttered by Mencius between two and three thousand years since, and it was old when he uttered it. . . . They make scholarship a test of merit."

Much more could be adduced, were it necessary, but no one who keeps abreast of the times in his reading can doubt what is as admitted as the civilization of our own country. We can also point to China, Japan, India, and all the Eastern countries of any repute. Turkey is another country which was civilized without Christianity, and is only retrograding as this religion is being introduced. When all Christian

Europe was under the brutal rule of the church, and priests were the professors of ignorance, Mohammedanism was the one thing that saved it, and, as Prof. Draper says, forced science into its brain at the point of the bayonet. The Saracen empire, which at that time exceeded the Roman empire in extent, was dotted all over with colleges. The first medical college established in Europe (at Salerno, Italy) was founded by the people of Islam.

Mohammedan Turkey is as well off to-day as Christian Russia, and is more civilized. Her people are no more discontented, her manufactures are greater in proportion to her population, her public debt is no larger in percentage, her means of internal communication is as good; and if this country is the "sick man of Europe" it is because it has been inoculated with the poison of Christian statesmanship, and made the football of ambition on the part of the different nations which surround it. The idea that all nations that do not profess the Christian faith are pagan, heathen, or barbarian, is one that has zealously been fostered by the church, and her ignorant dupes are now ready to swear to it. It only shows how little they know about the world's history, and how completely their religion has kept them ignorant. If they will shake it off and open their eyes they will see that Christianity is but one little system of faith, when compared to older and grander systems, and that instead of aiding progress and civilization it has always been found fighting them. To such people we would recommend a diligent perusal of the great historians and scientific men who hav enriched the world by their learning and laborious research. The facts that we hav stated are no more in dispute than Euclid's propositions. They are the common knowledge of the world, and had not the church such immense interest in keeping the people ignorant of them there would be no need of pointing them out over and over again to enlighten some Christian who knows nothing but "Christ and him crucified."

The Passion Play.

Two successiv mayors of this city hav refused Salmi Morse a license for his hall in which he intended to produce the tragedy (or comedy) of the life and death of Jesus Christ. The first mayor was a Catholic, the second a Protestant. The church must again be set down as the oppressor. The Passion Play as a work of art is inferior to Shakspere, but anyone who cares to introduce it or go to see it has as good a right to do so as to produce or see Hamlet. The spectacle of the chief officer of a great city like New York calling in various bigoted priests and parsons to advise him as to his duties to his constituents is not particularly edifying. It ought to arouse people to the danger of electing too zealous Christians to office. It is a principle of the Catholic church, openly avowed, that the state is subordinate to the church; and although the Protestants do not boldly go as far, yet in practical effect it is the same. The question for the mayor to decide in this case was not what the play to be produced in the hall was, but whether the hall is entitled to a theatrical license. This is all our mayors had any business to consider, and in going beyond this they hav exceeded their powers. That they hav done this at the instance of religious bigots makes their crime worse. The only lawful cause for stopping a play is when it is immoral. Do our mayors decide in advance that the life and death of Christ were immoral? It is true that his birth is a little hazy, and his stealing corn and jackasses, to say nothing of the people he associated with, might tend to make his followers a little lax, but the play should be allowed to die of its own poverty rather than be suppressed by law. Christ, if we may believe the Bible, scandalized the respectable people of Jerusalem by his crazy notions regarding property, and now the "respectable" people are scandalized by the proposed re-enactment of the principal scenes of his life. Would the clergy of this city let him enter their churches if he should appear at the door on Sunday morning? We don't believe they would, unless he cut his hair and substituted shoes for his sandals and a stylish suit for his mantle; which mantle, by the way, appears to hav fallen upon very intolerant preachers and people.

If any of the friends of THE TRUTH SEEKER know of any Liberals who do not now take the paper, but who might do so if it was brought to their attention, will send the names of such to us we will forward sample copies to them, and feel grateful to the senders. We want to see the list grow.

The Monument Fund.

The following sums hav been subscribed and paid toward erecting a suitable monument over the remains of D. M. Bennett. We trust the responses will be generous enough to allow the Memorial Volume spoken of by the committee in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Dec. 23d to be prepared.

Daniel E. Ryan,	$50,00	Sarah C. Hilton,	$1.00
Charles L. Andrews,	5.00	Capt. Nelson Smith,	5.00
E. M. Macdonald,	5.00	Elisha Hyatt,	5.00
George E. Macdonald,	5.00	Aaron Shreffler,	1.00
Henry Adelman,	1.00	Coke Ewing,	1.00
Dr. J. H. Swain,	1.00	Thomas G. Small,	1.00
Mrs. Ruth S. Briggs,	1.00	Channing Burnz,	5.00
M. H. Booth,	1.00	James B. Denton,	1.00
Mrs. E. G. Varni,	1.00	O. B. Lacy,	1.00
Henry A. Stone,	1.00	Robert Larkin,	1.00
Asa K. Butts,	1.00	Abner Kimball,	1.00
D. R. Hendrix,	1.00	F. and R. Ebell,	1.00
H. W. Hollenbush,	1.00	J. B. Blackburn	1.00
Nat. Ryland,	1.00	Capt. Abel Davis,	1.00
James T. Farris,	1.00	A. H. Schon,	1.00
Samuel Davis,	.50	N. S. Johnson,	1.00
H. C. Macy,	.50	Henry Luse,	1.00
Riley Sherrill,	1.00	Wm. C. Baker,	1.00
Dr. E. B. Foote,	5.00	John Payne,	1.00
Wm. E. Renwick,	1.00	Lewis Kelley,	1.00
J. D. Huntington,	1.00	Charles W. Manderfeld,	1.00
W. H. Burr,	5.00	Mr. & Mrs. J. N. Hiller,	1.00
C. P. Farrell,	5.00	Adam Laverty,	1.50
Prof. J. Syphers,	1.00	Charles Lownd,	1.00
John Earnshaw,	5.00	Chester Frisbee,	1.00
John Cosgrove,	1.50	Mabel M. Tarbell,	1.00
W. E. Scott,	1.00	David Smith,	5.00
John Maxfield,	1.00	Chas. E. Townsend,	5.00
J. C. Lawrence,	1.00	Samuel Cohn,	1.00
J. R. Perry,	3.00	E. Ingersoll,	1.00
Reuben Newkirk,	1.00	Wm. McDonnell,	1.00
James M. Wheat,	1.00	A. H. Hamilton,	1.00
Alex Waters,	1.00	N. Vance,	5.00
Mark Rowe, M.D.,	5.00	Mrs. Virginia E. Vance,	1.00
A. Minski,	1.00	A. J. Culver,	1.00
George Smith,	1.00	Joseph Goldsmith,	1.00
Mrs. A. Palm,	1.00	Chas. L. Roberts,	1.00
H. Gildemeister,	2.00	Reuben Punnett,	1.00
Matilda Hyatt,	5.00

The Minister Out of Pocket.

It didn't pay the Rev. J. E. Richards to sue our old friend Babcock. Mr. Babcock proved that Mr. Richards did not believe the Bible to be the word of God, and everything else that he alleged except one statement, and he would hav proved that if a Christian had not gone back on his word for fear of losing church trade. Five of the jury were for giving the pastor damages to the amount of six cents, but compromised with the rest on $100 rather than spend Saturday night in the jury-room. Now Mr. Babcock has been lecturing in St. Johns, and the people gave him back the $100, as we learn by the following from a St. Johns paper. Mr. Richards's lawyer's fees must hav been several times one hundred dollars.

Mr. Babcock's free lecture on "The Devil and His Works," at the Opera House last Friday evening, drew a large audience. His lecture was confined largely to the recent libel suit, and he endeavored to show that when he smote Mr. Richards on one cheek, that gentleman had not followed the scriptural injunction to turn the other cheek that he might smite that also; but, instead, had sued him for $10,000. He also claimed Mr. Richards had not heeded the divine injunction to forgiv him his trespasses, from which he drew the conclusion that if the promises of the Bible were good Mr. Richards would hav to pay the penalty in the land of the lost. Like Ingersoll, he "would not crush the perfume from the smallest flower of hope that blooms in the human heart." It was "superstition" that he was after with his scalping-knife because he didn't want to pay for teaching "superstition" in the public schools. He believed in the religion of good deeds, the religion of charity. With the lesson of the libel suit before the speaker's eyes, his personalities were less bitter than usual. He was listened to with the closest attention, and some parts of his lecture approached eloquence. At the close of the lecture a collection was taken up (at the suggestion of Chairman G. W. Stephenson), and to the great surprise of the audience the amount was announced as $101.64. Mr. Babcock announced that $100 of the amount would be used in paying the libel judgment the next day, and the balance would be turned over to "the poor washer-woman."

S. B. BRITAIN, editor of the Spiritualistic Secular Press Bureau, died at 170 E. 74th street, this city, on Thursday, the 4th inst., of pleuro-pneumonia, after a short illness of six days. He was born Aug. 13, 1815. He devoted his life to the propagation of the Spiritualistic doctrin. He was an able writer, and his loss will be keenly felt by the public he had instructed for many years.

THE "Answers to Christian Inquiries and Arguments," which Mr. Bennett wrote, and which were advertised several weeks ago, are at last ready. The reason of the long delay is that while they were at the bindery a fire occurred and the sheets were partially consumed. It required some time to find out exactly what was missing, and the printer, being pushed on holiday work, was slower than we could wish in reprinting them. But now we hav them, and shall be glad to sell them to friends. The price is twenty-five cents.

The Prayer and Oil Cure.

There is a man wandering about through this land of the free and home of the blest known as the Rev. Geo. O. Barnes, the Mountain Evangelist. He acquired the title of "the Mountain Evangelist," presumably, from the fact that he first came to notice in the mountains of Kentucky. He carries on the revival business after the manner which is called by the theatrical profession "barnstorming." Himself and daughter constitute the troupe. He is regarded as a little off-color by the regular clerical profession, and would probably be classed by the Rev. Dr. Swing, with the Salvation Army, among the "bric-a-brac of religion." Together with his gift of tongue, the healing power has also been donated him, and it is in this that he gets the bulge on his brethren who confine themselvs solely to ghostly ministrations. He practices what is called the faith cure, and, what makes it easier for the sufferer, the faith is not required on the part of the patient, but the healer; and as Mr. Barnes always keeps some of it in the house, the matter is further facilitated. His method is to anoint the afflicted party's forehead with a drop of oliv oil on the end of his finger, and then kneel down and pray for the removal of the disease. This treatment, it is claimed, will cure anything, from corns to a bald head. The fact, which has been brought to his notice, that the oliv oil he uses is not, like that employed by the great Healer after whom he patterns, manufactured from olivs, but is the product of a kind of bean, is not considered by him as of any account. If it detracts from the efficacy of the oil, the deficiency is made up by a slight extra vehemence in the accompanying prayer; the party to whom the prayer is addressed lets out an extra link, and the patient, if everything connects, goes away whole. This is to be the future system of dealing with the ills to which human flesh is the sole legatee; drug stores are to be closed, and compounders of pills will become pounders of pulpits.

The latest cure by Mr. Barnes's oleomargarine system to which the attention of an interested public has been called, is that of Mr. Bunting, of this city, who is described as having a benevolent cast of features. Mr. Bunting was suffering from inflammatory rheumatism. Now he is free from it, but still he is not happy. According to his story, he told Mr. Barnes that he had no faith in the latter's ability to cure him. He could not grasp the idea. Mr. Barnes assured him that the faith and grasp were unnecessary. The faith act was included in his part. The evangelist then put a drop of oil on Mr. Bunting's forehead, placed himself upon his knees (his own knees, not Mr. Bunting's), and prayed with great energy for half an hour. He commenced his address to the throne in a general and comprehensiv way, praying for saint and sinner; for those high in office and those low in destitution; for those at home, and the missionaries in heathen lands; he prayed that the administration of Cleveland as governor of New York might be a successful one; that justice might be meted out to the Star-route thieves, and that the coming year might be a prosperous one for the cause of Christ. He then came to the subjects that bore upon the case under discussion, and prayed that the Holy Spirit would tackle the rheumatism and expel it from the system of Mr. Bunting; he himself was only an instrument; he would not press the issue; he would merely say, "Go it, spirit! and, Go it, rheumatism! and may the best man win." This is the gist of the evangelist's remarks, as near as we hav been informed. At the time the prayer was made and the oil administered Mr. Bunting was sitting in a chair. A short time later he was so far recovered as to admit of being placed in bed. No symptoms of the inflammatory rheumatism are discoverable between the twinges of an extremely painful attack of gout with which he is suffering. His wife regards it as a proof of Barnes's miraculous powers that one disease could hav been relieved and replaced by a worse one. Mr. Bunting is himself slightly puzzled to know why he should hav been so providentially rescued from the grasp of rheumatism only to fall into the clutches of the less merciful gout. Mr. Barnes is at present in Brooklyn, where he still exercises his remarkable gift for the relief of suffering humanity.

Communications.

A Trial Balance.

Christians are never tired of saying that their religion must be tested by its fruits, and they point to the present condition of our race as the result of the civilizing influence of the church. Not only do the more enthusiastic of them believe that the church is the most prominent factor of civilization, but they persistently and determinedly refuse to admit that it has ever stood in the way of advancement. One might well suppose that the history of the past would soon silence these noisy pretensions; but with all this history before them the ministers of the church, even those who are supposed to rank highest in the estimation of the mass of Christians, still continue to hold forth the old, extravagant claims, and that without a qualifying word.

They direct us to the long line of names of those who hav been benefactors of mankind, and claim their lives as the result of Christian teachings and a Christian faith. If an individual livs a life of rectitude and moral purity, and at the same time accepts Christianity, it is assumed at once that Christianity produced it all. It would be difficult to say why we might not with equal propriety assume that the elements of moral strength and purity in his nature produced all that was of any value in his Christian life, and prevented his becoming the moral wreck in which so many Christian lives hav ended. The trouble with the defenders of Christianity is that most of them greatly overestimate the beneficent influence of the church, and they attempt to defend their estimate by an examination of only one side of the question. It is very evident that a great church, numbering millions among its adherents and extending its influence over nearly twenty centuries, cannot be properly judged by any one-sided examination of its past history, or by the parade of a few prominent individuals. Probably no religion has ever existed that has not been the means of doing some good, and that has not been able to point to those among its adherents who were marked by moral and intellectual superiority. It is equally probable that there has never been a religion whose teachings hav not frequently been productiv of harm. That the Christian religion is not an exception is a matter of history,

In all the sermons to which I hav listened, if I except those of Unitarian ministers, I can recall only the very fewest number in which I hav heard the bad results of Christianity frankly and fairly discussed. The religion that is afraid of its record must be weak, and the creed that has not faith enough in its own vitality to investigate freely its past work and its present condition has not long to liv.

It is time that the good and bad results of Christianity were placed side by side. The vices hav injured and retarded humanity with just the same certainty that the virtues hav aided and advanced it. It is time that a trial balance was being struck to determin whether humanity stands debtor or creditor to the church. It is through the church's claims to great things done in the past that she is enabled to draw so largely on the present for sympathy and support. It is not inappropriate to begin to consider whether these drafts should be honored. With this object in view, let the investigator begin his trial balance. Let him credit the church with all the influences it has brought to bear in aiding civilization, both by the effects of its doctrins on the world at large and by the individual labors of its adherents. This side of the account will be by no means a light one. Now, let him turn to the debit side and begin its entries. Let him enter that neglect of science and that lack of patriotism which aided in breaking down Roman civilization, and ushered in that "starless midnight of our race," the Dark Ages. Let him enter there the failure of Christianity to display its purifying influence, when Constantine founded a Christian empire which for lack of all noble traits, for corruption and despicable meanness, has had no equal in Europe. Let him enter the endeavor of the church to control the printing-press, and to dictate the sentiment of every published work. Let him enter the history of that religious zeal that tried to chain the mind and silence the voice of every original investigator in natural science. Let him enter the pernicious results of the savior's medical teachings, which degraded medicin from the condition of a science to the practice of shrine cures, relic cures, and the casting out of devils, a mode of practice common to the most ignorant and barbarous nations. Eighteen centuries hav not sufficed to eradicate this folly, even from civilized Europe. The priests of Spain still attempt to cure epilepsy by extracting devils from their patients. Let him enter that neglect of physiological science through which the ligature previously used at Rome was lost to surgery for more than fourteen centuries. During this interval hemorrhage from wounds was treated by such savage methods as the application of red-hot knives, boiling pitch, and molten lead. Let him enter the results of the neglect of sanitary science which left the cities of Europe to reek in filth till the ravages of pestilence swept away the people by thousands, while the priests held up their hands in holy horror, and prayed that the devil might be stayed from his destructiv work. Let him trace the history of the church by the violations of personal rights, and the many outrages upon humanity that mark its career. Let him enter the name of Innocent III., who organized the Inquisition in 1206, and let him add the long list of succeeding pontiffs who aided in carrying on this terrible scourge down to its end in Portugal in 1761. Let him enter the names of the Congregation of Cardinals who took charge of the Inquisition in 1542, together with their successors. Let him enter all the crime, sorrow, and suffering caused by that horrible nightmare of Christendom from its beginning to its end. Let him enter the heart-rending grief of the parents of central Europe, mourning for dead and enslaved children sacrificed, during the Children's Crusades, to a zeal aroused by fanaticism. Let him enter the blood and treasure expended in the memorable Thirty Years' War. Let him enter the intolerable sufferings and almost total annihilation of the nativ inhabitants of some of the West India islands under Christian misrule. Let him enter the bloody work of Pizzaro in Peru, and Cortez in Mexico. The Spaniards hav hardly succeeded in building up in those countries a civilization equal to the one they overthrew, while with an utter disregard for the advance of historical and anthropological knowledge they destroyed the records of the Aztecs, thus prohibiting the successful study of the most remarkable people of the New World.

Is our investigator tired of debiting the work of the Roman Catholic church? Then let him turn to the Protestant churches and begin his work. Let him enter there the burnings, hangings, and beheadings that occurred during the reign of Henry VIII. of England. For denying that the king was the head of the church, men were executed, their bodies torn to pieces, and the fragments displayed to the public in various parts of the city of London. This same king, in sending an army into Scotland in 1544, ordered his general to destroy the cities, and if any of the inhabitants should be brave enough to resist the invasion, then in those cities in which the resistance occurred he was to kill every living being, man, woman, or child. Let our accountant enter upon his books the chattering idiocy of witchraft which was preached by the most eminent divines of England, even in the queen's presence, and was sustained by reference to the Bible. Let him take into account the results of the extreme conservatism and lack of interest in scientific subjects, which in France opposed the teaching of Harvey's doctrin of the circulation of the blood, and in England led to the neglect, for nearly a century, of the teachings of her greatest philosopher, Newton. Let him gather together the sneers, reproaches, and slanders that hav been heaped by preachers and the press upon the greatest name in modern science, the name of Charles Darwin—a man whose name will be known and whose influence for good will be felt when the mental pigmies who made war upon him are buried in the forgetfulness of the past beyond the hope of resurrection. Let the investigator enter upon his account the injustice of Christian law-givers in this country who hav tried to deprive men of the right to testify in courts of law, to hold office, or to sit on juries—in short, hav tried to reduce honest men to the position of criminals because they could not accept a certain religious faith. Let him enter that injustice in the administration of our laws which taxes the poorest laborer on the barest necessaries of life, while it permits wealthy church corporations to sustain without tax, and for the benefit of aristocratic congregations, churches costing hundreds of thousands and fitted with every luxury. Let him weigh in the record of the church that spirit of neglect, if not of opposition, to the medical profession which holds the physician strictly responsible for his knowledge of anatomy and yet threatens him with imprisonment if he dares to make use of the only means in his power to obtain that knowledge. Christian lawgivers hav for centuries denounced as the blackest of crimes the only means by which the student of medicin could gain a knowledge of the structure of the human body. Let him enter the remaining relics still existing of that intolerance of scientific progress which has for two thousand years hampered and impeded the march of science. Scarcely twelve months ago a professor was to be appointed in the medical department of the University of Michigan to fill the Chair of Physiology. The applicant was a man who had spent years in the study of this branch of science, and had received the benefits of special instruction under the best teachers in both Europe and America. Seemingly no one doubted this man's ability to teach his subject; but the Christian element in the university, consisting largely of men who were as unskilled in physiology as they were inconsistent in their demands, presumed to dictate the manner in which the science should be taught, and warned the applicant that he was not to teach the "development theory." I presume our accountant, if he is a Christian, has long ago thrown down the pen in disgust, or is now ready to exclaim, "Well, you might as well say that the Christian religion has done no good at all." Well, I hav not said so. On the contrary, I hav admitted that it has done some good; but I do believe that all this sentimental gush about the glorious influence of the Christian church, the one supreme element that has lifted our race out of barbarism, etc., is unwarranted, and it is time that the enthusiasm of those who hold such views should be checked by a few plain facts. When our trial balance is completed, and a statement of resources and liabilities is made, I hav little doubt that there will be a balance in favor of the church. There is an element of progress in man that has been a part of his nature from the earliest beginnings. That element raised man from the barbarism of the stone age to the civilizations of Greece and Rome, and that without a vestige of the Bible. That same element, acting through the Christian church, has enabled it to do some good work. But while this element has been acting through the church, it has also been acting upon the church, elevating it, and purifying it of many of its absurdities. The church owes more to man's progressiv spirit than man owes to the church.

The church is still fostering and defending some great wrongs. These wrongs should be righted, and the only way to right them is to bring them out into the clear light of day, where they can be seen and discussed. The man who attempts to conceal them, or to bolster them up with apologies, is an enemy to the church and a foe to the human race. The welfare that will come from continued progress is worth more to humanity than all the creeds that hav ever been framed. This growth will not stop at the command of any creed, and when a creed refuses to grow fast enough to throw aside its absurdities, or when it attempts to block the path of the onward and upward progress of the race, no difference how old or time-honored that creed may be, it ought to die.

"It needs but a glance at the old religions to see how they failed from within. The priests of Egypt who once represented the most advanced knowledge of their kind, came to fancy that mankind had no more to learn, and upheld their traditions against all newer wisdom till the world passed them by and left them groveling in superstition. The priests of Greece ministered in splendid temples and had their full of wealth and honors; but men who sought the secret of a good life found that that was not the business of the sanctuary and turned away to the philosophers. Unless a religion can hold its place in the front of science and of morals, it may only gradually, in the course of ages, lose its place in the nation; but all the powers of statecraft and all the wealth of the temples will not save it from eventually yielding to the belief that takes in higher knowledge and teaches better life" (Tyler).

MEDICUS.

Infidel Philosophy.

"A penny saved is twopence clear."

Let us apply Franklin's philosophy to the seventy thousand ministers in this country. To build the churches and equip them and pay ministers' salaries will take the productiv industry of at least ten times their number, or seven hundred thousand. Their own number might be added, as they produce nothing nor add to the wealth of the country, and the number will be swelled to nearly a million. It is safe to say that one-fiftieth part of the entire earnings of the country is lavished upon the churches and the priesthood. And what benefit does the country derive from this great outlay?

In my own village a man has preached for over twenty years on a salary of a thousand dollars a year. No doubt in salary, donations, and material favors he has absorbed of the people's earnings twenty-five thousand dollars. Though he received this amount of money, and though many paid who needed every cent they could earn for the benefit of their families, yet I defy anyone to show that he has ever added one iota to the growth, wealth, or prosperity of the town. Though the preachers who hav bleated to their flocks in our village may be numbered by the score, not a monument of their labor is left behind. No buildings hav been reared by their hands, no acres hav been tilled, no traces of usefulness are to be seen. If all had depended on the priesthood, no mills would be running, no cranks turning, no shafts revolving, no factories in operation. They hav not spread the wax, neither constructed the comb; they hav only sucked the honey which the working bees hav gathered. Let the American people consider this well. Let them take into account the vast sums which are taken each year from honest industry and handed over to the priesthood. Then go into every village and city and through the country generally and strike out of existence every monument of industry and wealth, save that which has been produced by the priesthood, and then the country would be able to see what has been actually realized for the money paid, and then the people would see that the greatest favor the seventy thousand of God's pets could render to the country would be to go to work and squarely earn their own living.

"Study the Bible in all its parts," says the Christian. "Compare one part with another, study it verse by verse, take it in a chain, and it is one of the most reasonable books in the world." No matter how it is studied, or how the parts are compared, if there is one lie or one plain contradiction, the whole book stands impeached as the word of God. The greatest liar in the world tells a thousand truths to one lie, and still is branded as a liar, and ought to be. A man is a murderer though he only kill one man. He has only to swear to one lie to be a perjurer. If only one imperfection could be scored in the whole book, it cannot be called the word of God, for no imperfection can come from him. It does not help to say that there are many kind acts and moral sayings and much that is worth remembering recorded in the Bible. The lies, murders, incests, robberies, cruelties, and licentiousness of the Bible can no more be wiped out by a few moral precepts than the stain of murder can be wiped out by a few kind acts and a few good sayings of the murderer.

If the Bible is the word of God, and there is one lie in it, God is the father of that lie. If one atrocious act is commanded, God is guilty of the atrocity. If King David was a special favorit of heaven, who shall say aught against Brigham Young? If the story of drunken old Noah and beastly old Lot is true and inspired by God, then let down the bars and admit all manner of beastliness and nastiness into the family circle, for what God has inspired no man should be ashamed of.

No man has a right to hold an unsavory morsel under my nose because the peculiar scent is agreeable to his olfactories. If Christians want Christian schools, let them hire Christian teachers and pay them with Christian money. Then nobody will find fault if the Bible is made the only text-book. Nobody cares how high church steeples are built, nor how costly they are, if Christians pay the taxes on their own property; nor how many chaplains are hired to pray, if their prayers are not forced upon those who do not wish to hear them, provided always that they are paid by those interested in their prayers.

Nobody cares whether Christians split their wood on Sunday or go without fire, so long as they do not, like the lion in the fable, attempt to make the lambs conform to their habits. And finally, my Christian friends, if you want to be saved by the shedding of innocent blood, when you take passage on the celestial railroad, don't steal my money to purchase a through ticket.

All are conceived and born alike. All must die alike. The laws of nature favor no system of religious belief. The earthquake swallows up the good and the bad, the young and the old, nor asks who believes in Jesus. The famin rejoices in treasure of human skeletons, but shows no favor on account of religious belief. The hurricane chooses its path, and faith and prayer hav no power to make it deviate in its course. Epidemics engage thousands in the death-struggle, but pay no regard to those who bend the knee. The sun shines for all. The rains and the dews descend upon all. The flowers blossom for all, and there is a heaven for all or for none. And if the meanest wretch on earth is to roast eternally in hell, look out for a general fry.

His death was a dispensation of Providence, and was intended to teach this nation a lesson. Guiteau was only an instrument in the hand of God.—Garfield's funeral sermon.

And what would be thought of the father of a numerous family of children who, in order to enforce a moral lesson, should kill the flower of the flock? The penalty for that kind of teaching would be death. If Guiteau was only an instrument in the hand of God, he was blameless. And if the death penalty should be attached to the wilful killing of a man, Christians should hav done honor to Guiteau for doing the will of his heavenly master, and God should be hanged. Christians, this is your dilemma, not mine.

Truth and falsehood are so blended that it is often difficult to separate the two. A book may be written, and be from first to last within the scope of probability and still be untrue, but it may be very difficult to prove it so. But if an author make his characters appear and vanish at will, if they die and come to life again, walk on the water, play sleight-of-hand tricks, turn water into wine, augment a number of loaves and fishes, drive devils into swine, cause whole regiments to come forth from their graves, cause the sun and moon to stand still—in short, if the web of the narrativ is so woven that every known law of nature is violated, then all such narrativs must be consigned to the limbo of disbelief. JOHN PECK.

Naples, N. Y., Last day of the year E. M. 282.

Herndon on Lincoln.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I was truly glad to read a correct statement from Mr. Herndon, of Springfield, Ill., not long since published in THE TRUTH SEEKER. Mr. Herndon is a great, big-minded Liberal, and, as he says, the religious influence with the press had made a common drunkard of him, and had also closed the doors of a lunatic asylum upon him. But you see from his own pen these things are not true, though even myself, as well as thousands of others, having read so much about their being facts, had come to believe them to be so. And I repeat, I am really very glad that Mr. Herndon has spoken out for himself through the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER. And all this slander and defamation of character was because Mr. Herndon told the truth about Mr. Lincoln. Mr. Lincoln was a Liberal in every sense of the word, and was greatly interested in the subject of Spiritualism. I once knew a Spiritualist, an old gentleman, who was a sort of medium, and a personal friend of Mr. Lincoln when at New Salem and at Springfield, and he told me that Mr. Lincoln consulted him nearly every day. He said Mr. Lincoln used to send for him to come to his office to learn if he had "heard anything more from the spirits." DR. ANDREWS.

The Wonders of the Heavens.

The writer has been, during his studies of astronomy, forcibly struck with the fact that all measurements of celestial distances hitherto used giv but a very indefinit idea of the immense distances involved. Even to not go outside of our solar system, the distance of Neptune from the sun, 2,746 million miles, conveys but a poor idea to the general reader of its real greatness. In view of this fact we hav been at some pains to reduce the prominent sidereal measurements, as given in the French by Camille Flammarion (Wonders of the Heavens), to a uniform standard, designed to bring the various distances within the scope of the mind, and thus giv the reader a more definit knowledge of the real size and position of our globe in relation to the universe.

First, we ask the reader to try and realize the extent of one million miles, this being our unit of measurement. A train of cars usually makes about 38 miles per hour, and at this rate would go one million miles in three years, traveling night and day. Now we hav an idea of this measurement, we will form our scale by calling this million miles one quarter of an inch. So please bear this in mind throughout the following measurements.

We must now start from home and will find something to represent our earth. Look about you; nothing small enough meets your eyes; but stop! a happy thought! the earth cannot be seen except in borrowed light, so we will let a beam of sunlight in; there, you see, in space where nothing was visible before, a thousand minute motes can be seen. We select a small one that science tells us measures about 1-500 of an inch, and it just fills the bill. This moves in an orbit about the sun at a mean distance of 23 inches. The sun is nearly 1,500,000 times as large as our "mote," so we represent it by a pea one-fifth inch in diameter. Mercury, too small to be seen, we place at a distance of 9 inches; Venus 16 inches from the sun; Mars, another mote, at about 35 inches; the great planet Jupiter, 1,400 times our earth in size, a grain of sand, about ten feet from the sun. Saturn, with its rings and moons, comes next at some 18 feet; Uranus at 36 feet, and Neptune encompasses the whole at a distance of 57 feet, moving in an immense orbit some 360 feet in length. Ah! we forgot our gentle little moon and must go back to find it. We cannot see it, but we know it is there revolving about our little globe 1-16 inch from it. Leaving out such small fry as asteroids and only taking note of one comet, that of 1843, with a tail a full yard in length, we will now take a leap to other suns and systems. Feet and inches are not worth taking into account now; we must use miles. First we will pay our respects to the nearest suns, near neighbors, as we may say, to ours, and the ones giving a sensible paralax with the diameter of the earth's orbit as a base line. They can all be thought of as peas of various sizes and kinds, each shining by its own light. The nearest one is "A" of Centaur, 73 miles away. Next "A" of the Swan, 189 miles. Next Vega of Lyra, 418 miles; Sirius, the great dog star, one of the brightest in the heavens, 438 miles. The next nearest you can find without trouble, as it is the top star in the "Big Dipper," opposit the handle when right side up, is 497 miles away, the pole star 995 miles, and "A" of Auriga, 1,433. Now conceive, if you can, of a large cluster of these peas, some red, blue, green, yellow, or white; some double, treble, or even higher forms, but in general situated about 72 miles apart in the form of a burning-glass, or thick wheel, the number of suns in this cluster being from 40 to 43 millions, and the diameter of the wheel about three hundred times the distance from us to the polar star, or 298,000 miles and of a thickness of about 100,000, and you hav an idea of our particular home nebula or "Milky Way," as we call the edgeway view of it. Our sun is supposed to be near the center of this wheel, and according to our scale 100,000 miles from the center. We must now leave our cluster of suns and fly into space a great distancebefore we shall arrive at other clusters, firmaments, or universes, as they are called. The average distance of these from our cluster is about 334 times the greatest length of our cluster. Therefore we must place other clusters of peas, only differing in form and size from our Nebula, throughout space at various distances ranging from one hundred million miles up to—but hold! Who can comprehend the vast figures to which we hav already arrived? No one, alas! We find that we started on too large a scale after all. We must find something vastly smaller than the tiny mote that dances in the sunbeam, to represent our earth. We hav just got fairly started into space, prepared to visit whirling clusters of suns such as the Crab, Sobieski's Crown, the Dum-bells, the odd Nebula in the Lion, the wonderful cluster of the Greyhounds, in shape like our own, the great Nebula in Orion, and hundreds and thousands of others that the monster eye of the telescope has brought to view, when lo and behold! our little chain, a hundred million miles in length, each glittering inch four million miles, comes to an end.

A length that light, in rapid flight of sixteen billion miles per day; started four million years ago, would yet be flashing on its way. O. H. RICHMOND.

Singular Similarity.

From the Secular Review.

When we were at school we were bidden to pity the poor Parsees who were heathen enough to worship the sun. Even now our children are not taught much better. Yet the church holds harvest festivals. What is this but sun worship? And the church prays for fair weather and for rain. What is this but sun worship? The earliest temples built in Britain were dedicated to Dianus, or Janus, the two-faced god. This was a development of the still earlier sun worship. Dies, the day, begins with the sun. Janus, the two-faced, looks to the light and to the darkness. He was the god of the gates of the past and future, and presided over the avenues of life. Men dedicated their doings and goings and the beginnings of all their acts to him. His name givs the meaning to January, the beginning of the year. He is depicted as holding the number three hundred in one hand and sixty-five in the other to show that he rules the year.

The temple of Janus has been appropriated by Christianity as the cuckoo appropriates the nest of the swallow. The statue of Janus and the sign of Sol hav been transformed into a Trinity, of which Jehovah is the two-faced head, the sun is the Son, and the invisible third is the gust or Ghost, which typifies the unreality of the amalgam. But the old worship survives. Old Sol pours down his bounteous rays, and mortals rejoice in the blessings he showers upon them. At his birth in the early spring, when he gladdens the earth with his genial smiles, and impregnates her with the seeds of an abundant harvest to follow, men, through all time, hav signified their gratitude and joy by making their religious observances bear witness to their delight at the departure of grim winter and prospect of summer. And as the year advances, and Mother Earth brings forth her fruit, all religions celebrate in sacred festival the thankfulness of the people to the source of bountiful harvest; and as the autumn wanes, and the winding-sheet of snow enwraps the dead face of nature, the priests put on a doleful air, and worship turns into a sort of wail of sorrow.

Singular that the Christian church of to-day observes an order of service precisely fitted to an enlightened system of sun worship. True, it places the birth of its Christ in midwinter, when the sun is least apparent; but the necessity of the case demands that an anniversary of some kind shall fit in with the end of the old and the beginning of the new year. For people will hav their jollifications at such a time, whether or no, and the priesthoods are shrewd enough to hitch on their sanctimonious make-believes to our secular realities. But the birth of a baby is but a very so-so affair after all, and perhaps, like the hiding of the sun in midwinter, as much a cause for grief as joy. So the church fixes its biggest jubilation for the anniversary of his re-birth, which coincides with the reappearance of the sun after the winter solstice. The church's year begins with Easter, and begins with rejoicing; the pagan's religious year begins with Easter, when festivities expressed their joy at the prospect of fructifying sunshine; the year itself begins with the spring moon, when we all, sacred and secular, the pious and profane, join nature in putting on brighter garments to welcome the face of old Father Sol, author of all our good.

A Question for Financiers.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Why should not the government issue paper money and loan it to land-owners at an interest not to exceed three per cent per annum to the amount of say half the land is worth, interest payable annually, principal payable at the will of the borrower provided interest is paid? Would not money equalize itself to the needs of all, and would it not always be at par? Any valid objections will be acknowledged.

Omaha, Neb. A. W. LOGAN.

FROM the portrait shown to me of the supreme being, from his angry disposition, from the disparity in number between those he leaves to perish and those whom he deigns to save, the most rigorous spirit would be tempted to wish that he did not exist. We should be tranquil enough in this world if we were well assured that we had nothing to fear in another. The thought that there is no god has never frightened anyone, but rather the thought that there is such a God as the one depicted.

A MAN was one day asked whether there are any real Atheists. Do you believe, replied he, there are any true Christians?—Diderot.

Letters from Friends.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Dec. 25, 1882.

We all miss our indefatigable Bennett. He lived a hundred years if we measure his life by deeds. He worked himself too much; was not as kind to himself as he was to his fellow-men. There are few men living that are as good and great as he was.

W. F. JAMIESON.

MONTREAL, CAN., Dec. 27, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: Through press dispatches I first learned with shocking surprise of the death of Mr. Bennett, and join with all those who valued his principles and efforts to defend truth wherever found in expressing deepest sympathy to his nearest friends in the loss they hav sustained. Wishing you the compliments of the season, and hoping that THE TRUTH SEEKER will continue to prosper in the cause which it has espoused, and persevere in throwing out more light on the truth as it is revealed in nature, I remain, Yours truly, W. T. COSTIGAN.

LUDLOW, ILL., Dec. 25, 1882.

MRS. MARY W. BENNETT: Words cannot express the sorrow we felt upon reading of the death of your noble husband. You hav our heartfelt sympathy in your bereavement. We hav taken the dear old TRUTH SEEKER for four years, and could not do without it. It is the best paper I know of. May you liv long to publish it, and I hope the Liberals of the country will sustain it nobly,

Inclosed find $2.50—$1.50 for the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World," and $1 for the Monument Fund. SOPHIE NEWKIRK.

EDINA, Mo., Dec. 12, 1882.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: The sad and sudden news of your noble husband's death has caused in the hearts of all Liberals deep regret and sorrow. Liberalism loses in him a brave and intelligent soldier and hero, and humanity at large one of its best and truest friends. He was one of the few that were and are willing to work and to suffer that humanity may liv. He will liv forever in the hearts and memories of mankind. His TRUTH SEEKER will be his grandest monument, to sustain which we must endeavor to bear our share. Respectfully yours,

BENJAMIN E. BLOOM.

PARIS, ILL., Dec. 25, 1882.

MRS. BENNETT: I inclose money order for $2.50 to pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER until 1st January, 1884.

I tender you my heartfelt sympathy in your deep distress, and earnestly hope that as time shall gradually blunt the sharpness of the stroke, you will find a deep interest and pleasant employment in circulating THE TRUTH SEEKER, founded and built up by the talents, industry, and indomitable energy of your departed husband. I look upon THE TRUTH SEEKER as a nobler and more enduring monument to his memory than bronze or marble can afford.

With profound respect I remain yours,

J. A. WALTHALL.

GLOVERSVILLE, N. Y., Dec. 22, 1882.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: Inclosed please find draft for $2.50 to renew my subscription for THE TRUTH SEEKER for one year, from Nov. 10, 1882.

I hav no words to express my grief at the sudden and untimely taking off of your noble husband. Verily, he was "one upon whom every god had put his seal to giv the world assurance of a man." Wishing you and Editor Macdonald, upon whom the mantle of the illustrious dead has fallen, as well as every one connected with your valuable paper, health, happiness, and prosperity, I hav the honor to subscribe myself, Yours, with great respect,

A. W. BERRY.

DELPHI, N. Y., Dec. 25, 1882.

MRS. MARY W. BENNETT: It was with heartfelt sorrow that I learnt through THE TRUTH SEEKER of the death of your husband and our great leader, D. M. Bennett. Although he rests from his labors, his works follow him, and his memory will keep green as long as love and kindness hav a place in the human heart.

I am truly glad you are going to continue THE TRUTH SEEKER. We cannot do without it; although we take several papers that, is the first one perused

Inclosed find $3, for which send THE TRUTH SEEKER one year and a lithograph of Mr. Bennett.

Yours truly, HIRAM MCCLURE.

MILTON, PA., Dec. 25, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: It seems through the respected columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER that the nation is mentally sorely bleeding with the bereavement of our departed friend, D. M. Bennett, who has now paid his last tribute to this world, and has revealed the true light and safe path of wisdom and virtue to those still living, and many thousands that are yet unborn. I hope that the seeds the dutiful husbandman has sown may germinate and smother the tares that were sown by trespassers on illegal ground. I heartily sympathize with the heart-stricken wife in the loss of her dear and esteemed consort. Oh, how often will the thoughts of the wife soar from his former habitation to that solemn interring-place to seek consolation! but all that can be obtained is sorrow and sadness. Yours fraternally, J. W. NISSLEY.

STOCKTON, MO., Dec. 30, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed $8.50, and use as directed.

The mighty is fallen; D. M. Bennett, the hero of truth, is now sleeping in the arms of his mother. Under the quiet of the stars, let him sleep. "Tears for the dead, and cheers for the living." Accursed be the man who would defame his name now. I want to ask through your paper all good Liberals who hav warm hearts and open hands to contribute one dollar or more to build a monument over the hero's grave—one dollar each for the monument, and at proper time come up with our mite and build a hall for THE TRUTH SEEKER, and let it bear the name of D. M. Bennett, hero of truth.

Your friend, RILEY SHERRILL.

A NEW DOXOLOGY.

MR. EDITOR: At a recent temperance meeting at Jacksonville, Oregon, a venerable Methodist was chairman. It was proposed to close with the Doxology, but the majority disbelieving in "Father, Son, and Holy Ghost," none would start the song. The chairman, seeing the difficulty, took his hat and made for the door. Thus a good meeting was abruptly broken up. To prevent the repetition of such a sad occurrence the subscriber has prepared the following, which all may sing "with the spirit and the understanding also:"

Praise truth, from whom all blessings flow;
Praise it, all creatures here below;
And swell the triumph of the just.
Praise it supreme, ye earthly host.

JOHN BEESON.

BELLEVILLE, KAN., Jan. 4, 282.

MRS. MARY W. BENNETT: Dear madam, as one of the sincere admirers of the Truth Seeker, who is now and forever at rest, permit me to express to you the hope and trust that his dearest and most earnest wishes in regard to his paper will be fully sustained, and thereby a living, lasting monument be reared to his memory.

I trust that every liberty-loving man and woman may consider that the mantle of our fallen leader and prophet has fallen upon their shoulders, and will from this time forth consecrate anew their lives to the cause of humanity and the overthrow of superstition and tyranny.

Inclosed with this please find post-office order for $7, to be used as directed. I am sincerely and fraternally, Yours truly, H. PATRICK, M.D.

CORRY, Dec. 26, 1882.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: Please find inclosed $6.50 to renew subscription for 1883, and $1.50 to pay for the fourth volume of a "Truth Seeker Around the World," all to be sent to Corry, Erie county, Pa.

You hav my deepest sympathy for your great loss. I could not hav been more surprised if I had heard of my brother's death. My wife sat down and cried, she felt so grieved over it. The Liberal world has sustained a great loss indeed.

I hope that THE TRUTH SEEKER will continue to go on conquering and to conquer old theology until there is not a vestige left. I see already that the religious press is rejoicing over our brother's death. Hoping, with the help, not of a God, but the Liberals of the world, you will still run THE TRUTH SEEKER,

I remain yours for the cause of truth.

GILBERT ARNOLD.

TOLEDO, OHIO, Dec. 10, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: I was not more shocked on the morning of the assassination of President Garfield than I was on looking over THE TRUTH SEEKER this morning and learning of the death of D. M. Bennett, the editor of the most popular Liberal newspaper in the world.

I saw Mr. Bennett at Watkins, N. Y., last summer, looking as well as any man could, and I inquired regarding his health. He said that he never was in better condition for long life and work.

Mr. Bennett was, without exception, the greatest theo-historian of the world. He was truthful and lived a pure life. His enemies all dropped out one by one, and at last he was one of the most unanimously respected and beloved men of the age—the new era of man. He is immortalized in the hearts of all who knew him or read his writings. Peace to his ashes. JOHN STOLZE, M. D.

SIOUX CITY, IOWA, Dec. 24, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed money-order for $2.50, for which send THE TRUTH SEEKER. I was very much surprised and pained to hear of the death of D. M. Bennett, the world-famed champion of Freethought and free speech and press. I thought the press telegram was a Christian canard until the mail brought the draped TRUTH SEEKER which confirmed the sad intelligence that a great and useful life had terminated suddenly—"his work was unfinished, but his column was broken." Stricken down while in the faithful discharge of his voluminous and voluntary labors for humanity, cruel persecution, overwork, and apoplexy caused his sudden death. Yet his was a life ripe with good works and full of noble deeds. Let us cherish and revere his memomy by erecting a suitable monument of marble o'er his resting remains, and a Bennett Memorial building in New York; the building to be similar to the Paine Memorial Building in Boston, as a home for THE TRUTH SEEKER, and a Freethought hall. I hav one dollar ready for the marble, and ten dollars for stock in the building.

I shall issue early in July the first number of Life, a new Liberal monthly of eight pages (size of TRUTH SEEKER pages), devoted to "life, liberty, health, humanity, and all their vital interests," at fifty cents a year.

Fraternally yours, N. N. E. WOOD, M.D.

AYER, MASS, Dec. 25, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: Count me among the mourners at the departure of the honored editor, whose voice is heard around the world as the champion of Freethought, founder, author, hero, and martyr.

The loss of such a man is no less than a public calamity. But the seeds he has sown will spring up and yield a hundred fold. His eulogiums were but extracts of his life record, uttered by those who loved him most, because they knew him best. He will rank among the brave souls who hav stood upon the hights of time and rent the dark clouds of superstition and fear, and let the light of reason and love—the parent of happiness—on the blind, and the still blinder leaders.

It is gratifying to know that THE TRUTH SEEKER is in good hands, and is to continue its work of combating error.

Please accept kindest sympathy in your affliction, and may you be helped even beyond your prayers in all deeds of righteousness. ELIJAH MYRICK.

P. S.—Will attend to the monument subscription soon. Hope to interest subscribers enough to secure the book. E. M.

LONDON, ENG., Dec. 19, 1882.

MY DEAR EUGENE: The melancholy news which THE TRUTH SEEKER conveys to me this week has filled me with astonishment and profound sorrow. When I last saw my dear old friend I thought him good for fifteen or twenty years of work, and that was his own opinion. He has done well, exceedingly well, and his memory will long be cherished by his numerous friends in this country. Kindly convey to Mrs. Bennett the expression of my sincerest sympathy with her in this great trouble, and I feel sure I can represent the feelings of very many others.

As to thyself, my Eugene, you must carry on the work poor D. M. Bennett has perforce abandoned. THE TRUTH SEEKER—the work of his life—must surely not terminate with his life. I feel confident that the only immortality he would believe in and hope for would be the immortality which he would secure in the eternal continuance of his paper. I hope you hav decided to carry the work on; you hav plenty of experience, and the Freethinkers of America should show their respect for our dead friend by sustaining that which was truly the chief work of his life. If I can be of any service to you, command me. With best regards,

Your friend, G. STANDRING.

WEST GARLAND, ME., Dec. 25, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find three dollars and fifty cents—two dollars and fifty cents for your valuable paper, which I take so much pleasure in reading and gather much valuable knowledge from, and which I hav learned to love, and also its lamented founder and editor, D. M. Bennett, whose picture is now before me; and I often gaze upon it with tearful eyes and swelling heart, for I hav learned to respect, cherish and love that man more than any other man living or dead, Thomas Paine not excepted, whom I believe to hav been the best man of his age, or any other age of the world, and had done more for humanity prior to D. M. Bennett.

The death of D. M. Bennett has caused the deepest cut, the saddest blow, of my life. He will remain dear to us whilst reason maintains her ascendency and life lasts.

The other dollar is my mite, which, were we able, instead of one we would make thousands, to help to raise a monument over his grave that would reach to the clouds and be as lasting as the granit hills.

His labors whilst with us will be an eternal blessing to humanity, and put his name side by side with the good and the greatest of earth; and it will be handed down through all time as Bennett the honest, the fearless, the lover of humanity, the great and the good. Truly yours, J. C. LAWRENCE.

NORTH LOUP, NEB., Dec. 27, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: THE TRUTH SEEKER'S black marks told me that I had lost my best friend, and why? It was he that brushed the scales of priestly superstition from my eyes. It was he that gave me new life and taught me to do my own thinking; it was he that taught me how to liv on earth instead of waiting for some imaginary place. I look upon his death as a national calamity, at this time, as we hav so few who dare to stand up and proclaim the truth, though it should strike a priest. It seems hard that we should lose our leader just on the eve of victory, but we must submit to the inevitable laws of nature, and hope that some one will take up the banner and lead on the work until priestly frauds and churchly wrongs shall be known no more. And we think E. M. Macdonald is the man we can trust to fill this important position. The sympathy of thousands of the best and truest brothers and sisters of the land will help Mrs. Bennett to bear her great grief.

Inclosed you will find draft to square my account on TRUTH SEEKER to January, 1884; also one dollar for the Bennett monument fund. Hoping that THE TRUTH SEEKER will become one of the fixtures, I am,

Yours truly. A. J. CULVER.

EAST DUBUQUE, ILL., Dec. 25, 282.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: My heart and whole nature go out to you in this your greatest grief and afflicting bereavement, and the world's great loss. Truly the great and noble has fallen—a lover of his race, who gave his life a sacrifice to break the shackles of superstition, to make men free. He fell on the battle-field of liberty, and dying on his arms with his face to the foe, so brave, so noble and true and unyielding in the right, I hav loved him above any other man. I value and cherish his last letter to me in which he says, "I esteem you as highly as any man living." Though beyond the reach of his wicked persecutors, the world will soon appreciate his worth, and honor him as one of her great. Peace to his ashes, tears for the afflicted, grief for his death, love for his friends, admiration for his achievements, and hatred for his persecutors.

I notice in the last TRUTH SEEKER that measures are being taken to erect a monument to Mr. Bennett's memory, and subscriptions asked of his friends for that object. Please set me down for $5, and advise me when wanted.

Inclosed find $2—$1.50 for the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World," and fifty cents for a lithograph of Mr. Bennett. D. R. BURT.

THE TRANSIT OF VENUS AND DEATH OF D. M. BENNETT.

December 6, E.M. 282.

As the Great Father of light was obscured by the transit of Venus by natural and unchangeable laws, so the natural drapery of death was drawn before the hero of truth and Liberalism, and obscured his future rays of thought from us forever. But the bright point of light that has been spread over the earth by the life of D. M. Bennett will be a brilliant chandelier of electric rays that will reach the dark corners and expose the cobweb of human understanding, and his light of reason will be shining while he is no more. We are all equal, the heirs of his brightness, and let each and all consider ourselvs a spark of his ideas for our inheritance, and make his life the brightest act of our life.

The future which is hid from view,
Is full of hope if we prove true.

The day of his greatness has come; he should be regarded with feelings of reverence by millions, and our convictions should place his fame and name above all others. He has willed us a wreath of useful knowledge that encircles the globe. In return let us erect a monument, with an inscription to his honored name that will cause bigotry to tremble at the sight of its purity, and as an index pointing to the truth seeker—D. M. Bennett.

"The friend of reason and the guide of youth,
Whose language breathed the eloquence of truth;
Whose life beyond perceptiv wisdom taught
The great in conduct and the pure in thought;
These still exist by thee to fame consigned,
Still speak and act, the models of mankind."

Respectfully, JAMES M. WHEAT.

BOSTON, MASS., Dec., 1882.

MY DEAR MRS. BENNETT: It is with grief that I sympathize with you in your inestimable bereavement. It is a loss to you that cannot be expressed. My lovely, amiable, and angel wife joins me in my heartfelt sympathy for your grief. Besides, I realize the loss and grief of his various friends who were looking up to him as the leader in the great cause of freedom.

I hope that you will be sustained and be able to go on with the good old TRUTH SEEKER. I want to hav it sustained and supported at a profit, that it may support you. I only wish that I could hav had his confidence, professionally, and that I could hav been there with him. I am very certain that he would now be alive and well. For I perceived what his real condition was.

He was overtasked, physically and mentally; and obstructions had taken place in the biliary ducts. The liver had become torpid, and the gastric secretions overcharged. Hence the gastric fever and peritonitus, which caused a determination to the head. These difficulties had been a longer time coming on than you are aware of. He needed my process of relaxation, to remove the obstructions and equalize the circulation, which would hav given relief to all the congested parts, and nature could then hav recuperated and hav restored him to health.

I perceive that his mind was not right for quite a while, or else I should not hav had to write him the letters I did in the case of Mr. Heywood.

I am sorry that I did not catch a glimpse of it sooner, and then I should not hav sent the letter I did, the day that he died.

You will excuse me, I hav no doubt, for I can honestly say that there are no two men that I so highly esteem as Mr. D. M. Bennett and Mr. Ezra H. Heywood.

I here inclose three dollars to pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER, for the year 1883, which you will please place to my account, and accept from your sympathizing friend, N. H. DILLINGHAM.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Dec. 17, 1882.

MR. E. MACDONALD: Please convey to Mrs. Bennett my profound sympathy and sorrow at the unexpected and heavy blow sustained by her and all Liberals in the death of her husband. To Mr. Bennett I owe my emancipation from churchly tradition, and I hav endeavored to sustain him in his work. My gratitude to him and the cause demands and will receive, so long as I liv, my earnest support. I attended the funeral services last Sunday, and was as thoroughly gratified by Mr. Wakeman's address as ever I was in my life. I shall never forget the peaceful, even pleasant, look on Mr. Bennett's face, and I am sorry some of our Christian friends could not hav seen the face of our foremost Liberal in his coffin, for I believe they might modify their opinions somewhat regarding the death of the unbeliever.

After reading Mr. Wakeman's beautiful address I hav become profoundly impressed with a point which I thought should hav been dwelt on when I listened to the oration, which was the fact that more than 200,000 earnest, honest people signed a petition for his release from prison, when he had done no wrong. Such a number of names to a petition of that nature is unprecedented in the history of this country—perhaps of the world; and no account of Mr. Bennett's life is at all complete without that fact is narrated and dwelt upon. A bigoted president, ruled by his wife and the church, denied the petition, and I honestly believe this to be one of the causes of the defeat of the Republicans at the last elections, and one of the reasons why people desire to see the Republican party broken down. I earnestly hope THE TRUTH SEEKER will liv, and be a greater thorn in the side of its opponents in the church than ever it was.

With best wishes for Mrs. Bennett and THE TRUTH SEEKER, I remain Very truly yours,

R. H. CRESSINGHAM.

P. S.—I visited Mr. Bennett's grave to-day, and find it directly opposit my lot. The fragrance of the flowers, even after a week of exposure to the elements, was beautiful, and the location is excellent for a monument, which should be a credit to the man and the cause he so nobly defended and battled for. R. H. C.

BART, PA., Dec. 23, 282.

MR. EDITOR: The death of D. M. Bennett came to us here like a clap of thunder from a clear sky, it was so sudden and unexpected. I had not heard a word of his being unwell, but was under the impression he had come home well and in good spirits. It was indeed a sad shock to his numerous friends everywhere. People hav wondered ever since that hellish persecution and imprisonment how it were possible for one man to hav gone through such a great amount of work as Mr. Bennett has gone through since then, both physically and mentally. Probably there is not one man in a million could do so much work in so short a time, and do it so well as he has done it. Well, his work is done and he has left his mark high up on the roll of fame, not like Alexander, Cæsar, or Napoleon, a curse to his race, but a rich legacy of noble work well done. For every man that dies like Mr. Bennett fifty or a hundred should be born to take his place, and declare eternal war, and swear eternal hatred to Christianity and every species of delusion and tyranny over their fellow-creatures. every one should strike as Mr. Bennett struck, and deal their blows thick and fast on this horrid, slimy, crawling monster, Christianity. Strike it like Paine, Voltaire, and D'Holbach. Don't go down on your knees and pat it on the back and kiss and hug it and say, "Poor thing, it's a pity to hurt it; it has done some good in the world, so be careful how you strike." Don't take the advice of those tender-hearted, cultured fellows, such as William Emmette Coleman, and others of the same stripe. Remember what this horrid monster has done. Remember it has filled the world with misery and wretchedness for eighteen hundred years. Remember it has butchered men and women by wholesale and retail, and made the world a hell not fit to liv in, and would do the same yet were it able. But, thanks to the sturdy blows of such men as Bennett, Seaver, Ingersoll, Dr. Monroe, and a host of others good and true, this horrid monster is so far crippled as to be comparativly harmless. See how this trailing, slimy creature is twisting and wriggling to gain strength and power. Watch his movements in New York, Cincinnati, and other places, in fact, everywhere, and see how energetically he works to stop all Sunday work. But it is hoped this will be his last effort. He is bound to die hard, but die he must, and die he shall, as sure as day follows night. His dear friends who ride him for the glory of God and their pockets may be able to keep a kind of galvanized life in his old carcass for some little time yet, but his dying struggles hav commenced and his days are numbered. Science has killed all the witches, and has about knocked the props from under him by cutting off his great and only supply of healthy nourishment, that great book of books, the Holy Bible. Either science or this holy book is bound to die out, and it will not require much of a prophet to tell which will be the fittest to survive. Like Mr. Bennett, we will not all liv to see the last death struggle of this holy monster reptil, Christianity, but there are those born that will liv to see it dead and buried so deep that no resurrection will be possible.

I am glad to hear that THE TRUTH SEEKER is to be continued, and its readers will hav abundant assurance to know that it will be conducted well and ably.

My hearty sympathies are with Mrs. Bennett in her great loss and trouble. JOSIAH KING.

YATES CITY, ILL., Dec. 30, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: Here I am all alone in my studio and art gallery away after midnight, thinking and reading THE TRUTH SEEKER, all full of black lines. It almost appals me to think of the sudden death of our dearly beloved Brother Bennett. Oh, how I was shocked when our post-master here at Yates City, who is a good Liberal, handed me a copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER clothed in mourning, and said, "Bennett's gone." Immediately my ears rung with death bells, and I was almost blind; the shock was so great that I hav not fully recovered myself yet. I had been thinking a great deal about the dear brother for the last month, and had just finished reading the first volume of his tour around the world, which was very interesting to me. In fact, I was going to write a letter to him that very night to renew our acquaintance, and with that letter I was going to send him some money and the manuscript of two or three articles, entitled, "Sypher Dispatches to THE TRUTH SEEKER."

When I heard of his death, how vividly came to my mind the memory of the pleasant correspondence which he and I kept up for quite a while in the years of long ago. It was a private contest between us to see which could write the most humorous and funny letter. We wrote them just for our own amusement. I always contended that he beat me, and he always maintained that I beat him. I immediately commenced to rumage around in an old trunk that has been laid aside for years, and in it I found two of his old letters. One was very long. He called it his twelve-ply letter. He had written twelve sheets full! I slowly read it all over again, and although I was crying when I commenced reading it, I was laughing when I finished it. I declare I should hav had to laugh if his ghost had been standing right before me. It was so humorous, funny, witty, and ludicrous that the longest face in the world would hav had to laugh. There was so much good feeling and sunshine in his heart, so natural, honest, free, and open, and so far removed from that ingredient which Christ called the leaven of the pharisees—which is, hypocrisy. Bennett never raised any of his loaves, biscuits, or flap-jacks with any of that kind of stuff. I hav his photograph in my album. I will go this minute and get it, and take a good, long look.

No man ever lived or wrote, especially in modern times, who has astonished me so by his unexpected and unlooked for development of writing ability and great research. He seemed to possess a great and inexaustible fountain of resources. But little did I ever think that either he or any other man had the ability to write what he has written, and do what he has done, when he sent me the first numbers of his little two-ply sheet published in Paris. Behold what a great thing a little fire kindleth! A little one-horse editor, in a little, obscure country town in the West, refusing to publish his replies to some clergy on the subject of prayer, was the means of developing one of the most voluminous writers of modern times. But I never was so hurt in all my life, and I never want to be again, as I was when he was prosecuted and persecuted, and then sent to prison by an ignorant, superstitious, orthodox set of bigots and fools—self-styled followers of the lamb. Lambs, indeed! The lion and the tiger still liv in the heart of the Christian church. Bennett was a sufferer and a martyr for a principle, and if that principle is lost, our boasted government is gone. It was hard, hard indeed, for such a pure, white soul, so innocent of crime, to sacrifice even but one year of his valuable life incarcerated within the drear walls of a penitentiary. But that one year's sacrifice, so nobly borne by him, will now redound to his glory. The blood of martyrs has always proved to be the seed of those principles for which they suffered, and so it will be in Brother Bennett's case. He will yet hav a monument, not only in Greenwood Cemetery, but in many other parts of the world.

His monuments will be much higher and greater in number because of that one year's unrighteous suffering.

"But the world goes round and round
As faithful as the sun;
And ever the right comes uppermost,
And ever the wrong goes undermost,
And ever is justice done."

I herewith send my dollar to the monument fund; and now let us all unite and rear for him an alabaster shaft whose lofty hight shall pierce the stormy clouds, and tell posterity his fame forever.

Sleep, my brother, in Greenwood, sleep. Your soul goes marching on, and among all the millions of the mighty dead there is no one with whom I would rather lay down beside as my bed-fellow in that dreamless sleep which knows no waking, not even by Gabriel's fabled horn at that fabled resurrection; for thou hast already passed the resurrection unto life. Farewell, my brother; a long, a long farewell. JOHN SYPHERS,

Mahmood the Image Breaker.

BY JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

Old events hav modern meanings; only that survives
Of past history which finds kindred in all hearts and lives.

Mahmood once, the idol-breaker, spreader of the faith,
Was at Sumnat sorely tempted, as the legend saith.

In the great pagoda's center, monstrous and abhorred,
Granit on a throne of granit, sat the temple's lord.

Mahmood paused a moment, silenced by the silent face
That, with eyes of stone unwavering, awed the ancient place.

Then the Brahmans knelt before him, by his doubt made bold,
Pledging for their idol's ransom countless gems and gold.

Gold was yellow dirt to Mahmood, but of precious use,
Since from it the roots of power suck a potent juice.

"Were yon stone alone in question, this would please me well," Mahmood said, "but with the block there, I my truth must sell.

"Wealth and rule slip down with fortune, as her wheel turns round;
He who keeps his faith, he only cannot be discrowned.

"Little were a change of nation, loss of life or crown,
But the wreck were past retrieving if the MAN fell down."

So his iron mace he lifted, smote with might and main,
And the idol, on the pavement tumbling, burst in twain.

Luck obeys the downright striker; from the hollow core
Fifty times the Brahmans' offer deluged all the floor.

Overworked.

Up with the birds in the early morning—
The dewdrop glows like a precious gem;
Beautiful tints in the skies are dawning,
But she's never a moment to look at them.
The men are wanting their breakfast early;
She must not linger, she must not wait;
For words that are sharp, and looks that are surly,
Are what men giv when the meals are late.

Oh, glorious colors the clouds are turning,
If she would but look over hills and trees;
But here are the dishes, and here is the churning—
Those things always must yield to these.
The world is filled with the wine of beauty,
If she could but pause and drink it in;
But pleasure, she says, must wait for duty—
Neglected work is committed sin.

The day grows hot, and her hands grow weary;
Oh, for an hour to cool her head!
But with the birds and winds so cheery,
But she must get dinner and make her bread.
The busy men in the hay-field working—
If they saw her sitting with idle hand
Would think her lazy, and call it shirking,
And she never could make them understand.

They do not know that the heart within her
Hungers for beauty and things sublime,
They only know that they want their dinner,
Plenty of it, and "just on time."
And after the sweeping and churning and baking,
And dinner dishes are all put by,
She sits and sews though her head is aching,
Till time for supper and "chores" draws nigh.

Her boys at school must look like others,
She says, as she patches their frocks and hose,
For the world is quick to censure mothers
For the least neglect of their children's clothes.
Her husband comes from the field of labor,
He givs no praise to his weary wife;
She's done no more than has her neighbor;
'Tis the lot of all in country life.

But after the strife and weary tussle,
With life is done, and she lies at rest;
The nation's brain and heart and muscle—
Her sons and daughters—shall call her blest.
And I think the sweetest joy of heaven,
The rarest bliss of eternal life,
And the fairest crown of all, will be given
Unto the way-worn farmer's wife.

The Image Breaker.

From the pen of Hon. W. H. Herndon, for twenty years law partner of Abraham Lincoln.

I received a few days since six little monographs called "The Image Breaker," all of which I hav read with much interest and care. No. 1 is entitled "The Decline of Faith;" No. 2, "Protestant Intolerance." The others are of the same nature, but each is on a particular line. These little tracts fill up a wide gap—supply a great need. The great mass of our people begin to move away from superstition, dogma, and authority, and these pamphlets will help them to move in the right direction in a solid and organic body. The author's style is very simple, earnest, and attractiv. In these qualities he is eloquent. The thoughts and style are just what they should be to suit the masses. He don't overshoot, nor underfire, but hits the central object at a vital point. I can honestly recommend any and all productions issuing from the pen of John E. Remsburg.

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25

In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25

Including, "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child;" "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois;" "The Great Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, $1,00; cloth, $2.00.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

Address D. M. BENNETT,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

The Iconoclast.

A WEEKLY
FREETHOUGHT JOURNAL.
Published at Indianapolis, Ind.

It will oppose superstition in every form. Its purpose will be to aid as best it can in freeing mankind from the power of priestcraft and bigotry of every kind. It will publish everything of interest from the pen of Col. R. G. Ingersoll and other leading Liberals of the age, and will be a five-column paper in quarto form.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:
One year.....$1.50 | Six months....75 cents.

Each subscriber will be entitled to a life-size lithograph picture of Col. Ingersoll. Sample copies 5 cts.

Address LAMASTER & JAMIESON,
52 Indianapolis, Ind.

THE BIBLE
OF THE
RELIGION of SCIENCE.

By H. S. Brown, M. D.,

Author of "A Permanent Republic cannot be established by Despotic Family Laws," "Scientific Spiritualism is the Basis or a Scientific Religion and Government," and other works.

"This volume is most respectfully dedicated to those persons who will cordially unite with others to establish the religion of truth and a just government, by the scientific methods of reason, experience, experiments and observations. For this is the way to wisdom, and to the material, mental, moral, social, and spiritual sciences, that make peace on earth and good will among men."

The work is divided into five books, containing twenty-five chapters, is printed on clear white paper, in large type and embraces over four hundred pages.
Cloth. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

SOCIALISM
—AND—
UTILITARIANISM.

By John Stuart Mill.

PRICE 1.50. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE.

DR. THAYER'S
MAGNETIC GARMENTS

IS THE ONLY PHYSICIAN THAT NEVER GUESSES. IT ALWAYS FINDS THE DISEASE AT THE START, RELIEVES, AND CURES IT.

Magnetism is Nature's great remedy. Victoria is the only permanent and scientific garment made.

IMPORTANT.

There are several base and worthless imitations of Dr. Thayer's Magnetic goods upon the market. The only apparent merit they have is Cheapness. Cheap goods in this line, as in every other, are dear at any price, and cannot render as efficient service to the patient, because they DO NOT HOLD THEIR MAGNETIC CURRENTS OVER THIRTY DAYS.

Do not be deceived by irresponsible and unscrupulous imitators. If our invention was not valuable it would not be imitated by others, who try to palm off on an over-confiding public something "JUST AS GOOD."

"VICTORIA" has twelve improvements over any and all other Magnetic Garments. Therefore do not buy any such goods till you have sent to Dr. Thayer.

BE ON YOUR GUARD AGAINST FRAUDULENT APPLIANCES!

BUY ONLY OF REPUTABLE MANUFACTURERS!

VICTORIA TRIUMPHANT!

The most wonderful cases on record. Send for Proofs, Circulars, and Price List to

Dr. Thayer,
455 Fulton Street, Brooklyn. N. Y

Our Magnetic Insoles will cure Chilblains and cold feet. Send for a pair. Price, $1 50. Mention TRUTH SEEKER.

Please send us a history of your case.

NO INVALID NEED DESPAIR!
4t2

A LIBERAL COLONY.

1,200 FREE HOMES!

THE NEW COLORADO!

Those desiring a valuable home on the public domain at a nominal price ($1.25 per acre. and 33 months in which to pay for it), will find it very greatly to their advantage to correspond with the undersigned.

Address with 2 3-cent stamps O. A. PHELPS,
President Gunnison and Uncompahgre Colonization Society, LONGMONT, COLO. 3m

STANDARD BOOKS.

Sold at The Truth Seeker Office.

MEDICAL and HYGIENIC WORKS

Sent on Receipt of Price.

Trall's Sexual Physiology. A Scientific and Popular Exposition of the Fundamental Problems in Sociology. Price $1.

What Our Girls Ought to Know. By Dr. Mary J. Studley. Price $1.

Hygiene of the Brain and the cure of Nervousness. By M. L. Holbrook. Price $1.50.

Parturition Without Pain. A Code of Directions for Avoiding most of the Pains and Dangers of Child-bearing. Edited by M. L. Holbrook, M.D. Price $1.

The Relations of the Sexes. By Mrs. E. B. Duffey. Price $1.

Fruit and Bread. A Natural and Scientific Diet. By Gustav Schlickeysen. Price $1.

The Better Way. An appeal to men in behalf of Human Culture through a Wiser Parentage. By A. E. Newton. Price, paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

New Hygienic Cook Book. Containing Receipts for preparing a Hygienic Food. By Mrs. M. M. Jones, M. D. Price 30 cents.

Talks to my Patients. Hints on Getting Well and Keeping Well. By Mrs. R. B. Gleason, M.D. Price $1.50.

Chastity; or, Our Secret Sins. By Dio Lewis, M.D. Treating of the Sexual Relations in their Higher Aspects. Price $2.

Prenatal Culture. Being Suggestions to Parents By A. E. Newton. Price 25 cents.

Aids to Family Government; or, From the Cradle to the School. By Bertha Meyer. Price, cloth, $1; paper, 50 cents.

The Diet Cure. The Relations of Food and Drink to Health, Disease, and Cure. By T. L. Nichols, M.D. Price 50 cents.

Youth: Its Care and Culture. By J. Mortimer Granville. Price $1.

Eating for Strength. Including the Science of Eating; Five hundred Receipts for Wholesome Cookery; One Hundred Receipts for Delicious Drinks; One Hundred Ever-Recurring Questions Answered. By M. L. Holbrook, M.D. Price $1.

Muscle-Beating; Or, Active and Passive Home Gymnastics. By C. Klem. Ten Illustrations. Price 30 cents.

Marriage and Parentage. In their Sanitary and Physiological Relations and in their Bearing on the Producing of Children of Finer Health and Greater Ability. By M. L. Holbrook, M.D. Price $1.

Our Girls, and Some of the Things they Ought to Know. By Dio Lewis, M.D. Price $1.50.

Dr. Foote's Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. By E. B. Foote, M.D. Price $1.50.

Vegetarianism the Radical Cure for Intemperance. By Harriet P. Fowler. Price 30 cents.

INGERSOLL'S SPEECH ON TALMAGIAN THEOLOGY.

The ICONOCLAST, Saturday, Dec. 23, 1882, will contain the Great Speech of Col. Ingersoll on "Talmagian Theology," delivered at Indianapolis, Ind., Nov. 11, 1882. The paper containing the speech can be procured at 5 cents a copy. Twenty-five copies and over at 3 cents a copy.

Address
LAMASTER & JAMIESON,
Indianapolis. Ind.

The Great Discovery!

DR. PECK'S
EXCELSIOR
LIVER PILLS.

PURELY VEGETABLE.

Cure Malaria, Neuralgia, Jaundice, Rheumatism, Gout, Dyspepsia, and all Bilious and Liver Affections, etc., etc.

Descriptiv circulars, testimonials, etc., mailed free on application.

Price single box, 25 cents. Five boxes for $1.00.
45

If you cannot get them of your druggist, address the proprietor, W. H. PECK, 222 Washington street, N. Y.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.

Being 3,000 questions propounded to his Jewish Godship upon a great variety of subjects.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

THE BOSTON INVESTIGATOR,

The oldest reform journal in the United States,

Is published every Wednesday at the Paine Memorial Building, Boston, Mass.,

By JOSIAH P. MENDUM.

Edited by HORACE SEAVER.

PRICE, $3.00 per annum; single copies, seven cents. Specimen copies sent on receipt of a two-cent stamp to pay postage.

The Investigator is devoted to the Liberal cause in religion; or in other words, to universal mental liberty. Independent in all its discussions, discarding superstitious theories of what never can be known, it devotes its columns to things of this world alone, and leaves the next, if there be one, to those who hav entered its unknown shores. Believing that it is the duty of mortals to work for the interests of this world, it confines itself to the things of this life entirely. It has arrived at the age of fifty-one years, and asks for a support from those who are fond of sound reasoning, good reading, reliable news, anecdotes, science, art, and a useful family journal. Reader please send your subscription for six months or one year and if you are not satisfied with the way the Investigator is conducted we won't ask you to continue with us any longer 3m53

The Busts of
PAINE and VOLTAIRE.

By the celebrated sculptor
CLARK MILLS.

Price, . . $1.50 each.

Address D. M. BENNETT,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

THE IMAGE BREAKER.

A Series of Radical Pamphlets.

BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

No. 1. The Decline of Faith.
No. 2. Protestant Intolerance.
No. 3. Washington an Unbeliever.
No. 4. Jefferson an Unbeliever.
No 5. Paine and Wesley.
No. 6. The Christian Sabbath.

No 1 proves by the concurrent testimony of more than a score of eminent scholars and divines that the dissolution of the Christian system of religion is near at hand.

No. 2 portrays the bloody and intolerant career of Protestantism.

Nos. 3 and 4 present an overwhelming array of evidence in support of the fact that Washington and Jefferson were Infidels.

No 5 compares and contrasts the labors of Paine and Wesley, particularly in the American Revolution, where the latter violently opposed the cause of independence as attested by numerous passages cited from his writings of this period

No. 6 gives a brief history of the Christian Sabbath refutes the false claims of theologians respecting it, and makes an earnest plea for the abrogation of Sabbatarian laws.

Price, single copies, 5 cents. Per dozen, 40 cents. Per hundred, $2.50, Per thousand, $20.00. Postpaid. Sold at this office.

THE YOUTH'S
LIBERAL GUIDE

FOR THEIR MORAL CULTURE AND RELIGIOUS ENLIGHTENMENT.

By Prof. H. W. Kottinger, A.M.

Translated from the revised German edition. Price, cloth, $1. For sale by D. M. BENNETT,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

THE PEOPLE'S READER.

A sketch of man's physical, political mental, and social development in past, present and future.

Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

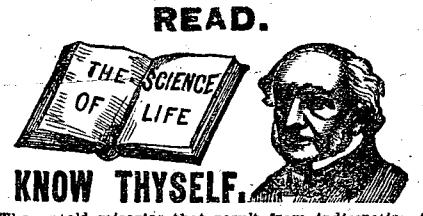
The Figures of Hell; or, The Temples of Bacchus.

Dedicated to Licensers of Beer and Whisky.

By MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.

Published by the Author.

A neat little volume of between two and three hundred pages.

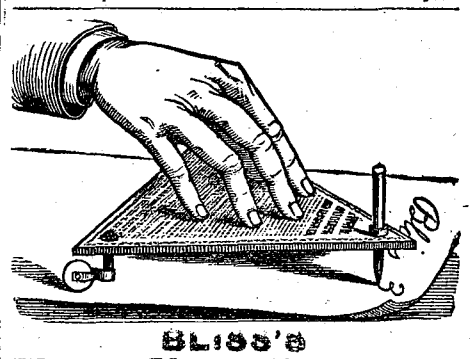


Price, $1.00.

THE SEMITIC GODS AND THE BIBLE.

Treating upon the gods of the Semitic nations, including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, the Virgin Mary, and the Bible. To the latter 280 pages are devoted, showing that book to be a very inferior production for a first-class God. By D. M. Bennett. 339 large pages. Paper covers 50 cents: cloth, $1.

KNOWLEDGE IS POWER



READ.

KNOW THYSELF.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man, Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now.

Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. 1y38

BLISS'S
Electro-Magnetic Planchette,

A wonderful and mysterious little instrument that combines electricity and animal magnetism in assisting Spirit intelligence to communicate through it with mortals. It has been in the market a little over two years, and during that time thousands of skeptical persons, yes, downright Materialists, hav been convinced that this Planchette has been MOVED BY A POWER independent of themselvs while their hands hav been placed passivly upon it.

THE ADVANTAGES CLAIMED OVER OTHER PLANCHETTES.

First. A paste-board top in place of oiled, stained, or varnished wood.

Second. Five miniature batteries upon the top of each Planchette, upon which the fingers rest.

Third Each Planchette is separately magnetized and assigned a band of developing spirits.

Price, Fifty Cents Each.

Sent post-paid, securely packed in a neat box to any part of the United States upon receipt of price. For sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

D. M. Bennett's Publications.

Truth Seeker Library.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. The Biographies of three hundred of the most distinguished teachers and philosophers (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. By D. M. Bennett. 1,075 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church; Their Crimes and Persecutions. 8vo. 1,119 pages. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. Two Volumes. Written in prison. In cloth, $3.00 per volume, or $5.00 for the two volumes; in leather, $7.00; in morocco, gilt edges, $8.00.

From Behind the Bars. A series of letters written in prison. Over 700 pages. Price, $1.50.

An Infidel Abroad. A series of letters written during a visit of ten weeks in Europe. 350 pages. Price, $1.50.

The Semitic Gods and the Bible. Treating upon the gods of the Semitic nations, including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, the Virgin Mary, and the Bible. To the latter 230 pages are devoted, showing that book to be a very inferior production for a first-class God. 333 large pages. Paper covers, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

Judaism, Christianity, and Mohammedanism examined historically and critically. It is thought to be the most damaging exhibit of Christianity that has appeared. 500 large pages. Price, $1.50.

Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, Essays and Lectures. 700 pages. Paper covers, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

The Humphrey-Bennett Discussion. A debate on Christianity and Infidelity, between D. M. Bennett and Rev. G. H. Humphrey. 350 pages. Price, $1.

Bennett-Teed Discussion. Between D. M. Bennett and Cyrus Romulus Teed. Jesus the Lord God Creator of Heaven and Earth. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Interrogatories to Jehovah. Being 3,000 questions propounded to his Jewish Godship upon a great variety of subjects. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

What I Don't Believe, What I Do Believe, Why and Wherefore. (Forthcoming.) 350 pp. 12mo. Paper, 60 cents; cloth, $1.50.

Deacon Skidmore's Letters. First Deacon of Zion Hill Baptist Church, giving many church incidents and his evolution from Christianity to Liberalism. Paper 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Anthony Comstock: His Career of Cruelty and Crime. By D. M. Bennett. 25 cents.

Eighth and Last Letter from Ludlow Street Jail. 10 cents.

Letters from Albany Penitentiary. 25 cents.

Matter, Motion, Life, and Mind. 10 cents.

The Gods of Superstition. 8 cents.

The Great Religions of the World. 10 cts.

Open Letter to Samuel Colgate. 10 cents.

Jesus Christ. Considered as an Infidel. 10 cents.

An Hour With the Devil. 10 cents.

Sinful Saints and Sinful Shepherds. 10 cents.

Honest Questions and Honest Answers. 5 cents.

An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. 5 cents.

B. F. Underwood's Works.

Essays and Lectures. Embracing Influence of Christianity on Civilization; Christianity and Materialism; What Liberalism offers in Place of Christianity; Scientific Materialism; Woman; Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint; Paine the Political and Religious Reformer; Materialism and Crime; Will the Coming Man Worship God? Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity; the Authority of the Bible; Freethought Judged by its Fruits; Our Ideas of God. 300 pp.; paper, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

Influence of Christianity upon Civilization. 25 cents.

Christianity and Materialism. 15 cents.

What Liberalism Offers in Place of Christianity. 10 cents.

Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint. 10 cents.

Paine the Political and Religious Reformer. 10 cents.

Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs. 10 cents.

Materialism and Crime. 10 cents.

Will the Coming Man Worship God? 10 cents.

Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. 10 cents.

Twelve Tracts. Scientific and Theological. 20 cts.

Burgess-Underwood Debate. A four days' debate between B. F. Underwood and Prof. O. A. Burgess, President of the Northwestern Christian University, Indianapolis, Ind. Accurately reported. 188 pp. Paper 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Underwood-Marples Debate. A four nights' debate between B. F. Underwood and Rev. John Marples. Fully reported. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

Miscellaneous Works.

The Martyrdom of Man. Embracing the four divisions of War, Religion, Liberty, and Intellect. A work of rare merit, and written in superior style. By Winwood Reade. New edition. 544 pages. Price reduced from $3 to $1.75.

The Creed of Christendom. Its foundation contrasted with its superstructure. By W. Rathbone Greg. One of the clearest and ablest works ever written. Price $1.50.

Revelations of Antichrist. An exhaustiv work proving conclusivly that no such person as Jesus Christ existed in the reign of Tiberius, but that a Jesus, the son of Mary, was stoned and hanged about a century before, and that his disciples, Simon Kepha, alias Peter, and the apostle Paul, both lived and died before the Christian era. 446 pages and full index. Price, $2.00.

The Jamieson-Ditzler Debate. A nine days' debate on God, the Bible, Christianity, and Liberalism. Between Wm. F. Jamieson and Rev. Jacob Ditzler, D.D. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion. Both sides fairly and ably presented. By E. E. Guild, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations. Containing forms for organizing societies, marriage, funeral services, naming of infants, obituary notices, epitaphs, etc. Also 325 Liberal and Spiritualistic Hymns for public meetings, funerals, social gatherings, etc. To which are added beautiful Recitations for various public occasions. 350 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By Wm. McDonnell, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Price reduced. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Nathaniel Vaughan. A Radical novel of marked ability. By Frederika Macdonald. 404 pages. Price reduced to $1.25.

The Darwins. A domestic Radical story. By Mrs. Elmina Drake Slenker, author of John's Way, Studying the Bible, and numerous essays. 257 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

John's Way. A pleasing domestic Radical story. By Mrs. E. D. Slenker. 15 cents.

The Clergyman's Victims. A Radical story vividly portraying the wrongs committed by the professed men of God. By Mrs. J. E. Ball. 25 cents.

The Outcast. A deep, finely-written Radical story. From the London edition. By Winwood Reade, author of Martyrdom of Man. 30 cents.

The Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub. Containing startling and interesting disclosures about hell, its locality, magnitude, climate, employments, etc. By the Rev. Geo. Rogers. 15 cents.

Gottlieb: His Life. A Romance of earth, heaven, and hell. Beautifully written, by S. P. Putnam. 25 cents.

Chronicles of Simon Christianus. His manifold and wonderful adventures in the Land of Cosmos. A new scripture (evidently inspired) discovered by I. N. Fidel. From the English. Very rich. 25 cents.

Amberley's Life of Jesus. His character and doctrins. From the Analysis of Religious Belief. By Viscount Amberley. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

Jesus Christ. His life, miracles, deity, teachings, and imperfections. By W. S. Bell. 25 cents.

Resurrection of Jesus. Showing the contradictions and doubts in which the subject is involved. By W. S. Bell. Revised edition. 25 cents.

An Outline of the French Revolution: Its Causes and Results. A clear and comprehensiv portrayal of this interesting portion of human history. By W. S. Bell. 25 cents.

Last Will and Testament of Jean Meslier, a curate of a Romish church in France, containing the best of his writings. 25 cents.

A Few Words about the Devil, and Other Essays. By Charles Bradlaugh. With a portrait of the writer. 260 pp. $1.25.

Voltaire in Exile. Translated from the French of M. Gastineau by his son Edmond Gastineau. Being Memoirs of the life of the great writer never before published. Paper, 75 cents. Cloth, $1.

Six Lectures on Astronomy. By Prof. R. A. Proctor. 20 cents.

Pocket Theology. By Voltaire. Comprising terse, witty, and sarcastic definitions of the terms used in theology. The only edition in English. 25 cents.

Religion Not History. An able examination of the Morals and Theology of the New Testament. By Prof. F. W. Newman, of the London University. 25 cents.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By Kersey Graves, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cts: cloth, $1.

Outlines of Phrenology. By F. E. Aspinwall, M.D. Most acceptable to Liberals of anything of the kind published. Paper, 50 cts; cloth, 75 cts.

The Holy Bible Abridged. Containing the choice passages and lovely morceaus particularly pleasing to Comstock. 169 pages. Paper, 30 cts; cloth, 50 cts.

Superstition; The Religion of Believe or be Damned, an Open Letter to the St. John's School Board. By M. Babcock. 25 cents.

Why Don't God Kill the Devil? A Series of Essays dedicated to the St. Johns School Board. By M. Babcock. 25 cents.

The Ghost of St. Johns. By M. Babcock. 25 cents.

Proceedings and Addresses at the Watkins Convention. 400 pages of excellent Speeches and Essays. Price reduced to $1.00.

Truth Seeker Tracts. Bound in volumes of 525 pages each—Vols. I, II, III, IV, and V. Each volume containing 525 pages—thirty tracts or more. A Library within themselves of most excellent Radical reading matter at a low price. Paper, 60 cents per volume; cloth, $1.00. If the whole set are taken—paper, 50 cts; cloth, 75 cents each.

The Anonymous Hypothesis of Creation. A Brief Review of the so-called Mosaic Account. By James J. Furniss. Cloth, 50 cts.

The Essence of Religion. From the German of L. Feuerbach. Author of the Essence of Christianity, etc. Price, in Cloth, reduced to 50 cts.

The Philosophy of Spiritualism, and the Philosophy and Treatment of Mediomania. By Frederic R. Marvin, M.D. Cloth, 50 cents.

Issues of the Age. Consequences involved in modern thought. A work showing much study and great familiarity with other writers and thinkers. By Henry C. Pedder. Price $1.

Sepher Toldoth Jeshu; or, the Book of the Generation of Jesus. First translation into English of a remarkable Hebrew document, giving the original from which the story of Jesus was made up. 20 cents.

Eight Scientific Tracts. 20 cents.

The Truth Seeker, in Bound Volumes. Volume I., $1.50; Vol. II. (16 months) III., and IV., $2.50 each; Vols V., VI., and VII., $3.50 each. Entire set, by express, $15.

New England and the People up There. A Humorous Lecture. By George E. Macdonald. 10 cent.

Blakeman's 200 Poetical Riddles. 20 cents

TRUTH SEEKER TRACTS.

[Please Order by Number.]

No.		Cents
1	Discussion on Prayer. Bennett and others.	5
7	The Story of Creation. Bennett	5
8	The Old Snake Story. "	2
9	The Story of the Flood. "	2
10	The Plagues of Egypt. "	2
11	Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett	2
12	Balaam and his Ass. "	2
13	Arraignment of Priestcraft. "	3
14	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers	3
15	Come to Dinner. "	2
16	Fog Horn Documents. "	2
17	The Devil Still Ahead. "	2
18	Slipped Up Again. "	2
19	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. Bennett	2
20	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett	2
21	The Great Wrestling Match. "	2
22	Discussion with Elder Shelton. Bennett	10
23	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett	3
24	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell	5
25	Discussion with George Snode. Bennett	5
26	Underwood's Prayer	1
27	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. Bennett.	5
28	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran	10
29	Paine Hall Dedication Address. Underwood	5
30	Woman's Rights and Man's Wrongs. Syphers	2
31	Gods and God-Houses	2
32	The Gods of Superstition and the God of the Universe. Bennett	8
33	What has Christianity Done? Preston	3
34	Tribute to Thomas Paine	2
35	Moving the Ark. Bennett	2
36	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil	2
37	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	2
38	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	2
39	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam	1
40	Bible of Nature versus the Bible of Men. John Syphers	2
41	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett	1
42	Elijah the Tishbite. "	3
43	Christianity a Borrowed System. "	3
44	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood	3
45	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett	3
46	Did Jesus Really Exist? "	2
47	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter	3
48	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson	5
49	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild	5
50	Jonah and the Big Fish. Bennett	3
51	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1	5
52	Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood	3
53	Questions for Bible Worshipers. "	2
54	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett	5
55	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman	8
56	Bible Contradictions	1
57	Jesus not a Perfect Character. Underwood	2
58	Prophecies. Underwood	2
59	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. Underw'd	2
60	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. "	2
61	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden	5
62	The Jews and their God	10
63	The Devil's Due-Bills. John Syphers	3
64	The Ills we Endure—Their Cause and Cure. Bennett	5
65	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	2
66	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown	2
67	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 2	5
68	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon	2
69	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker	2
70	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon	3
71	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman	2
72	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. Bennett	2
73	Foundations. John Syphers	2
74	Daniel in the Lyon's Den. Bennett	2
75	An Hour with the Devil. "	10
76	Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett	3
77	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett	5
78	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett	3
79	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman	2
80	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett	5
81	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. Syphers	2
82	Christian Courtesy. D. M. Bennett	1
83	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey	5
84	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London	2
85	Matter, Motion, Life, and Mind. Bennett	10
86	An Enquiry About God's Sons. D. M. Bennett	2
87	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. Underwood	1
88	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. E. D. Slenker	2
89	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson	2
90	Bible-Mania. Otto Cordates	2
91	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood	1
92	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	3
93	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle	1
94	The New Raven. Will Cooper	5
95	Jesus Christ. Bennett	10
96	Ichabod Crane Papers	10
97	Special Providences. W. S. Bell	2
98	Snakes. Mrs. E. D. Slenker	2
99	Do the Works of Nature Prove a Creator? Sciota.	2
100	140th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als	5
102	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell	2
103	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know? Bennett	1
104	Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson	10
105	Decadence of Christianity. Sapphro	2
106	Franklin, Washington, and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett	2
107	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown	5
108	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. Preston	2
110	Invocation to the Universe. Bennett	1
111	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett	1
112	Sensible Sermon. Rev. M. J. Savage	2
113	Come to Jesus. Bennett	2
114	Where Was Jesus Born? S. H. Preston	1
115	The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett	2
116	The Sunday Question. Bennett	3
117	Constantine the Great. S. H. Preston	3
118	The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization. W. S. Bell	5
119	The New Faith. Stoddard	3
120	The New Age. W. S. Bell	10
121	Ingersoll's Review of his Reviewers	3
122	The Great Religions of the World. Bennett	10
123	Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll and the Observer	10
124	Sinful Saints. Bennett	10
125	German Liberalism. Clara Neyman	1
126	Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. B. F. Underwood	10
127	Tyndall on Man's Soul	1
129	Who was Jesus Christ? Coleman	3
130	The Ethics of Religion. Clifford	3
131	Paine was Junius. W. H. Burr	2
132	My Religious Belief. Ella E. Gibson	2
133	The Authority of the Bible. Underwood	2
134	Talks with the Evangelists	2
135	Is There a Future Life? Bennett	2
136	Torquemada and the Inquisition. Bennett	2
137	Christian Love. C. L. Jaines	1
138	Science of the Bible. John Jasper	1
139	Massacre of St. Bartholomew. S. H. Preston	3
140	Astro-Theology	1
141	Infidelity. H. W. Beecher	1
142	Synopsis of All Religions. E. L. Saxon	10
143	Chang Wau Ho. Elf Perkins	3
144	The Comstock Laws	1
145	If You Take Away My Religion, What Will You Giv Me Instead? Martin	10
146	Seymour Times Prayer	1
147	Reply to the Index on Comstock Laws	1
148	When Did Paul Liv? Scholasticus	1
149	Age of Shams	1
150	The Liberty of Printing and Reply. Hurlbut and Wakeman	10
151	What is the Bible? M. W. H.	1
152	A Remarkable Book. R. W. Douglas	1
153	Liberty and Morality. M. D. Conway	1
154	Reminiscences of Thomas Paine. David Bruce	1
155	Co-operation the Redeemer of Society. S. M. Papin	1
156	Free Speech and Free Press. P. B. Shelley	1
157	Questions from a Western Reader. Bennett	1
158	The Fool's Creed	1
159	Bennett Indignation Meeting at Boston	1
160	Sabbath Observance. W. E. Coleman	1
161	Protestant Persecutions	1
162	Eighth Letter from Ludlow Street Jail. Bennett	10
163	Ingersoll's Creed	1

Scientific Series.

1	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Elsburg, M.D.	1
2	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood	2
3	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood	5
4	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	2
	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M. D.	2
6	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll	2
7	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	3
8	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford	2
9	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske	10
10	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures	10
11	Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson	10
12	Evolution Teaches neither Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M.D.
13	Nibble at Mr. John Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off; on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollars' worth, 40 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off.

BOOKS SOLD BY D. M. BENNETT.

MISCELLANEOUS RADICAL WORKS.

Exeter Hall. A theological romance. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper, 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

The Heathens of the Heath. By Wm. McDonnell, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, $1.50.

Family Creeds. By William McDonnell, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

The Day of Rest. By Wm. McDonnell, author of "Exeter Hall," "The Heathens of the Heath," etc. Price 10 cents.

History of the Council of Nice, A. D. 325, with a Life of Constantine the Great, and a general exhibition of the Christian religion in the days of the early fathers. By Dean Dudley. Price, $1.

Heroines of Freethought. Containing Biographical Sketches of Freethought female writers. By Mrs. Sara A. Underwood. Price, $1.75.

The Apocryphal New Testament. Being all the gospels, epistles, and other pieces now extant attributed in the first four centuries to Jesus Christ, his apostles, and their companions, and not included in the New Testament by its compilers. Price, $1.25.

Apples of Gold. A story book for boys and girls. By Miss Susan E. Wixon. Price, $1.25.

The Prophet of Nazareth; or, A Critical Inquiry into the Prophetical, Intellectual, and Moral Character of Jesus Christ. By Evan Powell Meredith, F. A. S. L. Price, $4.

Origin and Development of Religious Ideas and Beliefs, as manifested in history and seen by reason. By Morris Einstein. Price, $1.

The Koran. A new English edition of the Koran of Mohammed, to which is added the life of Mohammed, or the history of that doctrin which was begun and carried on by him in Arabia. Price, $2.

The Bible in India—Hindoo Origin of Hebrew and Christian Revelation. Translated from "Le Bible dans Inde." By Louis Jacolliot. Price, $2.

Trance-Dynamic Cure By La Roy Sunderland. Price of Trance, $1.50; Dynamic Cure, $1.

An Eye-Opener. "Citateur, Par Figault." Le Brun. Doubts of Infidels. By Zepa. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-Seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrins. By Kersey Graves. Price $2.00.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrins, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. By Kersey Graves. Price, $2.

Bible in the Balance. A text-book for investigators. By Rev. J. G. Fish. Price, $1.50.

Old Theology Turned Upside Down, or Right Side Up. By Rev. T. B. Taylor, A. M. Cloth, $1.25; paper, $1.00.

Modern Thinkers: What they Think and Why. By V. B. Denslow, LL.D. With an introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, cloth, $1.50.

Superstition in All Ages. By John Meslier. A Roman Catholic priest. Price, cloth, $1.50; paper, $1.00.

Antiquity of Christianity. By John Allberger. 12mo, 61 pp. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents.

Essays on Mind, Matter, Forces, Theology, etc. By Charles E. Townsend. Extra cloth, 12mo, 404 pp. Price, $1.50.

Sequel to Essays, By same author. Price, 75 cents.

Scripture Speculations. With an introduction on the creation, stars, earth, primitiv man, Judaism, etc. By Halsey R. Stevens. Extra cloth, 12mo, 419 pp. Price, $1.50.

Faith and Reason; Heart, Soul, and Handwork By Halsey R. Stevens. Extra cloth. 12mo, 441 pp. Price, $1.50.

The Modern Thinker. By various authors Being the most advanced speculations in philosophy, science, theology, and sociology. Second number. 8vo, 160 pp. Price, $1.00.

Positivist Primer. Being a series of familiar conversations on the Religion of Humanity. By C. G. David. Price, 75 cents.

The Ethics of Positivism. A critical study. By Giacomo Barzellotti, Professor of Philosophy at the Liceo Dante, Florence. Extra cloth, 12mo, 327 pp. Price, $2.00.

Through Rome On. A memoir of Christian and antichristian experience. By Nathaniel Ramsay Waters. Extra cloth, 12mo, 352 pp. Price, $1.75.

Christ of Paul. By George Reber. Extra cloth, 12mo, 400 pp. Price, $2.00.

Cultivation of Art, And its Relation to Religious Puritanism and Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper. 12mo, 48 pp. Price, flexible cloth, 35 cents; paper, 20 cents.

The Historical Jesus of Nazareth. By M. Schlesinger, PH.D., Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, New York. Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages. Price, 75 cents.

The Case Against the Church. A summary of the arguments against Christianity. Price, 50 cents.

Personal Immortality and Other Papers. By Josie Oppenheim. Extra clotb, 12mo, 98 pages. Price, 75 cents.

Soul Problems, With Papers on the Theological Amendment and the State Personality Idea. By Joseph E. Peck. Paper, 12mo, 63 pages. Price, 25 cents.

Confessions of an Inquirer. Why and What Am I? By James Jackson Jarves. Price, $1.25.

Socialism and Utilitarianism. By John Stuart Mill. Price, $1.50.

Nemesis of Faith. By Anthony Fronde. Price, $1.50.

Christian and Deist. Price, $1.00.

Socialism. Reply to Rev. Roswell C. Hitchcock. By a Business Man.

Modern Symposium. Price, $1.25.

Trial of D. M. Bennett. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 40 cents.

Some Mistakes of Moses. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, $1.25.

The Gods and Other Lectures. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 50 cents.

The Ghosts and Other Lectures. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 50 cents.

The Gods, etc., and The Ghosts, etc., in one volume. Price, paper, $1.00.

What Must We Do to Be Saved? Price, 25 cents.

Was Christ a God? Conclusions drawn from apostolic writings. By F. Mensinga. Price, $1.50.

Abstract of Colenso on the Pentateuch. A comprehensiv summary of Bishop Colenso's argument, proving that the Pentateuch is not historically true. Price, 25 cents.

Self-Contradictions of the Bible. One hundred and forty-four propositions, without comment, embodying most of the palpable and striking self-contradictions of the Bible. Price, 25 cents.

The Bhagvad Gita; or, A Discourse on Divine Matters between Krishna and Arjuna. By J. Cockburn Thompson. Price, $1.75.

The Clergy a Source of Danger to the American Republic. By W. F. Jamieson. Price, $1.00.

Youth's Liberal Guide for their Moral Culture and Religious Enlightenment. By Prof. H. M. Kottinger, A.M. Price, $1.

Orthodox Hash, with a Change of Diet. By Warren Sumner Barlow. Price, 25 cents.

The Voices. A poem in four parts. By Warren Sumner Barlow. One of the most trenchant yet sensible satires on the notions, superstitions, dogmas, and inconsistent practices of ecclesiasticism extant. Price, $1.

Gems of Thought.

IF the gods really are gods, they ought not to hav need of the help of man; and if their priests are not paid by the gods for the services they perform, they had better seek other employers who can reward them for what they do.—D. M. Bennett.

EXPERIENCE and scripture alike declare the law of retribution and the fact of judgment. We reap what we sow. Thorns never produce grapes, nor thistles figs. The harvests forever answer to the kind of seed planted. The reward is to every man according as his work shall be. A book of remembrance is written. A cloud of witnesses surround us. Our sins find us out. The lines of divine justice run through earth and eternity, separating the false from the true, the evil from the good, forever pronouncing doom to the wicked, and to the faithful, "Well done." —Rush R. Shippen.

FOR myself the only devil I know is that black devil, ignorance, fostered by knavery and tyranny—a devil personified by the credulous many, and kept up, in the past, by the learned but treacherous few, who professed to rule the masses by their fears rather than to guide them through their love. The devil has, indeed, not been a roaring lion, but a cowardly and treacherous boaconstrictor; it has enveloped in its massiv folds glorious truth, and, in the fierceness of its brute power, has crushed in its writhings. But, oh! a glorious day is coming; amidst the heretofore gloom of night the bright rays of the rising sun are piercing, and the light of truth dispels the mists of ignorance. Bright facts drive out dark delusions; mighty truths triumph over pious frauds and no longer need men be affrighted by the notion of an omnipotent fiend, wandering through the earth, ever seeking their damnation. — Bradlaugh's Few Words about the Devil.

NEVER forsake a friend. When enemies gather around, when sickness falls on the heart, when the world is dark and cheerless, is the time to try true friendship. They who turn from the scene of distress betray their hypocrisy, and prove that interest only moves them. If you hav a friend who loves you—who has studied your interest and happiness—be sure to sustain him in adversity. Let him feel that his former kindness is appreciated, and that his love was not thrown away. Real fidelity may be rare, but it exists—in the heart. They only deny its worth and power who hav never loved a friend or labored to make one happy.—Anon.

ARIOSTO tells a pretty story of a fairy, who, by some mysterious law of her nature, was condemned to appear at certain seasons in the form of a foul and poisonous snake. Those who injured her during the period of her disguise were forever excluded from participation in the blessings which she bestowed. But to those who, in spite of her loathsome aspect, pitied and protected her, she afterward revealed herself in the beautiful and celestial form which was natural to her, accompanied their steps, granted all their wishes, filled their houses with wealth, made them happy in love and victorious in war. Such a spirit is liberty. At times she takes the form of a hateful reptil. She grovels, she hisses, she stings. But woe to those who in disgust shall venture to crush her! And happy are those who, having dared to receive her in her degraded and frightful shape, shall at length be rewarded by her in the time of her beauty and her glory!—Macaulay's Milton.

ALL over the domain of human inquiry the sectarian spirit is rapidly passing away. It is rebuked in the scientific world. It is under reprobation in the philosophical world; now, almost everywhere, men of ability and character may pursue truth in the spirit of truth, may hold their convictions with warmth of feeling, may advocate them with intensity of expression, always remembering that their view is not the only view, that however well founded and important it may seem to them, other views may seem equally reasonable and essential to other people.—O. B. Frothingham's Radical Pulpit.

IF we are told that morality consists in obedience to the supposed will of a supposed perfectly moral being [which is Paley's theory of morals], and that we are to aim at righteousness of life, because, in so doing, we please God, then we are at once placed in a region where our faculties are useless to us, and where our judgment is at fault. But if we are told that we are to lead noble lives, because nobility of life is desirable for itself alone, because in so doing we spread happiness around our pathway and gladden our fellow-men, then, indeed, motivs are appealed to which spring forward to meet the call, and chords are struck in our hearts which respond in music to the touch.—Mrs. A. Besant.

THE fear o' hell's a hangman's whip
To hold the wretch in order;
But when ye feel your honor grip
Let that aye be your border!

Its slightest touches, instant pause!
Debar a' side pretenses
And resolutely keep its laws—
Uncaring consequences. —Burns.

To refer the legend in regard to the stopping of the sun by Joshua to a false translation is imposing on one branch of science—philology—for the sake of another. And the reliance upon the refuge of Hugh Miller as to the days of Genesis, that they are not periods of twenty-four hours but of epochs of thousands and perhaps millions of years, is another way of avoiding the difficulty—without solving it. Why not answer that the writer of Genesis, or the Assyrian author from whom the legends of creation were taken, believed, as he evidently did, that the world was made in six days? What harm is done to science or religion by any such supposition? It is just as innocent as the Greek legend that Minerva sprung from the brain of Jove. The harm comes only when you take these legends as literal and infallible. In that case, the Grecian legend is just as reasonable and authoritativ as the Hebrew one.—Christian Register (March, 9, 1882).

MEN hav no right to complain of evils which they themselvs are competent to remedy, by mere common sense, joined with mere common humanity.—Coleridge.

Odds and Ends.

AFTER the Revolution of 1848 an amiable Socialist took refuge in Geneva, where he began the publication of a weekly paper, devoting it to promulgating the great idea of the equal division of all property. In due course a relativ of the reformer died and left him a legacy of 15,000 francs. The paper appeared as usual next week, but there had in the meanwhile been a slight modification of the proprietor's program. "All property should be equally divided," he wrote, "share and share alike when its value exceeds 15,000 francs!"

TWO men are walking together—one a smoker, one an admirer of King James's Counterblast.

"What are you smoking?"

"A cigar—can't you see?"

"I mean how much did it cost?"

"Ten cents."

"Ten cents? Ah! How long hav you been smoking?"

"About thirty years."

"About thirty years? Why, with the money you hav spent on cigars you could hav bought one of the swellest houses on the avenue here!"

"Don't you smoke?"

"I? Never! I never hav smoked."

"Then show me your house!"

A TINY little fellow living in an Eastern city, but away out on the borders where circuses did not come or processions, who had never seen a soldier in full rig, was sent to the door by his mother, who heard the bell ring. It was Col. S——, in full regimentals, as it was the day of the inauguration of the governor.

"Tell your mother, little man, to please come to the door a moment; I want to speak to her."

Charley went up stairs, and appeared before his mother with the most awe-struck face.

"Mamma, there is some one at the door wants to see you."

"Who is it, my son?"

"I don't know, but I think it's God."

"LOOK here," said the governor to a high state official, "when are you going to pay me that $10?"

"Upon my honor, governor, I don't know."

"Why, sir, the other day when I mentioned the fact of your indebtedness you asked me where I would be Tuesday?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, wasn't that a promis that you would pay me Tuesday?"

"No, sir."

"Why, then, did you want to know where I would be Tuesday?"

"Because I wanted to know where you'd be so I could make arrangements to be somewhere else."

THE BANANA-PEEL'S SONG.

Like a bar of the beaten gold
I gleam in the summer's sun;
I am little, I know, but I think I can throw
A man who will weigh a ton.
I send out no challenges bold,
I blow me no vaunting horn,
But foolish is he who treadeth on me;
He'll wish he had ne'er been born.

Like the flower of the field, vain man
Gooth forth at the break of day,
But when he shall feel my grip on his heel,
Like the stubble he fadeth away;
For I lift him high up in the air,
With his heels where his head ought to be;
With a down-coming crash he maketh his mash,
And I know he's clear gone upon me.

I am scorned by the man who buys me;
I am modest and quiet and meek;
Though my talents are few, yet the work that I do
Has oft made the cellar-doors creak.
I'm a blood-red Republican born,
And a Nihilist fearless I be;
Though a head wear a crown, I bring its pride down,
If it set its proud heel upon me.

TOO INQUISITIV BY HALF.

"Pa," exclaimed the Rev. Mr. Mulkittle's boy, "Cousin Jim don't know who Abel was, and when I asked him who Cain was he said he was a walking-stick."

Jim snorted and pulled his red hair in a glee of conquest.

"Cain was a bad man, wasn't he, pa?"

"Yes, son," replied Mulkittle with evident pride at the intelligence exhibited by his son in contrast to Aunt Mary's vicious young snoozer; "Cain was a bad man."

"Cain killed his brother with a stick of stove wood, didn't he?"

Jim snorted again and asked, "Who chopped the wood?"

"He killed his brother with a club," replied Mr. Mulkittle.

"What made him kill his brother?"

"Because the Lord loved Abel better than he did Cain."

"Did God make Cain and Abel too?"

"Yes, both were the children of the Lord."

"God made Abel good and Cain bad, didn't he?"

"Yes."

"But if God had wanted Cain to be good he could hav made him good, couldn't he?"

"Yes," replied the minister, slyly looking at Aunt Mary.

"If Abel was good and God loved him, why did he let Cain kill him?"

"Because God wanted Abel to come unto him."

"But he had Abel anyway. Didn't it hurt Abel when Cain hit him?"

"You bet it did," said Jim, twisting himself on the floor. Mr. Mulkittle bestowed a glance of ministerial contempt on the youngster and replied:

"Of course it hurt him."

"Why did God want to hurt anybody he loved?"

"I don't know."

"Why don't you know?"

"Hush, sir; don't bother me."

And Mr. Mulkittle, after reading a part of Paul's special correspondence, waved his hand with an air of authority, and said, "Let us pray."—Arkansaw Traveler.

MUCH FOR LITTLE.

We hav on hand a goodly number
—OF—
VOLUMES I. AND II.
—OF—
The Truth Seeker,
published in 1874 and 1875,
the same securely bound in good paper covers. The first volume is a monthly, and the second a semi-monthly. Vol. I. contains 160 pp, and Vol. II. 256 pp. We are disposed to send these out to friends who wish them at a trifle above the postage. We will send

VOLUME I. FOR 25 CENTS,
—AND—
VOLUME II. FOR 50 CENTS.
THEY CONTAIN

a large amount of reading matter, and are worth nearly ten times the amount asked for them. They also are worth not a little to show what THE TRUTH SEEKER was in the first and second years of its existence. Let those who wish to secure these volumes not fail to make their wants known.

Address this office.

SPECIAL OFFER
TO
TRUTH SEEKERS.

The J. R Perry Piano and Organ Company desire to introduce their instruments to all lovers of music, at the lowest cost to purchasers, by selling direct. The Perry Piano contains the latest and most important improvement yet made—a self-sustaining sounding-board and bridge, which will never permit the board to spring, nor allow the tones to become thin and wiry. The Organs contain more patented inventions than any other make. The Mason & Hamlin are the only Organ Company who are using any of them, they having purchased the use of Perry's Flute and Celeste and Reed Board in 1876. We offer to place these Pianos and Organs by the side of any ether, no matter what their reputation, and will compete both in price and quality. For full particulars address J. R. PERRY, P. O. Box 367, Wilkesbarre, Pa., who will furnish illustrated catalog. 9t47

80 Court st. Brooklyn

THE
"WILSONIA,"
TWO YEARS AGO
WILLIAM WILSON,
THE INVENTOR OF
WILSONIA,

AN ENGLISH SCIENTIST, MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN, LECTURER ON ELECTRICAL THERAPEUTICS, AUTHOR OF THE "TRIAL OF MEDICIN," THE "LANGUAGE OF DISEASE," "MEDICAL FALLACIES," ETC.,

Introduced to the People of the United States His

MAGNETIC GARMENTS

For the cure of Disease without Medicine or Medica Treatment. The Statement made by him at that time that his Magnetic Clothing, if worn for any form of Disease (and as advised), would cure ninety per cent of the so-called Incurables, has been verified, he having Clothed and Cured Thousands of Persons of all Forms of Disease. Positive proof of this has appeared in all the leading Newspapers by Testimony of many of our most Prominent and Wealthy Citizens, who, having been Cured by the

Wilsona Magnetic Garments

After all other Treatment had failed, were pleased to assist the Inventor in giving confidence to the Suffering Invalids of America by allowing him to use their well-known and respected Names as Reference; and it is now admitted by many most highly accomplished Scientists and Physicians that the Success and Cures attending the introduction of "Wilsonia" Magnetic Clothing has been unprecedented in the history of Electrical Therapeutics. In the face of such Positive Proof as given by us no person can doubt the value of this Invention in all cases.

Therefore why continue the Suicidal System of taking Drugs?

SEND $1.50 FOR A PAIR OF
"Wilsonia" Magnetic Insoles.

Sure Preventive of Cold Feet—the Forerunner of Al Kinds of Disease.

Consultation Free.

Send for Pamphlet and Information to the only Office where the Inventor can be seen.

Address all Communications to
DAVID J. COTTER,
80 COURT STREET, BROOKLYN

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Rubber Elastic Appliance, in 30 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for Circular. (Say in what paper you saw advertisement.) Address CAPT. W. A. COLLINGS, Smithville, Jefferson Co., N. Y. ptf&eb

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.

A TRUTH SEEKER
Around the World.
FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. I. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last words penned by the great author were for the fourth volume, which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he has visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter. The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library. Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

SUPERSTITION IN ALL AGES.

By JOHN MESLIER,

A Roman Catholic Priest, who, after a pastorate of thirty years at Etrepigny and But in Champagne, France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and left as his last will and testament to his parishioners, and to the world, the work entitled, "Common Sense."

Meslier's book is a death-knell to all religions, also to all imaginary nonentities. It is only a commendable act of justice to say that his work is unanswerable. It is lucid in style, and undoubtedly one of the most powerful appeals in behalf of reason, common sense, and justice that ever was produced in any age or country.

Cloth, . . $1.50. Paper . . $1.00.

Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

DR. FELLOWS,
Vineland, New Jersey,

A regularly educated and legally qualified physician and most successful, as his practice will prove, cures all forms of Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases. Spermatorrhea and Impotency, as the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an External Application in from 30 to 90 days.

MIDDLE-AGED AND OLD MEN.

There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuation of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen, will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows's External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the organs.

☞ Consultation by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable, and correspondence strictly confidential.

PRIVATE COUNSELOR.

Sent to any address securely sealed for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhea or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuinness. Should be read by all.

☞ Remember no medicin is given. Address DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey. Be sure and state in what paper you saw this.

TO TRIAL SUBSCRIBERS
THE TRUTH SEEKER,
With sixteen large pages, will be sent for THREE MONTHS, postage paid,
FOR FIFTY CENTS.
Address D. M. BENNETT,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

BOOKS! BOOKS!

I hav an enormous stock of new and second-hand books on hand, which I offer at very low prices. Send for books tried to obtain elsewhere without success. American, English, German, and French books. Catalogs on application, FREE.

A full line of Liberal books always on hand,
C. N. Caspar's Book Emporium,
4t1 35 Oneida street (opp. Opera House,) Milwaukee, Wis.

SING, BROTHERS, SING.
USE THE
Liberal Hymn-Book

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. The LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly commended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Sienker, and indeed by all who hav examined it. Second edition. Price, half-bound, 25 cents. In cloth, gilt, 40 cents. Sold at this office.

Wanted.

A good farm hand. For particulars, address,
JOS. BOLTON,
2t2 Lyons, Rice Co., Kan.

Wanted.

Correspondence with any lady, not a widow. Must be equally talented, not cross, and of a stout race of people, as I am. Address, H. G. J., Box 55, Moravia P. O., Appanoose Co., Iowa.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 3. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY M. W. BENNETT. | New York, Saturday, January 20, 1883. | NO. 21 CLINTON PLACE, NEAR BROADWAY. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

A PRESBYTERIAN church in Philadelphia has a Turk for pastor.

"I WANT to pass away gently while preaching," is the desire breathed by the Rev. Mr. Barnes.

"THE truths of Christianity are not many in point of number," says the Rev. George H. Hepworth. We hav always maintained that they can be counted on the fingers of a person who had lost both arms.

"I ADVISE you to go to church with more regularity," said a doctor to one of his patients. "Why, sir?" asked the bewildered patient. "Because sound sleep is the most complete restorativ known for your malady."

"MORE than half of the ministers on the roll of the Presbyterian church," according to the "board of ministerial relief," "when they die leave dependent widows." This is not very cheering information for the young men who contemplate entering the ministry, nor comforting to the young women who expect to marry them.

A PORTLAND paper tells a story of a wealthy but parsimonious Maine man who, two or three days before his death, awoke in the evening and turning to the watcher at the bedside, asked, "How much do they giv you a night?" "Two dollars and a half," was the reply. "Well, you needn't come any more; I can't stand such a sum as that," and he didn't.

"THE Quakers" was the subject of an essay, the essayist being a moderate sized boy at a popular boarding-school. Omitting all such references to George Fox or William Penn as are customary in essays on Quakers, this essayist plunged into the thick of his subject by saying that the Quakers never quarrel, never get into a fight, never claw each other, and never "jaw back." He added, "Pa is a Quaker, but I don't think ma is." There is no record of this essay having received a prize.

THE Rev. W. H. Hardman, of Greenwood, Neb., preached for a small salary, but managed to save up $1,000, which he held in readiness for any promising mercantil investment that might offer. He met a man who said that he had $8,000 worth of goods in a Chicago warehouse, the hidden property of a bankrupt Indiana merchant. These could be bought for 15 per cent of their value, if the sale could be kept a secret. The clergyman parted with his money, and got a due bill for the merchandise, but he has never been able to find the goods.

PRAYING to space is not a very profitable occupation, and the people are beginning to find it out. According to the report there is general lamentation that the services held at most of the evangelical churches in the week of prayer were thinly attended and were lacking in interest. This is much as was expected last Sunday. It was indicated in the style of the notices given from the pulpits by many of the pastors. If something is not done in the line of the introduction of a radical improvement in the way of holding these meetings, the institution of the week of prayer will in a few years be as thoroughly forgotten as the "monthly concert of prayer," which was formerly so greatly relied on as a promoter of interest in foreign missions.

THE dearth of acceptable ministers, says the New York Sun, has become a matter for great alarm among the churches and educational boards. The classes of theological students grow smaller with each succeeding year, and only a few of the limited number of candidates for ministerial perquisits promis to develop into anything of which the cause may be proud. The Presbyterian church alone has nearly two thousand ministers who are not preaching, and fears are entertained that it will be necessary to fall back upon these. With a constant drain upon the priesthood of ministers expelled for immorality, excommunicated for heresy, and those who resign of their own free will, the fraternity of the cloth bids fair to become as insignificant in number as it now is in usefulness.

PRESIDENT FETTEROLF has just been made president of Girard College. He is a nativ of Montgomery county, Pa., and forty-eight years of age. He began his scholastic career as a professor of English literature and mathematics in the Freeland Seminary, at his home, of which institution he became the principal in 1867. After occupying that position for five years Prof. Fetterolf was elected principal of the Andalusia Seminary, under the care of the Protestant Episcopal church, in Bucks county, and remained there until his election two years ago as vice-president of Girard College. In all but ordination this man is a preacher of the Episcopal church. It is thus that these dishonest Christians subvert the will of Girard without incurring the penalty. Cannot the Liberals of Philadelphia devise some way of ousting the thieves?

AT the meeting of the French Geographical Society, held in Paris a few days since, M. de Lesseps promised that the Panama canal should be ready to be opened in 1888. He described the sanitary condition of the people employed in constructing it as satisfactory. The mortality at Panama is not, he said, higher than in France, that is to say, it does not reach two per cent of the population. M. de Lesseps also contended that the fears which had been expressed concerning the possibility of the canal being injured by earthquakes were quite unfounded. Panama, he maintained, was outside the volcanic region so justly dreaded on account of the terrible disasters which had happened within its limits. An earthquake might occur there, but the Isthmus of Panama was no more likely to be visited by one than any country in Europe.

THE annual report of General Merritt, the United States Consul-General in Great Britain and Ireland, has supplied some food for discussion to our English cousins. Among other things, he points out that while here only one person in 285 is a pauper, in England the proportion is one in 35. He also shows that the reduction in the English national debt is not as great in the year as our reduction often is in a month. He givs the somewhat startling information that one out of every 36 of the 6,600,000 houses in the United Kingdom is engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors. The English press is not quite willing to accept his statement that many small farmers with capital of from $500 to $2,500 are anxious to quit England and emigrate to this country because of the agricultural depression, if they only could get trustworthy information as to the value and fertility of land in different parts of the United States. The Consul-General is very severe upon "the scandalous practice of some European governments in shipping vagrants, imbecils, confirmed inebriates, and scoundrels who, having run the course of their jails for years, hav been pronounced incorrigible."

THE Japanese government has recently issued a new code of regulations for the maintenance of public thoroughfares throughout the empire. Among them are the following regulations respecting the sweeping and cleansing of roads: "The sweeping and cleansing of roads must be done by the residents on either side. In the case of a government office, the work will be accomplished by that office. Residents on either side of the thoroughfare are responsible for cleaning to a distance of eight ken (thirty-six feet), and in case of unoccupied houses the proprietors must still undertake the task. Bridges and carriage roads, and all others, which no private persons are bound to keep in good condition, must be maintained by officers of Ku, Gho, or Son. Activ efforts must be made to keep all sections of roads as clean as possible. Dead cats and dogs, etc., must be removed by district scavenger corps. On hot or windy days water must be sprinkled upon the road, but between the 1st of December and the 28th of February such sprinkling is prohibited before 9 A.M. and after 3 P.M. The foul water of the drains and dirty wash water must not be used for sprinkling the roads."

CANON WILBERFORCE'S letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury (says the Pall Mall Gazette) illustrates the connection between beer and Bible in a way that must be very awkward for the primate. The church, as a whole, being the largest landowner in the kingdom, is naturally the largest owner of public-houses. That is bad enough, but Mr. Wilberforce avers that public-houses are more, in proportion, numerous on church lands than they are elsewhere. The bishop of London, riding between his two town houses, would, it is said, pass 100 taverns which are the property of his church. One of the largest public-houses in London, which sells £10,000 worth of drink every year, is part of the bishop's endowment. Here and there in London you may see a church flanked on either side by a gin shop—all three, of course, being church property. The publican appears to take instinctivly to the vacant land in the neighborhood of a church. Is this sort of thing to go on, asks Mr. Wilberforce, or is the church to continue pretending to fight against the intemperance which it helps to produce? The archbishop is an ecclesiastical commissioner, and the Times orders him to answer the canon's interrogatories without delay.

THERE is perplexity in the India office in London over the translation into Indian languages of "God Save the Queen." At first sight it would seem a very simple problem, but one is met at every point by difficulties. The consequence is that a National Anthem Society has been formed, and its members are hard at work. In the first place, there are as many and as different languages in India as there are in Europe. Hindostanee and Bengalee and Punjabee and Tamil and Telegu and Mahratta and Canaresc are as distinct from each other as French, German, and Italian. Then the court language of India is Persian, which is not understood by the people in any part of the country. It is evident, therefore, that in order to make "God Save the Queen" popular it must be translated into a great number of languages. The imperial title of the queen in England adds another difficulty. How on earth are people to sing, "God Save Kaisar-i-Hind?" Then how is God to be translated? The Brahmans hav more than a million gods, and it would be almost impossible to pick out the right one. The religions of India are as numerous as the languages, and the proper god must be chosen in each case. The National Anthem Society hav consequently no very easy job before them.

THE Rev. E. R. Donehoo, a leading orthodox clergyman of Pittsburgh, Pa., delivered a sermon Sunday morning, in which he inveighed against the creeds of the churches of the present day as being tyrannical. He also spoke against existing Sunday laws, and on this subject he said: "In New York business men hav been greatly exercised over an attempt to enforce certain Sunday laws, which had been enacted under far different conditions of society, where very different sentiments were entertained in regard to the claims and limitations of the Sabbath. The Puritanical ideas which found utterance in these recently exhumed statutes hav long since given place to more liberal constructions of man's duty toward the Sabbatic precepts. With the great changes which hav taken place in our land since these laws were first enacted, the necessities of the times demand that a modification shall be made in those laws which govern the observance of the Sabbath; also, they will soon become, as they are now rapidly becoming, an entire nullity. Christ clearly taught that rational necessity, man's natural wants and requirements, determined the manner of Sabbath observance. What to-day is needed in this and other states in the interest of morality and religion is a modification of our Sunday laws to such a degree as to bring them into something like accord with the enlightened sentiment of the present age." The sermon has created much comment in religious circles in Pittsburgh.

News of the Week.

FLOODS in south Hungary are causing great distress.

THE ice harvest has begun at Troy on the Hudson.

ARABI PASHA and his fellow-exiles hav arrived at Colombo, Ceylon.

NEW YORKERS are enjoying the best sleighing that the city has known for many years.

A WOMAN in this city has procured a verdict of $75,000 damages in a suit for breach of promis.

EIGHTY-TWO lives were lost in the burning of the Newhall House, Milwaukee, Wis., on the 10th.

THE cold at Moscow, Russia, is so intense that many people are daily found frozen in the streets.

THE president and cashier of the City Bank of Jersey City hav been arrested. The accounts show a shortage of about $75,000.

THERE is a report that some Circasians attempted to assassinate the sultan of Turkey last Sunday, but were met and repulsed by the guard.

THE Germans of Brooklyn contemplate holding a monster music festival in 1885. They intend to hav a chorus of twenty thousand voices.

DR. MUDD, of Baltimore, who was sentenced to imprisonment for life for harboring John Wilkes Booth, but afterward pardoned by the president, died on the 12th.

JOHN WELLES HALLENBOCK, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., has presented $50,000 to Lafayette College to endow the chair of the president. A similar gift was made by him to the college a few years ago.

A FEMALE soldier in the Salvation Army had two devoted lovers. A dispute that arose between them as to which was most admired by the damsel was settled by one stabbing the other in the back.

DURING the performance last Saturday at a circus in Berditscheff, in Russian Poland, a fire broke out in the building, and before the spectators could escape the whole structure was ablaze. Three hundred persons perished in the flames.

MARVELOUS healers continue to come to the front. Mr. Coran, of Troy, who is the seventh son of a seventh son, is the latest. He lays his hands upon the afflicted, and prophesies the day when the disease will take its departure. Stories of remarkable cures are recited.

OVERDANK, the young Italian who was hanged at Trieste, Austria, last month, for conspiracy, was a Freethinker, and declined the offices of a priest. His execution excited great indignation in Rome, and the action of the emperor of Austria is the subject of almost universal condemnation. Victor Hugo interceded for the young man in a letter to the emperor, but without avail. The great Italian poet, Giosue Carducci, has published a stinging comment pronouncing maledictions on the Austrian government, and the walls of Rome were placarded with appeals to the people to vindicate and avenge the murdered youth.

CLARK MILLS, the sculptor, died at Washington, D. C., on the 12th, in the 68th year of his age. He was a plasterer in his youth, but became a sculptor when he was twenty years old. His first important work was a bust of John C. Calhoun, which is in the City Hall at Charleston. Congress awarded him the commission for the equestrian statue of Jackson, which stands in Lafayette Square, near the White House. He received $20,000 for the statue, which was cast from cannon captured by Jackson. He received $50,000 from Congress for the colossal equestrian statue of Washington which was unveiled in 1860. In 1863 he cast in bronze the statue of Liberty, from Crawford's design, which now crowns the dome of the National Capitol. He made his name familiar to Freethinkers by executing the busts of Paine, Voltaire, and Ingersoll.

In Memoriam.

D. M. Bennett.

A LECTURE BY GEORGE CHAINEY, ON SUNDAY, DEC. 10TH.

From This World.

I had promised to speak to-day on the origin of the religious sentiment; but last Thursday came the sad news that one of the bravest and strongest soldiers of liberty, D. M. Bennett, editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, had fallen at his post. As his funeral takes place to-day, I felt that, with this cause for sorrow resting upon all our hearts, I could not speak upon any other subject.

The death of Mr. Bennett was so sudden that we can only think of him like some unconquerable hero dying with harness on his back. The same copy of his paper that contains the first news of his sickness reports his death. In one column he speaks for himself, and says:

"Friends, this is all I am able to giv you this time. These letters are written out from notes taken on my journey; and, as my health is not at present such as to admit of close application to work, I will draw this brief instalment to a close, hoping to resume the narrativ when the conditions are more favorable, which, I trust, will be at no distant day."

In another column some one else says:

"D. M. Bennett, editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, died at his home, 27 Clinton place, on the morning of Wednesday, the 6th, aged sixty-four. His death will be a shock to the readers of his paper, as it was to his numerous friends in this city. He had been in sufficient health to attend to the duties of his office up to Friday, the 1st inst. For a week previous to that time, he had been suffering somewhat from malaria; but, on the morning of the day in question, he was obliged to take to his bed. His disease was gastritis, coupled with an affection of the heart. Hope was entertained of his recovery up to Monday night, when he sank into the unconscious condition in which he died. A strong constitution, which had never been abused, kept until morning its hold on life, which seemed reluctant to leave one who had so blessed it with usefulness. Words can only bear the tidings of his death; they cannot contain the sorrow of his stricken friends."

I shall not attempt here any adequate sketch of his life. Such service will no doubt be rendered by some one more familiar with the facts. In such an hour we feel but little interest in details; we ask rather to be made to feel than to think, and incline more to admire the quality of his life than to be curious about dates and material facts.

Personally, Mr. Bennett was a pleasant, mild, and gentle man. One would, to meet him, hardly think it possible that such a soft-speaking, unpretentious man would be so brave and strong as he ever was on the battle-field of thought against the hosts of superstition. But as a warrior and champion, a pioneer in the wilderness opening a path to liberty, but few men hav done more effectual service. He was at first only a common soldier in the ranks; but he won place, honor, and power, as the French soldiers win their epaulets, by bravery. When the power of the church was much stronger than it is now, when to speak against its arrogant claims of infallibility and authority required far more courage than to-day, he started forth as a champion of universal mental liberty. When the friends of truth and liberty were scattered like sheep without a shepherd, and each one failed to do his best because ignorant of how many there were to support him, Mr. Bennett flung his TRUTH SEEKER to the breeze, and by the most untiring zeal and industry gathered around it at least twenty thousand readers. In the absence of other organization, such papers as THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator hav rendered incalculable service. All over the country are thousands of people who, through the size of their brains and strong common sense, without any outside help, hav outgrown the superstition taught them in childhood. Their convictions cut them off from attending church, and often from any pleasure in the society of its devotees. Knowing but little of the world, they are sometimes half afraid of their own thoughts. But a Liberal paper finds them out, and introduces them to the fact that thousands of others scattered all over the land are thinking just as they do. A paper like THE TRUTH SEEKER is something more and better than an advocate of truth. Through it, its subscribers touch elbows with each other. Each reader knows that he is one of a goodly company who find comfort and inspiration in its pages. If they should meet each other, they would feel like brothers and sisters. They hav lived under one intellectual roof, felt the glow of the same fireside, and broken together the bread of life. Such a paper is to thousands a substitute for the church. For upward of nine years, I believe, THE TRUTH SEEKER has rendered this service, and so endeared itself to many hearts. Starting into existence as it did, when to be known as an Infidel was to be an outcast, the difficulties and discouragements met with must hav been enormous. The Liberals of America owe to such men as D. M. Bennett, Horace Seaver, and J. P. Mendum a debt of gratitude for the courage and perseverance they hav shown in maintaining a steady fight against superstition in all its forms for half a century.

The character of such a paper as THE TRUTH SEEKER, and equally so of its editor, find their full explanation and justification in the spirit of the age. Mr. Bennett was a man of the people. He was deprived by the injustice of society of the full education of his powers. What education he did receive was designed far more to destroy his intellect than to develop it. Some part of his life was spent in that false and unnatural atmosphere of a Shaker community—a people who, though pure in desire, are yet so ignorant as to say with Hamlet, "We will hav no more marriages. Those that are married already shall liv; the rest shall keep as they are." Only a mind of remarkable strength and clearness of perception could hav seen the light through this darkness. Though born and reared a slave, he broke every fetter and bravely consecrated all his powers to the freeing of his brethren from the dominion of the spiritual lash and bloodhound.

Though brought up under circumstances that hav crushed from thousands every particle of manhood, he yet did better and braver service for humanity than thousands blessed with every advantage of wealth and culture. It is true he lacked some of the grace and skill of handling his task we require from the perfect workman; but for this he is not to be blamed. Pioneers do not work with kid gloves, nor backwoodsmen possess soft hands; but the roughest manner is often backed by the tenderest feeling and noblest manhood.

Mr. Bennett had himself suffered bitterly from the blighting influence of superstition. He saw and felt how much richer life would be when freed from every fetter of priestly tyranny and dogmatical ignorance. He was essentially a warrior. The brave soldier is not necessarily destitute of the tenderest pity; but, when he knows that he is engaged in a just cause, his humanity nerves his arm to strike. He fights because he beholds the larger joy that shall follow from the triumph of his cause.

So, though Mr. Bennett often seemed ignorant that his method of treatment would hurt the feelings of good and sincere people, he still lifted the two-edged sword of criticism and ax of reason, because of the harvest of joy he knew would follow the destruction of superstition. In a time of transition like this, when insincerity and half-heartedness are the only price of popularity, such a worker as Mr. Bennett was worth a whole army of delicate, finical reformers, who are afraid to hit a lie squarely on the head for fear of hurting somebody's feelings. I do not claim perfection for Mr. Bennett—I do not think he claimed to be a saint; nor was he ever, to my knowledge, heard to boast of any great worth. In all the addresses he gave at the various receptions and testimonials of regard tendered by his friends, for his devotion and sacrifice to the cause of liberty, he always admitted that it could not be for any worth of his own, but simply for the cause he represented and in his poor way toiled for. His general manner of thanking them for their kindness was to promis to be more earnest than ever. He kept that promis too well. There is not a doubt in my mind that he is the victim of overwork. He ought to hav been good for ten or fifteen years' hard service yet. He may perhaps hav laid the foundation of this physical break-down in the penitentiary at Albany, as a martyr to the freedom of the press. If so, it is only one more murder achieved by the result of the union of church and state, and the employment of that inhuman and brutal wretch, Anthony Comstock. Under the shadow of this sorrow, while sympathy glows in our hearts for the grief of Mrs. Bennett, I ask you to remember that those hands, dripping with blood, are now clutching at the throat of another victim. Never mind how much you may agree or disagree with Mr. Heywood, take no thought of how much your reputation for respectability may be injured, but resolve to do all in your power to wipe this stain from the stars and stripes, and banish this tiger from the public service.

It seems almost wrong to speak of Comstock at such a time. Still, remembering how much Mr. Bennett suffered at his hands, we hav no choice left but to join our blessings to the memory of Bennett with maledictions to that of Comstock. As the subject of this discourse never believed in nor practiced the command to love his enemies, it is not altogether inappropriate. He himself wrote a book in which he traced the death of many people perfectly innocent of any purpose but to do good directly home to this monster of inhumanity.

The work of Mr. Bennett, as recorded in the pages of THE TRUTH SEEKER, was largely the expression of the man. Even his one confessed fault, for which he was most foully dealt with when powerless in prison, may be traced to the unnatural principles of Shakerism. Dam up any force of nature, and, when the obstruction is removed, it is much harder to control. I do not wish to canonize him as a saint. Changing somewhat the words of Mark Antony over the body of Cæsar:

"I come to do him justice, not to praise him.
The good that men do livs after them;
The evil is oft interred with their bones.
So let it be with Bennett."

This is, no doubt, what Antony meant to say of Cæsar. The world is not bad enough to bury the good and keep alive the evil. As time rolls on, the work of D. M. Bennett will shine in brighter radiance. Though his tongue is silent, and the pen once so busy is laid aside forever, yet many of his words will bear the fruit of joy and liberty for many years to come. The poet Cowley once asked the question:

"What shall I do to be forever known,
And make the age to come mine own?"

To him Mackay, the "Poet of the People," made answer:

"What thou shalt do to be forever known?
Poet or statesman, look with steadfast gaze,
And see yon giant Shadow 'mid the haze,
Far off, but coming. Listen to the moan
That sinks and swells in fitful undertone,
And lend it words, and giv the shadow form;
And see the Light, now pale and dimly shown,
That yet shall beam resplendent after storm.
Preach thou their coming, if thy soul aspire
To be the foremost in the ranks of fame.
Prepare the way, with hand that will not tire,
And tongue unfaltering, and o'er earth proclaim
The Shadow the ROUSED MULTITUDE; the cry,
'JUSTICE FOR ALL!' the Light, TRUE LIBERTY."

Mr. Bennett was a man of the people. Through all the shams and falsities of the age, he saw the approach of a time when the noblest title and ambition of any one would be simply to be a man. Thus inspired, he labored night and day to spread the light, and make straight the path before the coming redeemer of mankind. His voice has been that of one crying in the wilderness. The learned and rich hav ignored and often despised him, but the common people hav heard him gladly. All over the land his paper has come as a messenger of light, a ray of hope to thousands. Such a work as that which he has done is prophetic. The high ecclesiastical dignitaries of the church may think it amounts to nothing, because largely lacking in the refinements of literary excellence and scholarship. Nevertheless, it means from twenty to thirty thousand people who flout their thunder and laugh at all their theological scarecrows. Not that this is the whole army of Freethinkers, but simply one regiment. Let them also remember that, though their power is sustained by the rich, it is only that the people may be kept submissiv by the use of their spiritual sugar plums. Let the common people be once thoroughly enlightened, and there shall be no more priests. Their real work was long since done. They are no longer light-bearers, but extinguishers. Great reforms of necessity work from the bottom of society up to the top.

The people know that when reason triumphs over superstition, and science over theology, the opportunities of education and refinement will be equalized. Not having been trained like most clergymen to read the dead languages for the purpose of preaching a dead religion, they rejoice to receive as a teacher a plain, blunt man, who, though lacking many of the graces, could yet speak right out and tell them that which they themselvs do know is so. Why do people love to read what they know already? Because it satisfies the deepest desire of their hearts to hav some one giv expression to that which they know is true. But Mr. Bennett not only revealed to them what they already felt and thought, but also what they wanted to know. He was to them an interpreter. He put into plain and blunt Saxon the conclusions of the best scholarship. He brought within the reach of the people that which the educated clergy had long been enjoying in the privacy of their studies, but never daring to proclaim from their pulpits. His activity in this field of labor is marvelous. The number of books he wrote and published is a proof of the most untiring industry. To hav accomplished the amount of labor he did is a positiv proof that he was temperate in everything but work. No man living for purely selfish motivs would hav ever toiled so incessantly for such poor reward. The reward of a Liberal publisher is as yet a most precarious one. Nothing but a spirit of self-sacrifice could hav inspired such a course of life. It is only a few weeks since he saw his way clear to rent sufficient room in which to carry on his business. The last time I saw him his face was beaming with the satisfaction this gave him. His life was one long climb up the steep sides of the mountain of difficulty. Just as he reached the summit, and was prepared to enjoy a wider prospect, an easier path, the sleep of death overtook the tired traveler; and he, who in his journey around the world had so often stopped at some wayside inn, entered the grave—

"The port of rest from troublous toil,
The world's sweet inn from pain and wearisome turmoil."

As a soldier, scarred with the brunt of many a fierce conflict for truth and liberty, he has entered

"That low, green tent
Whose curtain never outward swings."

He, whose eager mind has so often like Hamlet's essayed to solve the mystery of life and unknit its tangled yarn, now either knows or does not care to know the answer to the great riddle. Though he has often "unpacked his heart with words," yet for him

"The rest is silence."

I believe that Mr. Bennett entertained an expectation of another life. Still, the general character of his work was measured by the sage words of Thoreau to Parker Pillsbury: "One world at a time, Parker." It would be unbecoming to stand above his grave wearying our hearts with the question: "If a man die, shall he liv again?" The constant lesson of his life was an echo to the thought of Buddha:

"Pray not. The Darkness will not brighten. Ask Nought from the Silence, for it cannot speak."

If the hope he cherished, born of his own experience, never to be thrust dogmatically on anyone else, is now realized, and death has proved only a new birth, he will regret no moment in which he forgot to cherish it by trying to leave this world a little more worth the living in. Whether he sleeps the death that knows no waking, or has already waked to greet a brighter day and wider field of labor, the lesson is still the same. All our thought and love are needed here and now. Death to us is the antipodes of life, and "not all the preaching since Adam has made death other than death."

The French hav a proverb that is the same as to say in English: "When one is dead, it is for a long time." This is often used by them as a justification of taking as much good out of life as they can. This is wise, when pleasure is taken in its largest, broadest meaning. To seek the truth, to do the right, and make our lives the expression of the highest beauty of nature, is the way to experience the most joy. Longfellow expressed this thought in a nobler spirit than the French proverb:

"Not enjoyment and not sorrow
Is our destined end or way;
But to act that each to-morrow
Find us further than to-day.

"Let us, then, be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate;
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait."

But, when we hav done and said all, death is death. To hearts freshly riven by its cruel robbery, poetry and philosophy are dry as dust. How gladly we would all send to the stricken woman whose hearthstone has been so lately left lonely and desolate a bouquet of words that should soothe her sorrow like these sweet flowers before me, blooming in winter, brought here as symbols of the flowers of liberty and truth that hav blossomed in many a wintry life, as beneath the rays of the light he spread, the snows of superstition and icy fetters of dogmatism hav melted from their hearts! But no words I can utter will break the silence of that voice, which, however loud to others, was to her very low and soft. If I could repeat the most beautiful words of all the poets, the most thrilling words of all the orators, the wisest words of all the sages, they could not restore the warm and tremulous kiss of life and love to those cold and silent lips. Nor could they, nor should they, dry her tears. To know that we hav met here with the simple desire to do honor to the memory of him she loved will break the darkness, if anything can. Words are poor shallow things in the presence of death The love of true hearts ever speaks louder in deeds than words. The eyes that are soft and tremulous with its light, the warm clasp of the hand though unaccompanied with words, carry in such an hour more comfort than the most eloquent speech. I know there is a feeling that at such a time as this something must be said, or that the very stones will cry out. Under this feeling, in olden times, it was customary to hire professional mourners to go about the streets and howl and cry. Even in our time there are many people, especially the Irish, who hold wakes or gatherings where friends seek to express in loud lamentations and weird chants their sorrow and grief.

Those who believe in the Christian religion hav various ceremonies that are adapted to this end. But I can no longer speak as a priest. In the presence of death, my eyes are too dimmed with tears to see aught beyond. The very fact that we must all suffer such losses—"for who hath not lost a friend?"—and that all who are born must die, makes it utterly impossible for me to believe in the Christian dogmas. With Confucius, I hav to say, "Knowing so little of life, what can I know of death?" To attempt to console anyone with false hopes, or to offer them a sympathy that is ghostly and unreal, would be to make a mockery of grief and an auction of consolation. Human life is one long fellowship of sorrow mingled, fortunately, with joy, or our poor hearts would break almost as soon as they commence to feel. As day and night follow each other, so do joy and sorrow alternate across the sky of every human life. To explain and reconcile these two to each other has been the chief problem of all philosophy and religion in the history of the world. But, from all the past, the only distinct utterance that reaches us to-day is that it is unexplainable. Shakspere makes Ophelia say, "We know what we are, but we know not what we may be." To his penetrating intellect death was an undiscovered country, from whose bourne no traveler returns. It is neither this silence nor any fond hope of a happy future that givs death its sharpest sting. But those dreadful dogmas taught by the Christian church, of an angry God, a malignant fiend and eternal hell—these horrible illusions, born of savage ignorance and fear—hav made death among Christians more terrible than in any other part of the world. Orthodox theology casts a dark shadow upon the brightest day of life; but from the night of grief it bursts like a thunderbolt, to blast and destroy the noblest minds with insanity. But for these superstitions of the past we should not fear that which follows death any more than that which precedes birth. Death itself we need not fear. As Shakspere also says, "the sense of death is most in apprehension;" and Feuerbach, "Only before death, but not in death, is death."

"Hearts of dust do not break." The eyes that are shut forever are closed to the tears of sorrow as well as to the light of life. Welcome to each troubled soul must be the gentle waves that lave the shadowy shore of the Silent Land. To reappear in the grass or flowers, or even to be a part of the dust that makes up the highway along which living feet run on errands of mercy and justice, is a million times better than to wail in hell, or sit with folded hands in heaven. If there is another world, a life beyond this, it must be better than this. But to all who ask us what we believe here, all our experience bids us answer, Nothing. To our gaze no one has yet peeped from behind this curtain of the dark; and so, though I hav already quoted them, I will close with the final words of Hamlet, as he breathed his last in the arms of his dear friend Horatio—

"The rest is silence."

A Letter from William McDonnell.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Inclosed I send you $1.50 for Vol. IV. of "A Truth Seeker Around the World," and one dollar toward the Bennett Monument Fund. One dollar may be thought a small amount for such a purpose, but it is quite sufficient, with what has been already subscribed, if it is merely intended to erect at the grave of our departed brother a simple monument to mark his resting-place. If, however, it is the desire of his friends in New York to follow the usual ostentatious course, and put up a towering shaft, costly statue, or emblems of sorrow in polished marble, I think that the money expended for such a purpose will be simply wasted. Millions of dollars which might hav been put to far better use hav been lavished in such a way.

At the time of Prince Albert's death in England, application was made to the Canadian public for a subscription toward the erection of the "Albert Memorial," more than £60,000 ($300,000) having been at that time already subscribed in Great Britain. Being assistant editor of a paper at that time, in an article under the caption of "Monuments and Misery," among other things—as the remarks may hav an application at the present time—we then said:

"It is but justice and sound policy that the memory of public benefactors—the great and the good—should be preserved, but too often the manner of so doing is, we think, very absurd, and, to a certain extent, a great waste of public money. We entirely agree with those who assert that if towering and mighty monuments are necessary, let them not be as mere gilded or tawdry incubi on the face of the earth, let not the costly building material be piled up for mere show and ornamentation, but let the structure be as far as possible the material representation of what was the goodness and benevolence of the individual to whose memory it has been erected. There is no humanity in a block of granit. Sculpture it, and shape it as you will, it is still granit, hard and impenetrable, affording neither refuge to man or beast, nor a place of shelter for the birds of the air. In all ages vast sums of money were wasted to perpetuate the memory of so-called great men. Millions were no doubt forcibly extracted to rear up the Egyptian pyramids, and in the course of their erection thousands of lives were sacrificed in loading the desert with mountains of masonry to protect the carcasses of dead kings, and to prove to us in modern times the great conceptions of ancient architects. Greece and Rome and other nations, ancient and modern, followed this course of extravagance, and while all seemed intent on making dead heroes liv again, the living heroes were too often forgotten, and many, very many, left the prey of want and misfortune.

"It is even thus at the present day. A cry is heard of great distress in England. The war in the United States (then the war of the Rebellion) has deprived hundreds of operatives of their only means of making a living. Husbands and mothers and tender children are without food and proper shelter, and pitiful appeals in their behalf hav already reached us in Canada, and, strange to say, coupled almost with this appeal are earnest solicitations for money to make an oblelisk for the late husband of the queen weightier on the earth and higher in the heavens.

"As before intimated, we think the late prince is deserving of the grateful remembrance of the British people. Let him hav a monument, but let it be one which will make his memory still more dear to all. St. Paul's Cathedral in London is the monument of its architect, Sir Christopher Wren. Let the Prince Albert monument be still more beneficial; let it be a public edifice, chaste and beautiful in design, but deep and wide, and high enough to be a home for the homeless and a place of refuge for the weary and distressed of the great metropolis. In this manner can the memory of the late prince be honored and preserved; in this way a noble monument can be erected without waste or misapplication of money, and by such means will the memory of the just be ever made 'more blessed.'"

In this manner, then, let us giv our departed friend Bennett a suitable monument. There are, I believe, more than one million of Freethinkers, Secularists, or Infidels in the state of New York alone. Even a dollar each from one-fourth of the number of these would giv you a splendid fund for the erection of a grand temple, in which Freethought principles could be advocated and explained. I shall be happy to subscribe at least twenty dollars for such a purpose. Let the temple be "sacred to the memory" of him who has so lately left us, and be called the "Bennett Memorial." In this way let us keep in remembrance the services, as well as the sufferings, of a kind, able, but unassuming man, who, taking him all in all, had as few faults as any man I ever knew.

Yours very truly, W. McDonnell.

Lindsay, Ont., Dec. 26, 1882.

We agree with Mr. McDonnell in what he says. It is not proposed to waste thousands of dollars in such purpose. But the monument to Mr. Bennett should be one of which his friends may feel proud. In Greenwood there are hundreds of splendid monuments, and the place is visited by thousands. Where Mr. Bennett sleeps is on one of the most frequented avenues, and hundreds view it weekly. There should be a substantial railing around the lot and a handsome monument, so that all his friends can point to it with pride, and none can say that he is forgotten in death. The world will respect his memory more if it sees he has friends who mark his resting-place with at least as much care and love as are paid to men of far less worth.

In Memoriam.

MARY MILLSPAUGH.

Another of the few precious, brave souls passed out of its earthly casket early on Tuesday morning, Jan. 2d, 283. This event was the departure of Mrs. Mary Millspaugh, of Joliet, Ill. Had she remained till next May she would hav attained her 62d year. Our friend Mary had not been at all well for a long time, and the sudden death of her last and only son by a railroad accident early last season in Minnesota was so severe a shock to her nervous system, and loving, motherly nature, that she never rallied afterward.

She was a woman much above the average in mental ability, and in all that pertained to rational liberty and freedom from superstition her name was widely known, and almost universally respected. Though a radical of the radicals, her method of presentation was always agreeable. On no occasion, however, did she shirk a duty or compromise a truth. She was always fearless and outspoken. Every radical, from B. F. Underwood to T. C. Leland, found a cordial welcome at her home. Brothers D. R. Burt and W. S. Bell will bear me witness regarding her generous devotion to truth and duty, as well as to her sweet, womanly ways and hospitable disposition. Through all the persecution of Brother Bennett and others by the Comstock tribe, and the defection of pretended friends, her clear mind and true heart saw the truth as it was, and among the tried and true in those dark hours none were more faithful than Sister Millspaugh. Our good Sister Elmina, with whom she corresponded, will appreciate all I affirm in regard to this grand, noble woman.

She was a firm believer in Spiritualism, and was ever ready to giv a reason for the hope and confidence she entertained. She was a Liberal of the truest type, and never offensivly obtruded her convictions unnecessarily. She lent a willing ear to all questions that concerned human well-being, and did not think aught too sacred for investigation or discussion that it was all important human beings should understand.

She was a great power for good, and we all were conscious that to her there were no such words as despair or failure. In every sense she was an unwavering devotee to truth and justice, and whether in this or succeeding spheres she was conscious that truth would be triumphant.

A. H. Laing, pastor of the Universalist church in Joliet, spoke over her remains at the house, and what he said was a fitting tribute of honest truth regarding her character and convictions. The many in attendance, most of whom hav known her for many years, were gratified with the justice of the remarks. The singing and selections were very fine. Mr. Laing is one among the few ministers whose breadth and generosity are an honor to all that is noble in the mind and heart. He is a man of the largest sympathies, an original thinker, and eminently just.

Our friend, Isaac Millspaugh, who was the worthy companion of the departed, has the most sincere sympathies and well wishes of the community.

G. Lynn.

New Calendar Festivals.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I hav already, in the columns of the Universe, paid loving tribute to the memory of the immortal founder of The Truth Seeker. It seems to me a fitting moment has come for linking the names of the immortals Bruno and Bennett together, the first and last great martyrs of Freethought. That moment will be on the coming 16th of February, e.m. 283, and the occasion will be the Festival of the New Calendar. We will hav a festival and Bruno celebation in this city. Would it not giv a grand impulse to the cause of universal mental liberty if such festivals were held throughout the entire country? We must keep green the memories of the heroic souls who hav suffered for freedom.

Byron Adonis.

San Francisco, Jan. 3, 283.

Communications.

Approximate Limits of Paul's Life.

The limits of Paul's life are quite as uncertain as those of the other apostles, or of their mythical master. It is just as might be expected, with nothing to rely on but legendary and homiletic literature. Theologians hav had to construct the life of Paul almost entirely out of the book of Acts, whose false chronology has perplexed and bewildered them from the time of Eusebius till now.

To illustrate this bewilderment, we will take two of the most prominent events in Paul's life, namely, his conversion and his imprisonment at Rome. Before us is a table of dates compiled by Canon Farrar from twenty-six leading authorities, ancient and modern. To these we hav added eight more, including Davidson, Rabbi Wise, Smith's Bible Dictionary, and McClintock & Strong's Religious Cyclopedia (just completed). We will now giv the number of the above authorities in favor of each particular date:

PAUL'S CONVERSION.

A. D. 30.....1	A. D. 36.....1	A. D. 42.....1
" 31.....1	" 37.....5	" 35 or 38.....1
" 32.....0	" 38.....4	" 37 or 38.....2
" 33.....2	" 39.....1	" 37 to 41.....1
" 34.....3	" 40.....3	" 50.....1
" 35.....4	" 41.....0	No date.....3

PAUL'S ARRIVAL AT ROME.

A. D. 56.....2	A. D. 60.....2	A. D. 64.....0
" 57.....1	" 61.....13	" 65.....1
" 58.....1	" 62.....5	No date.....3
" 59.....1	" 63.....5

It is Rabbi Wise who dates Paul's conversion A.D. 50, and his arrival at Rome A.D. 65 (Orig. of Chris., pp. 500, 509).

The first appearance of Paul in the book of Acts is at the stoning of Stephen, and his last appearance is at Rome. The first event is variously dated from A.D. 29 to 41, the last from 56 to 65, making an intervening period of not less than fifteen nor more than thirty-six years. At the stoning of Stephen he is introduced as "a young man consenting to his death." In the probably genuin epistle to Philemon, supposed to hav been written A.D. 62 or 63, he calls himself "Paul the aged." It is therefore conjectured that he was born between A.D. 0 and 5, and died in 67 or 68, aged 62 to 68 years (Smith's Bib. Dic.).

But now, in the light of our discovery, let us see what limits we may assign to Paul's life. He was at Damascus twice after his conversion, and the interval between appears to hav been three years or more (Gal. i, 17, 18). If his escape and flight from the city was at the second visit, it might hav been as late as 63 B.C. Paul says he was a persecutor before he became a believer in the Messiah (Gal. i, 13). So prominent a persecutor, it is conceded, could hardly hav been less than 30 years of age. Now, if he was an unbeliever at 30, he was doubtless at least 33 when he fled from Damascus 63 B.C. or earlier. Therefore, we cannot date his birth later than 96 B.C.; and, allowing him to be only 65 when he called himself "Paul the aged," he must hav written the epistle to Philemon as late as 31 B.C. But the presumption is that he was born before 96 B.C., and that he escaped from Damascus before 63 B.C. Three years later, and again after fourteen years, he went to Jerusalem (Gal. i, 18; ii, 1). It is therefore pretty certain that he was in his prime from 63 to 46 B.C. How much longer he lived we may not be able to discover; but we suspect he did not die before the year 20 B.C.

DID PAUL KNOW GREEK?

Our English New Testament professes to be "translated out of the original Greek." This is a false pretense. A Galilean carpenter's son could not hav spoken Greek, nor could his illiterate apostles hav acquired it in their lifetime so as to be able to write it well. That language was scarcely even understood by the best Jewish scholars of Palestine up to the close of the first century; for when Josephus, in the year 93, and at the age of 55, translated his "Antiquities" from the Aramaic into Greek, he said it was "a difficult thing to translate our history into a foreign and to us an unaccustomed language" (preface); and again at the end of the work: "I hav so long accustomed myself to speak our own tongue that I cannot pronounce Greek with sufficient exactness, for our nation does not encourage those that learn the languages of many nations" (Ant. xx, 11, § 2).

How unlikely, therefore, that Paul, whether he was born 135 or only 35 years before Josephus, could hav spoken or written Greek! Indeed he had no need of it, for his hearers were only in part gentiles, and those gentiles, as we shall show, were for the most part Aramaeans, who spoke the same vernacular that Paul did.

We will not here repeat the opinions of eminent Christian authorities that the Peshito or Syriac New Testament is almost a literal reproduction of what Jesus spoke and what his disciples wrote in the original Aramaic tongue. The gist of those opinions we hav given in chapter vi. of our "Life of Simon Kepha," taken from the appendix to Dr. Murdock's translation of the Syriac New Testament. But we will here quote what the author says with particular reference to Paul:

"J. A. Bolten (in his German translation of the epistles, with notes; Altona, 1800) maintains that nearly all the epistles must hav been first composed by the apostles in Aramaean, their nativ tongue, and then committed by them to some Grecizing companions (e. g., Titus, Timothy, Tertius, Sosthenes, etc.), by whom they were translated into Greek before their publication. And Bertholdt (Einleitung, § 46, vol. i, pp. 148–154) accedes to and defends this opinion. And he thinks that after due reflection the learned world will generally come into it."

The first appearance of the Syriac New Testament is parallel with the Greek and Latin versions—near the end of the second century. It seems as if they were all published together. But as early as A.D. 138 to 142 Marcion was at Rome with Paul's epistles (excepting those to Timothy and Titus), and Marcion came from Pontus, which adjoined Galatia, in Asia Minor, where Paul preached to Aramaeans in their own tongue. Prior to A.D. 150 what do we know of church history? "All that occurred in the latter part of the first century," says Dr. Murdock, "is almost as little known as the events before the flood." And "Antichrist" will add: Nor do we know anything more of what occurred in the first half of that century, or the first half of the next. The history of the Christian religion really begins with Justin, in the middle of the second century, who never mentions Paul nor quotes a passage from his epistles. Marcion, the Gnostic, appears to hav had them all to himself at that time.

And now, to prove that Paul had little to do with the Greeks, we will note the remarkable fact that in the Syriac version of his epistles the word "Greek" occurs but once, while in the Greek version it occurs thirteen times. We will first quote the one instance from the Syriac:

"And I wish you to know, my brethren, that I hav many times desired to come to you (though prevented hitherto), that I might hav some fruit among you also, even as among other gentiles, Greeks, and barbarians, the wise and the unwise" (Rom. i, 13, 14).

In every other instance where the Greek version has Hellen (Greek) the Syriac has Armna (Aramaean), to wit:

Jews or Aramaeans (Rom. i, 16; 1 Cor. xii, 13).
Jews and Aramaeans (Rom. ii, 9, 10; iii, 9; 1 Cor., i, 22, 23, 24).
Jews nor Aramaeans (Rom. x, 12; Gal. iii, 28; Col. iii, 11).
Titus . . . was an Aramaean (Gal. ii, 3).

Is it not apparent that the original text has been tampered with either by the Greek translator or by later scribes?

And now let us take the book of Acts, which purports to hav been written by Luke, who is believed to hav been a companion of Paul during his travels, especially the latter part. This we will not controvert, but the whole book is evidently a piece of patchwork by a later hand, and the original text has been tampered with more than any other book of the New Testament, as is evident from the various readings of the different codices.

In the Syriac version of Acts the word Greek occurs eight times; in the Greek version sixteen times.

The use of the word was doubtless necessary in the following instances:

The Grecian disciples (Acts vi, 1).
And he proceeded to the country of Greece (xx, 2).
Dost thou [Paul] know Greek? (xxi, 37.)

Nor do we question the necessity of using the word in two other passages, though there may be some doubt as to the truth of the statements.

And he [Paul] disputed with those Jews who understood Greek (ix, 29), or as in the Greek codex, "disputed with the Hellenists."

And there were some of those from Cyprus and from Cyrene who went up to Antioch and spoke to the Greeks, and preached concerning our Lord Jesus (xi, 20).

But in the other three instances we hav great doubt of the facts as stated, to wit:

And many of the Jews and of the Greeks [at Antioch in Pisidia] believed (xiv, 1).

And some of them [at Thessalonica] believed and adhered to Paul and Silas, and of the Greeks who feared God a great many (xvii, 4).

And many of them [the Jews at Berea] believed, and so likewise of the Greeks many men and women of note (xvii, 12).

Doubtless there were some Greek proselytes to Judaism in many a Greek or Macedonian city where the Jews had a synagog, as in Thessalonica and Berea; but it does not appear that there was more than one synagog in each of those cities, and certainly it is an exaggeration to say that "a great many" of these Greek proselytes out of a little synagog were converted by Paul's preaching three Sabbath days.

When on the day of Pentecost there were gathered at Jerusalem "persons who feared God, Jews from all nations under heaven," we do not find among the dozen nations or countries named a single original Greek country. Hence we infer that Greek converts were very few at first. But this will appear more clearly hereafter.

But now note the tampering with the original text by the Greek translator of Acts, or by later scribes. In the following passages the Greek version has Hellen (Greek) where the Syriac has Aramaean or "profane."

His [Timothy's] father was an Aramaean. . . . For they all knew that his father was an Aramaean (Acts xvi, 1, 3).

And he [Paul] spoke in the synagog [at Corinth] every Sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the profane. . . . And all the profane laid hold on Sosthenes, an elder of the synagog, and smote him before the judgment seat (xviii, 4, 17).

Both Jews and Aramaeans heard the word of the Lord. . . . And this became known to all the Jews and Aramaeans who resided at Ephesus (xix, 10, 17).

I testified to Jews and to Aramaeans (xx, 21).

The Jews from Asia . . . laid hands on him [Paul], crying out and saying . . . he hath also brought Aramaeans into the temple, and hath polluted this holy place (xxi, 28).

The fraudulent substitution of Greeks for Aramaeans in the above passages is quite evident; and in one instance where the Syriac has "the profane" (xviii, 17) the oldest Greek codices omit Hellenes, showing that that is a more recent corruption.

It appears therefore from the Syriac version that in the only instance in which Paul mentions the Greeks he says, "other gentiles, Greeks and barbarians;" that elsewhere he always couples Jews with Aramaeans; that what offended the Jews of Asia Minor was his introduction into the temple at Jerusalem of Aramaeans, not Greeks; and that neither Timothy nor Titus was a Greek, but both were Aramaeans. Hence it is apparent that his converts were mostly Jews and Aramaeans. So that even if he was able to speak or write Greek as well as Josephus could, he had little or no use for that language. The Jews and Aramaeans, though settled in Greek cities, naturally adhered to their own mother tongue, and used the foreign one only as the necessities of trade compelled them. ANTICHRIST.

The Prohibition Problem.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I find in your issue of Dec. 9th a reply from E. C. Walker to a short communication from me published in the 11th of November number of THE TRUTH SEEKER. I wish to congratutate the saloonists, blood-tubs, plugulies, shoulder-hitters and their aiders, abettors, and associates, that they hav in Mr. Walker so able an advocate. If he fails to make a case for them it is not because of the want of craftiness, or ability to present the most attractiv view of their side of the case, or to hide, cover up, and befog the issue with sophistry and worn-out apologies of blear-eyed politicians, but because of the want of tenable ground to stand upon. Mr. Walker, being the valiant champion of freedom, is astonished that "they (the prohibitionists) cannot understand that men and women are virtuous only as they are free." Maybe he can explain, so we need not longer grovel in the dark, how it was that Jesse James, when he broke away from the restraint of all law, became eminently virtuous. His virtues culminated in shooting and robbing his brother man and appropriating his possessions to his own use, and he plied his vocation with an energy that must hav been pleasing to Mr. Walker, and demonstrated to him the futility of restraint and the necessity of perfect freedom. Mr. Walker talks flippantly of the "common blunders" and "wild statements" of Prohibitionists, but fails to discover how naturally these chickens roost on his own perch. He says, "Not one man in five thousand becomes a drunkard;" "not one glass in a million produces a crime," and then caps the climax by declaring he has no desire to belittle the belief in the evil effects following the use of alcoholic liquors. He would hav us believe Noah's flood was not much of a shower; that the conflagration that consumed Rome was not much of a fire; that the overwhelming waves of intemperance which submerge men, women, and children in the dead sea of degradation and want by the millions, are nothing when compared to the evils of eating warm biscuits and chewing gum. "Not one man in five thousand becomes a drunkard." I am disposed to be liberal, and grant for the sake of the argument that there is only one man in the great state of Iowa who is a confirmed drunkard. Now the question is, who shall decide this question of prohibition, the sober people of Iowa, or this maudlin inebriate? The state wants prohibition; Mr. Walker wants freedom, that he may be virtuous. The fewer there are who desire alcoholic liquors the less number will be interfered with by prohibition. The more there are, the more necessity for enforcing it, even though it does infringe upon their virtuous proclivities. Mr. Walker thinks the best way to keep the cattle out of mischief is to throw the fence down. Because they hav broken through every barrier he could erect, he now proposes to tear away all obstructions and giv them unrestrained liberty. I would recommend to either kill off the offensiv herd and introduce an improved breed of cattle, or tie up or confine in stanchions the breachy ones. The same subterfuge is resorted to here that pro-slavery men employed against Abolitionists: "Not one slave in five thousand was abused, and that one only because of the meddlesome interference of the Abolitionists;" "Coercion can never liberate the slave." The same claim is now made for drunkenness. Coercion has enforced the one, and in due time will probably accomplish the other.

Mr. Walker is so combativ that in his zeal to make a thrust at me he wounds only himself. He with one fell dash of his pen knocks the last prop from under his own platform. If alcohol has no medical properties, as Mr. Walker claims, and is useless in the preparation of medicin, the last excuse for its manufacture and sale is annihilated. Like the man in a tree who sawed off the only limb he stood upon—he never realized the cream of the joke until he struck the ground. My experience has been so very different from Mr. Walker's that we are very wide apart in our conclusions. It is impossible to overdraw the picture of suffering and want, agony and despair, crime and cruelty, degradation and death, produced by alcoholic liquors, and I hav no desire to belittle or cover up these results, but choose rather to call the attention of mankind to the imperativ necessity of applying proper remedies for this malady. Mr. Walker, on the other hand, manifests an insane desire to act in the opposit direction, and resorts to the old device of trying to divert attention from the real point at issue by calling to mind every other unimportant and irrelevant evil that has not the most distant bearing upon the question. The claim of Prohibitionists remains unanswered. The right of the majority to rule is inherent in our government. When the majority conclude that the good of the community, the safety of life and property, demand prohibition, they probably will enforce it. The right to do so is based upon the right of self-protection. I might with more truth assert that not one glass of liquor in a thousand drank but what impairs in some degree the happiness of others, than appears in most of Mr. Walker's declarations and assumptions. More women and children are suffering torture, privations, and abuse, and are in more abject slavery caused by the use of alcoholic liquors, than from all other causes.

"African slavery" and "alcoholic slavery" are twin brothers, but one has unfortunately outlived the other. We hope ere long to see them both moldering in one grave, which would soon come to pass could the liquor advocates be made to suffer all the tortures that women and children suffer continually from this cause. Because so many men under the influence of liquor entail so much suffering upon the innocent, and so much expense to society, is sufficient reason why we should adopt efficient measures to protect the injured and disarm the guilty, Mr. Walker to the contrary notwithstanding, and it is futil to claim it cannot be done, for where there is a will there is a way, and it is no argument to say that because former experiments in some degree hav failed, success can never be attained. To me the future is full of hope and promis. I say to Prohibitionists be of good cheer; the bright sun of reform will yet gladden the sight of every oppressed child of earth, and the heart of our erring brother in Iowa be made glad. I am not unmindful of Mr. Walker's usefulness in the great field of reform. I hope never to forget the manly stand he took, and the efficient aid he rendered, in the Chicago Convention, when we had the resolutions under disscussion relativ to the Comstock postal laws. I hope to entertain always, as I now do, the most kindly feelings toward Mr. Walker, and that we may both yet be made to see the truth and be able to work for it, and for the greatest good of the greatest numbers. It is because I feel deeply the necessity of all Liberals taking the side of the oppressed, rather than the defense of the rum-holes of the country, that I engage in this controversy. The readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER will bear witness that I hav not often occupied much of their time or space with my pen, and I should not now only for the importance of the subject under discussion.

Mr. Walker's Liberalism is so over-strained, it is like the tree that stood so straight up it leaned badly the other way. He abandons the green fields of temperance and reform for the cesspools of debauchery and crime. It is not "because one man under the influence of liquor kills another, thus entailing suffering upon the innocent and expense upon society," as Mr. Walker claims, that I favor prohibition; but because so many millions of men are doing worse than this, and millions of their victims are calling for help to break the chains that bind them, and liberate them from the dead weight of living corpses which they are bound to. Women are the greatest sufferers, and could they be allowed their inalienable right to a vote upon this subject, Mr. Walker's right to drink and be virtuous would be seriously interfered with very soon. I am disgusted to see Liberalism beslimed over with the filth of all the cesspools and sinks of vice in the land, and the rum-holes finding champions among Liberals to do their dirty work for them.

THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 16th inst. has just arrived, and I am very thankful to Mr. J. H. Lydiard and D. D. Lake for the clear, ringing notes they hav sent through this number in their earnest protests against Mr. Walker's sophistry. We all feel deeply the loss of the great champion of human rights—D. M. Bennett. He has been called from his labor here on earth in the full tide of his usefulness, crowned with immortal honors, to where bigotry and superstition, envy and malice, can no more molest, imprison, or injure him. Thanks to his friends who hav sustained him in his afflictions. GEO. GAGE.

Osborne, Kan.

Gambetta.

From the London Freethinker.

Freethinkers can claim Gambetta as one of themselvs. He never entered a church even at the burial of a friend, and he publicly professed himself a disciple of Voltaire. He called Comte the greatest thinker of the nineteenth century, and most of his intimate friends were Atheists or Positivists. It was he who uttered the famous word, "Clericalism, there is the enemy." He helped to drive the priest from the schools, to secularize education, to cripple the power of the higher clergy. But he was too sagacious to propose the immediate separation of church and state, unlike M. Clemenceau and his friends, who are anxious to tear them apart at once. Gambetta knew that Catholicism is still a great power in France, and that while its dignitaries might be tied down and its unauthorized orders expelled, it would only provoke a religious reaction if the poor rural clergy were molested. He saw that by secularizing education, and bringing girls as fully as boys under its influence, the future was assured to Freethought. His enemies called this Opportunism. The name is a compliment. The extreme Reds, who are no better Freethinkers than Gambetta, and worse politicians, may hav a chance of trying their Inopportunism; and it will be strange if they do not set France by the ears, and defeat their own object after all.

Gambetta said, in 1871, at St. Quentin: "Yes, I am a votary of Freethought. I put nothing on a level with human science." Less than two years ago he presided at a lecture by the famous Atheist, M. Paul Bert, and in a brief introductory speech he defined religion as simply "the bond between man and man." He died without any of the "consolations" of Christianity. Knowing that he would soon breathe his last, he said, "Well, I hav suffered so much it will be a deliverance." He expressly ordered that he should be buried without religious rites. This great heroic genius was superior to all the creeds; he saw through them and over them. Gambetta lived and died a Freethinker, like nearly all the great men since Mirabeau and Danton, who hav helped to build up the freedom and glory of France.

Czarism in America.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Determined that I shall not make an honest living for myself and family in the legitimate business of buying and selling railroad tickets at reduced rates—an honorable and respectable business carried on in all the principal cities of the Union, outside of the monopoly-cursed state of Pennsylvania—the latest attempt of the Pennsylvania Railroad tyrants to crush me out of existence, and drive me, if possible, to an asylum, the almshouse, or a suicide's grave, and leave my wife and child to starve or liv upon the cold charity of an unfriendly world, is the arbitrary and shameless exclusion of my paper, the Anti-Monopoly Agitator from the mails, which is virtually a suppression of the paper.

This latest outrage upon the constitutional right of every citizen ought to arouse the indignation of every rational and decent man and woman in America. It is quite enough to fill every honest heart with indignation to witness such tyranny and despotism in what is called free America. Where and by what moral and legal means do our public servants get the authority to crush any publication or publisher they desire?

They get it only by an unlawful and unwarranted exercise of power placed in their hands. The whole business is totally un-American and befitting the tyrants of Europe more than our own so-called free land.

I am a poor man, struggling alone against powerful and bitter enemies. Were I worth a million dollars I would sacrifice every penny of it, if necessary, as cheerfully as I hav repeatedly sacrificed my business and liberty, and the thousands I hav already sacrificed within the past decade, in my single-handed battle against monopolists and tyrants who plunder and oppress the masses.

To the entire people, through the independent and fearless press of America, I appeal for influence that will enable me to obtain my rights and know by judicial authority whether the United States mails belong to the whole people or to a few corrupt monopolists, and if the Philadelphia post-office, in particular, is owned and run in the interest of the Pennsylvania Railroad monopoly.

The allegation of the alleged "Post-Office Department at Washington" that the Agitator is not mailed to a list of "bona-fide subscribers," and that it is "intended for free circulation at nominal rates as an advertising sheet," is a gross falsehood and only a miserable attempt of the so-called "department" to blind the public and justify the outrage so shamefully perpetrated in the interest of the railway monopolists. There is nothing in the Agitator that should exclude it from passing through the mails at second-class rates—the usual rates accorded to publishers—as the following points of fact prove.

1. The Agitator has a regular, bona-fide subscription list—persons who hav paid their money for the paper and desire to receive it regularly.

2. It is not an "advertising sheet," but a newspaper in every sense of the word—except in being an organ of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, as is the usual custom of other Pennsylvania papers!

3. It is not intended for "free circulation," its subscription price being $1 per year, or fifty cents for six months. It is, or rather would be, published regularly every week, if permitted to be so by the government and the Pennsylvania Railroad monopoly.

Notwithstanding these facts, my paper is at present virtually suppressed by the dictation of despots and tyrants, as no publisher on the continent can publish a paper of the size of the Agitator and send it to subscribers at $1 per year, and pay postage at the rate of one cent per copy—twenty times the lawful rate allowed publishers.

If such infamy as this were forced upon all publishers, every paper in America would hav to suspend publication at once, or double the subscription price of their paper.

I hav no doubt the Pennsylvania Railroad monopoly would cheerfully draw its check for $10,000 or more in favor of any postmaster or government official who would use their position and power to unlawfully suppress the Agitator—which is virtually done by denying the Agitator the same mail privileges accorded to all other newspapers.

I appeal to every independent newspaper to publish this statement, and I appeal to every reader of the same who has a desire to aid me in obtaining my rights, of which I hav been so outrageously deprived at the dictation of tyrants, to immediately write to the postmaster of Philadelphia and the postmaster-general at Washington, denouncing the infamy and expressing their indignation at the outrage upon the liberty of the press and the rights of every American citizen.

In defense of free speech, free press, and equal rights for all, I am very truly,

SYLVESTER F. WILSON.

Inherent Potency in Unconscious Matter.

AN OPEN LETTER TO CHAS. E. TOWNSEND.

In THE TRUTH SEEKER of Jan. 6th, in your article "Mind as the First Cause," etc., you concede that your "first hypothesis of the self-acquired and self-possessed potency of unconscious matter would be admitted by science if its adequacy could be explained." Because its adequacy has not yet been explained, shall its existence be denied? Because "science knows no such explanation or adequacy," is it proof that science in the future will not discover such an explanation? Suppose when the rotundity of the earth had first been broached some great scientist had declared that "the hypothesis of the earth's sphericity would be admitted by science if its adequacy could be explained," and added, as a finale, "but science knows no such explanation"—what would that amount to at the present time? The fact of its sphericity has been demonstrated, and its "adequacy explained." There is too much lying in the great womb of futurity undiscovered to permit us to decide against the future revealments of science because "our minds cannot discover or imagin such self-potency" as we think ought to exist in order that a wild (?) hypothesis may become a proven fact.

We think the whole tenor of the article misleading and its conclusions the opposit of truth. Science is unlimited; what is unknown to-day, or but half suspected, to-morrow is a practical fact, and serving our purposes like the submarine cable, aerial telegraph, and telephone. That which was not is, and that which was is improved. Inherent potency may lie in unconscious matter, though science has yet been inadequate to demonstrate the hypothesis. But we are daily looking for that demonstration, though many a learned one denies its possibility.

Washington, D.C., Jan. 7, 283. DOUBTER.

A Rugged Greeting.

From Man.

THE TRUTH SEEKER, "Founded by D. M. Bennett," springs up from his grave with a live editor and a noble woman on its new banner. Mr. Macdonald is a true whelp of the old Lion and is inspired by that Lion's strength and magnanimity—but, if need be, let Jo Cook and the Christian Advocate remember, with that Lion's courage and even ferocity.

The blatant Joseph got a touch of that paw when he and Mr. Bennett were in India together, which, it seems now by his kicks at the dead Lion, must hav hurt badly. Mr. Bennett's successor will giv a good account of these Christian hyenas, we doubt not, and of the accursed system, too, of which they are the worthy ministers. Just keep a watch on THE TRUTH SEEKER, and see! It has gathered its resources, and will be a stronger, better, and brighter paper than ever. Subscribe for THE TRUTH SEEKER, and send it $1 for its Founder's monument now.

The Leader of Atheism.

From the Sunday Morning Mirror.

In the recent death of D. M. Bennett, in New York, the church in America loses one of its most persistent and able opponents. He was the leader of Atheism in the United States.

Communications.

Astro-theology; or, The Key to the Gospels.

BY HUGH BYRON BROWN.

"All things," says the poet Longfellow, "are not what they seem." Few would suspect that this could apply to the simple story of the life of Christ as related in the gospels.

For centuries this simple story has been read and studied by the learned and simple alike, and by both has been implicitly believed to be a truthful account of the sayings and doings of real men and women, and of things that happened on this earth eighteen hundred years ago in an obscure province of the Roman empire. Until the advent of modern criticism no other belief could obtain, or if propounded would have subjected the propounder to the stake, as it did Bruno and others for the assertion of opinions far less heretical.

Even now, at this advanced age of the world, in some countries, and in some parts of our own, the assertion that the gospels can or were intended to mean anything other than what appears on their face would subject the asserter to the suspicion of being either a lunatic or a malignant calumniator of the Christian faith.

In spite, however, of the ridicule of the learned, or the persecution of the spiritual power, the critical spirit of the age has invaded this supposed divine arena, and has subjected it to the same critical examination that other systems of religion and so-called inspired books have been compelled to submit to, which critical study has established the fact that our gospels are not in this regard different from many of the oriental sacred scriptures; and that, like them, they are valuable and interesting to the scientific world more for what they conceal than what they apparently reveal.

The learned of antiquity were always the priests of a religion, who wrote only for the learned of their own profession, and not, as in modern times, for the people. The teachers of early times had quite a different object in view in their writings than the instruction of the masses. They committed their learning, which was principally the secrets and mysteries of their religion, to writing with the intent only that it should be discerned and understood by their own class, and by no others.

This they did by clothing that which they designed to impart with a thin veil of allegory which the simple would translate literally, but through which the learned alone would penetrate to its secret meaning.

And thus it comes that in the process of time, by the overthrow of learning and the decay of religion consequent on invasion and the subversion of empires, the story, if it survives at all, is preserved as tradition, but its true meaning, and the capacity to find the key, are for the time lost.

Maimonides, the wisest of the Jewish rabbis, says of the story of the creation, which remark applies equally to the gospels: "Whosoever shall divine its true meaning ought to take great care in not divulging it. This is a maxim repeated to us by all our sages, principally concerning the understanding of the work of six days. It is possible that somebody, either through himself or by means of the light obtained from others, may succeed to divine its meaning. Then let him be silent, or if he speaks of it let it be done only in as veiled a manner as I do, leaving the remainder to be guessed by those who can hear me." He further adds that "this enigmatical talent was not peculiar to Moses, but he held it in common with all the wise men of antiquity."

Philon, a Jewish writer, held the same opinion of the Hebrew sacred books. In his work entitled "The Allegories," he traces back to the allegorical sense the "tree of life," the "rivers of paradise," and the other fictions of the book of Genesis.

Many of the Christian fathers, surprising as it would seem, make the same confession, notably, Origen and Augustine. The latter, in his "City of God," admits that many in his time regarded the incident of Eve and the serpent, as well as a terrestrial paradise, as only allegorical fictions, which belief he does not object to, provided always that a real history may be found in them also!—a coincidence inexplicable to the modern mind.

The same idea frequently crops out in the gospels themselves, showing conclusively that the writer of the original gospel wrote on this plan; as, for instance, the following: "Therefore speak I to them in parable; that seeing, they may see and not perceive; and hearing, they may hear but not understand." This no doubt will be a startling revelation to many who hear the assertion for the first time, and who will doubtless feel toward the instrument which sweeps away the foundation of their hopes for heaven as the Brahman felt when from a glance through the microscope he saw the utter impossibility of complying with the requirement of his faith (to destroy no living thing), when life swarms everywhere, even in the fruit he eats and the water he drinks!

And is it possible, they will exclaim, that the Christ of the gospels, the twelve disciples, and all the rest of the dramatis personæ, are only personifications of astronomical phenomena, and not real persons who lived and died in Judea? And is this whole story not a veritable history? and are all the hopes of an enternal life, based on the death of the Son of God, only a fiction of the imagination?

Such is the verdict of modern criticism, however unwelcome and startling the revelation may be.

In confirmation of this deduction of modern scholarship, let it be remembered that this simple story of the gospel is not confined alone to the Christian religion—that essential features of it may be traced through all the oriental religions. It appears in the Hindoo mythology, in the Zend books—in the rites of the ancient Druids—in the mythology of Greece and Rome, from whence it was no doubt borrowed from the Essenes, from whose lost gospels ours is a copy.

What, then, can be the significance, and what the origin, of a story which is found to be common to all religions, in every clime and in all ages, unless it be a revelation from the book of nature, which ever lies open to the gaze of men, in which the mysteries of human life lie hidden, and from which the supreme facts of human existence are derived?

In a word, can it be other than the sun in its annual course through the constellations of the heavens, as seen through the highly imaginativ, though unscientific, eyes of the early races of men?

A further confirmation of the astronomical character of this universal story, the foundation of all religions, may be seen even to-day on the stained windows of Trinity church in this city, which was copied from an old English church, which in turn was taken from a Roman church, which was copied from a heathen temple, and on which the four signs of the zodiac, which have ever stood for the four seasons of the year, are associated with the names of the supposed writers of the gospels, namely, Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John—showing incontestably the connection of Christianity with the ancient worship, whose origin was indeed in the heavens; but not in the sense in which blind superstition has taught men to believe.

When we begin to realize the part that the sun plays in the economy of this world—which we can best do by supposing its non-existence, or by comparing the conditions of life and the aspect of nature in high northern latitudes, where he hides his face for a portion of the year, with that of the torrid or temperate zones which continuously bask in his rays—is it any wonder that primitive man should have made it the supreme object of his adoration—the god, the most high, the savior of the world, "the sun of righteous with healing in his wings?" For where in the whole realm of nature could he find another object so grand, glorious, and beneficent? Who can doubt that it was this great source of life and light to which were addressed those rapt ascriptions of praise, found in the Zend books, in the so-called Psalms of David—in fact, in all ancient sacred literature?

I hav said that the results of modern scholarship confirm the astronomic origin of religions, and that the original ideas are modified and changed in accordance with the mental development of the race.

No one can resist this conclusion who has carefully read Dupuis's "Origin of Religious Ideas," and especially the works of Max Muller, in which he so graphically traces the astro-religious fancies and conceptions of the early Aryan races—showing how the "bright gods" (heavenly phenomena) of those early races changed imperceptibly and came to mean to the early Greeks, as also to the later Romans, real veritable celestial personages, having all the characteristics of humanity while presiding over and directing human affairs. And soon this polytheistic conception became transformed into monotheism, with its one supreme god and attending angels and spirits.

Ruskin, also, eminent no less as a scholar than as a painter, attests the truth of this conclusion, and has taught it to his disciples as a principle, without himself applying it to Christianity.

He says in his charming work, "The Ethics of the Dust:"

"Every heathen conception of deity in which you are likely to be interested has three distinct characters. It has a physical character. It represents some of the great powers or objects in nature—sun, or moon, or heavens, or the winds, or the sea. And the fables first related about each deity represent, figuratively, the action of the natural power which it represents, such as the rising and setting of the sun, the tides of the sea, and so on. It has an ethical character, and represents in its history the moral dealings of God with man.

"Thus Apollo is first, physically, the sun contending with darkness; but morally the power of divine life contending with corruption.

"Athena is, physically, the air; morally, the breathing of the divine spirit of wisdom.

"Neptune is, physically, the sea; morally, the supreme power of agitating passion; and so on.

"It has at last a personal character, and is realized in the minds of its worshipers as a living spirit with whom men may speak face to face, as a man speaks to his friend."

Now it is impossible to define exactly how far at any period of a national religion these three ideas are mingled, or how far one prevails over the other. Each inquirer usually takes up one of these ideas and pursues it, to the exclusion of the others—no impartial effort seems to have been made to discern the real state of the heathen imagination in its successive phases. For the question is not at all what a mythological figure meant in its origin, but what it became in each subsequent mental development of the nation interpreting the thought. Exactly in proportion to the mental and moral insight of any race, its mythological figures mean more to it, and become more real. An early and savage race means nothing more (because it has nothing more to mean) by its Apollo than the sun; while a cultured Greek means every operation of divine intellect and justice.

The Neith, of Egypt, meant physically little more than the blue of the air; but the Greek in a climate of alternate storm and calm represented the wild fringes of the storm-cloud by the serpents of her ægis, and the lightning and cold of the highest thunder-clouds by the gorgon on her shield; while morally the same types represented to him the mystery and changeful terror of knowledge, as her spear and helm its ruling and defensive power. And no study can be more interesting, or more useful to you, than that of the different meanings which have been created by great nations and great poets out of mythological figures given them at first in utter simplicity.

To the same effect is the testimony of another of England's great writers, Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, who makes the Egyptian, Arbaces, in "The Last Days of Pompeii," speak as follows:

"This faith [the Christian] is but a borrowed plagiarism from one of the many allegories invented by our priests of old. Observe," he added, pointing to a hieroglyphical scroll, "observe in these ancient figures the origin of the Christian Trinity. Here are also three gods—the deity, the spirit, and the sun. Observe that the epithet of the sun is savior—observe that the sign by which his human qualities are denoted is the cross. Note here, too, the mystic history of Osiris; how he put on death; how he lay in the grave; and how thus fulfilling a solemn atonement, he arose again from the dead. In these stones we but design to paint an allegory from the operations of nature and the evolutions of the eternal heavens. But, the allegory unknown, the types themselves have furnished to credulous nations the materials of many creeds. They have traveled to the vast plains of India; they have mixed themselves up in the visionary speculations of the Greek; becoming more and more gross and embodied as they emerge further from the shadows of their remote origin, they have assumed a human and palpable form in this novel faith; and the believers of Galilee are but the unconscious repeaters of one of the superstitions of the Nile."

In proof that this is the last word of modern scholarship on the origin of religious ideas, we cite the conclusion of Dupuis, than whom there is no greater authority:

"It would appear clearly demonstrated that the universe and its parts, or, in other words, nature and its principal agents, must not only have been worshiped as gods, but that this was actually so, from which there is resulting this necessary consequence, namely, that it is through nature and her members, and through the performance of the physical causes, that the theological system of all ancient nations ought to be explained, that we must look to heaven, to the sun, the moon, the stars, and the elements, if we wish to find the gods of all nations, and to discover them under the veil which allegory and mysticism have thrown over them, be it in order to stimulate our curiosity, or to inspire us with more awe. This worship having been the first, and the most universally employed, is that which bears entirely on the performance of the physical courses, and on the mechanism of the organization of the world. All that which shall receive a reasonable construction considered in that point of view; all that which in the ancient poems on the gods and on the sacred legends of the different nations shall contain an ingenious picture of nature and her operations, must be considered as appertaining to that religion which may be called the universal religion.

"All that which can be explained without difficulty by the physical and astronomical system must be considered as a part of the fictitious adventures which allegory has introduced into the songs of nature. Nothing was worshiped and nothing sung but nature—she alone was portrayed, therefore everything must be explained through her."

If this explanation be the true one, that at bottom all religions (except that of Phallic origin) are one and the same, only disguised under different names, and differently understood by different peoples in different ages and countries, what curious though sad reflections does it not inspire!

It follows that the religious feuds, hatreds, and animosities, from which resulted most of the bloody and desolating wars and massacres which blacken the pages of history from the remotest times down to our own, were all the result of a misconception; that the cause of the hatred of the votaries of one religion against another was not real, and that in reality they were each worshiping the same deity under different names.

How humiliating and sorrowful, to the Christian especially, is the reflection that the holocausts of victims sacrificed in the East by the bigoted zeal of the Crusaders, and still later in the New World by followers of the same religion, were without the shadow of a cause—that the devotional feelings that inspire both to worship something higher was equally sacred, and that the God to whom it was offered was in reality the same. But proofs of our assertions should precede deductions therefrom, which proof we now proceed to give.

The astronomical equivalent of the twelve disciples with and among whom the master (the sun), or the savior, walked becomes apparent even to the uncritical when the terms god, lord, most high, or savior are seen to relate only to the sun, the great object of primitive worship; for what else could they be but the twelve constellations, into which the ancients grouped the stars of the firmament, and through which the sun appears to pass in his annual course.

The key to the astronomical equivalent of the third person in the trinity will be found in a careful analysis of the term Holy Ghost, or gust. Holy is derived from the Greek word helios, god, whose equivalent is sun. Ghost or gust means breath, air, wind. Hence, literally, sun-heated air. Or, in other words, that force in nature that arises from the rarefaction of the air by the heat of the sun, namely, wind, in all its phases, from the gentle zephyr to the terrific cyclone of the Indian Ocean; for observe that in the language of the allegory or gospel, it is termed "a mighty rushing wind," "sent down from above"—a breathing upon, etc. Observe also how closely the language of allegory conforms to the facts of nature, "for," says the text, "the Holy Ghost [or gust] was not yet come, because that Christ [that is, the sun] was not yet glorified;" that is, classified, or, in astronomical language, advanced above the line of the ecliptic. The gist of the matter is that the refreshing winds of summer, in contradistinction to the piercing blasts of winter, cannot take place until the sun arrives at the sign Gemini, or the month of May, which happens at Pentecost, which means fifty days from the crucifixion, which is the allegorical term for the sun's crossing the equinoctial line in March.

With these hints (and this paper proposes only to treat the subject in outline) the detail of the allegory may be easily worked out by those who will.

We come now to the story of John the Baptist, a character not unknown to many of the earlier systems of faith, which we have seen had their origin in natural phenomena. What is the astronomical eqivalent of this character in the gospel allegory? The name usually furnishes the key. It is so in this case. John is doubtless derived from Jan or John-uan, the name of the first month in the year; Baptist meaning to pour or sprinkle water, both of which names serve to identify him with the constellation Aquarius, or the water-bearer, who is represented in the geography of the heavens as pouring a stream of water into the mouth of the great southern fish, who, according to ancient mythology, was swallowed by it, which is doubtless the origin of the story of Jonah and the whale.

To verify the identity of this character with the constellation of Aquarius, the water-bearer, let us see how the position of Aquarius in relation to the sun and its resultant phenomena tallies with and explains the text of the story.

The Baptist represents himself as "one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord [that is, the sun], and make his path straight," adding, "For the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

No words could better describe the office which the constellation Aquarius, from its position in the zodiac, performs for the sun, which it precedes.

The sun crosses the equinoctial line in his ascension at Easter, which denotes a risen savior, and is preceded as a forerunner by the constellation Aquarius, which denotes the rainy or wet season which, in the temperate zone, precedes summer. In the sense of evolution, whereby a higher and better condition of things obtain from the existence of something inferior, so the finer conditions of summer may be said to have been "prepared" or brought about by the existence of the cold and discomfort of the rainy months of winter and spring.

Again says the text, "He that cometh after me is greater than I. . . . He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost [or gust] and with fire." Keeping in mind the astronomical equivalent of the Holy Ghost as before explained, could language better describe the phenomenon resulting from the advance of the sun into the summer solstice?

"He must increase, but I must decrease," says the text of the allegory. What could be more evident than the astronomical fact that, as the forerunner, Aquarius, descends toward the horizon, the sun will "increase," and the days lengthen from the vernal equinox in March until the summer solstice in June?

As the sun advances, the constellation Aquarius (his forerunner) recedes or "decreases" until the twenty-first of August, when he disappears below the horizon, or, in figurative language, he is beheaded by Herod, whose astronomical equivalent is the sun when in the constellation of Leo, who in his advance seems to push Aquarius below the line of the horizon, by which his head is cut off. Such, beyond a doubt, is the original meaning of the story of John the Baptist, the forerunner—"only this, and nothing more."

The next subject in this allegorical drama which requires translation is that of the star of Bethlehem. I need not repeat it, as it is as familiar to every child born of Christian parents as the language he speaks; and not only so, but the story in substance was just as familiar to the priests of the Hindoo, Persian, and Egyptian mythologies as it is to-day to the common people of Christian countries, for you may read it in the Bhagavad-Gita (book of God) of the Hindoos, in the Mythreas of Persia, and in the writings ascribed to Zoroaster, all of which antedate the Christian religion by over a thousand years.

That a story around which cluster so many impossibilities should ever have been taught and believed in a literal sense shows to what depths of credulity the human mind can sink, and to what ignorance and superstition will lead us if once we abandon our reason at the dictation of authority.

Were there then no celestial babe born in a stable and cradled in a manger? no wise men of the East? no Bethlehem? no cruel Herod who sought the life of the young child? no star that stood over the place of its birth? Oh, yes; all of these there were, but in a sense widely different from the literal one which appears to the uncritical eye of the Christian reader. In fact, this story of the star of Bethlehem is simply an astronomical picture in words of the annual procession of the sun through the constellations as seen through the vivid imaginations of the early astronomers, the priests of the oriental religions. The key to it is found in the text of the story, "And this to you shall be a sign." That is, Christ, the Lord, shall be the sign. Which of the signs of the zodiac is here referred to is not difficult to guess when you consider that the subject matter of the story relates to birth and nativity. Could it be any other than the constellation of the harvest—the sign of production, increase, and fullness; in fact, the virgin?

To understand the hidden meaning of the allegory it is only necessary that the astronomical equivalents of the terms used be understood.

By Herod, the king, who is said to be in pursuit of the celestial child to kill him, is meant the ruler or king called Hercules, who is the genius of the preceding constellation. The children whom Herod or Hercules is said to kill are the twins in Gemini, through which it passes in its course, and thus obscures or kills them. This obscuring or killing of the twins of Gemini is the key to the passage in Jeremiah, "In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation, weeping, and great mourning. Rachel weeping for her children because they were not." Rama is the Hindostanee word for zodiac; her children were the twins of Gemini, who are obscured, that is, killed by the passage of the son through Gemini, in the character of Hercules. By Bethlehem Ephratah, where the stable is located in which the child is born, is meant a part of the constellation of the virgin. By the three magi or wise men are meant the three bright stars in the belt of Orion, who, looking toward the east, see the bright star Vindematrix in the elbow of the Virgin just rising above the horizon.

This, then, in brief outline, is the astronomical meaning of the star of Bethlehem. Jesus (the sun) is conceived by the Virgin at the vernal equinox. Nine months thereafter, that is, on December 25th, he is born, is pursued by Hercules, the ruler or king of the preceding constellations, who, in the pursuit, passes through or kills the twins in Gemini. The three conspicuous stars in the belt of Orion are the magi who are watching for the birth of the savior or sun, and see his star Vindematrix as it rises in the East.

Of course the unthinking and the sentimental will continue to see in the gospel story a veritable child, a real mother, and magi of flesh and blood, for these satisfy the feelings and the imagination, while its real astronomical meaning satisfies the intellect only. It is of the same nature as the story of "The House that Jack Built." It is capable of any interpretation that the imagination may conceive. To the child the story means just what he was taught that it meant, and may hav quite a different meaning to other children in different ages and in different religions, yet all equally foreign to the original conception.

The same key that unlocks the hidden meaning of the story of the birth of Christ admits us to the secrets of his crucifixion and resurrection.

A distinguished scientist has said, "Two things excite my wonder and admiration—the moral nature of man, and the starry heavens above us." However the early astronomers may have viewed man's moral nature, they were not excelled by the modern astronomers in the diligence of their study and admiration of the wonders of the firmament on high. That to them was a book replete with wonder and mystery. In it they read many things, some true, others false. Their imaginations supplied the facts which at least in that age could not be disproved, and as the bits of colored glass in the kaleidoscope gives a different design for every change of position, so to the vivid imagination of the early star-gazers the same phenomenon assumed an infinite variety of phases which have crystallized into story and dogma in many ways in different ages and under different names. As before intimated, the phenomenon to which the story of the crucifixion and resurrection relates is the same to which the star of Bethlehem refers, but its interpretation is quite different.

As seen by the inhabitants of the temperate zone, the sun seems to decline, while the days growing shorter and shorter give rise to the fiction of the kingdom of darkness, as opposed to the kingdom of light which prevailed during the part of the year when the sun was above the ecliptic.

On the 25th of December the shortest day is reached. During the three succeeding days no perceptible change in the position of the sun can be detected, during which (in allegorical language) he was said to be dead and buried. The prince of darkness is then said to be triumphant. Soon a change in the position of the sun is observed. Having reached the utmost limit of his orbit, he slowly returns north—the days begin perceptibly to lengthen—hope revives; and by the time he reaches the sign Aries, or the Lamb of God, on the 21st of March, he is said to hav arisen—that is, crossed the line of the ecliptic, conquered the prince of darkness, and ushered in the kingdom of light, or kingdom of heaven.

In allegorical language crucify means crossing, and is derived from the Latin word crux—a cross.

The sun in crossing the equinoctial line in his descent or decrease is said to be crucified, he being then conquered and put to death by the prince of darkness, who is typefied by the darkness and confusion that accompanied the crucifixion. In the interim, while hanging on the cross, which he does until his death on the 25th of December, he suffers agony and is scoffed at by the groups of stars that appear on the horizon from the vernal equinox until December, among which also are those who are in sympathy with him in his decline and suffering.

On the 25th of December he expires and is said to be dead, until the approach of the spring in his return from death and the grave. He reaches the sign Aries, or Lamb of God, when he is said to arise again (which is the signification of Easter) conquers the prince of darkness, ushers in the reign of light or God, and "ascends on high."

It has already been stated that by the diligent study of the heavens the astronomers of early ages had attained great proficiency in the knowledge of the laws of the planetary movements, and where their knowledge ceased their fancy stepped in to supply and account for what could not then be known. It was they, and not the modern astromers, whose vivid imaginations marked out most of the constellations, and grouped and named the principal stars, and associated them with some fancied resemblance to things on the earth—thus things in the heavens came to be only prototypes of things on earth.

If, as is the case, everything referred to in the gospel story is found pictured on the celestial map, then, either they were placed there after the promulgation of the story, or the story was inspired by the previous existence of the things and incidents to which it relates. That the latter is the true solution of the problem is generally conceded by all competent to express an opinion.

Bearing these facts in mind it will not be difficult to translate from theological terms back to its original meaning the conception of the cup of salvation and the bread of life.

Examine any celestial map of the heavens, and at a point a little below the autumnal equinox, and coming before it, as if to catch the precious fruit of the vintage, you shall find, just where you would naturally look for it, the crater, or cup, called the cup of salvation. In a theological sense it has relation to the crucifixion of a personal Christ, and to the shedding of his blood for the salvation of mankind. In the original astronomical sense it has reference to the vintage, and to the juice of the grape, "which maketh glad the heart of man and God."

That the juice of the grape has ever been regarded as a type of the blood in human veins is shown by the literature of all ages. Even our Christian poets have discovered the analogy, as witness the following:

> "And now I drink my savior's blood;
> I thank thee, Lord, 'tis generous wine;
> Mingled with love, the fountain flowed
> From that dear bleeding heart of thine."

> "This soul-reviving wine,
> Dear savior, 'tis thy blood.
> We thank that precious flesh of thine
> For this immortal food."

Substitute in the above the original word Bacchus, which is only another name for the sun, and you translate the hymn from a Christian to an astronomical meaning, as it was understood by the Greeks and Romans.

The following passage from Isaiah is the one mainly relied on as a prophecy of the personal Christ or messiah that was to come:

> "Who is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah? This that is glorious in his apparel, traveling in his strength? I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save. Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine vat? I have trodden the wine press alone; and of the people there were none with me; for I will tread them in mine anger, and trample them in my fury; and their blood shall be sprinkled on my garments, and I will stain all my raiment. For the day of vengeance is in mine heart, and the year of my redeemed is come. . . . For he said, Surely they are my children that will not lie."

So he was their savior.

Substitute here the sun as the subject of the inquiry, with all the incidents attending the sun at the time of the vintage in September; also the methods and incidents attending the extraction of the juice from the grape, and you have the real meaning of the passage, couched as it is in the extravagant metonymy of the East.

As with the wine of the vintage, so also with the bread of life. In the hand of the Virgin, the constellation of the harvest, you will notice a spike of iron. Note the significance of its relativ position to that of the cup of salvation. Bread always precedes the wine in the order of common use, as also on the table of our lord. So also in nature the corn harvest in August precedes the vintage in September.

[CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - - - - Editor.
MARY W. BENNETT, - - - - - Publisher.

21 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing seven hundred square inches more reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

All Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders should be made payable to MARY W. BENNETT.

SATURDAY, - - - JANUARY 20, 1883.

More Long-Eared Defamers.

We hav carefully watched the religious press since the death of Mr. Bennett, to see if any among them hav followed the example of Cheatham in defaming a man dead. With the exception of one Methodist mud-thrower, they hav been singularly free from abuse of Mr. Bennett. Few papers and men are so mean as the Advocate and Joseph Cook. But some few of the secular press hav evidently been vieing with one another in their efforts to daub a character they neither understood nor hav the brains to comprehend. An Indianapolis paper copied as an obituary the villainous answer one of the editors of the Inter-Ocean gave in reply to a correspondent—an answer the paper was forced to retract in a subsequent issue. Other papers hav done as badly. But one of the most repulsiv flings comes from the Toledo Blade, owned by D. R. Locke, better known to fame as Petroleum V. Nasby, of the Confederate X Roads. Mr. Locke himself is a Freethinker, and it is but justice to him to say that he is now in Europe and unaware of the baseness to which his assistants are descending. We copy the whole, that the people may know just what kind of men are writing for the Blade. It is from the issue of Jan. 9, 283:

D. M. BENNETT.

When D. M. Bennett died we gave him this cordial "send-off" to his place of future abode:

D. M. Bennett, editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and author of a number of books which were even more than irreligious, is dead. He brought much reproaching on Freethinking by his filthiness, and was sent to the penitentiary for misuse of the United States mails. He knows by this time a world more about the future than he ever dreamed of.

This seemed to excite the alleged minds of sundry gentlemen who describe themselvs as "Freethinkers," but who are unpleasantly free from capacity to think logically on any subject. Here are some specimens of the letters written us:

To the Editor of the Blade:

DEAR SIR—I went over to our newsdealer this morning to subscribe for your paper, and in taking up a copy of the 14th ult., your notice of D. M. Bennett and his death changed my mind. I determined to hav no such defamer in my family. I herewith inclose reliable information of one—a life-long friend of mine—whose life is as pure as the life of any saint. L. M. HASTINGS.

Osceola, Clark Co., Iowa.

BENWOOD, W. VA., Dec. 27, 1882.

ED. BLADE: I see a notice in the last Blade of the death of D. M. Bennett. Your charges of "filthiness" against him are as false and foul as tongue or pen can make them, and merit the contempt of every honest and fair-minded man. Don't defame the dead. C. BURSEE.

A number were quite too vile to print. Here is one from an apparently sensible, honest man:

WAPAKONETA, O., Dec. 15, A.S. 282.

To the Editor of the Toledo Blade:

I am a poor man, and a poor scholar to boot, and don't know that I am capable of writing to the editor of a great paper, as I think the Blade is. I hav always held the Blade in very high esteem as a very able exponent of Republican principles, with which party I hav always been identified. I read to-day your editorial on the death of D. M. Bennett, of the New York TRUTH SEEKER, and consider the word "filthiness" used by you very unkind and very unjust; but perhaps you hav evidence to back you in what you say. If you hav you should be willing to produce it, as a bare assertion amounts to nothing. I read Mr. Bennett's paper for three or four months during his trouble with Comstock, and hav failed to see the filth there. Then I procured the books that he sent through the mails. . . . . The former is very good on the subject, a book that every man and woman should read. The latter is mostly quotations from standard authors on physiology and sociology, so I failed to find the filth in the above-named works. I do not claim to agree with Mr. Bennett in all that he says or has written. I thought I would ask you kindly to bring forth the facts in the case if you hav them. Yours truly,

W. H. H. WILLIAMS.

We hav omitted the names of D. M. Bennett's books in the above letter, for the reason that we do not propose to giv them the immensely valuable advertising which they would gain by the mere announcement of their names in our editorial columns.

With any man's religious opinions the Blade has nothing to do. We conceive it our duty to treat all shades of belief that do not trespass the well-recognized bounds of public morals with entire respect. There is nothing to condemn even in a man's attack upon the credit given the Bible by Christians. That is a matter for reason, argument, and personal conviction, not abuse. We hav never a word of denunciation for any man who seeks reason for rejecting one or all the books in the Bible, and for endeavoring to infuse his disbelief into the minds of others.

Col. Ingersoll's tactics, for example, however distasteful they may be to the fervid Christian, are perfectly legitimate, and we cannot condemn them without stultifying ourselvs as reasoning men, willing to hear arguments and combat them openly and fairly.

But when a man like D. M. Bennett seeks out whatever can be made to hav a filthy and obscene suggestion, builds upon them long pages of the obscene imaginings of a depraved intellect, and tries to spread these through the country as religious teachings—as legitimate inquiry into truth—he becomes a moral monster, for whom no punishment is too bad.

In this day and age to be an "Infidel," an "Atheist," or an "Agnostic," contains no reproach whatever. But to be as D. M. Bennett—a sort of a moral swine, with a nose only for filth and obscenity—is too vile for anything except execration.

The men who hav so promptly taken up the matter and so vigorously rebuked the Pharisee of the Blade are entitled to the thanks of all Mr. Bennett's friends. We pass by the sneers at their mental capacity, for the fact that they are Freethinkers proves that they hav done considerable thinking, and to some purpose. In replying to them the editor forgets that abuse is not argument, and proceeds on the well-recognized Christian plan of calling a man a fool when unable to controvert him. He also omits the names of Mr. Bennett's books for fear that they should be advertised by his paper. We will giv him the benefit of an advertisment, and he is welcome to all the good it will do him.

To Mr. Williams's pathetic appeal for facts, what does the Blade answer? Nothing; but cries "filth," and that not even pointed out! Where is the "filth," O sapient editor? Show it to us. Put your finger on the chapter and verse, or page and paragraph, of any of Mr. Bennett's published works. Tell Mr. Williams some facts about it, or own up that you cannot, and acknowledge that your words are but spleen showered upon the Infidel. Show us the "obscene suggestion" or "obscene imaginings of a depraved intellect."

We imagin that a man's religious opinions hav everything to do with the Blade's written estimate of him, notwithstanding the vehement denial. Had Mr. Bennett been a Christian and done as much to spread the gospel of untruth as he did to spread the gospel of truth, who can think that the Blade would hav written his labors down as "filth?" Does it ever call the Bible obscene, when its pages reek with the putrescence of barbarism? Does it ever characterize the songs of Solomon or the psalms of David as "obscene imaginings of depraved intellects?" Regarding this, we hav received the following from a friend:

MONTEZUMA, IOWA, Jan. 12, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: The Toledo Blade of Jan. 11th contains an unwarranted attack on the late Mr. Bennett. I cannot tell you how badly my feelings are hurt. I hope you will not let the matter slip. I hope the editor will retract as did the Inter-Ocean. M. BONE.

Whether the editor can be induced to retract or not, we do not know; probably not. A man who has so little regard for facts as he has will not be apt to care how much he makes hearts ache by his slanders.

It is easy enough to say that a man is worthy of only execration; it is quite another thing to prove it. Let the Blade answer Mr. Williams's inquiry for facts, or it will stand convicted as a dishonored defamer of the dead, and but another instance of the jackass kicking the lion. Its claims of fairness will go for what they are—the protested paper of a moral bankrupt.

Paine's Birthday Celebrations.

The Liberals of Linesville, Pa., will celebrate the 146th anniversary of the birthday of the patriot on January 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st by music, speeches, discussions, and lectures upon industrial, religious, economical, and scientific questions of the day, and a general invitation is extended to all men and women who believe that truth should prevail. The platform, it is announced, is free to Spiritualist or Materialist, Christian or Jew, Mohammedan, Agnostic, or pagan, and the Liberal League under whose auspices the meeting is held further shows its liberality by offering fifty dollars to any representativ Christian who will be present and affirm the cardinal points of the orthodox faith. Two sessions of the meeting will be held each day, at 11 o'clock A.M., and 7 o'clock P.M. Persons attending the celebration from a distance will be entertained free as far as possible, and the hotels and private boarding-houses will provide lodging and meals at a moderate price. It is expected that J. E. Remsburg, Mrs. H. S. Lake, and R. S. McCormack will be present and speak, together with several others. Prof. Peck will furnish music for the occasion. On Wednesday evening, Jan. 31st, a ball will be given in Opera Hall under the auspices of the Liberal League. Supper will be served in League Hall. Cost of ball and supper, $1.75; for supper, 75 cents per couple. Music by the Linesville full orchestra. No gentleman will be admitted to the ball without a supper ticket.

The Pittsburgh League is also making extensiv preparations to do honor to the same event on Monday, the 29th, at Lafayette Hall. The afternoon session will be at 2 o'clock, consisting of an overture by Staley's band, a song by Prof. Peck, who will come from Linesville for the occasion, an address on the "Mission of the League," by Hon. A. B. Bradford, a trombone solo by J. Thoma, a recitation, the "Midianite Maidens," by G. Dorey, and a zither solo by E. Eyth. After the recess more music by the band, short adresses by members of the League, cornet solo by L. Falck, a recitation by Mrs. Lake, a song by Mr. Peck, and band music. In the evening the chief feature will be the presentation to the League by a friend of a full length oil portrait of Paine. The presentation speech and tribute to Paine will be by J. H. Burnham, the response by Mrs. Lake, after which there will be music and a banquet. James E. Emerson and Prof. Wm. Seymour will also be present and address the meeting. Concerning the portrait to be presented, our friend Harry Hoover writes enthusiastically:

The oil portrait of Paine is valued at $500, and was painted expressly for the purpose. It is believed to be the only one of the kind in America. The scene is a landscape, and represents Paine communing with nature—"the only divine revelation." The figure occupies the foreground, facing the beholder. Beneath his feet, and trodden in the dust, are "creeds," "superstitions," and "priestcraft." His left hand rests upon an open book, "The Age of Reason," which rests securely upon a rock. His right hand points upward to the light of the future streaming through the clouds, on which are blazoned "truth" and "liberty." On the left spreads out the deep blue sea, dotted with white sails, while majestic mountains fade away in the dim distance of the receding background. The likeness is excellent, and the expression one of calm reliance on the eternal verities of nature and hopefulness in the verdict of the future. The League intends to hav the picture photographed and sell copies of the same."

In Boston the celebration will be at Paine Hall under the auspices of the Memorial Corporation, and will consist of the usual appropriate exercises. Mr. Mendum and his son Ernest, Mr. Seaver, and the Messrs. Bean, O'Malley, and Hill hav the festival in charge, and everyone is invited to attend.

We in New York will not be behind, but shall hav a good celebration, although the precise form it will take is not determined at this writing. It will be announced next week.

Only by Christians.

We are always happy to oblige friends, and cheerfully answer all questions that we can. If they were all as easy as the following, our task would not be a difficult one:

When it is convenient please to explain how it consists with your theory of the rise of Christianity that all events in the heathen world are dated with reference to the Christian era.

Yours truly, L. H. IDE.

The histories of all countries are dated by the current calendar. The western civilized world uses the calendar borrowed from the Romans, but regulated by Julius Cæsar, and afterward by astronomers working under the direction of Pope Gregory XIII. The first Julian year commenced with 1 January, 46 B.C. All Christian countries, with the exception of Russia, which uses the old style, differing twelve days from ours, use this method. Of course the Christians, regarding Christ's birth as of some importance, date their histories both ways from that event. This dating from Christ is a superstitiously arbitrary affair, and fails to satisfy in the simplest manner the conditions necessary for registering the succession of events. Being placed in an intermediate period it is necessary to work both ways, and some confusion is made by chronologers calling the year preceding the period 1 B.C., while astronomers denote the year as 0. Even after the adoption in Europe of the Christian era a great variety of methods of dating grew up and prevailed in different countries for a long time.

Non-Christian countries hav their own calendars. The epoch used by Mohammedan countries is the hegira, or flight of Mohammed from Mecca to Medina,

A.D. 622 The Macedonian era dates from the occupation of Babylon by Selucus Niator, 311 B.C.

The earliest written annals of the Greeks and Romans are lost, and various events are taken to reckon time from. Apollodorus, an Athenian, who lived in the second century B.C., dated his chronicles of events from the supposed period of the fall of Troy. In Egypt they kept the records by dynasties of sovereigns. Various epochs were selected by different writers, each community having its own epoch and method of time reckoning. Thus, in one city the reckoning was by succession of kings, in another by annual magistrates, in a third by succession of priests, those ubiquitous calamities which hav befallen all people and nations.

This method was not found satisfactory to those nations which had commercial intercourse with each other, and the need of a common epoch was severely felt. This led to the adoption of such a starting-point by several peoples, the most important of which were the Babylonians, the Greeks, and the Romans. The Jews had no general era, properly so-called. In Babylonia time was reckoned from the era of Nabonassar, 747 B.C. Among the Greeks the reckoning was by Olympiads, the beginning being the year in which Corœbus, a half-mythical character, was victor in the Olympic games, 776 B.C. The Roman chronology was started from the foundations of the city, the date of which is variously given, but usually assigned to 753 B.C. The Chinese and other Asiatic nations reckon not only the years but months and days by cycles of sixty.

Before the Israelites left Egypt their year began with the autumnal equinox. But in order to celebrate their deliverance the month in which that took place was afterward regarded as the beginning of the ecclesiastical, which was also the legal year. After their dispersion, the Jews had recourse to the astronomical rules and cycles of the "heathen" nations. They adopted a cycle of eighty-four years, which was made by borrowing the Caliphic period of seventy-six years, and the Greek octaeteris of eight years. After the Nicene council the Jews abandoned this cycle. They now, and hav since the fifteenth century, date from the creation of the world, which is very indefinit, the date in the Bible being assigned in comparativly modern times. The three versions of the Bible—the Hebrew, the Samaritan, the Septuagint—differ in such a degree that the accounts are totally irreconcilable, and no reason can be given for preferring one to another. There is nothing by which to compare them. One writer collected two hundred different calculations of the date of the creation, with thirty-four centuries variation.

The Babylonian era of Nabonassar was followed by Hipparchus and Ptolemy, with a year of 365 days.

Thus it is very plainly seen that "all events in the heathen world are 'not' dated with reference to the Christian era." Christian histories are dated from one event, Mohammedan from another, Chinese from another, Russian according to the "old style," and so on.

Liberals are now evolving a calendar of our own, dating from 1600, the year the Atheist Bruno was burnt by the church, and called the Era of Man. The reason for it, and its application, has been repeatedly explained in these columns, and we hav a neat card calendar (price three cents) of this year, 283, which is designed to propagate the idea. The credit of this discovery belongs to T. B. Wakeman, but Mr. G. N. Hill, of Boston, was the first to practically apply it in this manner.

THE North American Review for February opens with a symposium, in which six prominent theologians, representing as many religious denominations, giv expression to their views upon the question of the "Revision of Creeds," and in which every "divine" disagrees with every other "divine" individually and collectivly. Prof. Alexander Winchell, in an article entitled "The Experiment of Universal Suffrage," institutes a profound inquiry into the essential conditions of stable popular government, which he finds to be, substantially, virtue and intelligence; but these conditions, he maintains, are absolutely unattainable under our existing political system, where an electorate either ignorant or vicious, or both, by the mere force of superior numbers, practically nullifies the suffrages of the better and wiser portion of the people, whose right to control the government of the commonwealth is grounded in the very nature of things. The position maintained is unwholesome for a republic, and will not find favor with those who believe in universal suffrage. Bishop McQuaid writes of "The Decay of Protestantism," and in essaying to prove his thesis, makes a very adroit use of the admissions of Protestant writers. "The Political Situation" is the joint title of two articles, the one by Horatio Seymour, the other by Geo. S. Boutwell, who offer their respectiv views upon the causes of the recent overthrow of the Republican party. An article by Dr. D. A. Sargent, on "Physical Education in Colleges," treats a subject of prime importance to the youths in our higher educational institutions. Finally, there are two articles on "The Standard Oil Company," Senator Camden, of West Virginia, rather unsuccessfully defending that monopoly against its assailants, and John C. Welch clearly setting forth the reasons for condemning it as a dangerous institution. Published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York.

Is It a Sin to Dance?

Ever since the sorghum-voiced warbler of Israel waltzed in undraped manhood before the ark, in the presence of the female members of the society in which he moved, it has been a question upon which the wisest heads of pulpit and laity hav abused one another, whether or not, in the estimation of omnipotence, it is a sin to dance. Up to our time of going to press, it remains unsettled. The Judge of the quick-step and dead-march has not recorded his decision, and sacred history has but little consolation for a dying world upon this subject. We grope in darkness. Some able minds maintain, nevertheless, that the performance of David was the subject of divine, as it was of wifely, condemnation; for it will be remembered that at the time of the ball in question a rebuke, supposed to be inspired, was administered by Michal, who was at that time a fragmentary portion of David's better half.

The gyratory movements of our great prototype of the prehensil tail, upon the upper surface of the errant Italian's national instrument, the hand-organ, hav been the theme of poets since Homer; but it is believed that the monkey skips more in sorrow than anything else, and that he is actuated solely by a sense of duty. Furthermore, it is held that in his natural state he is unfamiliar with Terpsichore, and that it is only after he has felt the refining influence of Christian civilization that he allows himself to dance.

These facts force us to the conclusion that neither by biblical authority nor by the example of the monkey—two sources to which we can look with equal confidence for guidance in our acts during our brief sojourn here below—is the modern dance justified or commended. Hence the custom must stand or fall as the exigencies of progress shall demand.

This line of thought leads up to a consideration of the serious aspect of affairs which the subject of our present remarks has brought about in the Pigeon Creek church, on Washington Pike, Nottingham township, Pa. The pastor who rejoices in the charge of this church is the Rev. John Marquis. The flock consists of about two hundred members, but alas! they are not all sheep. Some of them hav a goatish tendency to the left-hand side of the path of rectitude. Several shepherds hav been called to the care of this straying flock, but all hav left it without having effected the reform which was their avowed object when they mounted their pulpit for their first powerful sermon. The besetting sin of Pigeon Creek is dancing. They hav cultivated the grace, not of Jesus, but of the jig.

Up to a few years ago, there seemed to be no earthly obstacle between any member of the Pigeon Creek congregation and a harp. Things hav changed. On a cold day for Pigeon Creek, a violin worked its way insidiously among the people, and the slack of its vibrant strings wound itself about their vitals. It was wonderful to look upon, and its notes struck responsive chords on all sides and some insides. The congregation of Pigeon Creek adored it with all the fervor of their agricultural souls. They gathered around it evenings to listen to its seductiv tones, little dreaming that above them the barbed tail of Satan waved and sawed the air. The heart of their pastor was sad, though he was silent; but when the younger people introduced the quadrille, with an occasional variety of round dances, he lifted up his voice against the iniquity. But, in spite of public denunciations hurled from the pulpit with all the forensic energy of which he was capable, the dance went on. His hearers smiled at his invectivs, and became more hardened. Above the voice of the preacher arose the squeak of the fiddle, and they beat time with their feet to the tune of the doxology. The rest is briefly told. The erring are ever brought to account. A few Sundays ago the Rev. Mr. Marquis requested all who had danced to abstain from the communion lunch. Seventy-two culprits took the back seats, that number being supposed to include those who had danced and those who were not hungry. Sixty of these are still at defiance with ecclesiastical authority, among them the pastor's own daughter. They are given until the first of March next to meditate upon the extent of their sin—and to enjoy more it. If by the time named they will forsake the fascinations of the jig, return to the church, pay up their back pew rent, and wipe the floor with themselvs generally, such is the forgiving nature of the preacher that he promises once more to fracture for them the bread of life.

The recalcitrant members of the Pigeon Creek congregation should remember that the eyes of this world and the next are upon them. Let them take the advice of the Rev. G. H. Humphrey to heart, and run no risk on everlasting things. If they become convinced that the pursuit of their present course will take them to that equatorial resort to which no excursion tickets are issued, a proper regard for their post-mortem comfort would seem to dictate that they should kill the fiddler and smash his anti-theological instrument. "It is profitable that one of their members should perish"—so we read—"and not that their whole body be cast into h—l." The question of the sinfulness, or otherwise, of dancing is one of great moment. If we are to be compelled to pay the violinist in the next world, after all the expense incurred in remunerating him in this, it is time we knew it. The committee who are fooling away their time on a revision of the scriptures ought to hav this matter brought to their attention.

THE regular annual meeting of the stockholders of the Paine Memorial Corporation will be held in Paine Hall, Boston, Mass., on Monday, Jan. 29, 1883, at 11 A.M., for the purpose of electing officers, and for the transaction of any other business that may come before the meeting.

MRS. LAKE has been re-engaged by the Liberals of Milwaukee, and is to speak there during the month of February. She would like to hear from Liberals in adjacent towns where she could lecture week evenings. Address her at 219 Grand avenue, Milwaukee, Wis.

WE would call attention to the list of English books and pamphlets advertised in this number of THE TRUTH SEEKER. They are valuable works, and we shall be pleased to receive orders.

A Tribute.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: At a meeting of a few of the Liberals of Ogden, the following was suggested. JOHN A. JOST.

Ogden, Utah, Dec. 17, 282.

The very sudden release from the toils of life of our highly-esteemed friend and brother, D. M. Bennett, has let fall a pall of sorrow, which for a time may becloud our vision of the bright future of our hopes of deliverance from the scourge of Christian intolerance and bigotry, in the unequal distribution of the rights and privileges guaranteed alike to all under our glorious constitution.

We feel this sad bereavement to be a source of deep sorrow and disappointment, inasmuch as our departed friend stood in the fore front of the battle for the equality of these sacred rights that the party in power, prompted by the bigotry and selfishness of the church, has deprived us of, to an extent that is ominous of a total annihilation of free thought, free free speech, and free press, if the church obtains the greater extent of power in the government of the nation it is so strenuously and indefatigably working for.

The loss of such an experienced, brave, and fearless general to the army of Liberals, Spiritualists, and Freethinkers in general, and the National Liberal League in particular, is truly deplorable. We therefore desire to mingle our voice in the dirge of sorrow with the many who lament this great loss in the sudden departure of our friend and brother to a higher plane of continued life.

Resolved, That in the exit of our dear friend and brother from his earthy body, through the gate called death, the cause of free thought, free speech, free press, equal laws and equal rights, has lost an able and indefatigable worker on the earth plane of life.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the bereaved widow of our dear friend, and feelingly respond to the call of nature in the fullest expressions of the sorrows of earth life, while we hav firm hope of a happy reunion in the higher life.

M. E. Rose Indorsed.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: M. E. Rose never penned a greater truth than when he wrote (THE TRUTH SEEKER, Jan. 6th), "That which is called Spiritualism is a branch of science not understood, but will be sometime demonstrated as fully as electricity or other branches of science which were thought to demonstrate a future life in times past." Will THE TRUTH SEEKER's readers remember this statement? ELLA E. GIBSON.

Communications.

The Materialism of Mind.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Perhaps it may appear as if I had forgotten or am rather tardy about replying to my critics upon materialism of mind. I hav been waiting to let them all hav a chance to say what they had to say, and also for time myself to reply (which I hav not had until now) and answer all at once, if I could, and hav done with it; and now if you will giv me a chance to be heard in reply, through the columns of your paper, I will endeavor, as briefly as I can, to answer the last batch of criticisms that hav appeared in your paper up to this date. First I will commence with Mr. LaRoy Sunderland. In The Truth Seeker of Oct. 21st, under the heading of "Ideology," page 663, Mr. Sunderland says: "By ideas the world of mind is controled. True or false, as the case may be, all ideas are human in their origin; and while the human mind is the perfection of chemism, and really subsistent, as the organism is from which it is evolved, all its ideals, by which it is equally controled, are never real, but always imaginary; and when Mr. James Hale (Truth Seeker, Aug. 26, 1882) and others undertake to convince us that the human mind is not the sublimation of innervation, he should first prove that in nature's order the core or seed is not the result of plant life in the vegetable kingdom. Thus, in the vegetable kingdom, instinct, vitality, nutrition, and growth. In the animal life, innervation and sensation are added; and still progressing to manhood we hav all we know of consciousness, thought, ideality, and ideas."

Now for the proof that Mr. Sunderland calls for, that in nature's order the core or seed is not the result of plant life in the vegetable kingdom, just as if every one who knows anything about plant life does not know that the core or seed is the germ that produces the plant and plant life. Instead of being the result it is the cause. The little acorn, or seed, is the germ from which the giant oak of the forest springs, which oak may produce more acorns to produce other oaks, which could never be produced without the germs from which to spring, the same as the first. So we see the core or seed Mr. Sunderland refers to as the result of plant life is only a provision of nature for the production of plant life, by causing one plant to produce a germ for the production of another plant like the first, and so on forever.

I think this statement of the facts in the case proves what Mr. Sunderland required proof of, and that himself has put the effect for the cause, and reversed the order of nature, by his manner of presenting the case, in omitting to say that the plant he starts with must hav had a core or seed from which it sprang, and was itself a result in the order of nature as much as it was a cause, only to produce another germ to produce another plant; and, in that way, make nature lie, by reversing the order, or by not telling the whole truth. It is the old trick of hitching up the cart before the horse, and then putting on a long face, and looking wise, as if it were not all a mere farce to humbug simpletons who were unable to think for themselvs.

Thus I can see the bottom fall out of Mr. Sunderland's argument. If Mr. Sunderland should inquire how the very first plant of all started, I would say in the same way the universe got started, evoluted from nothing, or matter, or created, or somehow; I don't pretend to know exactly how it was.

The next in order of critics is Mr. Wallis, of Columbus, Kan., in The Truth Seeker of Oct. 28th, page 679. I shall not attempt to reply in full to everything Mr. Wallis says, for I hav not time, nor is it necessary, but take four points that appear most important to my mind. He says, in regard to my statement that the mind can and has destroyed the life of, or killed, the body—the effect destroyed the cause of its own existence—that if I mean that the mind can, just for fun or because it can, wholly independent of any outside influence or force, come to the conclusion at any time to kill the body, he denies it. And so do I. But if I mean that the mind may be so highly excited as to cause death, disorganization, then he agrees with me, for that proves that the mind is material. He says this illustrates the principle of cause and effect, and that every effect in its turn becomes a cause, and that if an outside force is brought to bear upon the mind to such a degree as to produce an abnormal or violent action, a disorganization will be the result, the effect; and here this effect becomes a cause, a cause of the complete destruction of the body, a destruction of the man as an organism; and, also, that a destruction of the body will result in a destruction of the mind. This is simply a begging of the question, for that is the very question at issue. Why? He says, "because they are inseparably connected." Another assumption without proof; another begging of the question. He says the mind and body may be considered the chief divisions of man, but they do not exist independent of each other; they are dependent one upon the other for their existence; they are mutual in their make-up. Another dogmatic assertion in place of argument. He says: "Science at present seems to point to the fact that the brain and nerves are the chief organs employed in thought. There they are the mind, the intellect, the brain being the great nervous center, or seat of thought, from which the nerves or ramifying cords extend to all parts of the body, thus materially connecting body and mind. This being the case, a destruction of either, body or mind, must necessarily result in the destruction of the other; and the very fact that this is the case goes to prove that they are mutual in their make-up." All hodge-podge of science, brains, nerves, mind, intellect, great nervous center, ramifying cords, to all parts of the body, thus mutually connecting body and mind.

"Now [assuming, he should hav said] this being the case, the destruction of either body or mind must be the destruction of the other. It is now apparent that if Mr. Hale had proved the assertion he made (and I admit it) he would hav proved just what he intended to deny; that is, on the assumption that when the mind has killed the body it has killed itself too;" which is the very question at issue again, and which I cannot see that Mr. Wallis has advanced a single valid argument to prove. All he claims for science is that it "seems to point," that is all; and from that assumes that everything is proven, when all is mere assumption. He might with the same propriety hav said that when I had proved that the mind was immaterial I had proved it was material. But for fear he should be misunderstood, Mr. Wallis explains a little further, and says: "I hold the brain to be the leading organ of the mind; its leading function seems to be mental; here the nerves center and deposit their influence, and as well take it from and carry it outward, and thus the mind to some extent, or some part of it at least, is located in or distributed through the body. Let the nerves be injured, as by indiscretion, and just in the same proportion will the intellect be found to be injured." For a practical test a case is cited as proof of this position, when the head has been instantly severed from the body, that the body performed intelligent actions, in the way of resistance, and in manifestations of pain after the head was severed. And he says: "If this is true [that it is well put in there] the body must to some extent, or in some measure, possess intellect or mind, for intelligence or thought cannot exist apart from it," etc. He says further that "Mr. Hale states that we see life, instinct, if not reason, manifested in some of the lower animals, and agrees with me that many of them reason, and therefore hav mind. Take for example the common hare, and when its head is severed from the body, does not the latter by its vigorous leaps and agonizing struggles giv unmistakable evidence of severe pain?" I answer, No. In neither of the cases is there the least particle of evidence of intelligent action. The man with his head severed or the hare with the head severed from the body givs no more evidence of intelligent action than the muscular convulsions and twitchings of the person suffering with St. Vitus's dance, or the rheumatism, or a cramp in the limbs or stomach, or epileptic spasms, none of which are any evidence of intelligence, and no evidence of pain, because there can be no sense of pain without intelligence.

Mr. Wallis asks, can a body or organism experience and manifest pain and at the same time possess no intelligence whatever? He says, no, because intelligence proves intellect, and hence the truth of my position. Now to come to this conclusion, Mr. Wallis assumes that the convulsiv, muscular actions he refers to are intelligent actions, and hence the truth of his position. That is all there is of it—just simply the assumption, without a particle of proof that the inferences are true. And now for the summing up he says: "I hold the brain, located in the head or upper part of the body [the shoulders, perhaps], to be the principal but not the sole organ of the mind. I hav shown the mind to be thoroughly diffused through or connected with the body, as, outwardly observed, it follows these," etc.—a repetition of the same old lingo that they are dependent upon each other for existence, and that the destruction of the one must be the destruction of the other, that is, the disorganization of the living organism, and this upon the Materialistic hypothesis.

"Again I say, Mr. Hale's assertion is in favor of Materialism." Mr. Wallis has certainly introduced a new system of metaphysics. According to his theory, the mind is thoroughly diffused, or some parts of it, through the body. The different members, the toes, the fingers, the ears, the end of the nose, or the eyes, as the case may be, can hav a mind of their own, or part of a mind, and if they are injured in any way they can make a fuss about it and kick up a row on their own hook, and it is nobody's business but their own. And the brain is located in the head or upper part of the body. The shoulders, arms, or stomach, for instance, is the principal but not the sole organ of the mind. No, the nose, the ears, the mouth, may hav something to do about thinking. Yes, according to Mr. Wallis, this mind business is a big thing, if not on wheels, on bare runners. It is on the rampage. If anything could be thought of more ridiculous, I should like to know what it can be. Perhaps that is what it was intended for, and I am only making a fool of myself in attempting to answer such stuff, but after all it is about on a par with his other communications on Materialism that hav been published. And, to wind up, Mr. Wallis says I hav proved, so far as my arguments go, the truth of Materialism. Which is not true. But if I hav, then that establishes my final proposition, which Mr. Wallis says he may hereafter attack, that if Materialism is true, then it must be the only cause of all that does, ever has, or that ever will exist in the universe. There can be no exceptions. I hav nothing at stake in this discussion. I presented the proposition to see what might be said on the subject, to hear others who felt disposed to express their views, and hav used such reasons as occurred to me in favor of a continued existence after this life is ended, which I call a spiritual existence. Mr. Bennett conceded that there may be such an existence, but insisted that it must be material, but so refined and attenuated as to be entirely beyond the reach of our senses as we are now organized. Nobody knows or can know here what our capacities may be in a future state of existence, if there is one, and I can see no reason to quarrel about it here. I hav in my former communications presented some arguments to show as plainly as I could that it was no more unreasonable to suppose that there was such a future and that there was an eternal, self-existent intelligence that controled this universe, than to suppose that matter was eternal and evoluted this universe into its present condition, with all its life and intelligence. If the question arises, How could an intelligent existence be eternal? the same question would be involved in regard to matter; and could matter be eternal, the same question would equally apply to both; and, according to what we do know of cause and effect in the order of nature, and that mind governs matter here in this state of existence in which we find ourselvs, it seems to me more in accordance with nature to suppose that mind is ahead of matter in the government of the universe, and not the result.

And now I would say, in reply to Ella E. Gibson's criticism in The Truth Seeker of Nov. 18th, page 726, of my reply to Mr. Winter's criticism of my article, "Is Mind Material," Ella admits the truth of my proposition, that if Materialism is true, then that is the cause of all things, and of course everything is the result of that cause; and considers it the greatest satisfaction that can be enjoyed to consider that point in evolution, viz., that all false theories, all the cruelties, wars, and bloodshed; all the suffering, woe, and misery, sickness and death, and the tornadoes, earthquakes, thunder-storms—yea, the very existence of rattlesnakes, bugs, and musketoes, are the result of material organization or evolution, and not caused by a designing God, who from the foundation of the world, for his own good pleasure, elected some to everlasting happiness and others to everlasting misery.

I see Ella E. is laboring under the mistake that I am defending the Jews' and Christians' God, which I am not. I don't believe in that kind of a god any more than Ella E. Gibson does. But let that pass, and let us come to the point in evolution. I cannot see how it is going to help us in the least to know even that these results come upon us without design, which can mean nothing else but to come by chance. Our sufferings would be the same in either case, and our prospects for the future could be no better; for if evolution has done a bad job here now, it may do as bad a job or worse hereafter; and I cannot see that we are gaining anything by choosing that horn of the dilemma. It is certainly a mere matter of choice; the results are the same, as we must admit, and we get them without money and without price, and we can take our choice. I believe in the God of Nature, as revealed in the works of nature. We see evil in the world—that cannot be denied; and I think it can and will work out good. By the contrast between good and evil we can the better appreciate the good, as we never could without the evil. And in the hereafter we may be able to overcome the evil with the good, and then it will be all right, and we shall then see that God designed everything for our greatest good, as a kind and loving father could hav done, and that every vicissitude that we hav had to pass through here was intended to add to our happiness there, beyond all that we can conceive of here. This can be so for all that I can see, and God be just and good; and to my mind it must be so, or God cannot be a just God, for I can see that justice is not meted out here—that the wronged, the injured, the outraged, pass off the stage of life, and their wrongs are not and cannot be righted here; it is impossible. And if they cannot be righted and are not righted hereafter, then God cannot be a just God, and I wish to believe that the Eternal is just and true. This is one of my reasons for a belief in a future state of existence. I do not believe in the doctrin of the survival of the fittest, as taught by some of our modern (I will say quack) philosophers. We can see almost every day that the fittest are removed from life, and the unfittest left to curse the world with their presence and doings here on earth. It is might that makes right with us nowadays.

And now for the strictures upon the gender and personality of God. I think I can make use of several more significant words than "it" wherewith to define a being without person or gender, without inventing any new word. I would say "The Eternal," "The I Am," "The Almighty," "The Supreme," "The All Wise," "The God of Nature," or "God," and others as expressiv and devoid of the objectionable feature of designating person or gender. The truth is, it is only a habit we hav naturally fallen into from the fact that it has been almost universally the common mode of expression.

I hav thus briefly answered the criticisms that hav been offered upon my propositions on the materialism of mind, and am willing that this should be the last call upon me for answers to critics. Yet I shall try and not flinch if I am called upon to defend my position, if the call is worth noticing, and if you, Mr. Editor, are willing to giv space in your columns for the further discussion of this question.

I wish to thank you, Mr. Editor, for the generous disposition you hav shown in giving fair play to all, for and against the different subjects presented for discussion in the columns of your TRUTH SEEKER.

Most respectfully, JAMES HALE.

Detroit, Mich.

Taxes.

Great riches are a great curse to the individual who owns them. It makes him unfeeling to the poor, dissipated, voluptuous, and tends to make him liv a life of debauchery that causes an early death.

Pinching poverty deprives a person of every enjoyment only in the forgetfulness of drunken debauchery that ends a miserable life in an early death.

These two classes of persons are the greatest curses to a nation that exist, except the curse of ignorance.

We are now taxing people to get knowledge, and so gradually and peacefully overcome the curse of ignorance in this country.

Shall we tax the very wealthy and make homes for the very poor, as we now make homes for poor soldiers and sailors, and thus at one stroke overcome the two curses of great riches and pinching poverty?

It is said that Queen Victoria does not pay her taxes. The accusation is made that Vanderbilt does not pay taxes on a large amount of taxable property. It is well known that the rich hide much of their property so the assessor can not present it for taxation, while the man of ordinary property not only pays taxes on all he is worth, but often more because of his mortgages and other debts. There are sufficient reasons why the rich should pay an extra tax, especially on incomes and great landed estates, even if the great property-owners were not a curse to themselvs, to the poor, and the nation where they liv. Then when we see the vast amount of church property and that of benevolent institutions, or pretended benevolent institutions, whose priests and managers liv in luxury and extravagance, and support more idlers who should support themselvs than they do of the real sick and needy, exempted from taxation, and note that the very rich try to get clear of paying their just share of the taxes, while ordinary people hav to pay more than their fair share, and still the rich hav the management of these churches and institutions, it becomes more important if we would consider justice alone, and lay aside the fact that great estates are a curse to their individual possessors, an extra tax should be put on the rich. When the people of this country gained their independence of George the Third and his minions, they said they would not hav any kings, queens, or lords with great power, salaries, and great exemptions of property from taxation, and we hav not been troubled with them since in this country.

When the people of this country put down the Rebellion that was caused by the wealthy owners of land and slaves, they freed the slaves, but did not tax the land-owners for the expenses of the war, which justice demanded, so the wealthy persons North and South joined and oppressed the poor, and in 1877 caused mobs, riots, and a great destruction of property. This was brought about by the rich making rules and laws that were starving the poor amidst a plenty of food, and instead of making the rich pay for their abuse of their power over the poor they were relieved from all extra taxes and the great burden was thrown upon the ordinary tax-payer.

Persons who wish to study this subject thoroughly will do well to get the "Bible of the Religion of Science," where the whole subject of a scientific government is considered. If we turn to France in 1789 we see the rich would not giv up the use of the bastile as long as they could keep their heads on their shoulders. If we look to the Rebellion in our country we see the rebels used every torture that they could invent to cause the suffering, agony, and death of the prisoners in their hands, and never gave up until they were thoroughly whipped. When the rich found the people would not bear any more oppression in 1877, they feared they would lose the control of the government, and they stopped the contraction of the amount of currency and remonetized silver, and did as little justice as they could and retain power.

From all our national trials and those of Europe, especially France, anyone can determin what a malignant foe the rich are to the poor. They never giv up as long as they can maintain a bastile or an Andersonville. Let us strive to tax them out of existence, and so peacefully end this deadly strife. ***

Joseph Cook in Washington.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Your friend and the friend of Freethought (?), the Rev. Jo Cook, in his late lectures here (Jan. 3d and 5th), under the auspices of the Congregational Lyceum Course, is reported in the Washington Star as having said, "The seven modern wonders of the world are the speed of intercommunication, the self-reformation of the hermit nations, the parallel advance of education and democracy the world over, the world-wide unity of civilization, the triumph of Christianity, the correct fulfilment of Bible prophecies, and the establishment, on a sure basis, of scientific supernaturalism." And he might hav added, "the eighth and most wonderful wonder is "Rev. Joseph Cook, the famous Boston Monday lecturer," as he is advertised in the lyceum course.

Passing over all the other falsities in this wonderful quotation, permit me to ask the reverend Joseph to explain "scientific supernaturalism." If supernaturalism could be scientific, it would be no longer super-naturalism, but naturalism; if *super*natural, it cannot be scientific, because above the natural, and therefore above or beyond the range of scientific, natural law!

What a profound theological logician this man is, to be sure! How edified the "forty-five ministers of the evangelical churches" must hav been, who met the Rev. Joseph at the Arlington Hotel, Jan. 4th, and others, among whom were Fred. Douglass and Gen. Eaton! What a condescension on the part of the reverend lecturer, who "answered questions about an hour and a half, both orally and by card." How honored the two latter gentlemen must hav felt in the presence of such a distinguished "scientific, supernatural" crowd of divines, especially when "Dr. Sunderland closed the meeting by prayer at the request of the Rev. Mr. Cook!"

There are enough falsities, Mr. Editor, in the three last assumptions of this eighth "modern wonder of the world," "the famous Boston Monday lecturer," viz. "the triumph of Christianity, the correct fulfilment of Bible prophecies, and the establishment, on a sure basis, of scientific supernaturalism," to strike dead ten thousand Ananiases and Sapphiras, provided Israel's God was in a striking mood in these "modern" days with his lying servants. But I forbear further comment. Yours for truth,

ELLA E. GIBSON.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 5, 283.

Bell of the West.

TO THE LIBERALS OF KANSAS: W. S. Bell, of Boston, is in your state. We heard him lecture last evening. "Liberty and Morality" was his subject, and he gave no uncertain sound. His audience was large, attention good. The Liberal element of Kansas and Missouri should secure this able exponent of Liberal thought for a course of lectures in their towns or counties. His address for the present is Paola, Kansas. Write him, inclosing stamps for answer. The stamps are a small matter to you, but when a man must write forty or fifty letters per day it costs something. The Paola Times in its notice of his lecture says:

Prof. W. S. Bell, of Boston, who lectured in Globe Hall Sunday evening on the subject of "Liberty and Morality," is a speaker of rare ability; easy, fluent, logical, and impressiv, commanding in appearance and possessing a fine voice, of which he has complete command in giving emphasis and force to his thought. Of the lecture itself, it must be heard (or read, he has it printed) to be appreciated. It is radical and truthful in its premises, logical and convincing in its conclusions. Much of it traverses a new field, and the ear unaccustomed to radical utterances will be startled to hear that Christianity is immoral, nevertheless the hearer has become so much interested that he listens to the facts and arguments given to the end.

Paola, Kan., Jan. 6, 1883. A. J. CLARK.

"Penal" Labor.

The parsons say: "We will work (preach) on the Sabbath; you shall not. What you earn in six days shall support us if we labor one day in seven to save your souls.

"What we do on Sunday is in full accord with our Penal Code, but your labor is quite offensiv to God and his law-makers.

"We hav bossed Sunday for years, until we hav gained the eternal right to make you do as we command. Now, on Saturday you must prepare for our Sunday. We will compel you to attend church or keep very quiet. Any noise beside loud preaching, gospel singing, and our church-bell ringing is unlawful, if not very annoying to us. Servil obedience is good for you, but servil labor is bad when we need your undivided attention. During the six days servil labor is good for you, as it givs us our most material aid. We know what law pleases God as much as it helps us.

"Sabbath liberty is only right for (us) the good parsons.

"God and our Penal Code will protect our only means of living.

"Your happiness must be ours first. The most necessary and lawful thing for the Sabbath is our gospel preaching.

"All nature works on Sunday just the same as on any other day, but you must not; it is a crime. God and we can labor on the holy Sabbath, while you shall keep quiet and see us perform.

"We hav come to the legal conclusion. Law has the best of you on our Sunday. We are now happy! You may try to be!

"You shall love God by law, or be crushed as criminals.

"Obey our Sabbath law or go to prison criminal laborers.

"First we revised our Bible; now to protect its improved version we revive and also revise our old Puritan blue laws.

"Our influence shall be legally felt, especially on the Lord's holy Sabbath."

Servil oppression and clerical imposition are the main sources of gospel Sunday happiness. Other than clerical liberty is a crime on the Christian's holy day of preaching.

To clerically condemn, to tax, to deprive the people of the common out-door comforts, to produce unnecessary fear and gloom, and to prevent individual, reasonable enjoyment hav been the pious study and work of the self-righteous for eighteen hundred years. T. L. BROWN.

Binghamton, N. Y.

Thoughts on Religion.

Translated from Diderot by G. W. Foote.

A man was one day asked whether there are any real Atheists. "Do you believe," replied he, "there are any real Christians?"

What has never been questioned has never been proved; what has not been examined without prejudice has never been examined. Skepticism is the first step toward truth. It should be general, for it is the touchstone of truth.

The age of revelations, of prodigies, and of extraordinary missions, is past—Christianity has no more need of that scaffolding. A man who undertook to play among us the role of Jonah, to go through the streets crying, "Yet three days and Paris shall be no more; repent, ye Parisians, cover yourself with sackcloth and ashes, or in three days you will perish," would be at once seized and brought before a magistrate, who would certainly send him to the madhouse. He might say, "O people, does God love you less than the Ninevites, and are you less guilty than they?" But no one would condescend to answer, and we should treat him as a visionary without awaiting the term of his prediction.

Elias may come from the other world when he pleases, but men are such that he will hav to work some very great miracles before he gets a good reception here.

The God of the Christians is a father who thinks a lot more of his apples than of his children.

To prove the gospel by a miracle is to prove an absurdity by something against nature.

All the Jews in Jerusalem were, then, apparently converted on seeing the miracles of Christ? Not so. Far from believing in him, they crucified him. It must be confessed that those Jews were strange men; everywhere we hav seen nations led away by a single false miracle, yet Jesus Christ could not move the Jews with a multitude of true ones. The incredulity of the Jews is the miracle to be accounted for, and not the resurrection.

The religion of Jesus Christ, promulgated by ignorant men, made the first Christians. The same religion, preached by doctors and scholars, to-day makes nothing but skeptics.

It is the education of childhood which forbids baptism to a Mohammedan; it is the education of childhood which forbids circumcision to a Christian; it is man's adult reason which despises equally baptism and circumcision.

"God, who put God to death to satisfy God," is an excellent mot of Baron Houtan. There is less conviction in a hundred folios, written for or against Christianity, than in the ridicule of that one line.

The Trinity are either three accidents or three substances. There is no middle course. If they are three accidents, we are Atheists or Deists; if they are three substances, we are pagans,

God the father judges men as deserving his eternal vengeance; God the son judges them as worthy of his infinit pity; the Holy Ghost remains neutral. How is this Christian verbiage to be reconciled with the unity of the divine will?

No good father would resemble our heavenly father. . . . We say that God should burn the wicked, who can do him no injury, in an everlasting fire; and we hardly allow a father to kill suddenly a son who endangers his life, his honor, and his fortune.

Pascal says, "If our religion is false, you risk nothing in believing it to be true; if it is true, you risk all in believing it to be false." A Mohammedan priest could say the same to Pascal.

If Jesus Christ, who is God, was tempted by the devil, it is a story worthy of the "Arabian Nights."

If my reason came from above it is the voice of heaven to me, and I must listen to it.

Letters from Friends.

STRAITSVILLE, O., Jan. 4, 283.

MR. EDITOR: It was with feelings of the deepest regret I read of Mr. Bennett's death. But I hope the readers of his paper will try to imitate him, as far as lies in their power, by upholding THE TRUTH SEEKER and doing their utmost for the mental and physical liberty of every man and woman around the globe. Your friend, ADAM LAVERTY.

WATERVILLE, N. Y., Jan. 5, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find $3.50—$2.50 for one year's subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER, the remaining dollar apply to the Bennett Monument Fund. You can count on me for five dollars for a memorial building and a home for THE TRUTH SEEKER when it is decided to build one.

Wishing THE TRUTH SEEKER success, as it certainly will hav, I remain, Yours truly, CHARLES LOWND.

ALLIANCE, O., Jan. 8, 1883.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: The paper must liv as a lasting monument to the memory of our departed standard bearer. Words are weak things to express our grief and love in Mr. Bennett's death, as well as our sympathy for you in your deep affliction. Like thousands of others in the land, our grief has been too deep for aught but silence thus far.

Yours in tender sympathy, J. AND A. E. KIRK.

GOLDSMITH, IND., Jan. 2, E.M. 283.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $10, $5 of which is for the Bennett Monument Fund. I am poor, but I think it duty to do all I can for the cause to which Mr. Bennett gave his life. I was truly sorry to hear of Mr. Bennett's death, but as he is gone let us try to show our respect for him by putting a monument over his grave that will be an honor to him and a credit to ourselvs.

Yours respectfully, DAVID SMITH.

ROYAL CENTER, IND., Jan. 2, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: As I was waiting to see what the future of THE TRUTH SEEKER would be it makes me somewhat late in sending in our dues. I am well satisfied with the arrangements to honor D. M. Bennett's memory by keeping the glorious old TRUTH SEEKER alive, and I for one promis my support as long as I liv. I herewith send you three new subscribers for 1883, and the pay for three old ones, myself included.

Your friend, GEORGE HENDEE.

CONCORD, KY., Dec. 28, 282.

MR. EDITOR: Complying with our promis, we forward remittance to the Bennett Monument Fund Committee, which please set down as follows:

N. Vance, . . .	$5 00
Mrs. Virginia E. Vance, .	1 00

Let the contagion of generosity sweep all over our globe, until the last farthing of debt we owe one of the best and greatest men of the world is liquidated.

Yours, VIRGINIA E. VANCE.

BENTONVILLE, ARK., Jan. 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Besides my great sympathy for Mrs. Bennett, I much regret the loss of D. M. Bennett, the great leader of the Liberal cause, though I hope all Liberals will assist in keeping THE TRUTH SEEKER alive, and that its circulation may greatly increase to help liberate the world from bonds of superstition. I received the three volumes of "A Truth Seeker Around the World," with which I am well pleased. Truly yours, ELISHA GREEN.

MODESTO, CAL., Dec. 26, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: With regret and heartfelt sorrow I read of the death of my respected friend, D. M. Bennett. Please convey to Mrs. Bennett my sincere sympathy. I hope all his friends will gather together in honor to this great man, and contribute to erect a monument to his memory, and also to prove to his enemies that he was truly esteemed for his moral work while with us on earth, and can never be forgotten by the donors. D. C. COLEMAN.

WEST UNION, IOWA, Dec. 28, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: I am very sorry to hear of the death of our dear friend Bennett. He is dead, and yet he livs, and will liv forever.

I am also sorry to announce the death of Dorcas Reeves of this place. She passed away Dec. 12, 1882. She leaves four sons to mourn her loss, and the whole Liberal world.

You will please discontinue her paper, as the mail goes only part way. You will please send the last book of Mr. Bennett's travels. J. F. SMITH.

LOCUST VALLEY, N. Y., Jan. 5, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I am obliged for the insertion of my paper in your interesting issue of Jan. 6th, and to thank you for its correct rendering. The only error of a word of importance is in the eighth paragraph, seventh line, as all intelligent, instead of all unintelligent matter as in manuscript.

Inclosed I send you $10—$5 to be appropriated to our dear friend Bennett's Memorial Fund, and $5 for a fund for his much respected widow, Mrs. Bennett, with the sympathies in her bereavement of

Yours truly, CHAS. E. TOWNSEND.

BELOIT, O., Jan. 16, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Death has not only robbed THE TRUTH SEEKER of its founder, but one by one its patrons are numbered with the dead.

Nathan Rockhill had been a prepaying subscriber to Bennett's paper from the time of its first issue. His name is enrolled in the Around-the-World contributors. He died the 30th day of July last. Although a Materialist, life and life's close were remarkably peaceful. All classes loved and respected this man of truth, and mourn his loss, as a combination of virtues seldom embodied in human structure were his.

S. E. R.

MADISON, GA., Dec. 28, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: The sad intelligence conveyed by the black lines in the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER, that D. M. Bennett was dead, fell heavily upon my heart. I felt as though death had invaded my household; and I may indeed say in one sense that it had. Mr. Bennett's weekly visits through the editorials of his paper had endeared him to me as one of my family. Words cannot convey my feelings on the subject. There is no time, however, for shedding tears. Let every Liberal lend a hand toward sustaining the paper that was so dear to him. Yours truly, A. A. BELL.

PLYMOUTH, ME., Dec. 30, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find $4—$3 to pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER up to Nov. 1, 1883, and $1 for the Bennett Monument Fund. I hope that all true Liberals will respond and giv Mr. Bennett a monument that will show to the world of creeds that D. M. Bennett in his day has done more than any other man to rid humanity of superstition, and the name of D. M. Bennett and his works will be handed down to future posterity as the great reformer of his day, and may THE TRUTH SEEKER ever liv to advocate Freethought and free speech.

Yours with respect, T. G. SMALL.

JUNCTION, VA., Jan. 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I hav learned through the columns of your paper of the death of our noble leader, D. M. Bennett. Many may arise and unfurl the flag of Freethought, leading in the thickest of the battle, and do great service in our cause; but there can never be another D. M. Bennett.

Inclosed find $5, for which send THE TRUTH SEEKER for 1883, fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World," and use the remaining dollar for Bennett's monument.

With a heart full of grief at the loss of such a noble man, and deeply sympathizing with the bereaved widow, I am respectfully, JAMES B. DENTON.

GRATTAN, MICH., Jan. 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I notice by the slip on my last paper that my time expired with that number.

And in renewing I would say a few words of encouragement that I hope may prove a little help to you in the responsible position you are called to fill. You are receiving many words of sympathy and condolence on account of our loss. It is because Mr. Bennett is gone that you need encouragement. We are pleased to know that you are chosen to conduct the paper. Your experience givs you an advantage not possessed by others. Go on and try to do your very best for the sake of yourself and our paper.

Yours truly, C. CLOSE.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Dec. 24, 1882.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: As my subscription will expire with the year, I take this opportunity of renewing it. Inclosed you will find $5, for which please send as follows: THE TRUTH SEEKER for one year, also the fourth volume of Mr. Bennett's travels around the world. The other three volumes were received all safe, and are prized very highly. For the balance you may giv me credit on the Bennett Monument Fund. Hoping that all Liberals will throw in their mite, and that THE TRUTH SEEKER may liv and flourish for many years to come, I remain,

Yours truly, REUBEN PUNNETT.

SALEM, ILL., Dec. 27, 282.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: The sad and lonely feeling of almost an irreparable loss suddenly brought by THE TRUTH SEEKER clad in mourning for its noble editor was only equaled when the wires flashed the assassination of Abraham Lincoln. We seek in this way to come to you and to tell you that the blow which has fallen so heavily on you has not missed us. We had learned not only to honor and respect, but to love him, notwithstanding early training caused us at first to receive his writings with much distrust.

Hoping the sympathy of friends may illumin your path, we remain,

Sincerely yours, SARAH A. AND ALLEN COPE.

MERIDEN, IOWA, Dec. 26, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $1 to be applied to the Bennett Monument Fund. I wish I could giv more. I hope every subscriber of THE TRUTH SEEKER will contribute as much as they feel able to this fund. If all will giv their mite, and that promptly, it will not be long before we will hav a monument erected in honor and memory of our departed hero and editor that will not only be a testimony of D. M. Bennett's great worth and goodness, but it will reflect honor upon everyone who contributed, and to the cause of Liberalism especially.

Wishing you the greatest success in still carrying on THE TRUTH SEEKER, and that it may never cease to be, I remain Yours truly, E. INGERSOLL.

GARRETTSVILLE, OHIO, Dec. 31, 1882.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: I hav waited a little while that others better acquainted might tender you their condolence. It was almost impossible for us to believe the news of the death of Mr. Bennett. It seems to us as though it was untimely, but as our belief is very positiv of another life in a spirit world, we will not complain, hoping all is for some great good yet to come. Be of good cheer, as there are so many thousands ready and willing to help you in all ways. You may feel greatly blessed compared to thousands of widows who are left homeless and almost friendless. Our kindest sympathy and love we gladly giv you, trusting that it may in some way help you to bear this greatest of afflictions.

Truly yours, CORWIN S. CURTIS.

FOX LAKE, Jan. 8, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: Find within two dollars for the Bennett Monumental Fund, as a very small offering of the respect and affection which I entertain for our departed brother, hero, and martyr. No marble monument can ever tell his worth. His life and works will liv when urns and marble slabs shall turn to dust. Long, long after church bigots and priests shall cease to denounce such men as D. M. Bennett, William Lloyd Garrison, Thomas Paine, and Benjamin Franklin as dangerous, bad Infidel men, will these noble, honest Liberals be proclaimed by a grateful unnumbered multitude from every clime and nation as the firm defenders of liberty, the peers of Freethought, the greatest benefactors of our race, and the best saviors of the world. C. B. HAWES.

SANTA BARBARA, CAL., Dec. 30, 1882.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: Allow us, even at this late date, to extend to you our deepest sympathy in your great affliction. We mourn with you the loss of Mr. Bennett, as there was no one, outside of our own family circle, whose death could hav brought such a shock to us. We feel that a great man has been taken from us, and one that we shall all miss. Although we are far away from home, spending the winter in California, we wish to join in erecting a suitable and lasting monument over the grave of him whom we so much admired, and whose loss we so deeply feel. Inclosed find draft for $5 for that purpose, and also $1.50 for the fourth volume of his Round-the-World book. With kindest regards, we are Yours most truly,

MR. AND MRS. J. N. HILLER.

EAST ROCHESTER, O., Dec. 1882.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER the last fifteen months, and must say that I hav been highly pleased with it, especially with Mr. Bennett's travels and the description he givs of things. I had been over a good deal of the country four years ago, in Europe, that he described so well, especially Italy, and when he came to describe California, Golden Gate, and San Francisco, Oakland, San Jose, and the surroundings, and also the country to Salt Lake City, he certainly describes Utah complete, for I hav been over it a good bit, and in the city some two months. He also givs a description of the country on to Denver, which is as correct as can be given.

I am very sorry indeed to hear of the death of so great a man, but such are nature's ways.

Yours with respect, ELI TAYLOR.

WILLAMETTE, OREGON, Dec. 31, 282.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. Bennett is no more, I hav just learned by my paper. Well, it can't be helped; but we can keep the work he started (THE TRUTH SEEKER) alive. Don't let it fall, for it would be a greater calamity than the deaths of five hundred men. If the subscription requires to be double what he had it, I would rather pay it than to see it die; and I believe three-fourths of his subscribers would pay it rather than let it fall.

There is a communication in the paper of Dec. 10th, headed "The Conclusions of a Student," by Geo. H. Berthard, which I wish you would print in tract form. It is one of the most sensible pieces I hav seen for some time, and would be an excellent missionary tract. Publish it and your "Scriptural Catechism" in the same number.

Yours for truth, O. CHERINGTON.

SOLON, OHIO.

MR. EDITOR: I hav fought the enemy long enough on my own hook, and I am glad to read every week what a line of sharpshooters I am standing in. I was never carried away in any of the storms of excitement and fanaticism that I hav passed through. I graduated from a Sabbath-school an Infidel, and don't think that at my age there is much danger of my fainting under the teachings of any ghost, holy or otherwise.

I was at St. Louis at the last Congress, and intend, if permitted, to be at Milwaukee next year. Though a member, I was a new one, and did not take any part in the proceedings. I hope a large attendance of men and women devoted to activ work will assemble at the next session. We are a big church, if we only knew it. All we want is recognition and standing on our own distinct platform to become a power that will be acknowledged and felt. We want to be cut loose from other associations, when our mission is at once accomplished, and divinity and superstition are left without a breath of vitality. Yours, N. EGGLESTON.

BUNKER HILL, ILL., Dec. 27, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: Though behind with my expressions of sympathy, because I cannot giv the full expression of my meaning in a foreign language, I will not be behind in material aid, and so I send you per money order $5, from which take $3 for subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER for 1883, and $2 for the fund for a monument to the memory of our dear hero.

In regard to the subscription price of THE TRUTH SEEKER, it was not good to hav it reduced, as the journal is over and over worth the $3. I hope the money for a monument will come in freely. I would suggest not to make it too expensiv, but rather save some of the money for the continuation of THE TRUTH SEEKER, which, in my opinion, would be the best monument—though I think the matter is in good hands. HENRY GILDEMEISTER.

HYDE PARK, MASS., Jan. 6, 1883.

MRS. MARY W. BENNETT: Esteemed madam, the news of the decease of your husband surprised and saddened me. I had became acquainted with him through his writings. His many excellencies of character there manifested had quite endeared him to me. His loyalty to the prime principles of progressiv humanity, namely, truth and freedom, subjected him to the injustice and cruelty of zealous religionists. Their eyes were holden that they should not know a Messiah in the iconoclastic editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Enlightened, impartial history will yet consign to infamy the names, deceitful practices, and cruel judgments of his persecutors, and applaud the honesty, intelligence, heroism, patience, and patriotism of matyred D. M. Bennett.

With respect for his memory and sympathy for you in your affliction, I am,

Yours fraternally, A. E. GILES.

NEW HAVEN, Jan. 2, 1883.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: When the sad news of the death of your husband was conveyed to me I was on a sick bed, and therefore quite unable to respond in any way. In a time of such bereavement as yours words hav but little meaning, and such as I can offer can at best but poorly convey my heartfelt sorrow and sympathy. Your loss is the loss of the many who marched in the same ranks with him who has left us, and it is in the nature of this common bereavement to draw those who were loyal to your husband and his cause into closer fellowship and sympathy with the lone woman upon whose shoulders has fallen so great a responsibility as the interests he has bequeathed and the trust you hav accepted. May strength and courage be given you equal to the demand of all trials and discouragements.

With a heart full of warm regard for you in your trial, I am, most sincerely,

Your friend, JENNIE BUTLER BROWNE.

PIPE STONE, MINN., Dec. 28, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: I know no words can make amends for the great loss you hav sustained. I deeply realize, from having passed through a similar bereavement, that expressions of condolence wholly fail to restore the loved and lost one; yet I cannot but hope that the heartfelt sympathy of a sincere friend will not be deemed an intrusion on your grief. It has been well said that we weep for the loved and lost because we know that our tears are in vain. I would ease your sorrow, and yet I know not how. We can only acknowledge that the affliction is hard to bear; but over in that beautiful land to which I trust your life-companion has gone, we may not doubt he is free from the pains that he endured here. And when we gather at the river, is it not a sweet consolation to think that he may meet you on the other side?

Hoping you may be equal to your task, I remain, in the tenderest friendship,

Your sincere friend, A. D. FERRIS.

LEESBURG, O., Jan. 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed money order for $2.50, for which send TRUTH SEEKER to a new subscriber. There are some five or six others under conviction here that I think will take it. Only one thing in the way—fears of reputation. Such cowardice is disgustingly contemptible and discouraging. But I hav made up my mind that THE TRUTH SEEKER and its principles must liv; and now that D. M. Bennett, its great captain, has left it, never to return, let each subscriber make every effort to increase its circulation, and its immortality will be a fixed fact.

Tell Mrs. Bennett that I deeply sympathize with her in the loss of her dear husband. Yet their is one feature of the sad event to which she can turn for perpetual comfort and consolation—that is the fact that the grand principles so nobly advocated by him were sown broadcast all over the earth by his own hand, and in all countries and among all people his noble form has been seen, and the great truths he advocated hav been treasured up to liv, to grow and expand forever.

Your friend, H. R. JOHNSON.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

MR. EDITOR: Words do not fully express the feelings of sorrow we all experience over our irreparable loss of our much loved fellow-laborer Mr. Bennett. This great loss should hold us closer in the bonds of truth, which proclaim our mental freedom, keeping sacred our individual rights to a free press and free speech.

To rightly hold such natural rights we must increase our united efforts to educate the masses who are still enslaved, bound in the chains of superstition. It is my opinion that for every brave man who finishes his noble work for liberty, as did our lamented friend, there will be many more braves to continue the needed fight.

I am glad to see you courageous enough to attempt to fill Bennett's place, and more especially as he requested it. I am one of the many who think you can come the nearest of anyone to pleasing the Liberals who support THE TRUTH SEEKER and its peculiar mission. It shall be my pleasure to aid you in every fair way to make the paper an avenue of mental and constitutional freedom and universal education. A free and candid paper is the one we want to speak out the truth on every needed subject in the fairest and kindest manner.

While I like all the Liberal papers and as much as possible support them, I desire to be counted a truth seeker and an especial friend of your paper.

With every good wish for your success, I am ever truly yours, T. L. BROWN.

LAWRENCE, KAN., Dec. 25, 1882.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: Please excuse me if I take the liberty of writing to you, for I could not refrain from it. I never was so astonished in all my life as I was when I read of the death of Mr. Bennett, your dear husband. I hav read it over and over again, and I could not believe my own eyes when I read of the death of our great benefactor, for I had hoped that he would hav lived for a great many years to come; and I say with Mrs. Denton that even the inevitable should be put at bay and a life so valuable be spared. No death outside of our family has caused me such profound sorrow; for it made my very heart break, for I hav lived in his writings, so he seemed like us. I do not know how I can stand to read the papers any more, for it will cause me to shed many tears. It would afford me great pleasure to hav a picture of yourself. I hav two pictures of your dear husband—one large and the other small.

My oldest daughter, Blenda, was born on the same day as your husband was; she was eleven years old the 23d. She weighs thirty pounds—just the same as when your husband was fourteen years of age. She felt very happy to think that she was born on such a great man's day. She meant to hav written to Mr. Bennett and told him about it, but, alas! too late. She sends her best love to you. Please accept my tenderest condolence in your great bereavement. With many wishes for your future welfare, I remain,

Yours sincerely, CHARLOTTE PALM.

OSWEGO CENTER, N. Y., Dec. 26. 282.

MR. EDITOR: My heart is too full for utterance, and words in the English language are not yet invented that can express my sorrow for the loss we sustain, and I often find myself in tears when alone while thinking of the irreparable loss of our beloved Bennett. The nearest I can come to telling my feelings is, I was completely dumbfounded, and hav waited for abler pens to write what I had not language to express, and while we all hold him in our hearts we will hold you in our hands, and pledge eternal vigilance in holding up your hands, as they did Elijah's of old. Yes, we will do more; we will learn to "love you more and serve you better," and will see to it that THE TRUTH SEEKER shall liv; and I think that we old subscribers ought to pay the old price this coming year, and let the new ones hav the benefit of the new price. It is needless to say that Sister Bennett has the sympathy of the entire Liberal world, and be assured that all will throw around her their sustaining arms of love. Oh, how my heart aches when I remember the last words and warm hand of our lamented brother! I walked about half a mile with him, the last night of the Watkins Convention, toward his hotel and away from mine; and as we parted he took my hand, and with tears in his eyes and a choking sob he said, "You're a good fellow, Walker." We pledged eternal friendship and said good-night. But this wound shall never heal, this side of the grave, and shall bleed anew if bigotry or calumny shall dare to say aught against his name.

Charge me one dollar for the Bennett monument. I will pay when called on, and will send more if I can. I am poor, but will go without any and every luxury to perpetuate his memory. A. H. WALKER.

MR. EDITOR: Will you please giv the following few lines a place in the good old TRUTH SEEKER. I am glad I hav lived to see the day that I am almost flooded every week or two with new Liberal newspapers, and I wish to say to all the publishers of each and every Liberal paper in the United States that I am not able to support them. But one thing I will do; I will promis to circulate them to all I think may become subscribers to them. I am past that corner of life that reminds me of my fast approaching dissolution. Three score and ten has slipped by, and I am glad I'v lived to see such a great change in the world of Liberal literature as there is at this day. People are beginning to think and say what they think, but when I was young it was almost dangerous to think, let alone to speak a word against God or the Bible. I never went to any other school but a Sabbath-school. I knew of no other books than the Bible and New Testament, and such books as were built upon the same foundation. I could not write my own name at the age of 17 years, but I could rattle off chapter after chapter, verse after verse, of the Bible and many other books that contained nothing else but Bible literature. I was the only boy in the school of some few hundred scholars, girls and boys, that ever dared to get up into the tub with the preacher and repeat my chapter from the Bible that had been set for me to commit to memory. Ah, but when I first saw Paine's "Age of Reason" that knocked all the Bible stuffing out of me so completely that I never had a relish for a drop of it since, and if ever I am going to die, I am thirty-eight years nearer death than I was at that time, and not one bit alarmed about it.

Yours truly, a graduate of the English coal mines,

WM. HOLGATE.

MONTAGUE, TEX., Dec. 31, 282.

MRS. BENNETT: Our sympathies are with you, but others hav expressed our feelings much better than we could in words. I had my fears that the journey around the world would exhaust his forces and we should lose him out of the Liberal ranks; but so it is, and we must go on with the work without him. And still I fe l that we hav not lost him, that he will be as much with us as before, and perhaps with more power to illuminate our path.

There are several Liberals about here, and the Liberal element is spreading. There is a great change in the five years I hav been here. It is not possible for the churches here in town to get up a religious excitement—not a convert for the last three years; but out in the country they sometimes get a little warmed up. There is much ignorance and superstition amongst these uneducated Southerners, and they take to new ideas very slowly. Still, they are getting more tolerant. They are afraid of the Northern people. I got fined for Sabbath-breaking when I first came here; now I might do almost anything and not get fined. My reputation for honesty and business stands high, though everybody knows I am an Infidel. Our mill is called the Infidel Mill. There is a mill right close to us run by a Christian, but we get more than twice the business they do. It has been a hard struggle for me to get established here. I came with poor health and very little money, but now I hav better health and am doing a fine business. Now we feel a little freer, thinking we can hav a few dollars to spare in Liberal work. I will help the Monument Fund before long.

I fear I will infringe on your precious time if I don't quit writing. Yours in the bonds of friendship, GEO. W. CARPENTER.

JERICHO, L. I., Jan. 5, 1883.

MY DEAR MRS. BENNETT: I hav desired day after day and night after night to commune with thee on paper as I hav in spirit, but the tidings of thy dear husband's decease came to me so like an avalanche, from the shock of which I hav hardly recovered sufficiently to find fitting words to express to thee my sympathy and my sorrow. The loss seems irreparable, not only to thee, my beloved friend, to whom it is the closest and severest, but to us all, who knew him but to love him, and to revere him for his work's sake. Even to us who know that it is the physical only that has left us, the loss seems beyond computation, but we shall hear from him; we shall get messages from him of encouragement to persevere in the good and great work of mental freedom so well practiced by him. O brave woman that thou art, I am so glad to find thee just where I thought I should, standing firm to thy post of honor; persevere, and with thy good helper the blessed TRUTH SEEKER will be saved to us.

I came here to the home of my nativity to render the last sad services to my dearly beloved and only remaining brother, Willet Kirby, which ceremony was finished the same day that thy husband departed this life; and when the startling dispatches came inviting me to be at his obsequies, I greatly desired to be there, and my heart overflowed with gratitude for the honor of being remembered, but my age forbad thinking that I could come alone; but I intend to do myself the pleasure of calling to see thee in a few days on my way home, when I shall attend to my engagement with the indispensable TRUTH SEEKER. I am sorry I cannot introduce it into some families here, but they are bound to their idols and choose to remain so, but I shall not let them alone, for they are not an ignorant class of people, but reading and looking for light and truth in an opposit direction. AMY POST.

Poetry.

Deficient in Faith.

A LEGEND.

Said a missionary bishop to a savage o'er the sea:
"O you wretched, wicked sinner, come and listen unto me;
Pay attention while the story of redemption I relate.
Be a Christian, and avert the pagan unbeliever's fate.

I'll endeavor to explain to you, as simply as I can,
All the sufferings and martyrdom of Christ, the son of man;
And I'll show you all the benefits you'll reap another day,
If you leave your silly idols and will knuckle down and pray.

You must know that we are wicked to an infinit degree,
And are doomed in fire infernal everlastingly to be;
And the only chance of dodging it (you see my speech is plain)
Is to be regenerated, or we'll call it 'born again;'

For if every blessed virtue in your single self were crammed,
Not an atom would they mitigate the tortures of the damned.
Per contra—you can bigamize, adulterate, or thieve!
Can burgle, forge, or arsonate, as long as you believe.

But in order this desirable condition to attain,
You must promis on your idols you will never look again.
You must part with Mumbo Jumbo and his hanky-panky tricks,
Or the Lord'll down upon you like a heavy load of bricks.

You must also be received within our holy church's pale,
And submit your sinful carcass ere the spirit you inhale;
But when you've had the sacraments your path to glory's paved;
You're a sanctified believer, and you're numbered with the saved.

But beware of those misguided men whose feet hav gone astray,
Whom the Lord hath given over to the enemy a prey;
For their teachings are erroneous, their morals very loose—
Pernicious; they'll endeavor your allegiance to seduce.

There are Catholics and Methodists, and Baptists, too, as well;
With Quakers and with Shakers steering straight away to hell.
There's Ranters and Salvationists, and Mormonites so hot,
With several hundred others— but avoid the blessed lot!"

Now this missionary bishop spent a goodish deal of time—
I couldn't tell you half he did or put it into rhyme;
But he labored very earnestly to soothe the savage breast
That was grieving o'er the loss of Mumbo Jumbo and the rest.

And in course of time the bishop taught the savage man to read,
And he plumed himself on having made a convert to his creed;
Till the nigger stood before him with his Bible in his hand,
And in most respectful language couched the following demand:

"Am I to understand that what is here is strictly true?
Because there's lots of things herein that puzzled me 'a few;'
So perhaps your grace will deign to condescendingly explain,
And elucidate the paragraphs that mystify my brain.

If I read the Bible rightly, why the holy scripture saith,
We can only get salvation when we hav a meed of faith—
And a little grain that's even microscopical will do;
But without it we are damned." Remarked the bishop, "Very true."

"Well, I'm damned," replies the nigger, "for I've tried a simple test—
I ordered yonder hill to shift a leetle farther west.
I roared at it for half a day, but still it didn't budge,
I've not the faith, or else the book contains a deal of fudge.

I havn't caught a serpent yet, to try its deadly tooth,
And I havn't any poison yet with which to try the truth;
But the very first, the earliest, of chances I'll embrace,
And I'll bring it on, whiche'er it be, to try it on your grace."

Now a week elapsed, when came before the bishop once again
This candidate for glory with a serpent in his train:
But the invite to be bitten was respectfully declined,
For the bishop fairly turned and fled—the savages behind.

And, fleet of foot, they captured him; compelled him to retrace
His most unwilling steps, until they brought him face to face
With a snake (the genus rattle), which they goaded till its spite
On his grace's tender corpus left a very nasty bite.

Suffice it, that he also was deficient just as much
In his faith as was the savage—so it proved the final touch;
He kicked the bucket tranquilly. His memory they recall
Whene'er they see his scalp that hangs in Mumbo Jumbo's hall.

—D. Evans in London Freethinker.

ENGLISH PUBLICATIONS.

Strauss and Renan; an essay by E. Zeller. Translated from the German. $1.25.

The Apocryphal New Testament; being all the gospels, epistles, and other pieces now extant, attributed in the first four centuries to Jesus Christ, his apostles, and their companions, and not included in the New Testament by its compilers. $2.25.

The Coming Era. By Alexander Calder, 8vo., 423 pp. $3.50.

History of Rationalism; embracing a survey of the present state of Protestant theology, with an appendix of literature. By John F. Hurst, D.D. $2.50.

The English Life of Jesus. By Thomas Scott. $2.50.

Idols and Ideals; with an essay on Christianity. By Moncure D. Conway, M.A. $2.

Brief History of the Indian People, containing a map of the Indian Empire. By W. W. Hunter. Price $1.75.

Legends of the Old Testament traced to their apparent primitiv sources. By Thomas Lumisden Strange. $2.25.

Life and Struggles of Wm. Lovett, in his pursuit of bread, knowledge, and freedom. $3.

The Sources and Development of Christianity. By Thomas Lumisden Strange. $2.25.

Essence of Christianity. Translated from the German of Ludwig Feuerbach. By Marian Evans. $3.75.

The Life of Jesus, for the People, with an introduction of 248 pages. By David Friedrich Strauss; 2 vols, 8vo. $10.

A Commentary on the Text of the Bhagavad-Gita; or, the Discourse between Krishna and Arjuna of Divine Matters. Cloth, $1.75.

A Forecast of the Religion of the Future. Being short essays on some important questions in religious philosophy. By W. W Clark. $1.50.

The Language and Literature of China. Two lectures. By Robert K. Douglas. $2.25.

The Development of Creation on the Earth. By T. L. Strange. Cloth, $1.25.

The African Sketch Book, with maps and illustrations. By Winwood Reade; 2 vols, $4.

New Religious Thoughts. By Douglas Campbell. Second edition. $2.

Letters of William Von Humboldt to a Female Friend. Translated from the German by Catharine M. A. Cooper. 2 vols. Cloth, $2.75.

The Life of Jenghiz Khan. Translated from the Chinese by R. K. Douglas. Cloth, $1.50.

The Jade Chaplet. A collection of songs from the Chinese. By G. C. Stent. Cloth, $1.50.

The Sphere and Duties of Government. Translated from the German of Baron Wilhelm Von Humboldt by Joseph Coulthard, Jr. Cloth, $1.50.

Nagananda; or, the Joy of the Snake World. A Buddhist drama in five acts. Translated from the Sanskrit by Palmer Boyd, B.A. Cloth, $1.50.

Reverberations. By W. M. W. Call. Cloth, $1.50.

Heroes and Martyrs of Freethought. By Charles Watts and G. W. Foote. $1

Review of the work of Mr. John Stuart Mill, entitled "Examination of Sir William Hamilton's Philosophy." By George Grote. Cloth, $1.

Sermons Never Preached. By Philip Phosphor. $1.

The Folk-Songs of Southern India. By C. E. Gover. Cloth, $3.

Truth vs. Edification. By W. R. Greg. Cloth, 50 cents.

The Unity of Creation. By F. H. Kingston. Cloth, 85 cents.

Theism, Doctrinal and Practical. By F. W. Newman. Cloth, $2.25.

Hebrew Theism. By F. W. Newman. $2.

Morning Prayers in the household of a believer in God. Limp cloth, 50 cents.

Scenes from the Ramayana, Meghaduta, etc. Translated by Ralph T. H. Griffith, M.A., Principal of the Benares College. Cloth, $1.75.

The Value of this Earthly Life. A reply to W. H. Mallock's "Is Life Worth Living?" 40 cents.

Life and Mind, on the basis of modern medicin. By R. Lewins, M.D. 75 cents.

The Book of Job. By J. A. Froude, M. A. 50 cents.

Secularists' Manual of Songs and Ceremonies. 40 cents.

The Dathavansa; or, the History of the Tooth Relic of Gautama Buddha, in Pali verse. Edited, with an English translation, by Mutu Coomara Swamy. Cloth, $1.75.

What is Vital Force? Treating of Vital Physics, Animal Morphology, and Epidemics, with an Appendix upon Geology. By Richard Fawcett Battye. Cloth, $2.25.

Retrospect of the Religious Life of England; or, the Church Puritanism and Free Inquiry. By John J. Tayler, B. A. $2.50.

Ancient Mysteries Described; Especially the English miracle plays, founded on Apocryphal New Testament story, including notices of Ecclesiastical shows, etc. By Wm. Hone. Illustrated. $2.25.

Sutta Nipata; or, Dialogues and Discourses of Gautama Budda (2,500 years old). By Mutu Coomara Swamy. $1.75.

Monuments of Upper Egypt. By Mariette-Bey. $2.00.

Wit, Wisdom, and Pathos. From the prose of Heinrich Heine. Selected and translated by J. Snodgrass. Cloth, $3.75.

The Speaker's Commentary. Reviewed by T. L. Strange. Cloth, $1.25.

Biography of Charles Bradlaugh. By Adolph S. Headingley. 332 pp., crown 8vo. $2.50.

Civilized Christianity. A Reply to "Modern Christianity a Civilized Heathenism." Being some reflections on orthodoxy. Cloth, 50 cents.

Edda Sæmundar Hinns Froda. The Edda of Sæmund the Learned, translated from the Old Norse by Benjamin Thorpe. Cloth, $2.25.

Extracts from the Koran. Compiled by Sir Wm. Muir, K.C.S.I., LL.D. Cloth, $1.

The Church under the Tudors. By Durham Dunlap, M.R.I.A. 75 cents.

Republican Superstitions as illustrated in the Political History of America. By Moncure D. Conway, M.A. $1.25.

In Search of Truth. Conversations on the Bible and Popular Theology. By A.M.Y. Cloth, 75 cents.

The Saint's Travel to the Land of Canaan. By R. Wilkinson. Cloth, 75 cents.

History of the Great French Revolution; A course of six lectures. By Annie Besant. Cloth, 50 cents.

Freethinkers' Text-Book. The history of Freethought, its rise, progress, and triumph. In cloth, $1.25.

Theological Essays and Debates. By Annie Besant. $1.25.

The Founders of Christianity; or, Discourses upon the Origin of the Christian Religion. By Rev. James Crambrook. Cloth, $3.00.

The Trial of Theism. Handsomely bound. 260 pages. $2.00.

Credibilia; or, Discourses on Questions of Christian Faith. By Rev. James Cranbrook. Cloth, $1.00.

Rig-Veda-Sanhita. The Sacred Hymns of the Brahmans. Translated and explained by F. Max Muller, M.A., L.L.D. Vol. I. $3 75.

Mind in Animals. By Prof. Ludwig Buchner. Translated from the German by Annie Besant. $2.50.

ENGLISH PAMPHLETS.

Auguste Comte; Biography of the great French thinker, with sketches of his philosophy, his religion, and his sociology; being a short and convenient resume of Positivism for the general reader. By Annie Besant. 25 cents.

Christianity. By Moncure D. Conway, M. A. 50 cents.

Christian Evidences Criticised. By Chas. Watts. 30 cents.

Christianity in Relation to Freethought, Skepticism, and Faith. Replies to three discourses by the Bishop of Peterborough. By Chas. Bradlaugh. 20 cents.

Clericalism in France; Speech of Prince Napoleon Bonaparte to the Chamber of Deputies, Nov. 24, 1876. 25 cents.

Debate on the Christian Evidences; Verbatim Report of the two-nights' debate between Chas. Watts and C. H. Cowper 25 cents.

Disestablishment and Disendowment of the English Church. Verbatim reports of two night's between Chas. Bradlaugh and W. Simpson. 25 cts.

Essays, chiefly Theological. By Melapns. 25 cents.

Four Nights' Discussion; Between Rev. Alexander Stewart and Chas Watts. 25 cents.

Heresy; Its Morality and Utility. 30 cents.

Human Sacrifices in England: Four discourses by Moncure D. Conway, M. A. 50 cents.

Is it Reasonable to Worship God? A two-nights' debate by Chas. Bradlaugh and Rev. R. A. Armstrong, 40 cents.

Impeachment of the House of Brunswick. By Chas. Bradlaugh. 40 cents.

The Meaning of History; Two lectures by Frederick Harrison, M. A. 50 cents.

Merits and Demerits of Secularism; A discussion between the Rev. Thomas Crow and Charles Watts. 25 cents.

Natural Reason vs. Divine Revelation; An appeal for Freethought. By "Julian." 25 cents.

On the Philosophical Classification of National Institutions; A lecture by F. W. Newman 25 cents.

Reasoning from Facts; A method of everyday logic. By G. J. Holyoake. 75 cents.

Secularism in Its Various Relations. By Chas. Watts. 25 cents.

Secularism the True Philosophy of Life; An exposition and a defense. By G. W. Foote. 20 cents.

Taxation; How it Originated, Who Bears it, and Who ought to Bear it. By Chas. Bradlaugh. 25 cents.

The Bible and Xianity. By Chas. Watts. 20 cents.

Thoughts on Theism; With suggestions toward a public religious service in harmony with modern science and philosophy. Revised and enlarged. 50 cents.

Wealthy and Wise; A lecture introductory to the study of political economy. By Joseph Hiam Levy. 25 cents.

What does Xian Theism Teach? A two nights' discussion between the Rev. A. J. Harrison and Chas. Bradlaugh. 25 cents.

When Were Our Gospels Written? Reply to Dr. Tischendorf. 25 cents.

THE

BIBLE—WHENCE AND WHAT?

BY

Richard B. Westbrook, D.D., LL.B.,

The questions, Where did the books of the Bible come from? What is their authority? and, What is the real source of dogmatic theology? are treated fearlessly in the light of history, philosophy, and comparativ religions. It is impossible to giv even a condensed statement of what is itself a marvelous condensation.

WHOLE LIBRARIES ARE HERE CONCENTRATED INTO ONE LITTLE BOOK.

The author's conclusions are, of course, against the supernatural origin and infallibility of the Bible, while the dogmas of the dominant theology are shown to be priestly perversions of the ancient mythologies.

Printed in good type and bound in cloth. Price, $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Pl., New York.

DR. THAYER'S MAGNETIC GARMENTS

IS THE ONLY PHYSICIAN THAT NEVER GUESSES. IT ALWAYS FINDS THE DISEASE AT THE START, RELIEVES, AND CURES IT.

Magnetism is Nature's great remedy. Victoria is the only permanent and scientific garment made.

IMPORTANT.

There are several base and worthless imitations of Dr. Thayer's Magnetic goods upon the market. The only apparent merit they have is Cheapness. Cheap goods in this line, as in every other, are dear at any price, and cannot render as efficient service to the patient, because they DO NOT HOLD THEIR MAGNETIC CURRENTS OVER THIRTY DAYS.

Do not be deceived by irresponsible and unscrupulous imitators. If our invention was not valuable it would not be imitated by others, who try to palm off on an over-confiding public something "JUST AS GOOD."

"VICTORIA" has twelve improvements over any and all other Magnetic Garments. Therefore do not buy any such goods till you have sent to Dr. Thayer.

BE ON YOUR GUARD AGAINST FRAUDULENT APPLIANCES!

BUY ONLY OF REPUTABLE MANUFACTURERS!

VICTORIA TRIUMPHANT!

The most wonderful cases on record. Send for Proofs, Circulars, and Price List to

Dr. Thayer,
455 Fulton Street, Brooklyn. N. Y

Our Magnetic Insoles will cure Chilblains and cold feet. Send for a pair. Price, $1.50. Mention TRUTH SEEKER.

Please send us a history of your case.

NO INVALID NEED DESPAIR!

13t2

INGERSOLL'S SPEECH ON TALMAGIAN THEOLOGY.

The ICONOCLAST, Saturday, Dec. 23, 1882, will contain the Great Speech of Col. Ingersoll on "Talmagian Theology," delivered at Indianapolis, Ind., Nov. 11, 1882. The paper containing the speech can be procured at 5 cents a copy. Twenty-five copies and over at 3 cents a copy.

Address

LAMASTER & JAMIESON,
Indianapolis, Ind.

LIFE-SIZE

LITHOGRAPH OF D. M. BENNETT.

Heavy Plate Paper,

SUITABLE FOR FRAME OR WITHOUT FRAME.

Sent by Mail for Fifty cents.

ADDRESS THIS OFFICE.

The Kansas Liberal.

A FORNIGHTLY

FREETHOUGHT JOURNAL.

Devoted to the Fearless Discussion of all Human Interests; believing that the greatest obstacle to Progress is Authority, and that the most essential aid to Morality is LIBERTY.

TERMS:

Per Year,	$1.00
Six Months,	.50
Three Months,	.25

Specimen Copies Free.

W. HARMAN, E. C. WALKER, } Editors and Publishers.

9

THE BOSTON INVESTIGATOR,

The oldest reform journal in the United States,

Is published every Wednesday at the Paine Memorial Building, Boston, Mass.,

By JOSIAH P. MENDUM.

Edited by HORACE SEAVER.

PRICE, $3.00 per annum; single copies, seven cents. Specimen copies sent on receipt of a two-cent stamp to pay postage.

The Investigator is devoted to the Liberal cause in religion; or in other words, to universal mental liberty. Independent in all its discussions, discarding superstitious theories of what never can be known, it devotes its columns to things of this world alone, and leaves the next, if there be one, to those who hav entered its unknown shores. Believing that it is the duty of mortals to work for the interests of this world, it confines itself to the things of this life entirely. It has arrived at the age of fifty-one years, and asks for a support from those who are fond of sound reasoning, good reading, reliable news, anecdotes, science, art, and a useful family journal. Reader, please send your subscription for six months or one year, and if you are not satisfied with the way the Investigator is conducted we won't ask you to continue with us any longer 2m 50

THIS WORLD.

A WEEKLY LIBERAL MAGAZINE, PUBLISHED BY

George Chainey.

51 Fort ave. (Roxbury), Boston, Mass,

Terms $2.00 per annum.

Each number contains a lecture in full by Geo. Chainey and during 1883 a portrait and biographical sketch of some distinguished Freethinker or Liberal.

A sample copy, containing portrait of the lecturer and prospectus for 1883, sent free to any address.

KNOWLEDGE IS POWER

READ.

KNOW THYSELF.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man, Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now.

Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. 1y38

A LIBERAL COLONY.

1,200 FREE HOMES!

THE NEW COLORADO!

Those desiring a valuable home on the public domain at a nominal price ($1.25 per acre, and 33 months in which to pay for it), will find it very greatly to their advantage to correspond with the undersigned.

Address with 2 3-cent stamps O. A. PHELPS,
President Gunnison and Uncompahgre Colonization Society, LONGMONT, COLO. 3m

The Figures of Hell; or, The Temples of Bacchus.

Dedicated to Licensers of Beer and Whisky.

By MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.

Published by the Author.

A neat little volume of between two and three hundred pages.

Price, $1.00.

THE SEMITIC GODS AND THE BIBLE.

Treating upon the gods of the Semitic nations, including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, the Virgin Mary, and the Bible. To the latter 280 pages are devoted, showing that book to be a very inferior production for a first-class God. By D. M. Bennett. 389 large pages. Paper covers 60 cents: cloth, $1.

STANDARD BOOKS.

Sold by D. M. Bennett 21 Clinton Pl., N. Y.

CYCLOPEDIAS.

The People's Cyclopedia of Universal Knowledge; 2 royal octavo vols.; over 1,000. pp. each, bound in leather, the whole the work of thirty of the ablest men of our times, treating upon almost every conceivable subject, and brought down to the year 1881; illustrated with numerous colored maps and over three thousand engravings; said to contain thirty thousand more articles than any other cyclopedia. The Appendixes alone contain a wonderful fund of knowledge, and among the subjects treated may be named the following: Biographical Classification of Distinguished Men, including Artists, Actors, and Novelists, Authors and Historians, Agriculturists and Manufacturers, Composers and Musicians, Engineers and Builders, Founders of Institutions, Explorers and Founders of Countries, Financiers and Capitalists, Inventors, Journalists and Publishers, Lawyers and Jurists, Lexicographers, Commentators and Philologists, Military and Naval Officers, Ministers and Theologians, Orators and Essayists, Philanthropists and Reformers, Philosophers and Physicians, Physicians and Surgeons, Poets, Scholars and Educators, Sovereigns and Rulers, Statesmen and Diplomatists, Distinguished Women, with a good showing of miscellaneous and scattering. Next follows a Dictionary of Literary Pseudonyms, alphabetically arranged; Origin of Familiar Words and Phrases; Societies and Institutions; Orthography, Punctuation, Correspondence; The Ruling Dynasties of the World; Historical Data of the Republics of History; Classification of Existing Sovereignties; Standing Armies of the World; The Lost and Ruined Cities of the World; Art Galleries of the World; Area, Population, and Wealth of Nations; Monetary Statistics of the World; State School Systems in the United States; Educational Statistics of Various Countries; Alphabetical List of all Inventions; Great Plagues and Distempers of History; Origin of Orchard and Garden Fruits; Governmental Support of Rulers; Banks and Banking; History of Presidential Elections in the United States; Chronological Outline of Historical Events from 1492 to 1882; Remarkable Trials; The Treaties of the World; Principal Bridges of the World; Interesting Geographical Tables; United States Census of Cities and Towns for 1880; Religious Newspapers of all Denominations; Religious Summaries for all countries; Currency, Stock, Insurance, and Interest; Practical and useful measures; Great Church Buildings of History; Great Libraries of the World; Salaries of United States Government Officers; Federal and State Judiciaries; United States Imports and Exports; State Officers' Official Time and Salaries, Fleetest Horses of Current Record; United States Postal Regulations; United States Census; United States Copyright Regulations; United States Patent Office; Business of the General Land Office; United States Public Land System; Table of United States and Territories; Statement of United States Public Debt; National Militia Laws of the United States; Army and Navy of the United States; Religious Denominations of United States and Canada; Our National Domain; Statistics of Cotton and Cereals in the United States; Statistics of the Daily Press of the United States; Marvelous Developments of the Great Western States and Territories; Outstanding Bonded Indebtedness; Indian Agencies and Census of the Indians; Recent Discoveries in Science and Explorations. This entire work by express for $15.00. Regular price $20.00.

Chambers's Encyclopedia of 1880, with Copious Additions of American Editors. In Fifteen Volumes, Octavo, entitled the "Library of Universal Knowledge." There is no Cyclopedia that outranks Chambers's, and to one who reads of American affairs, this is far better than the foreign editions. This very valuable work, of nearly one thousand pages per volume, is offered at the extremely low price of $1 per volume, or $15 for the entire set, the same by express; postage, 18 cents per volume additional. More information cannot be had for the money.

Chambers's Encyclopedia of English Literature. A Selection of the Choicest Productions of English Authors, from the Earliest to the Present time, Connected by a Critical and Biographical History. Elegantly illustrated. Edited by Robert Chambers, Editor of the Edinburgh Journal. Two Octavo volumes in one. Rich and full gilt. 1400 pages. $4. Postage 44 cents.

Chamber's Information for the Million; or, One Thousand and one Things Worth Knowing. Comprising the History and Mystery of Everything Worth Knowing. 12mo. Price, 65 cents; postage, 11 cents.

The Same, in Acme Edition, 4 volumes, Plain Binding, at the low price of $2. Postage 34 cents.

The Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature; edited by John Kitto, D. D., F. S. A., assisted by noted Biblical writers. Illustrated by numerous engravings. Two volumes, 8vo., of over 900 pages, compact type. A valuable work. Price of 2 vols., $2.50. Postage, 34 cts.

The Handy Bible Cyclopedia and Bible Reader's Assistant, containing a new and complete Dictionary of the Bible, a complete Concordance to the Old and New Testaments, and an Explanatory Index to the Persons, Places, and Things in the Scriptures. Illustrated, 1 vol., 12mo., 742 pages. Price 75 cts.; postage, 14 cts.

The World's Encyclopedia of Wonders and Curiosities of Art, Science, and Literature, representing Physiology, Phrenology, Astronomy, Botany, Geology, Natural History, Ichthyology, Mythology, Ornithology, Meteorology, Mineralogy, Chemistry, Zoology, Entomology, Biography, etc., etc.; and containing a Full and Authentic Description of the Most Remarkable and Astonishing Places, Beings, Animals, Customs, Experiments, Phenomena, etc., of both Ancient and Modern Times, in all Parts of the Globe; comprising correct accounts of the Most Wonderful Freaks of Nature and Arts of Man; with an Appendix, containing curious experiments and amusing recreations. By I. Platt, D. D. Illustrated with one hundred and forty engravings. Price, $2; postage, 30 cts.

CHANDOS CLASSICS.

A series of standard works in poetry, history, and general literature. Fine binding.

	Price	Post
Legendary Ballads of England and Scotland. By John S. Roberts	.65	.08
German Literature. Richter, Richler, Zschokke, Tieck	.65	.0
Complete Angler. Isaac Walton and Charles Colton	.65	.08
Lives of Novelists and Dramatists. By Sir Walter Scott	.65	.0
Poetical Works of Eliza Cook	.65	.08
Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire. By Edward Gibbon. In four volumes	2 60	.32
Poetical Works of Charles Mackay	.65	.08
History of England. By Henry Hallam	.65	.08
Lockhart's Spanish Ballads and Southey's Chronicle of the Cid	.65	.08
The Romance of History. England. By Henry Neele. Illustrated	.65	.08
The Romance of History. India. Hobart Caunter, B D	.65	.08
The Romance of History. Italy. C. Macfarlane. " " " Spain. Don T. de Trueba	.65	.08
Doctor Syntax. His Three Tours in Search of the Picturesque, of Consolation, of a Wife. With colored illustrations	.65	.08
Homer's Iliad	.65	.08
" Odyssey	.65	.08
Life and Remains of John Clare. By J. L. Cherry	.65	.08
Selections from the Talmud. By H. Polano	.65	.08
Everyday Book of Modern Literature. By C. H. Townsend	.65	.08
Johnson's Lives of the Poets	.65	.08
Milton	.65	.08
Essays on Chivalry, Romance, and the Drama. By Sir Walter Scott	65	.08

SHAKSPERE'S WORKS.

	Price	Post
Complete. Fireside Edition. Crown octavo. Large type. Morocco, gilt edges. Illustrated. With a full and Comprehensive Life, Notes, Glossary, etc.	4 00	.50
" Crown Octavo.	3 75	.48
The Avon Edition. Sheep, marbled edges, library style	3 00	.42
In three volumes. Comedies, Histories, Tragedies. Half Russia, gilt top	3 00	.48
The same, in cloth	2 50	.48
Dramatic and Poetic Works, complete in one volume. Illustrated, with life by Alexander Dyce. Sheep, marbled edges	2 50	.38
Scarlet Border Edition. Illustrated. Complete, red and green. Morocco, gilt edges	1 50	.20
Handy Volume Shakspere complete, in 13 vols. Green cloth, red edges	5 00	.85
Arundel Edition. From the text of Clark and Wright. Illustrated	1 50	.24
In 8 vols., brown cloth, edited by Clark and Wright	1 50	.27
Complete from the text of Johnson, Stevens, and Reed. Octavo. Paper Binding,	60	.18
Large quarto edition bound in gold and black. Illustrated	1 00	.24
Arlington Edition	60	.13

STANDARD BOOKS.

Sold by D. M. Bennett, 21 Clinton Pl., N. Y.

DICTIONARIES.

Webster's Pocket Dictionary, 40,000 words. Illustrated. Price, 15 cts.; postage, 5 cts.

Webster's Dictionary, 50,000 words. Price, 25 cts.; postage, 5 cts.

American Diamond Pronouncing Dictionary, 700 pages. Price, 30 cts.; postage, 5 cts.

The American Comprehensive Lexicon of the English Language, on the basis of Webster, containing 50,000 words and much other information. 768 pages. Illustrated. Price, 50 cts.; postage, 6 cts.

American Popular Dictionary, containing every useful word in the English language, and much other useful information. Price, 50 cts; postage, 8 cts.

The American Standard Dictionary, containing all needed English words, with the exact definitions, proper spelling, and true pronunciation, as given by Webster, Worcester, Johnson, and others, with Chronology, Grammar, Proverbs, Scripture names, History, Laws Relativ to Land, Interest, Census Returns, Debt, Population, Manufactures, Productions, Wealth, with Ancient Mythology, etc. Illustrated, 717 pages, 12mo. Price, $1; postage, 17 cts.

The Same, in leather binding, $1.75; postage, 18 cts.

The Useful Dictionary of the English Language, compiled by Austin Nuttall, LL.D., based on the labors of Webster, Worcester, Richardson, Goodrich, Johnson, Walker, Craig, Ogilvie, Trench, and other eminent Lexicographers. Comprising many thousands of new words, which modern Science, Literature, Art, and Fashion have called into existence and usage. 900 pages, 12mo. Price, 90 cts.; postage, 14 cts.

The Same, half morocco, $1.25; postage, 14 cts.

Webster's Primary Dictionary, 65 cents; postage, 8 cts.

Webster's Pocket Dictionary, new edition, cloth, 70 cts.; postage, 8 cts.

The Same, roan flexible covers, 80 cts.; postage 8 cts.

The Same, with flexible covers and tuck, 90 cts.; postage, 8 cts.

Army and Navy Dictionary, cloth, 80 cts.; postage, 10 cts.

The Same, with tucks, $1.15; postage, 10 cts.

Common School Dictionary, 85 cts; postage, 10 cts.

High School Dictionary, $1.20; postage, 12 cts.

Academic Dictionary, $1.75; postage, 15 cts.

Counting House Dictionary, sheep, $3.00; postage, 20 cts.

Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, 118,000 words, 3,000 engravings; four pages Colored Plates; a Supplement of over 4,600 New Words and Meanings, including such as have come into use during the past fifteen years, many of which have never before been placed in any English Dictionary; also added, a New Biographical Dictionary of over 9,700 names of noted persons, ancient and modern, including many now living—giving Name, Pronunciation, Nationality, Profession, and date of each. Sheep, marble edges, plain or stamped sides, $10; (publishers' price, $12). Cloth, and in 3 vols., same price,

Half Turkey or Russia, extra marble edges, $11.50.

Full Russia, marble edges, $14.

Full Russia, vermilion edges, $14.50.

Turkey Morocco, vermilion edges, $14.50.

Turkey Morocco, gilt edges, $18.

These are usually sent by express, but if by mail, 80 cts. additional must be sent.

Webster's National Pictorial Dictionary, in one volume, 1,040 octavo pages, 600 engravings. Cloth, $4; Sheep, marble edges, $4.50; Half Turkey, vermilion edges, $5.50; postage, 40 cts.

Reid's English Dictionary, half Morocco. Price, 85 cts.; postage, 10 cts.

A Brief Biographical Dictionary, thoroughly revised up to the year 1880. Price, $1; postage, 14 cts.

Masson's French Dictionary (French-English and English-French), with a list of the principal diverging derivations. Price, 75 cts.; postage, 9 cts.

Zahner's Dictionary of the English and German Languages, giving the exact meaning of English words in German, and of German words in English, with correct spelling, pronunciation, and definition. Price, 50 cts.; postage, 6 cts.

Dictionary of the English and Italian anguages, price, 60 cts. each; postage, 6 cts.

CHARLES DICKENS'S COMPLETE WORKS.

Illustrated. 12mo. 15 vols. Volumes bound uniform in green and gold. Large type. Comprising,

1 Pickwick Papers,
2 David Copperfield,
3 Martin Chuzzlewit,
4 Nicholas Nickleby,
6 Bleak House,
6 Little Dorrit,
7 Dombey and Son,
8 Our Mutual Friend,
9 Oliver Twist. Pictures from Italy, and American Notes,
10 Old Curiosity Shop, and Hard Times,
11 Tale of Two Cities, and Sketches by Boz,
12 Barnaby Rudge, and Edwin Drood,
13 Great Expectations, and Uncommercial Traveler,
14 Christmas Stories, and Reprinted Pieces,
15 Child's History, and Miscellaneous.

The above only in sets. By express, $12. By mail, $14.25.

Dickens's Works in Single Volumes.

	Price.	Post.
Child's History of England	65	.11
Dickens-Collins Christmas Stories	65	.11
Martin Ghuzziewit	65	.11
Our Mutual Friend	65	.09
Oliver Twist	65	.12
Edwin Drood	65	.11
Charles Dickens's Parlor Album of Illustrations.	1 25	.15
Uncommercial Traveler	65	.10
Dombey and Son	25	.16
David Copperfield	75	.14

WAVERLEY NOVELS, BY SIR WALTER SCOTT.

Illustrated. 12mo. 12 vols. Uniform in green and gold. Large type. Comprising,

1 Waverly, and Woodstock,
2 Rob Roy, and Heart of Midlothian,
3 Bride of Lammermoor, Legend of Montrose, and Chronicles of the Canongate,
4 Peverill of the Peak, and The Betrothed,
5 Fortunes of Nigel, and Count Robert of Paris,
6 Ivanhoe, and The Talisman,
7 Fair Maid of Perth, and The Antiquary,
8 The Monastery and the Abbot,
9 Guy Mannering, and Annie of Geierstein,
10 Kenilworth, and St. Ronan's Well,
11 Black Dwarf, Old Mortality, and Quentin Durwood,
12 Red Gauntlet, and The Pirate.

Sold only in sets. Sent by express for the very low price of $10. By mail, $12.

Macmillan Library. Edited by Charlotte M. Yonge. Large type, fine paper.

A Storehouse of Stories. 2 vols.
Ruth and Her Friends.
The Heroes of Asgarde.
When I Was a Little Girl.
Agnes Hopetown.
The Runaway.

The set by express for $4. By mail, $4.60.

ARLINGTON EDITION OF POPULAR WORKS.

Very fine binding.

	Price	Post
Schiller	.60	.13
Goethe	.60	.13
Milton	.60	.13
British Female Poets	.60	.13
Pope	.60	.13
Burns	.60	.13
Dante	.60	.13
Moore	.60	.13
Shakspere	.60	.13
Arabian Nights	.60	.13
Pilgrim's Progress	.60	.13
Robinson Crusoe	.60	.13

Red Line Edition of the Poets. 12mo. Illustrated. Colored covers, Embossed in Gold, Full Gilt, Red Border around the pages. A Beautiful Book, and remarkably cheap at 75 cents per volume. Postage 15 cents per volume extra. Every lover of poetry should have the entire set.

Milton,
Pope,
Byron,
Goethe,
Burns,
Dante,
Owen Meredith,
Jean Ingelow,
Tennyson,
Mrs. Hemans,
Schiller,
Scott,
Moore,
Poets of America,
British Female Poets,

STANDARD BOOKS.

Sold by D. M. Bennett, 21 Clinton Pl., N. Y.

	Price.	Post.
Dickens's Parlor Album of Illustrations	1 25	.14
Barberine; or, a Woman's Devotion. By Mary Nal Sherwood	60	.10
Sunshine in the Shady Place. By Edith Milner,	50	.09
Our Red Coats and Blue Jackets. By H. Stewart,	50	.10
Journey of Discovery	50	.08
Stars and Stripes in Rebellion	25	.07
Three Eras of New England and Other Addresses. By George Lunt	25	.09
Broken Bracelet and other Poems. By Mrs. C. H. W Esling	25	.08
Fancy's Frolic; or, Christmas Stories. By Harriet Farley	60	.09
Biographia Literaria; or, Biographical Sketches of my Literary life and Opinions. By Samuel Taylor Coleridge. Two volumes in one,	1 00	.5
Clever Jack and Other Tales. By Anne Bowman	75	.11
Famous Boys, and How They Became Great Men	1 00	.11
Famous Stories. By Various Authors. 2 vols..	1 70	.22
Balzac's Comedie Humaine	75	.10
Life and Times of Sir Walter Raleigh. By M. A. Thomson	75	.09
The Splendid Advantages of Being a Woman. By Charles J. Dunphie	60	.10
Blue and Red Light. By S. Pancoast, M.D.	50	10
Scottish Life and Character. By E. B. Ramsay, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S.E., Dean of Edinburgh	75	.10
Home Scenes During the Rebellion. By Eiggan Strebor	50	.12
Old Probabilities. By Josh Billings	75	.14
Rob Roy. By Sir Walter Scott	60	.08
Glendover. A Novel. By Deane Roscoe	50	.08
In the Camargue. By Emil Bowles	50	.08
How to Become a Carpenter	50	.06
Hyperion. A Romance. By Henry Wadsworth Longfellow	50	.06
Outre Mer. A Pilgrimage Beyond the Sea. By Henry Wadsworth Longfellow	50	.06
Willy Reilly. By Wm. Carleton	70	.12
Tom Brown's School Days. By Thomas Hughes,	75	.12
Last Days of Pompeii. By Sir Edward Lytton, Bart	75	.10
Scottish Chiefs. Miss Jane Porter	75	.12
Kenelem Chillingly; his Adventures and Opinions	80	.12
The Sketchbook of Geoffrey Crayon, Gent	75	.12
Ivanhoe. A Romance. Sir Walter Scott	75	.12
Peter the Whaler. Wm. H. G. Kingston	75	.12
Erling the Bold. R. M. Ballantyne	75	.12
Dick Chiverly; his Adventures and Misadventures	75	13.
Last of the Mohicans. J. Fennimore Cooper	75	.10
The Red Eric; or, the Whaler's Last Cruise. R. N. Ballantyne	75	.12
Is the Pope Infallible? John Schulte, DD., Ph. D	50	.11
Life and Letters of Madam Swetchine. Count De Falloux	75	.09
Madam Swetchine's Writings. Count De Falloux	75	.08
Memoirs of Madam Desbordes-Valmore. With a Selection from her Poems	75	.10
Biography of Alfred de Musset. Harriet Preston	1 00	.12
Troubadours and Trouveres, New and Old. Harriet Preston	1 00	.10
Noctes Ambrosiane. Christopher North	75	.08
" " " " " Extra,	85	.11
Ante Bellum. Southern Life as it Was. Mary Lennox	50	.08
Spiritual Wives. Wm. E. Dixon	60	.13
Victor Latonrette. A Novel. By a Broad Churchman	50	.09
Modern Diabolism. M. J. Williamson	50	.11
The Golden Tress. Translated from the French of Fortune Du Boisgobey	60	.11
Janet. A Novel	50	.09
For Each Other. A Novel	60	.08
Drawing-Room Plays. An Evening's Amusement	50	.09
Dickens and Collins's Christmas Stories	75	.11
Flemish Life, in Four Stories. By Hendrick Conscience	75	.15
Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1878	50	.21
Essays in Biography and Criticism. By Peter Bayne, M.A	1 00	.12
Complete History of the Great Rebellion in the United States. By Dr. James Moore	75	.11
Children of the Abbey	75	.12
Vicar of Wakefield	60	.09
A Good Fight and Other Tales. By Charles Reade	50	.08
The Book of the Ocean and Life on the Sea. Illustrated	65	.12
London by Day and Night. By D. W. Bartlett..	65	.08
Paris with Pen and Pencil. " " "	65	.08
Life of George the Fourth. By John Banvard..	65	.12
Taine's History of English Literature	90	.11
Life of Bonaparte and the Bonaparte Family	65	.12
Flowers from Fairy Land. By Albert Smith	65	.08
Merry Rhymes and Puzzles	65	.09
Russian Fairy Tales	65	.12
Life of John C. Calhoun. By John S. Jenkins.	65	.12
The Wooing of the Water Witch. By J. Moyr Smith	75	.12
The Prince of Argolis. By J. Moyr Smith	75	.10
Life and Letters of Lord Macaulay. By Trevelyan	1 00	.12
Hours with the Bible. By Cunningham Geike, D.D	65	10
Biographical Sketches. By Harriet Martineau.	69
Man and Beast Here and Hereafter. By Rev. J. G. Wood	85	.12
Life of Gen. John C. Fremont. By Samuel M. Smucker	65	.12
Works of George Herbert in Prose and Verse...	60	.08
Inexorable, or the Wages of Sin. Angelo	75	.08
Dancing Imps of the Wine. Angelo	1 15	.10
Adventures of an Atom. Angelo	1 15	.12
Dickens's Child's History of England	65	.10
Handy Bible Cyclopedia. By John Brown	75	.14
Lives of Jefferson Davis and Stonewall Jackson	75	.2
History of the Mexican War	75	.13
Life of Benjamin Franklin	75	.13
Life and Public Services of Daniel Webster	75	.13
Life of Thomas Jefferson	75	.13
Life of George Washington	75	.12
Life of Galileo	75	.10
How Women can Make Money, Married or Single	75	.13
History of Palestine. By John Kitto	75	.09
Life of Henry Clay	75	.12
Life of Alexander Hamilton	75	.12
Heroic Women of History	75	.12
John Smith and Pocahontas	75	.13
The Railroads of the United States	75	.14
Life of Pauline Cushman	75	.12
Secret Service in the Late War	75	.14
Personal Life of David Livingstone	75	.13
The Russo-Turkish War. Illustrated	75	.15
Twelve Years a Slave	75	.12
Life of General Jackson	75	.14
Our Boys in the Army	75	.13
Cook's Voyages Around the World	75	.10
The World in a Pocket-Book	75	.18
Life and Adventures of Haji-Babi	75	.12
Cattle and Their Diseases	75	.14
Napoleon and His Campaigns	75	.13
India, and the Indian Mutiny	75	.13
Stories of Infinity. By Camille Flammarion	75	.08
Modern Christianity a Civilized Heathenism	1 25
Physiognomy; or, How to Read Faces. By Mary O. Stanton	2 00	.12
Handbook of Christian Evidence. In two parts.	1 00	.06
Ancient Symbol Worship. Illustrated	3 00
Lives of the Popes	1 50	.12
Half-hours with Modern Scientists. Illustrated.	1 50	.08
The Story of the Manuscripts. By George E. Merrill	1 00	.08
The Catechism of Positive Religion. By Auguste Comte	2 00
Kidder's Secrets of Bee Keeping. Cloth,	75
Paper,	50
The Institution of Marriage	2 25
Hafed, Prince of Persia: His Experiences in Earth and Spirit Life	1 75	.18
A Mad World and its Inhabitants. By Julius Chambers	1 25
French Wine and Liquor Manufacture	3 00
Common Sense Theology. By D. Howland Hamilton	1 00	.08
Critical Essays on Physics, Metaphysics, and Ethics. By Lawrence S. Benson	1 50	.10
The Bible for Learners. With map	2 25
Xenophon's Complete Works. Nimmo Library	1 50	.20
Treasury of British Eloquence. Nimmo Library	1 50	.17
Byron's Poetical Works. Nimmo Library	1 50	.18
Fielding's Works. Nimmo Library	1 50	.19
Treasury of Modern Biography. Nimmo Library	1 50	.18
Treasury of English Literature. Nimmo Library	1 50	.19
Shakespere's Complete Works. Nimmo Library	1 50	.20
Defoe's Works. Nimmo Library	1 50	.20
English Essayists	1 50	.18
Homer's Iliad. People's edition. Illustrated	45	.07
Don Quixote. People's edition. Illustrated	45	.07
Arabian Nights Entertainment. People's edition. Illustrated	45	.07
Swiss Family Robinson. People's edition. Illus.	45	.07
Pope's Poetical Works. People's edition. Illus.	45	.07

STANDARD SCIENTIFIC WORKS

Sent by mail on receipt of price.

Every Freethinker should read them.

Sold by D. M. BENNETT, 21 Clinton Place, New York.

WORKS OF CHARLES DARWIN.

Origin of Species	2 00
Descent of Man	3 00
Journal of Researches	2 00
Emotional Expression	3 50
Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols.	5 00
Insectivorous Plants	2 00
Climbing Plants	1 25
Orchids fertilized by Insects	1 75
Fertilization in the Vegetable Kingdom	2 00
Forms of Flowers	1 50
Power of Movement in Plants	2 00
Vegetable Mould, etc	1 50

WORKS OF PROF. THOMAS HUXLEY.

Man's Place in Nature	1 25
On the Origin of Species	1 00
More Criticisms on Darwin, and Administrative Nihilism	50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals. Illustrated	2 50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Invertebrated Animals. Illustrated	2 50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews	1 75
Critiques and Addresses	1 50
American Addresses	1 25
Physiography	2 50
The Crayfish	1 75
Science and Culture	1 50
Elements of Physiology and Hygiene. By T. H. Huxley and W. J. Youmans	1 50
Introductory Primer	45

WORKS OF PROF. JOHN TYNDALL.

Heat as a Mode of Motion	2 00
On Sound	2 00
Fragments of Science	2 50
Light and Electricity	1 25
Lessons in Electricity	1 00
Hours of Exercise in the Alps	2 00
Faraday as a Discoverer	1 00
On Forms of Water	1 50
Radiant Heat	5 00
Six Lectures on Light	1 50
The above 10 vols., 12mo Cloth,	19 75
Banquet at Delmonico's Paper,	50
Belfast Address Paper,	50
Essays on the Floating Matter of the Air in Relation to Putrefaction and Infection. 12mo Cloth,	1 50

WORKS OF HERBERT SPENCER.

First Principles	2 00
Principles of Biology. 2 vols	4 00
Principles of Psychology, 2 vols	4 00
Principles of Sociology Parts I., II., and III	2 00
Ceremonial Institutions: Being Part IV. of "Principles of Sociology."	1 25
Political Institutions: Being Part V. of "Principles of Sociology."	1 50
Data of Ethics; Being Part I. of the "Principles of Morality."	1 25
Study of Sociology (International Scientific Series),	1 50
Education	1 25
Paper,	50
Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals	2 00
Universal Progress	2 00
Essays: Moral, Political, and Esthetic	2 00
Social Statics	2 00
The above 14 vols., 12mo	25 25
Philosophy of Style. 12mo Flexible Cloth,	50
Descriptive Sociology. Published in folio with Tables. Eight Parts now ready, namely:
English.
Ancient Americans.
Negritto and Malayo-Polynesian Races.
African Races.
Asiatic Races.
North and South American Races.
Hebrews and Phœnicians.
French.
Price of the first Seven Parts Each	4 00
Part 8	7 00

WORKS OF DR. J. W. DRAPER.

History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. 12mo	1 75
Intellectual Development of Europe. 2 vols	3 00

WORKS OF H. T. BUCKLE.

History of Civilization in England. With a complete Index (not published in the English edition). 2 vols., 8vo Cloth,	4 00
Half Calf, extra,	8 00
Essays; with a Biography of the Author. 12mo. Cloth,	1 00
Half Calf, extra,	2 50
The Life and Writings of Henry Thomas Buckle. By Alfred Henry Huth. 8vo	2 00

WORKS OF PROF. ERNST HAECKEL.

The History of Creation; or, the Development of the Earth and its Inhabitants by the Action of Natural Causes. A Popular Exposition of the Doctrine of Evolution in general, and of that of Darwin, Goethe, and Lamarck in particular. The translation revised by Professor E. Ray Lankester. Illustrated with Lithographic Plates. In 2 vols., 12mo Cloth,	5 00
The Evolution of Man. A Popular Exposition of the Principal Points of Human Ontogeny and Phylogeny. 2 vols. 12mo Cloth,	5 00
Freedom in Science and Teachings. From the German. With a Prefatory Note by T. H. Huxley, F. R. S. 12mo Cloth,	1 00

WORKS OF PROF. W. E. H. LECKY.

History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols., small 8vo Cloth,	4 00
Half Calf, extra	8 00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols., 12mo Cloth,	3 00
Half Calf, extra,	7 00
The Leaders of Public Opinion in Ireland: Swift. Flood, Grattan, O'Connell. 12mo Cloth,	1 75
History of England in the Eighteenth Century. 4 vols., small 8vo Cloth,	9 00
Half Calf,	18 00

WORKS OF SIR JOHN LUBBOCK.

Origin of Civilization and the Primitive Condition of Man Cloth,	5 00
Prehistoric Times, as Illustrated by Ancient Remains and the Manners and Customs of Modern Savages. Illustrated. 8vo Cloth,	5 00
Ants, Bees, and Wasps. A Record of Observations on the Habits of the Social Hymenoptera. (International Scientific Series). 12mo Cloth,	2 00

WORKS OF PROF. OSCAR SCHMIDT.

The Theory of Descent, and Darwinism. With 26 Woodcuts. 12 mo	1 50

WORKS OF PROF. E. L. YOUMANS.

Class-Book of Chemistry. New edition. 12 mo	1 50
Hand-Book of Household Science. 12 mo	1 75
The Culture Demanded by Modern Life: A series of Addresses and Arguments on the Claims of Scientific Education. Edited, with an Introduction on Mental Discipline in Education by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 12 mo Cloth,	2 00
A Series of Expositions by Prof. Helmholtz, Dr. Mayer, Dr. Faraday, Prof. Liebig, and Dr. Carpenter. Edited, with an Introduction and Brief Biographical Notices of the Chief Promoters of the New Views, by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 12 mo Cloth,	2 00

WORKS OF PROF. ANDREW D. WHITE.

President of Cornell University.

The Warfare of Science. 12 mo Cloth,	1 00
Paper,	50

HISTORY PRIMERS.

Edited by J. R. Green. 18 mo. Flexible cloth.

Greece. By C. A. Fyffe	45
Rome. By M. Creighton	45
Europe. By E. A. Freeman	45
Old Greek Life. By J. P. Mahaffy	45
Geography. By George Grove	45
Roman Antiquities. By S. A. Wilkins	45
France. By C. M. Yonge	45

SCIENCE PRIMERS.

18 mo. Flexible cloth.

Introductory. By T. H. Huxley	45
Chemistry. By H. E. Roscoe	45
Physics. By Balfour Stewart	45
Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie	45
Geology. By Archibald Geikie	45
Physiology. By M. Foster	45
Astronomy. By J. Norman Lockyer	45
Botany. By Dr. J. D. Hooker	45
Logic. By W. S. Jevons	45
Inventional Geometry. By W. G. Spencer	45
Pianoforte-Playing. By Frank in Taylor	45
Political Economy. By W. S. Jevons	45
Natural Resources of the United States. By J. N. Patton	45

Gems of Thought.

THEN let us be wise and embrace the truth. Let us take the students of nature by the hand. Let us commit to heart the lessons they teach. Let us learn all we can of nature; and let us forever discard her enemy supernaturalism, with all the false teachers who promulgate it.—D. M. Bennett.

WE are no admirers of the political doctrins laid down in Blackstone's Commentaries. But if we consider that those Commentaries were read with great applause in the very schools where, seventy or eighty years before, the book had been publicly burnt, by order of the University of Oxford, for containing the damnable doctrin that the English monarchy is limited and mixed, we cannot deny that a salutary change had taken place. "The Jesuits," says Pascal, in the last of his incomparable letters, "hav obtained a papal decree, condemning Galileo's doctrin about the motion of the earth. It is all in vain. If the world is really turning around, all mankind together will not be able to keep it from turning or to keep themselvs from turning with it." The decrees of Oxford were as ineffectual to stay the great moral and political revolution as those of the Vatican to stay the motion of our globe. The learned university found itself not only unable to keep the mass from moving but unable to keep itself from moving along with the mass.—Macaulay's Essays.

IT argues a narrow and corrupt nature to lose sight of the general and lasting consequences of rare and virtuous energy in the brief accidents which accompany its first movements—to set lightly by the emancipation of the human reason from a legion of devils, in our complaints and lamentations over the loss of a herd of swine—Coleridge.

I WAS taking a country walk with a friend, a clergyman, when he suddenly wheeled round, his face towards home, with the remark, "Let us go back, I'm tired; I was called up in the middle of the night to baptize a child that was dying." "Were you in time?" asked my friend. "Just," was the reply; "another half minute and I should hav been too late!" "And if you had been too late, what next?" "Why then, I suppose, the poor little thing would hav been lost." "Eternally?" "Well, yes, according to our belief." "May I ask what sort of boots you wear?" said my friend. "Boots? Elastic sided, always." "Now, suppose you wore laced boots, and they had taken two minutes to put on, the child would hav been dead—and lost eternally, ay?" "That's a peculiar view of the question; I must think over my position." Two days after the clergyman met my friend and said: "I hav thought that matter over, and must alter my view. The boots did it."—London Spectator (Feb. 18, 1882.) [The intelligent reader will not fail to see what a noble expositor of "the ways of God to man" this English clergyman was, and he will be ready to lift up his hands in pious gratitude to the giver of all good if there is any such wonder-worker in his immediate neighborhood. If the good man is half a mile off the child's soul may be, I tremble to think where, before the priest has had time to lace his boots!—Hylax.]

MY own opinion is that the man called Christ lived; but whether he lived in Palestine or not is of no importance. His life is worth its example, its moral force, its benevolence, its self-denial and heroism. It is of no earthly importance whether he changed water into wine or not. All his miracles are simply dusk and darkness compared with what he actually said and actually did. We should be kind to each other whether Lrzarus was raised or not. We should be "true and just in all our dealings," and forgiving to each other, whether Christ lived or not. All the miracles in the world are of no use to virtue, morality, or justice. Miracles belong to superstition, to ignorance, to fear and folly. Neither does it make any difference who wrote the gospels. They are worth the truth that is in them and no more. [The story of the good Samaritan, with its sly hit at the hypocrisy of priests, will continue to touch the human heart; and the parable of the Prodigal Son, though not free from difficulty in the interpretation, will please to the end of time.]—R. G. Ingersoll.

WE frequently meet men who pass for educated, and who are yet like the old Parisian woman who lived through the entire career of Napoleon innocent of any knowledge of his existence. Many such persons are found among the orthodox clergy. They are utterly ignorant of the higher thought and culture of the age. They know nothing of the best biblical criticism of the time. The reasoning faculty in them is atrophical [dried up and withered] by nonuse. There is no mystery in the universe for such. It is formulated and impersonated for them, so that questions of origin and destiny are as clear as sunlight—Index (March 16, 1882.)

WHEN a theater takes fire, good people talk about "a judgment." Well and good, if they will only understand that it is a judgment only on the way the theater was built or managed. Only the truth is larger: every fire is a judgment; every accident or catastrophe is a judgment—a judgment for the wrong or careless or ignorant handling of those awful edge tools, the forces of nature. All life, all being, all becoming, is growth—growth which is alive with moral meaning, moral will and sequence. The harvest is a judgment on the sowing. Every finished work is a judgment on the way it has been done.—Brooke Herford's Day of Judgment.

IT is not what men believe that here concerns us, but that they should be so faithful to that which they believe, Jew and Christian, believer and unliever alike. Times change, beliefs alter, the religious formulas of yesterday no longer satisfy the impatient demands of to-day, the old beliefs grow cold and are forgotten, but that devotion to principles which "a cloud of witnesses" hav exhibited is the very pith and marrow of all religion. May that devotion to principle be ours also in the new age, that we may be willing, at all times, to die for our principles, if again should come that supreme test—nay, better than to die for our principles, that we may be willing, at all times, to liv for our principles; that is greater and nobler still.—Adler's Radical Pulpit.

A HUNGER-BITTEN and idealess philosophy naturally produces a starveling and comfortless religion.—Coleridge.

Odds and Ends.

THE use of iron cannot increase the running speed of a dog, but tin can.

WE hope we shall not be accused of exaggeration when we say we hav received 1883 calendars.

"THE art that conceals art," as the thief remarked when he slid an expensiv oil painting under his coat.

IT is rumored that his satanic majesty has increased his orders for fuel by 10,000 tons yearly since Col. Ingersoll has taken up lecturing.

THE zodiacal sign for the opening of winter is a goat. The goat is a hard butter, and hard butter is almost always a sign that the weather is cold.

IT is stated that Talmage on account of the largeness of his mouth takes as his favorit hymn, "Not more than others I deserve, but God has given me more."

A BALD-HEADED man, who has heard that the hairs of a man's head are numbered, wants to know if there is not some place where he can obtain the back numbers.

A WESTERN editor tells what he would do if he were a jackass. A rival journalist remarks that what the people desire to know is, What he would do if he wasn't one.

"THE wicked stand on slippery places," so we read. Are we to infer from this that the righteous fall thereon? It is well to be explicit in illustration, as in other things.—The Judge.

"AND what do you call that?" asked the inquisitiv visitor, pointing to a mutilated statue.

"That is a torso," replied the sculptor.

"H'm!" muttered the I. V.; "but how did it become torso?" He was tenderly kicked out.

AN Arkansas editor, in retiring from the editorial control of a newspaper, said: "It is with a feeling of sadness that we retire from the activ control of this paper; but we leave our journal with a gentleman who is abler, financially, to handle it. The gentleman is well known in this community. He is the sheriff."

THEY were passing along the street the other day, two ladies with faces lovely as the fairest roses and robed in dresses that princesses might envy. The first angelic creature was just saying that it was "just too exquisitly lovely for anything," but when she sat down upon the cold, hard pavement, she simply remarked, "Darn such pavements."

"SO you hav got twins at your house," said Mrs. Bezumbe to little Tommy Samuelson.

"Yes, mam, two of 'em."

"What are you going to call them?"

"Thunder and Lightning."

"Why, those are strange names to call children."

"Well, that's what pa called them as soon as he heard they were in the house."

A SUBSCRIBER writes to a Southern editor: "I hav a horse that has lately suffered from periodical fits of dizziness. Please answer through your valuable paper, and let me know what I should do with him. I'm afraid he will get worse if something is not done soon." The editor replies: "Our advice, based on a careful perusal of 'Every Man His Own Horse Doctor,' would be to take him some time when he is not dizzy and sell him to a stranger."

KITTY AND I.

Over the lawn romped Kitty and I—
  Kitty, with eyes of velvety sheen,
With her pearly teeth and her winsome ways—
  The prettiest ever seen.
There was none like her in the wide, wide world—
  Kitty, my love, my queen.

But kitty's a matron now, my boy,
  And I am a batchelor lone—
For she ran away with Tom, you know,
  And the days and nights hav flown
Since I saw her last in the mountain, pale,
  Kitty, my pearl, my own.

How did it happen? Don't ask me now;
  It is useless, mind you, to tease;
And I couldn't tell you the reason why
  If you begged me on your knees;
But I was a wilful, wayward boy,
  And Kitty—a pure Maltese!

A PROMINENT Detroiter, who has the reputation of knowing all about horses, was coming down Woodward avenue the other day, when a stranger halted him, inquired if he was Mr. So-and-so, and added:

"I hav walked seven miles this morning to secure your advice. Will you go to the harness shop with me?"

The citizen turned back and walked three blocks to the shop. The stranger then showed him two horse brushes and said:

"This brush is twenty cents, and that one two shillings. Which would you advise me to purchase?"

"I'd take the dearer," replied the disgusted adviser. "Did you bring me here simply to settle that question?"

"Oh, no. I had already about made up my mind to get a brush with a landscape painted on the back. Now about currycombs. The object of a currycomb is to agitate a horse, I suppose, but what particular style do you advise? Here are both red and blue-handled currycombs, and I will be guided by what you say."

"Did you ever own a horse?" asked the citizen.

"Mercy, no!"

"Do you own one now?"

"Why, no!"

"Then, what in flaxation do you want of those things?"

"Well, that's another matter on which I wanted your valuable advice. Isn't it better to buy a brush and currycomb in the winter, and then buy the horse in the spring, or would you buy all at once?"

"You'd better buy a saw-horse," remarked the indignant citizen as he walked off.

"Just see that!" gasped the man who had walked seven miles. "Why, I was intending after we got through to ask him to take a glass of beer, and he walks off as if he took me for a dead beat! What other man in Detroit knows all about horses?"—Detroit Free Press.

MUCH FOR LITTLE

We hav on hand a goodly number

—OF—

VOLUMES I. AND II.

—OF—

The Truth Seeker,

published in 1874 and 1875,

the same securely bound in good paper covers. The first volume is a monthly, and the second a semi-monthly. Vol. I. contains 160 pp, and Vol. II. 256 pp. We are disposed to send these out to friends who wish them at a trifle above the postage. We will send

VOLUME I. FOR 25 CENTS,

—AND—

VOLUME II. FOR 50 CENTS.

THEY CONTAIN

a large amount of reading matter, and are worth nearly ten times the amount asked for them. They also are worth not a little to show what THE TRUTH SEEKER was in the first and second years of its existence. Let those who wish to secure these volumes not fail to make their wants known.

Address this office.

80 Court st. Brooklyn

THE

"WILSONIA,"

TWO YEARS AGO

WILLIAM WILSON,

THE INVENTOR OF

WILSONIA,

AN ENGLISH SCIENTIST, MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN, LECTURER ON ELECTRICAL THERAPEUTICS, AUTHOR OF THE "TRIAL OF MEDICIN," THE "LANGUAGE OF DISEASE," "MEDICAL FALLACIES," ETC.,

Introduced to the People of the United States His

MAGNETIC GARMENTS

For the cure of Disease without Medicine or Medica Treatment. The Statement made by him at that time that his Magnetic Clothing, if worn for any form of Disease (and as advised), would cure ninety per cent of the so-called Incurables, has been verified, he having Clothed and Cured Thousands of Persons of all Forms of Disease. Positive proof of this has appeared in all the leading Newspapers by Testimony of many of our most Prominent and Wealthy Citizens, who, having been Cured by the

Wilsona Magnetic Garments

After all other Treatment had failed, were pleased to assist the Inventor in giving confidence to the Suffering Invalids of America by allowing him to use their well-known and respected Names as Reference; and it is now admitted by many most highly accomplished Scientists and Physicians that the Success and Cures attending the introduction of "Wilsonia" Magnetic Clothing has been unprecedented in the history of Electrical Therapeutics. In the face of such Positive Proof as given by us no person can doubt the value of this Invention in all cases.

Therefore why continue the Suicidal System of taking Drugs?

SEND $1.50 FOR A PAIR OF

"Wilsonia" Magnetic Insoles.

Sure Preventive of Cold Feet—the Forerunner of All Kinds of Disease.

Consultation Free.

Send for Pamphlet and Information to the only Office where the Inventor can be seen.

Address all Communications to

DAVID J. COTTER,

80 COURT STREET, BROOKLYN

SPECIAL OFFER

TO

TRUTH SEEKERS.

The J. R Perry Piano and Organ Company desire to introduce their instruments to all lovers of music, at the lowest cost to purchasers, by selling direct. The Perry Piano contains the latest and most important improvement yet made—a self-sustaining sounding-board and bridge, which will never permit the board to spring, nor allow the tones to become thin and wiry. The Organs conta nmore patented inventions than any other make. The Mason & Hamlin are the only Organ Company who are using any of them, they having purchased the use of Perry's Flute and Celeste and Reed Board in 1876. We offer to place these Pianos and Organs by the side of any other no matter what their reputation, and will compete both in price and quality. For full particulars add ess J. R. PERRY, P. O. Box 867, Wilkesbarre, Pa., who will furnish illustrated catalog. 9t47

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Rubber Elastic Appliance, in 30 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for Circular. (Say in what paper you saw advertisement.)
Address CAPT. W. A. COLLINGS, Smithville, Jefferson Co., N. Y. ptf6b

BIBLE MYTHS

AND THEIR PARALLELS IN OTHER RELIGIONS.

BEING A COMPARISON OF THE

Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles,

With those of Heathen Nations of Antiquity.

CONSIDERING ALSO

THEIR ORIGIN AND MEANING.

WITH NUMEROUS ILLUSTRATIONS.

Cloth, $4.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 21 Clinton Place, New York.

The object of this work is to point out the myths with which the Old and New Testaments abound; to show that they were held in common with other nations; and then to trace them to their evident origin and explain their meaning.

It contains quotations from nearly all the sacred books of heathen nations, and from other rare and valuable works which are not accessible to people in general. The chapters are so arranged that it is a perfect cyclopædia of reference. Years of research would be necessary to discover all the information it contains. It is a most searching investigation into the origin of Christianity. Every fact is verified by copious notes and authorities, so that it may be trusted as a thoroughly reliable work. It contains information which will be startling to many.

Admirers of Walt Whitman

Will each want his last work. Just out.

SPECIMEN DAYS AND COLLECT.

Including

AUTOBIOGRAPHY, HOSPITAL SKETCHES, DEMOCRATIC VISTAS, ETC,

Three hundred and seventy-four pages of hearty, whole some prose and poetry, never before published. Will be sent on receipt of $2. Address,

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

WANTED

A situation in a grocery store, as clerk or manager, by a man who is thoroughly familiar with the business, and competent to take charge, if necessary. Must be in some healthy town; inland in the Western States preferred. Would like to locate in some growing place where em ployment could be obtained for my two sons, aged respectivly 22 and 19 years—strong, industrious, intelligent boys; and for my two oldest daughters. For reference as to character I can refer to Benjamin C. Sweet, Hamilton, R. I., or to the Hamilton Web Co., of the same place, where we hav been known and employed for the past ten years. Address

ABRAHAM FIRTH, SR.,
Hamilton, Washington Co.,
Rhode Island.

Correspondence Solicited.

A young man of 29 wishes to correspond with a yonng lady, with a view to matrimony; one willing to come to a new country and help him build up a home.

Address JNO. SIMONS,
Utica, Meagher Co.,
4t3 Montana.

BOOKS! BOOKS!

I hav an enormous stock of new and second-hand books on hand, which I offer at very low prices. Send for books tried to obtain elsewhere without success. American, English, German, and French books. Catalogs on application, FREE.

A full line of Liberal books always on hand,

C. N. Caspar's Book Emporium,
4t1 35 Oneida street (opp. Opera House,) Milwaukee, Wis

SING, BROTHERS, SING.

USE THE

Liberal Hymn-Book

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. The LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly commended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Sienker, and indeed by all who hav examined it Second edition. Price, half-bound, 25 cents. In cloth, 40 cents. Sold at this office.

Wanted.

A good farm hand. For particulars, address
JOS. BOLTON,
2t2 Lyons, Rice Co., Kan.

DR. FELLOWS,
Vineland, New Jersey,

A regularly educated and legally qualified physician and most successful, as his practice will prove, cures all forms of Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases. Spermatorrhea and Impotency, as the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, De fectiv Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an External Application in from 30 to 90 days.

MIDDLE-AGED AND OLD MEN.

There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuation of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot acconnt for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen, will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. There are many men who dio of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows's External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the organs.

☞ Consultation by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable, and correspondence strictly confidential.

PRIVATE COUNSELOR.

Sent to any address securely sealed for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhea or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuinness Should be read by all.

☞ Remember no medicin is given. Address DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey. Be sure and state in what paper you saw this.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 4. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY M. W. BENNETT. | New York, Saturday, January 27, 1883. | NO. 21 CLINTON PLACE, NEAR BROADWAY. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

THE population of Syria and Palestine is estimated 2,076,321. Of these only 6,000 are Protestants.

"ON what were given the commandments to Moses?" the Sunday-school teacher asked. "On two marble-top tables," the intelligent small boy answered.

AN anecdote is told of an old woman, who, when her pastor said to her, "Heaven has not deserted you in your old age," replied, "No, sir; I hav a very great appetite still."

ROMAN Catholic priests in Italy worry along on an average yearly salary of about $100. That sum would hardly pay the liquor bill of an American priest of the same church.

A CHICAGO Methodist has been expelled for delivering milk to his customers on Sunday morning. Yet the very people who called the loudest for his expulsion buy milk on Sunday morning.

THE vicar of Holy Trinity at Stratford-upon-Avon, the church in which lie buried the remains of William Shakspere, has been fined £1 12s. and sent to jail for a day for assaulting one of his choir boys.

WHEN Lord Chesterfield was asked what religion he professed, he said: "The religion to which all wise men belong." "And what may that be?" asked his curious friend. "No wise man ever tells," he answered.

THE following lines indicativ of the happy condition of affairs in their homes are sung by the children in a Mormon Sunday-school:

"A loving band of children, we're all to Zion bound,
For our fathers love our mothers, every one and all around."

SEVEN clergymen certified at a meeting held at the Broadway Tabernacle church one night last week that there are 900,000 children in New York state not under Sunday-school instruction. It therefore becomes an interesting question as to where the next generation of Christians is to come from.—N. Y. Sun.

DUBLIN being subject to the curfew section of the Coercion Act, any person out of his usual place of abode at any time after one hour later than sunset and before sunrise, may be arrested by a constable and brought before a justice. If the arrested party fails to show that he was out for some lawful purpose he is pretty sure of being jugged. This is the nineteenth century, and Dublin is a Christian city of more than 200,000 inhabitants.

RELIGIOUS philanthropists in a Connecticut town hav opened a skating rink in the hope that it will prove attractiv enough to keep the young people away from dancing. The promoters of the scheme find that the first thing the young people did was to practice waltzing on skates, and such is the attractivness of the arrangement that no boy or girl who owns a pair of skates has been to prayer-meeting since the rink was opened.

THE Rev. R. H. Cobb, who was an agent of the State Temperance Alliance, as well as pastor of the Methodist church at Taunton, Mass., left his wife of a year while she was helplessly ill in bed, taking nearly all the furniture, and throwing her upon the charity of neighbors. His presiding elder remonstrated with him, as did other ministers, but he refused to do anything for the woman, and resigned his office when informed that his case would be officially investigated.

THE famous blue laws of Connecticut, enacted by "the people of the Dominion of New Haven," were so called because printed on blue paper. They prohibited the ceremony of marriage being performed by a parson, on the strange ground that a magistrate might perform it with less scandal to the church. Adultery was punished by death. Wearing clothes trimmed with gold, silver, or lace above one shilling a yard involved a tax on the person's estate of $15. "No one to cross a river on the Sabbath but authorized clergymen. No one shall travel, cook, make beds, sweep houses, cut hair, or shave on the Sabbath. No one shall kiss his or her children on the Sabbath or fasting days. The Sabbath day shall begin at sunset Saturday."

A PROMINENT Methodist minister, who has been much vexed by the brethren who claim to liv lives of sinless perfection, says that "there is nobody who can stir up so many church rows, or keep them boiling so long, as the brother or sister who claims to hav received the 'second blessing,' and to be living the 'higher life.'" It must be disappointing to those who all their lives hav struggled to attain the "second blessing" to find at last that it is a damage to them.

THE most learned woman in the world, says the Young Ladies' Journal, is Miss Ramnabel, a young lady of 20, who is now in Paris. She is a nativ of India, and can read and write and talk in twelve languages, having a wonderful gift that way, besides being up in mathematics, astronomy, and history. She is studying medicin, and will go to India to practice, where she says thousands of her countrywomen die every year because they will not consult male physicians.

HONG AH DUCK, a Chinese murderer at San Rafael, Cal., anticipated his hanging with the utmost satisfaction. He implored the judge to fix an early day for the execution, believing that after death he would be in purgatory for a period of not less than one year nor more than twenty, during which period he would be able to return to the earth and torment his enemies. This doctrin caused him to look forward with so much pleasure to his death that he attempted suicide, and when taken to the scaffold literally jumped for joy. If a man must be hung it is as well to make the best of it as to grieve unnecessarily.

HEATHEN Japan appears to be coming forward rapidly. Its lively and enterprising people seem to hav forgotten all the old hostility to foreign influence, and every year they advance further in their imitation of Western civilization. It is reported that the Japanese government intends to extend the railroad system through the northern portion of the empire. The Japanese, according to recent information, are also endeavoring to develop their commerce on the coast of Asia. A steamship company, which intends to hav a fleet of forty steamers, has been formed for this purpose, and we are told that half of the vessels will be afloat within eighteen months.

DR. P. W. EMENS, of Syracuse, has been lecturing on physiology in a church in Almond, Allegany Co. The Rev. Mr. Tanner, pastor, became angry at what he termed the profanation of the church, and directed the trustees to exclude Dr. Emens. Two of the trustees entered the building and flung the skeletons and manikin which were used for illustration into the street. On Wednesday evening a large crowd gathered at the church to attend the lecture. When Dr. Emens arrived he found the door barricaded and several men inside armed with revolvers. Another place was obtained. The next morning the following placard, referring to one of the trustees and pastor, appeared on the church door: "Died at the Methodist church, Wednesday evening, A. E. Tanner and Dr. Dildine. They were buried at the church the same evening."

THE defalcations of Treasurer Peddie, of the Society for the Relief of Widows and Orphans of Scotch Presbyterian Ministers, are found to reach the large sum of $175,000. All that is left is about $25,000. Peddie left in the safe a number of documents which appeared to be securities. Since his departure the examination of these has disclosed the fact that most of them were forgeries. The members of the defrauded society held a meeting to see what could be done to restore the funds to a condition of practical usefulness. The result of this meeting was the setting on foot of a subscription which will probably amount to all that is needed to make good the treasurer's defalcation. Enough has already been pledged to insure the payment for the present of all the annuities which hav been pledged to the society's beneficiaries. Fortunately, the cause is a popular one, and the society has many wealthy friends.

JUDGE HATCH in his first sitting on the district bench of Clayton county, Iowa, heard a novel case, being the trial of a number of leading citizens of Menden, charged with stealing Bibles. Two freight trains were in collision at Snimagill Siding, Iowa, one night last summer, and a great quantity of merchandise was strewn about the scene of the wreck. Residents in the timber near by purloined a case of Bibles consigned by a subscription book publishing house in New York to a local agent in Minnesota. The Bibles, which were large quarto volumes, were distributed secretly in the neighborhood. A few weeks afterward all who had the Bibles in their possession were arrested and the books recovered. Judge Hatch sentenced one man for sixty days and the rest were discharged. The curious part of the result is that the man who had the smallest quantity of Bibles was the only one who confessed his crime and received the punishment.

CHICKERING HALL was thronged last Sunday when Prof. Felex Adler addressed the Society for Ethical Culture on the "Co-relation of the Sexes." He said that men, controling, for the most part, the paths of literature, had lavished a great deal of very small wit in ridiculing women, but women might in many instances hav retaliated had the weapons been in their hands. The sexes, speaking generally, he said, are not equal, either physically or mentally. If they are, why does not the woman woe instead of the man? If they are equal mentally, why does not the woman, feeling the need of a protector, ask for one? A woman could say to a man, "I am weak; be my support;" but what woman can say to a man, "Admire me?" Yet the bond that attracts man to woman always begins with admiration, and as the Brooklyn Bridge grew from its first wire, so love springs from admiration. Women acknowledge the difference, but not the inferiority of their sex, by their admiration for masculin strength; and unless a man has some strength mentally or physically, he can never attract any but silly misses. The sexes are not equal, but there is no inferiority on one side or the other. Woman's gifts may not be so strong, but they are quite as valuable as those of men, and a woman should be always the partner, not the subordinate of her husband.

THE jumping-jack of Brooklyn's Tabernacle is offended at Herbert Spencer, prince of living logicians, because the latter spells fate with a large F. A musketo buzzing around the head of a giant would be a greater annoyance than this fellow Talmage to Spencer, who probably wouldn't take the trouble to brush the parson away, should he ever become aware of his presence. But the most comical thing that Talmage has done of late he did last Sunday when from behind his mud battery in Brooklyn he announced that he had Haeckel, John Stuart Mill, Huxley, Tyndall, Darwin, and Spencer "on the witness stand," and proceeded to quiz them thus: "Do you believe the holy scriptures? No. The Bible story of Adam and Eve in the garden of Eden? No. The miracles of the Old and New Testament? No. That Jesus Christ died to save nations? No. In the regenerating power of the Holy Ghost? No. That human supplication directed heavenward ever made any difference? No." And then Talmage added, probably as a crushing blow to Infidelity, "All the leading scientists who believe in evolution, without an exception, are Infidels." This is no doubt the naked truth, so far as it goes, but it is comical to see this straddle bug of Brooklyn trying to pull down Herbert Spencer after having climbed just high enough to grasp his shoe-strings, and fancying that he can belittle great men in these days by calling them "Infidels," and putting them on the witness stand to testify that they don't believe the Christian nonsense.—Winsted Press.

News of the Week.

THE Prince of Wales is to visit America in March next.

GEO. F. HOAR has been re-elected to the Senate from Massachusetts.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, sends ten thousand dollars to the sufferers by the floods in Germany.

A POWDER manufactory explosion in Holland last week killed twelve persons and wrecked the village of Muiden, in which it occurred.

THE Czar of Russia has sent 2,000 rubles (about $1,500) to the sufferers by the burning of the circus at Berditscheff in Russian Poland on the 13th.

THE total number of lives lost in the Newhall House fire in Chicago is now said to be seventy-five. The search in the ruins was completed last Saturday.

MR. GEORGE DARWIN, son of the late Prof. Charles R. Darwin, has been elected Professor of Astronomy and Experimental Philosophy in Cambridge University.

THE steamer Cimbria, with five hundred passengers on board, was sunk in a collision off the coast of Holland on the 19th. The number of lives lost is estimated at four hundred.

IN the Senate, on Saturday, the 20th, the amendment changing the date for the reduction of letter postage from three cents to two cents from Jan. 1, 1884, to July 1, 1883, was agreed to.

GOV. BUTLER'S message to the legislature of Massachusetts is so popular that the committee hav resolved to print ten thousand copies extra besides the nine thousand which the law allows.

THE Rev. R. Heber Newton preached the last of his sermons on the wrong uses of the Bible on Sunday last. He did not add anything striking or new to what has already been printed in THE TRUTH SEEKER.

A BILL has been introduced into the Pennsylvania legislature making it a misdemeanor for the governor, lieutenant-governor, or any member of the legislature to accept free passes from railroad companies.

Two sleeping cars on the Southern Pacific Railroad were burnt on the night of the 19th near Tehichipa, Cal. Twenty-one persons perished. Eleven bodies were taken from the wreck burnt beyond recognition.

PROF. SALMI MORSE has not yet received permission from the courts to produce his Passion Play. He announces his intention of producing some other plays, of which he has written forty, if he is not allowed to put on the Passion.

A PASSENGER train on the New York Central Railroad crashed into the rear end of a freight train near Syracuse on the 19th. The switchman being asleep was the cause of the accident. A brakeman on the passenger train is thought to be fatally injured.

COURT trials in Dublin, Ireland, hav revealed the existence of a Fenian society called the "assassination club," modeled somewhat after the Molly Maguires of Pennsylvania. They hav an "assassination committee," and many murders can be traced to them.

GEBHARD, a young man who follows Mrs. Langtry, the English beauty, about in all her wanderings over this country, has been challenged to fight a bloody duel by a St. Louis reporter whom he publicly pronounced a liar. Gebhard has taken no notice of the challenge.

Two female soldiers of the Salvation Army last week sued the pastor of a Paterson, N. J., church for $5,000 each for defamation of character. Undismayed by the lawsuit, however, the minister has repeated his charges of immorality against the women, and added considerable to them of a more objectionable character. He says he intends to keep up the war until the Salvation Army is driven from town.

Communications.

Astro-theology; or, The Key to the Gospels.

BY HUGH BYRON BROWN.—CONCLUDED.

The religious or theological significance of the bread of life is similar to that of the wine, symbolized by the cup of salvation, it being typical of the body as the wine is of the blood of Christ, both of which when partaken of at the hands of the priest are believed to become in some mysterious manner the real body and blood of the savior. This also furnishes the key to the gospel story of the marriage in Cana.

Observe the siguificance of the respective positions of the virgin mother of Christ and of the celestial virgin of the zodiac at the time of the sun's crucifixion or crossing at the vernal equinox. In both cases they stand next to the "crucified one," that of the astronomical Virgin Mary preceding the master or savior. As represented on the celestial map, she appears with her head turned away from the crater or cup of salvation, as if displeased at finding therein no wine, and with her outstretched arm in which is seen the bright star Vindematrix, indicative of the approach of the vintage which seems to say in the language of the mother of Christ in the gospels, "They have no wine."

Mark also the significance and pertinence of the astronomical reply of the Christ or sun, "Woman, what have I to do with thee? My hour has not yet come." That is to say, the time of the making of wine is not in August, but in the next month, September.

Mark also the significance of the six pots of water mentioned in the story that was there set "after the manner of the Jews." They are symbolical of the six months during which the sun is above the line of the equator, during which time they are being charged with the vital principle of heat from the sun which at the close of the season is "turned into wine" by the ripening of the grapes.

That this theological interpretation of these facts in nature, whose symbols were at a very early age given a place among the heavenly bodies, with which indeed they have an intimate relation, is a mistaken one, wholly foreign to the original conception and understanding of it, must be obvious to every unprejudiced mind.

We come now to the temptation in the wilderness. "Then was Jesus led up of the spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil." Was there then no Christ to be tempted and no devil to tempt? Assuredly not, in the sense of personalities. Like all other stories of the gospel allegory, it is purely an astronomical fiction of the imagination, which in the process of time came to be understood literally, and as such has come down to us with the force and sanction of eighteen centuries.

The explanation is as follows: The sun in passing through the constellation of Aquarius, whose sign is the water-bearer, or John the Baptist, is said to be "baptized of him;" that is, passes through the rainy season of January and February, after which he comes to the equator or "line of righteousness," where he is said to enter into his kingdom. It is then, as we have seen, that the air becomes heated, giving rise to the pleasant and warm breezes, which is the Holy Ghost or the spirit that leadeth him up into the wilderness, whose astronomical equivalent is "space," or a remote part of a constellation. But who is the devil, the tempter of the son of God, who is said to precede or lead him to the top of a high mountain, and who when the top is gained is said to "get behind," or "follow him?" Who else can it be than the hydra which you will see on the celestial map of the heavens stretching across the constellations of the Cancer, Leo, and the Virgin, all of which precede the sun as he comes into his kingdom from the lamb of March, and until he reaches the highest point of ascension on the twenty-first of June, when he appears gradually to recede or go back, which gives the Hydra the appearance of being behind him or at his back.

Thus from the personification of the heavenly bodies and their apparent motions came the mythological story of a god led or enticed by a demon, which in process of ages comes to succeeding generations in a new form resultant from a different mental condition and new religious ideas and beliefs.

The next and last example that we shall adduce to support our position that the story and characters of the gospels are entirely mythical and for the most part of astronomical origin shall be that of the so-called apostle St. Peter, the personage on whom Christ is said to have founded his church, giving to him the keys of heaven, a dogma which plays an important part in Catholic theology, as it has also in the political affairs of Europe. St. Peter, as one of the twelve disciples, represents, as we have seen, one of the twelve constellations of the zodiac, but like the sun and all the other heavenly bodies, it may, and frequently does, assume other and different characters according to the position in which it may be placed in relation to some other body. In this science of astrologic theology the student meets with the same difficulty as the learner of English experiences on account of the letters not always representing the same sound.

In one aspect St. Peter is one of the constellations, and that he is also one and the same with the Roman Janus is more than hinted at in one of his varied names, Simon Bar Jonas, which, taken in connection with a number of other allusions, fixes the identity, namely, that of the pagan god Janus, or Jannan, who is represented with a staff in one had, pointing to a rock whence issues a profusion of water, while in the other hand he holds a key, and near him is some resemblance to a ship. This deity is represented as having two faces (which was also characteristic of Peter the disciple), emblematical of the closing of the old and the beginning of the new year.

As an existing testimony of the connection between the pagan Janus and the Christian St. Peter, and of the astronomical origin of both, the former may be seen on St. Paul's cathedral, but under the name of St. Mark.

The most common name of this saint is Peter. This unquestionably is of heathen origin, as the priests of Apollo were called Peters, and it appears also as one of the elements in the name of the supreme pagan deity, Jew-pètre.

The name Peter came thus, by an obvious metaphor, to be associated with Janus, or January—the first of the constellations—that is, Aquarius, the water-bearer; hence his connection with water, ships, nets, and fishing; the sign of the succeeding month, February, being that of a fish.

Hence also we have the key to the real meaning of much that is related in the gospel allegory concerning this character. For instance, the denial of his master and the subsequent repentance at the crowing of the cock.

The following is the astronomical and, as we hold, the original meaning of the story.

Peter, as the constellation Aquarius, or water-bearer, represents the first month, January. The beginning of that month is usually very cold and uncongenial. He is then said to resist or "deny" his master, the sun. Toward the close of January the whether moderates, and the rainy season sets in. He is then said to "repent," and to weep bitterly; and he does this at the crowing of the cock, which is symbolical of the opening or dawning of spring, as that fowl is said to usher in the dawn or beginning of day.

A literal interpretation of the gospel story in reference to founding the church of Christ upon the rock, Peter, and confiding to him the keys of the kingdom of heaven, is not only meaningless and supremely absurd, but extremely pernicious to human well-being. But taken in its astronomical and original sense it is not only reasonable, pertinent, and useful, but beautiful.

The following is the astronomical and true meaning: The master (the sun) is said to confer the keys of the kingdom of heaven (which is the summer months) on Peter—that is, Aquarius—by virtue of his position in the zodiac—that is, the month when the days begin to lengthen—as evidence that the power of the kingdom of darkness is broken, and that

> "Though horrors round our mansion reign
> Yet Spring shall come, and Nature smile again."

As he stands as the first of the year, he has the power of binding up the heavens in frosts, whose effects are felt throughout all nature, or "loosening" them in thaws and deluging us with rain, by which everything on earth is "loosened," but with the consolation and assurance that the gates of hell shall never prevail against it; that is, by the frosts or thaws, the "bindings" or "loosenings" of January, which they may, the sun has given such power to this first month that the "gates of hell"—that is, the months of October, November, and December, which the sun passes through in autumn and winter—will never be able to recover their empire.

The astronomical significance of the gospel is the annual phenomena of nature under the beautiful type of an allegorical history; that is what is meant by "preaching the acceptable year of the Lord," in which the sun is represented as Jesus Christ, and the twelve apostles, through which he sheds his bright beams of light upon the world, are the twelve signs of the zodiac. The constellations with which the twelve apostles are identical, and which they respectively represent, are as follows:

January is St. Peter, Aquarius.

February is St. Judas Iscariot, the fishes.

March is St. Andrew, the ram. He is distinguished by his standing before a saltier cross, which is the measure of the angle that the sun makes in crossing the equator, which he does in the month of March.

April is Matthew, the bull, who in all ancient pictures is represented with a bull's head at his feet.

May is John, the disciple whom Jesus loved. May was then the loveliest month of the year, by reason of the smiles or favor of the sun.

June is St. Thomas or Didymus, the doubting disciple, who at the last was inclined to go back, as the sun in the latter part of June appears to the eye to do, having then reached his highest altitude.

July is St. James the Greater, whose sign is Leo.

August is Judas, the brother of James, whose sign is the Virgin.

September is St. James the Less, whose sign is Libra,—the scales of justice emblematical of the autumnal equinox, when the days and nights are equal on the equator.

October is St. Nathaniel, whom Christ in the gospel saw under the fig-tree gathering in the last remaining fruits of the year.

November is St. Philip, whose sign is Sagittarius, which is represented as half man and half horse, emblematical of the hunting season, the name Philip signifying a lover of a horse.

December is St. Simon, the Canaanite, whose sign is the goat, whose astronomical signification is poor, barren, desolate.

These astronomical riddles of the labors of the sun constitute the whole sense and original meaning not only of the gospels, but of the Jewish and pagan mythologies, and of the Shastas, the Vedas, Puranas, and other sacred books.

The twelve tribes of Israel, like the twelve disciples of the gospel, refer to and represent the same celestial phenomena—the constellations of the zodiac.

Those sublime compositions, the Psalms, commonly attributed to a Jewish king, but of much more ancient origin, are simply the songs of Zion—that is, of the zodiac—David, the sweet singer of Israel, being only another name for the sun. These psalms treat in mystic allegories of all the grand vicissitudes of the year—the joys and sorrows, dejections and elevations, conflicts and victories, of the true David, the sun, who is despairing in winter, hoping in spring, triumphing in summer, and dejected in autumn. And according to the predicaments of his physical phenomena, himself addresses, or is addressed, in the beautiful adaptations of the allegory—as, for instance, the following: "O Lord! my God, thou art become exceeding glorious—thou art clothed with majesty and honor; thou deckest thyself with light as with a garment, and spreadest out the heavens like a curtain. O sing unto God, and sing praises unto his name; magnify him that rideth upon the heavens as upon a horse; even God in his holy habitation."

In further illustration of our position, that an astronomical meaning lies hid behind that which meets the eye of the uncritical reader of the Old and New Testaments, we will interpret a few of the more prominent passages—as, for instance, the mystical lament of the allegorical Jonah in the whale's belly: "I went down to the bottom of the mountains; the earth with her bars were about me forever; then, said I, I am cast out of thy sight, yet will I look again toward thy holy temple." The following is its astronomical interpretation as given by Taylor in his "Devil's Pulpit:" This is the language of the sun in his state of humiliation, struggling to ascend in the ecliptic. "I went down to the bottom of the mountains" (repeatedly called the depths of Satan); the earth with her everlasting bands and colors were above me. Then said I, I have sunk below the line of the zodiacal constellations—those eyes of heaven—yet will I emerge again toward thy holy temple, which is herein the constellation of the ram; and just exactly is it three days and three nights, to the accuracy of the setting of your watch—that is, from 12 o'clock at midnight of St. Thomas's day—that the Jonah of the Old Testament is in the whale's belly and the son of man of the New Testament is in the heart of the earth; that is, the sun is in the lowest degree of his descent in the curve of the ecliptic, that being the exact term of the winter solstice, or of the sun's seeming to be at a standstill, from which point gaining his first degree on the first moment of the 25th of December, at midnight, at the very moment when the Star of the East, the most brilliant of the constellation of the Virgin, is seen rising on the eastern border of the horizon. The whole pagan world did, through countless ages, rise at midnight to let in Christmas.

This also is the meaning of the gospel story of raising Lazarus from the dead. Lazarus is typical of the year whom the savior (the sun) loveth, and who has been declining for months, and is on the 21st of December apparently dead and entombed, but comes forth at the call of Jesus (the sun) on the 25th of December, when the new year begins.

This also is the astronomical explanation of the passage used in the service of burial: "I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."

There is another passage in the gospels around which so many sacred and tender feelings cluster that, to give it its original astronomical meaning, will no doubt seem to many like blasphemy. But science, in the form of modern criticism, is inexorable. There comes a time when the real Santa Claus of the adult, like that of childhood, must be disclosed and be relegated to the myths of the past.

"Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world." The "lamb," or "ram" of God, or Ged, is a very ancient expression—one better understood by the priesthoods of ancient Egypt and India than by those of modern times.

The "ram," sometimes called the "lamb," is the sign of March—the month when the sun crosses the line—when the days become equal over the whole earth, and also the month of the increase of the flocks, which to the primitiv pastoral peoples, who were the first astronomers, was a very important period of the year. Hence its astronomical signification. The Lamb of God—that is, the sun of March, the month of increase—taketh away the sins of the world by rectifying the former unevenness of the days and nights. It also ushers in a brighter day after the evil of winter and and givs promis of future abundance.

No passage in the gospels has caused more controversy as to its real meaning than that on which the dogma of transubstantiation is founded, namely, "Unless we eat the flesh and drink the blood of the Son of Man, we have no life in us." This is a riddle as well known to the priests of Egypt on the banks of the Nile and to those of Brahma on the Ganges as to those of later ages. To accept this literally one must bid farewell to reason and common sense. The Protestants' interpretation of symbolism is more in accordance with reason, but yet is not the original one. The astronomical key can alone unlock and disclose the secret meaning which the allegory was invented to hide.

It was well known to the ancients, as it is still better known to us, that all life on this globe is dependent on the sun—that to its fructifying beams, in conjunction with the refreshing rain poured out from the metaphorical urn of Aquarius, the maturing of the elements of food and drink that supply the physical basis of man's existence is owing. The reference, then, is not mystical, but actual, referring only to nature's means of supporting physical life, which in all times and ages concerns man first of all as the basis of his existence. The sun, then, being the principal and indispensable agent in the production of the fruits and grains on which life is sustained, the true meaning is obvious. We eat his body and drink his blood when we partake of food and drink, and unless we do so partake "there is no life in us."

The astronomical equivalent of the gospel "day of judgment" is that part of the year when the days and nights are equal—when the harvest is over and the fruits are being gathered, when nature may be said to give all men their dues according to their deeds or efforts. This day of judgment comes annually in the ninth month, and is represented by the sign Libra, or the balance, emblematic of justice.

The astronomic reference and meaning of much of the extravagantly metaphorical language of the book of Revelation is so apparent as to need but little interpretation. The "scorpions" therein mentioned, having stings in their tails, to whom it was given to hurt the earth for five months, can have no other rational meaning or reference but to the months of October, whose sign in the zodiac is the scorpion, together with the four succeeding winter months, which are often spoken of as the dark or "evil ones," and collectively as the kingdom of darkness or of Satan, in contradistinction to the other seven bright months, which collectively are called the "kingdom of heaven," or kingdom of God. Hence these five months, owing to their darkness and frigidness, are said to be under the influence of "Abaddon, the king of the bottomless pit"—that is, the regions of infinite space.

By another turn of the kaleidoscope of the imagination this same phenomenon is represented as the "seven churches which are in Asia"—that is, the seven constellations that are in the land of fire, or in the sun's path—that is, the reign of the seven summer months.

Still another stretch of the imagination represents the same thing as the seven golden candlesticks—Christ—that is, the sun—walking in the midst of them. "I am he who holdeth the seven stars in his right hand; who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks."

Very many more illustrations might be given; but the limit of our space is reached. We leave the subject with the conviction that the position we started out to prove is established beyond reasonable doubt, namely: that the origins of nearly all religious ideas and of religions are identical, and that the key to them may be found in the phsyical phenomena of our earth in connection with the movements of the heavenly bodies.

Seeking for the Truth.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: A few weeks ago there came to this place (Bevier, Macon county, Mo.) a Dr. Breese, M. D., M. A., from Coldwater, Ohio. This is not all; there is something yet which we do not know. Friends of Coldwater may know the "doctor" better than we do. Two weeks ago I gave a short Infidel sermon on "Death Reveals No Mysteries," after which the doctor took part in the discussion and challenged me to a public debate; but he has picked up his hat and taken shelter in the cowards' castle, and has given a sermon to those strong in the faith. He says he has debated with Mr. Underwood for seven nights, and overthrew the priest of Infidelity at Coldwater. This story may be very interesting. Friends at Coldwater, say what you know. Maybe there is a note for the "Crimes of Preachers." The Christians say I am a damned Infidel.

William Mason.

Dec. 28, 1882.

Infidel Philosophy.

When we hear of a man as a liar, thief, pickpocket, or drunkard, we want nothing to do with him. We will not enter his name upon our list of friends nor associate with him. So when the Christian hears the name Infidel applied to a man, he shrinks from it as he would from the pains of the second death; because he has been taught from child-hood to associate the epithet with all that is perfidious and despicable; something like the sin against the Holy Ghost, which cannot be forgiven in this world, neither in the world to come. This is a matter of false education and can only be eradicated by the high moral standard of the true reformer, and a good example which ought always to be exemplified in the daily work of every Liberal. A preacher is the prince of swindlers. This may sound harsh to some; it is nevertheless true. Is he not clothed in purple and fine linen? and does he not fare sumptuously every day? Is he ever known to giv value for what he receives? Does he not do the least and get the most? He gets all that can be enjoyed in this life, and what does he giv the people in return? He blesses them, which does them no good; he offers up prayers for them which cost him nothing, and never can be answered. He is a grand center around which fools revolve, each vieing with the other to see which shall crouch the lowest in the dust before him. He has nothing to worry about but the saving of souls which he cares far less about than he does about his beef-steak and turkey. In short, he receives the people's money and their favors and givs them in return immense drafts on the world to come which never can be honored. A man who does this is a swindler; and a man who is guilty of such practices all his life long is the prince of swindlers.

"We should be thankful to God for his goodness" (Religious Paper).

Thankful for drouths and floods, for tornadoes, earthquakes and volcanoes; thankful for wild beasts and mad dogs; for fleas and bed-bugs, locusts and musketoes, potato bugs and cabbage worms, for small-pox and dysentery, corns and carbuncles, centipedes and tarantulas, for rattlesnakes and cobras, burns and blisters; for all our pains and aches; the loss of friends and relativs; for sorrows and disappointments, all of which hav proved a great blessing to human kind, and for which, O Lord, make us truly thankful. So mote it be. In the United States there is $483,454,581 worth of church property. Though this property adds nothing to the resources of the country, it is guarded and protected at public expense, in a special manner, yet it is exempt from taxation. There are in this country about 16,000,000 people engaged in manufacturing, mining, and other kinds of labor. These are paid laborers and are composed almost entirely of poor people, and produce all the wealth of the country. Would it not be more just and humane to tax this church property in a fair ratio to other property, and apply the amount to the education and elevation of these poor people?

Every year thousands of dollars are foolishly expended on funerals. This ostentation and parade at funerals has been mainly brought about by the priesthood, and is not founded on common sense. If there is ever a time when people should be free from intrusion and left to their own reflections, it is when they are taking a last farewell of those they hold dear. The show and ceremony generally observed at funerals to me seems out of place and immoral. The dead are beyond the reach of our help, but the living may greatly need our aid. Wisdom and charity forbid the useless expenditure of money upon funerals when surviving relativs may suffer for want of the money thus squandered. Funerals should be conducted with little ceremony and formality, and always in an independent manner and agreeable to the wishes of surviving friends. At every funeral may be seen individuals prompted only by curiosity and a superstitious desire to stare at the dead. A more unwarrantable intrusion could not be imagined. It givs me great pleasure to learn that Liberals are conducting their funerals with more regard to propriety and common sense.

I know a mechanic who is ignorant and illiterate. When young he attended Sabbath-school. A reward was offered to the scholar who could repeat the greatest number of verses from the New Testament at the end of each quarter. Under the stimulus of the reward he persevered until whole books could be repeated. He is now on life's busy stage endeavoring to procure a living for his family. The scripture which he committed is forgotten and would be of no practical value if remembered. The same amount of study would hav made him a fine grammarian, a good arithmetician or geographer, or given him a good start in any of the learned professions. Thousands all over the land are being subjected to this unnatural mental robbery, for which the church alone is responsible. Instead of imparting to the young mind knowledge which would prove useful in after life, the time is spent in learning what Jesus said to a fig-tree, and how his disciples caught gudgeons along Lake Galilee, and how devils could be crammed into a drove of pigs, and then how they were turned into Baptists by being immersed in the sea; how much water could be drawn from a jawbone of an ass, and whether a talking jackass would be likely to speak in French or German, and a thousand and one other things of equal importance to us at the present time. The Sabbath-schools and Bible classes as now conducted are a great outrage upon the young. The time thus wickedly filched from them, if devoted to useful instruction, would turn out hundreds of intelligent men and women who are now doomed to grope their way through the world in ignorance and superstition.

The pretense of the church that with all the power which could be placed in its hands, it would not persecute as in days of old, will be believed by Liberals when it pays taxes on its own property, when it no longer claims the people's money to pay its chaplains, when it no longer tries to force the observance of its Sabbath upon the people, when it ceases to outrage the witness-stand by the application of test oaths, and when it ceases to shriek with rage because we are opposed to having the Bible forced into the common schools and God into the Constitution.

Naples, N. Y., Jan. 14, 283. John Peck.

Which Is the Clearer Prophecy?

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: A good deal of the matter in the Bible, Mother Goose, and other inspired writings is read and not appreciated by the modern world merely because explanations of it are not scattered diffusivly enough among the masses. I hav read Daniel and pronounced it vague, and hav perused Jack and Jill and let it pass as only a poetic though graphic description of what might be an every-day occurrence. Mr. George M. Mair and Prof. Van Buren Denslow hav made both these literary productions appear in a new light. I quote them below in parallel columns so that it may be the better judged which has been the more successful in his attempt to put new wine into old bottles, so to speak. Prof. Denslow's contribution to this little symposium occurs on page 39 of "Modern Thinkers" (for sale at The Truth Seeker office, price $1.50). Mr. Mair's elucidation of Daniel's rather obscure way of expressing himself will be found on the 815th page of the "Bennett-Mair Discussion" (for sale ibid, price ditto). I hav not quoted all he says upon the subject, because I found in transcribing it that the more I read of it the less I seemed to understand what I thought was tolerably clear when I began. If any one has a notion that what he says below is not to be readily grasped by the intellect, just let them get the book and read the rest of his commentary. Compared with that, this will appear quite lucid.

MR. MAIR.	PROF. DENSLOW.
"This great image whose brightness was excellent stood before thee; and the form thereof was terrible. The image's head was of fine gold, his breast and his arms of silver, his belly and his thighs of brass, and his feet part of iron and part of clay" (Dan. ii, 31-32).	"Jack and Gill Went up the hill To fetch a pail of water; Jack fell down And broke his crown, And Gill came tumbling after." (Mother Goose, iv, 11-44.)
The head of gold represented the Babylonian empire. . . The breast and two arms of the image were of silver, indicating that it was to be a double kingdom, and less grand in appearance than the head. . . The body was of brass;—the conquerors of the Medo-Persian monarchy were the "brazen soldiers," as the Macedonians were called. . The Romans who conquered the Macedonians were a stern, poor, and valorous people. How apposit to represent them as iron to other metals!	Jack means the Western Roman empire; Gill means the Eastern Roman empire. Their joint ascent of the hill signifies their mutual competition with each other for wealth, and territory, and power. The object of these competitions, viz., to "fetch a pail of water," was to advance the interests of civilization upon the earth; water being typical of civilization, both as to its purifying qualities and its mobility. Just as they were about perfecting their civilization, "Jack fell down", etc.; i.e., the Western empire passed under the sway of the Infidel, "and broke his crown," i.e, he lost his share of the scepter of the world. "And Gill came tumbling after" indicates the fall of the Eastern empire.
"And as the [ten] toes of the feet were part of iron and part of clay, so the kingdom shall be partly strong and partly weak" (Ib. 43.)
Count at any time after the final disruption of the Roman empire, and see if you can find more than ten kingdoms existing contemporaneously. Can you assert this to be more uninspired guess-work?

Here is a week's board for thought. These two writers hav shown how easy it is to force a meaning into words which of themselvs either mean nothing or hav a significance wholly foreign to that which may be attributed to them. Mr. Mair's is evidently a conscientious endeavor to extract a prophetic meaning from Daniel's jesting as court fool to King Nebuchadnezzar. Prof. Denslow's essay in the same line was written as an illustration of the fact that an interpreter may pump into a narrativ whatever "sense" or nonsense he desires to get into or out of it. That he has succeeded no one can deny. Mr. Mair has not, perhaps, been equally as fortunate; but if it is decided that he has to a certain extent made a failure of it, let it be remembered that he had poorer material to work from, and difficulties of greater magnitude to wrestle with.

New York, Jan. 18, 283. George E. Macdonald.

The Martyr Stephen.

Although the book of Acts is manifestly in great part a legend, yet it would be folly to aver that it is entirely devoid of historical truth. Who can resist the conviction of a ground-work of fact in what is called the "We" portion, beginning at chapter xvi, 10, and continuing with interruptions to the end of the book? It describes the travels and ministry of Paul, and as such we purpose to regard it, with numerous alterations by transcription. But we expect to discover in what remains of the original narrativ traces of an origin prior to the Christian era.

The first appearance of Paul is at the stoning of Stephen, where it is said that those who testified against the accused "laid their clothes at the feet of a young man who was called Saul;" and the writer adds that "Saul was consenting and participating in his death." (Acts vii, viii.) The martyrdom of Stephen is generally dated within a few months after the crucifixion; but the time is so uncertain that some authorities put it from one to six years later, while the Paschal Chronicle of the 7th century has it A.D. 41, and Rabbi Wise is confident it was not earlier than A.D. 50 (Orig. of Chris. p. 306).

If the story as related in Acts is true, is it not strange that we find no allusion to it in Paul's Epistles? It might also appear strange that contemporary history is silent about the first Christian martyr but for the more remarkable fact that it is altogether silent about the martyrdom of Christ himself.

But what now if "Antichrist" has found a historical notice of Stephen? If Paul and the rest of the apostles lived before the Christian era, unsuspected by scholars, hav they not all been hunting for needles in the wrong haystack? We do not claim for certain that we hav found Stephen, but looking for a holy martyr about the time of Paul's conversion, we find one mentioned by Josephus. Sometime between 69 and 66 B.C., when Aristobulus was king of Judea and his younger brother Hyrcanus high priest, the latter stole out of Jerusalem and with the aid of Aretas, king of Arabia Petra, besieged the city, intending to dethrone his brother. Hyrcanus was supported by the people, Aristobulus by the priests. The rest of the story we will let Josephus tell.

"As this happened at the season when the feast of unleavened bread was celebrated, which we call the Passover, the principal men among the Jews left the country, and fled into Egypt. Now there was one whose name was Onias, a righteous man he was, and beloved of God, who, in a certain drouth, had prayed to God to put an end to the intense heat, and whose prayers God had heard and had sent them rain. This man had hid himself, because he saw that this sedition would last a great while. However, they brought him to the Jewish camp, and desired that as by his prayers he had once put an end to the drouth, so he would in like manner make imprecations on Aristobulus and those of his faction. And when, upon his refusal and the excuses that he made, he was still by the multitude compelled to speak, he stood up in the midst of them and said: 'O God, the king of the whole world! since those that stand now with me are thy people, and those that are besieged are also thy priests, I beseech thee that thou wilt neither hearken to the prayers of those against these, nor bring to effect what these pray against those!' Whereupon such wicked Jews as stood about him, as soon as he had made that prayer, stoned him to death" (Ant. xiv. 2).

Onias, like Stephen, was a righteous man who had wrought signs and prodigies; like Stephen, he was stoned outside the walls of Jerusalem about the time (69–66 B.C.) when Paul, the persecutor of saints, was converted, and, like Stephen, he died praying for his murderers.

It may be said that a similar description would apply to many a martyr's death. True, but Josephus does not describe another similar one until the killing of James, 130 years later (Ant. xx, 9).

Rabbi Wise devotes a chapter to the "Martyrdom of Stephen," from which we extract the following points:

1. The name Stephanos, "the crown," is entirely unknown to Jewish nomenclature. The name Kathriel, "the crown of the Lord," is known in angelology only; it occurs nowhere in the annals of ancient Jews as the name of a person. Stephanos is suggestiv of "the crown" of martyrdom.

2. The speech of Stephen was never made by a Jew; its numerous biblical blunders must hav been apparent to the most illiterate Hebrew. It is clearly a late production; why not also the trial and the whole story?

3. The real cause of dispute between Stephen and his accusers is unknown; the statements of the false witnesses are absurdity, the defense an invention, the catastrophe an improbability next to an impossibility. The laws of Israel took no cognizance of "blasphemous words against Moses," but the author of Acts appears not to hav known it.

4. The statements (discourses) of Paul recorded in Acts rest on no better authority than this story itself, and in his epistles Paul does not even allude to this event.

5. Josephus, who notes the death of James, the brother of Jesus (?), must hav noticed also the death of Stephen and the apostle James (brother of John), if either was historical; but he does neither.

We concur with Mr. Wise in every particular except as to the identity of James, the brother of Jesus, with "James, the brother of the Lord." This is denied by eminent Christian authorities, as we hav pointed out on page 421 of our "Revelations," and we shall advert to it again in our next.

ANTICHRIST.

Satan Unmasked.

From an Address before the First Spiritual Union of Norwich, Conn., in Reply to a Reverend Defamer of Spiritualism.

BY BYRON BOARDMAN.

Explanatory.—In consequence of the public interest awakened regarding the spiritual philosophy by recent lectures on that subject, theological "vials of wrath" hav been poured out from the pulpit on the troubled waters of unbelief in an ecclesiastical effort to stay the inflowing tide of spiritual progression. In pursuance of that policy the following notice appeared in the local journals:

"Central M. E. Church, the Rev. E. Tinker, pastor. Preaching at 7:30 P.M. Theme—'Spiritualism, Spiritism, and Spiritualists; or, Satan Unmasked.'"

In order to checkmate this clerical crusade against the mystic manifestations of the Spiritual phenomena upon which every system of religion in existence was originally based, the Spiritualists came out in the following circular:

"SPIRITUALISM."

"Notwithstanding the fact that 'Satan Unmasked' himself in one of our popular pulpits last Sunday, in a vain effort to frighten people from listening to the 'Spirit of Truth,' yet our eloquent speaker—Abby N. Burnham, of Boston—will again address the people of Norwich, and giv soul readings, in Steiner's Hall, the two last Sundays of this month; afternoon and evening, at 2:30 and 7 o'clock. 'Come and hear what the spirit saith unto the churches.'"

The house was filled to overflowing, and Mrs. Burnham gave most brilliant and instructiv lectures, which were not reported. But in order to afford an opportunity for repelling the local attack on Spiritualism, the speaker relinquished a portion of the time to Mr. Boardman, who gave the following address:

When I see the masked messenger of death stalking through the land, striking with dismay the hearts of our Christian friends—when I see Materialists mourning over the green graves of loved ones, refusing to be comforted "because they are not"—when I see sorrowing souls vainly seeking consolation through the crusty creeds of theology—and when I hear in sepulchral tones from ancient records, "Gone to that bourne from whence no traveler returns"—I long to lift the mourning veil and reveal their loved ones lingering near; I long to unmask the dark "Knight of the Pale Horse," whom they regard with superstitious dread, and present him as the "Angel of Life" in disguise—I long to show them that death is but the opening door to the supernal scenes of the summer-land, where friends "gone on before" may perfect a noble manhood and womanhood in the higher schools of eternal life, and from the crystal fountain of wisdom bring pure gems of thought to this primary school below; that the erring may also return and atone for earthly misdeeds, by teaching mortals how to improve the passing moments as they fly, in order to escape the vain regrets of a misspent life.

In order to illustrate the spirit of modern bigotry in relation to the ministration of angels, allow me to call your attention to the late clerical burlesque in one of our popular pulpits, entitled "Satan Unmasked." The character was well taken, for all the malevolence, misrepresentation, and falsehood, usually ascribed to that notorious personage, were exhibited in the guise of a sectarian saint. One could easily discern through the thin mask of piety the "Great Red Dragon" of the Apocalyps, eager to devour the spiritual child as soon as it was born.

Would you like to hear what this "unmasked" reverend had to say about you and our inspired mediums; about our risen relativs, and our beautiful philosophy of angel ministrations? Listen: We were classed as wholesale frauds, hypocrits, and dupes; as silly men and sillier women; as crack-brained old men and idotic boys; and were stigmatized as either designing hypocrits or honest fools. He said that Spiritualism had committed all the crimes of the decalog, and its votaries were fit subjects for the penitentiary and mad-house.

Friends, do you not feel flattered by such a tirade of clerical calumny? I do, somewhat. For it is understood that his satanic majesty in disguise was to be the chief character of the entertainment; and since the traits of the "father of lies" were the most conspicuous features manifested throughout the discourse, all sensible people will know that the truth lies in the opposit direction.

Ask your penitentiaries who are the criminals. Statistics show how well they are crammed with the clergy, Sunday-school superintendents, and believers in the popular "plan" of salvation. In early youth we were taught that a lifetime of crime might be blotted out, and the stern sequence of sin escaped by the acceptance of certain formulas of faith at the eleventh hour, and that a metamorphosed miscreant might expect a grand ovation at the golden gates of the celestial city, as compared with the humble reception of ninety-nine honest men who never committed a crime. Alas! What wonder that so many frail souls, deferring the "day of grace" for a more convenient season, hav been led by such delusiv doctrins to our prison gates, instead of the pearly portals of paradise. Among such penitentiary patrons scarcely a Spiritualist can be found, for they know that every transgression of nature's laws, every violation of moral obligations, must be repaid in the coin of bitterness to the utmost farthing. Hence they are seldom caught in such a theological "trap."

The same religious rancor that persecuted primitiv Christians when they professed the true faith—when angel ministration was a cardinal doctrin of the church, and spirit communion the chief object of religious gatherings—is still rampant, and has cast into prison our media for healing the sick without a license, and for giving messages from spirit friends. These "blind guides, leaders of the blind," would now, as then, shut up the kingdom of heaven and bar its gates against all who refuse to support their dogmas. The fires of the stake hav indeed been quenched; the Inquisition for enslaving the human soul; the rack, the thumbscrews, and other means of religious torture hav been wrested from priestcraft, and yet the same spirit of religious intolerance is still manifested toward spiritual reformers to the extent of its power. It seems ever ready to sting with scandal and malign the motivs of all who seek to throw the light of reason into the dark caverns of superstition, or strike off the creedal chains of its votaries. I speak from experience, as you well know I hav tested its bitter cup, pressed to my lips by modern Pharisees.

The object of Spiritualism is not so much proselyting as upbuilding the intellect and enabling people to do their own thinking, instead of being controled by a blind faith and the leading-strings of a salaried priesthood. Possibly in the church there may be those who require the fear of eternal torments, as well as the hope of reward in the form of jeweled crowns, regal robes, and other glittering gew-gaws, to keep them in the path of rectitude. Such sordid souls we would leave in the hands of the priest to hug their vain, idolatrous delusions, until bitter experience shall teach them a higher motiv of action. Such moral cravens are not prepared to accept our noble doctrin of doing right through a fraternal feeling of good will toward others. I do not deprecate an honest, religious aspiration, whose chief object is the uplifting of humanity; but I detest the iron-clad creeds of superstition that, in past ages, hav been riveted on the human soul by priestcraft, in order to purloin the fruits of labor and reap a rich harvest of mammon from the fields of "sin" through the pretense of "saving souls" that were never lost.

I refer to the barbaric dogmas—religions of dark ages—that hav embittered man against his fellow-man, and caused zealous devotees to slay each other by the millions—delusions that hav dwarfed the mental powers, and enthralled the soul in shackles of servility and brazen fetters of fear. I refer to a barbarous superstition that would consign to the grave's cold clod our loved ones until some great day when victims of deific displeasure shall be doomed to endless suffering, while fawning flatterers and sanctimonious sycophants are conveyed to some far-off clime where they may sing heavenly hymns to all eternity, there to enjoy the celestial companionship of craven criminals, who upon the gibbet or death-bed may hav shown the white feather of fear and were thereby fitted for fingering golden harps.

Read the thrilling tale of the mock trial and burning at the stake of Joan of Arc, the noble maid of Orleans; read of Michael Servetus, who for advocating Unitarian doctrins was hunted down by zealous fathers of the "Reformation," and through the hatred and treachery of John Calvin, founder of the Calvinistic faith, was tortured to death by a slow green-oak fire; read the stern pages of history; they are crimson with the blood of martyrs shed in the name of the gentle Nazarene. Then visit one of our modern temples and see, held in check by the secular arm, the same spirit of religious rancor "unmasked" in the pulpit.

Take away the superstitious fear of death and hell, and theology would crumble to ashes. This is why its "reverend" retainers cling to the old bugbears of "total depravity" and "eternal misery" as religious scarecrows to frighten ignorance into the arms of the church. For this cause they hav portrayed death-bed scenes of sinners in lurid colors of woe. But in all such cases I find the forlorn wretch to be a victim of a blind faith, a believer in "orthodox" doctrins.

See the nativ son of the forest whose untutored mind was never swayed by theology's withering blast. He calmly folds his arms upon his breast and passes on in peace, for he knows that his soul will wing its flight to the happy hunting-grounds of the Great Spirit. I hav witnessed the transition of loved ones who never joined a church, yet they approached the "silent river" without a tremor or shadow of fear, and calmly waited for the busy boatman to come and waft them o'er.

I hav seen an aged clergyman whose sands of life were nearly run—a veteran "soldier of the cross," who had worn his life away expounding the ecclesiastical scheme of "salvation by faith"—standing on the steril soil of theology, anxiously gazing into the dark "valley of the shadow of death," vainly looking for a gleam of spiritual light to guide his faltering footsteps through the dread portals of the tomb. O venerable man of the ministry, what seekest thou at the golden gateway of eternal life? Sadly he replies: "Alas! I am looking for a foundation on which to build hope!"

I hav seen the aged, whose mind was imbued with religious faith, wailing on a sick bed in an agony of superstitious dread, haunted by vague visions of flaming hells, devils, and other theological bugbears, smuggled by priestcraft into the plastic mind of infancy.

Then let our hearts go out in sympathy for our timid Christian friends who "through fear of death are all their lifetime subject to bondage." Let us show them that the apocalyptical death and hell hav been cast into the lake of fire and consumed—that life, eternal life, is the birthright of humanity—that angels hav burst the bars of the tomb, and can return to the family circle to cheer us on in the great work of redeeming the race from the bondage of sin and the burden of priestcraft, with all its false teachings of angry gods, heathen hells, and "doctrins of devils." Let them know that the glorious gospel of spiritual truth will break that priestly spell, the nightmare of superstition, will strike off the theological shackles of fear and make them free. Then will they shout with one of old; "O Death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

A Retraction Demanded.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I am no man-worshiper. I know I hav many faults, and I hav yet to find the person that has none. Probably D. M. Bennett had about as few as any of us. At least he did not claim to be perfect. If he had worked as hard for Christianity during his lifetime as he did for Freethought the great secular papers of the country would hav extolled him to the skies after his death.

It is not so now. Many of them hav not mentioned him, some hav merely referred to him, and others, like the Toledo Blade, hav disgraced themselvs by heaping calumny upon his memory. I know D. R. Locke personally. He is a noble, big-hearted man, who knows what it is to feel his own imperfections, and I feel sure if he is still the controling editor of the Blade he will do what he can to correct the wrong that the Blade has done Mr. Bennett's memory. And I now suggest that every friend of justice, I don't say of Mr. Bennett, immediately write to the Blade and demand of the editors of that sheet that they retract their false and slanderous charges that they hav published in relation to D. M. Bennett. I shall write such a letter myself. H. L. Green.

P. S.—Address these letters, The Blade, Toledo, O.

Banding Together.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: The organization of the Liberals in Hannibal has become somewhat demoralized, yet we hav a large body of Freethinkers and truth seekers who look on Biblical records with the same animating spirit that we see in the experience of Col. Ingersoll's military, theological genius, or the Rev. R. Heber Newton's mild Infidelity or "gospel-proof." Men of this mental stamp see through the flimsy essays of tricks, priestcraft's genius to make tribal legends for power's sake, out of borrowed Egyptian myths—a very thin basis of operations in a truth-seeking scrutiny, and almost equal to the "nothing" the Bible's Jehovah made everything out of.

We expect to organize a Freethinking association in Hannibal soon. My business prevents my attending much to such progress, but in spirit I desire to abolish priestcraft, ignorance, idolatry, superstition, and all the hell-devils invented by science-destroying Christianity.

Although our esteemed myth-killer, D. M. Bennett, has "passed that bourne o'er which no traveler returns," yet we must in memory of his great utilitarianism keep up his spirit with his soul "still marching on" in The Truth Seeker to contend and labor against the despotism of antiquated customs of superstition and ignorance, as well as to teach our live generations of the nineteenth century what constitutes moral and constitutional liberty.

In truth and honesty, Frank O'Mahony.

Hannibal. Mo., Jan 21, 1883.

Wanted—Mr. Hale's God.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Having carefully read the article in The Truth Seeker of the 20th, written by Mr. James Hale in what he calls an answer to Mr. Sunderland, Mr. Wallis, and Ella E. Gibson, and entirely failing to see the point definitly which he claims to hav made—or perhaps I should say the points—I come in at this particular time and ask for information from Mr. Hale, thinking he, as a believer in a God, will certainly manifest a willingness to inform a poor, benighted specimen like myself as to this God, which he says is not a Jew's nor a Christian's God; but he calls this God of his "The I Am," "The Almighty," "The Supreme," "The All Wise," "The God of Nature," or "God"—yet in all without person or gender. Notwithstanding Mr. Hale, something after the style of Jeff. Davis, intimates he would at this time prefer to be "let alone," and begging his pardon for any real or apparent intrusion upon his desired retirement from the scene of action, I wish to ask him if he will explain more definitly what kind of a compound his God is—one that can, as he says, properly be called by so many names, yet is neither of the Jewish nor Christian persuasion, nor person nor gender. I hav heard many things said about this "god business," but I must confess that I think Mr. Hale has capped the climax of all that is singular, at least, if not decidedly funny.

Hoping our godly brother will gratify my wish and furnish more light on this great matter, that has worried the brains of the world all through the past ages, I am most respectfully, M. O. Waggoner.

Toledo, O.

This Ought to be Satisfactory.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Since placing my advertisment in your paper in reference to my new pianos and organs I hav received quite a fair number of inquiries, but most persons seem to be over-cautious about sending money. I will say to all such, and any others, that I am willing they shall send it to you to be held until they receive the instrument and hav fully satisfied themselvs that I am in earnest and want no advantage. Or, if they prefer, I will send a contract for them to sign and return to me with such references as they can giv of their good faith in the transaction, and will then send the instrument on a test trial; and if it is not as I state, it may be returned at my expense. Does any person who has not lost all faith in humanity want a fairer offer?

Please write for a copy of this contract and satisfy yourself. J. R. Perry.

352 North Main st., Wilkes Barre, Pa.

Weariness or Bereavement—Which?

A little elbow leans upon your knee—
Your tired knee that has so much to bear—
A child's dear eyes are looking lovingly
From underneath a thatch of tangled hair.
Perhaps you do not heed the velvet touch
Of warm, moist fingers holding yours so tight,
You do not prize the blessing overmuch—
You are almost too tired to pray to-night.

But it is blessedness! A year ago
I did not see it as I do to-day—
We are so dull and thankless, and too slow
To catch the sunshine till it slips away.
And now it seems surpassing strange to me
That while I wore the badge of motherhood
I did not kiss more oft and tenderly
The little child that brought me only good.

And if, some night, when you sit down to rest,
You miss the elbow on your tired knee—
This restless curly head from off your breast,
This lisping tongue that chatters constantly;
If from your own the dimpled hands had slipped,
And ne'er would nestle in your palm again;
If the white feet into the grave had tripped—
I could not blame you for your heartache then.

I wonder that some mothers ever fret
At their precious darlings clinging to their gown,
Or that the footprints, when the days are wet,
Are ever black enough to make them frown.
If I could find a little muddy boot,
Or cap, or jacket, on my chamber floor—
If I could kiss a rosy, restless foot,
And hear it patter in my house once more;

If I could mend a broken cart to-day,
To-morrow make a kite to reach the sky,
There is no woman in the world could say
She was more blissfully content than I!
But ah! the dainty pillow next my own
Is never rumpled by a shining head!
My singing birdling from its nest has flown,
The little boy I used to kiss is—dead.

Moses Has a Birthday Party.

From the Evening Observer.

To the Editor of the Observer, Sir: Will you allow a poor mortal a little space to relate his calamities and to warn unborn generations against being born? By a very natural lapsus linguæ the intelligence was conveyed to a few friends that forty-eight years ago on the 16th of January, I had made my entrance into this world.

Not being well yesterday I spent the day in quiet rest, but at night my rest and reverie were disturbed by an alarm at the door. When I went to answer it I found over sixty members of my congregation there loaded down with mysterious looking packages and bundles. They came in and took possession of the house and its occupants.

Mr Sexton installed himself as master of ceremonies and the evening was spent in reading and responding to toasts, making speeches, singing songs, etc. The etc. consisted of a good supper and numerous presents, such as a fine dressing gown, a splendid gold pen, pencil, and holder, a complete set of Andrew Jackson Davis's "Great Harmonia," some necessary articles of wearing apparel, toilet articles and money. In short they made me glad that I had been born, though the event occurred at so early a period of my career that I hav no very distinct recollection of it. Were I sure that such things would follow on every natal day I should not hesitate to embrace an early opportunity to be born again.

With the hope that these kind friends may all liv to come around on a thousand anniversaries of my birthday, Moses Hull.

Erie Pa. Jan. 17, 1883.

The Truth Seeker will be sent three months to new subscribers for half a dollar. Those interested in the spread of Freethought should exert themselvs to further the circulation of The Truth Seeker.

The Baptists' Lament.

The following wail from the Western Recorder, a Baptist paper published at Louisville, Ky., shows plainly that that denomination is on the wane. I also notice that other religious papers echo the same sentiment with the Recorder, which says:

Individually, and as churches, we hav not accomplished what we might—not what we hoped at the opening of the year. We hav not made rapid those advances in Christian attainment that we desired; we hav not gathered as many "golden sheaves" from life's fair ripening grain as we hoped for; we hav not grown as we should. As churches, we hav not "broken forth on the right hand and on the left;" we hav not laid hold upon the great mass of our fellow-men, and led them Christward; we hav not given of our means to send the gospel to the destitute at home and abroad; none of these things hav we done as it has been our privilege to do.

What has been the matter? The Lord's hand is not shortened. We hav not been prayerful and earnest "in season and out of season," as it was our privilege and our duty to be. We hav been too worldly, too eager in our pursuit of fame or of filthy lucre. We hav not read and studied our Bibles; we hav not prayed earnestly and frequently; we hav not taken time to work for Christ, as success in his service evermore requires. Brethren, let the year to come be one of earnest words, earnest prayer, earnest deeds, and the master will giv us a glorious blessing. Bring in the tithes, and salvation in Pentecostal showers will descend.

How is that from one of the leading denominations? It shows plainly, to my mind at least, that the church is losing some of her power, and I for one am truly glad of it. If the seventy-five thousand preachers would go to work as they should for humanity, I think they would feel better, learn more, and hav far greater blessings than the Recorder now bewails. I am not much of a prophet, but I now say that the time is coming, sooner or later, when the church will fall, and great will be that fall for a large number of drones. The time is coming when humanity will rise in great power, and the gospel of Liberalism will be proclaimed from the pulpits of many buildings now called the houses of God. What a grand time we all will hav! In imagination I picture the peace and happiness of the world when that time comes. You, or I, or the coming generation may not see this, but remember I hav said it, and the signs of the times prove it is coming.

In Mr. Bennett's death we hav lost our great general. May you as his successor lead us on to victory. He was brave and true, and fell at his post; and while we cannot find another just like him, we can follow the leaders we hav left. A. B. Briney.

Will the Toledo Blade Take Notice?

From the People's Advocate.

D. M. Bennett, editor of The Truth Seeker, and one of the leading thinkers of this country, died at his home in New York Dec. 6th, after a short illness. The death of this remarkable man has given a number of small editors throughout the country occasion to squirt slums and slops on the memory of the deceased. If Mr. Bennett's work is to be washed away and the memory of him submerged with slops, his admirers will regret that it cannot be done by squirt-guns with a larger caliber.

Mr. Boardman after the Clergy.

From the New Haven Register.

Byron Boardman, of Norwich, has unloosed his "Satan Unmasked" in pamphlet form, this week. Ten thousand copies. It is an address leveled at the clergy and the churches and at the Christian religion generally, by this Freethinker, and was called out by real or fancied assaults made upon Mr. Boardman's work and fellow-workers by some of the Norwich clergy. Mr. Boardman is an enthusiast and an ardent follower of the late illustrious D. M. Bennett of The Truth Seeker, New York.

The Clergy.—They hav the strongest interest in the depravation of the human intellect. For the demand for their services as agents for the temporal aid of the deity altogether depends upon human ignorance and incapacity, and is exactly proportional to it. Why does a man apply for the divine assistance? Because he does not know how to accomplish his ends without it, or how to procure the requisit apparatus for the purpose. If he knew any physical means of attaining it, he would unquestionably prefer them. Every extension, therefore, of physical methods in the gratification of our wishes, displaces and throws out of employment by so much the labor of the aerial functionaries. No one prays for the removal of a disease by supernatural aid, when he once knows an appropriate surgical remedy. He therefore, who livs by the commission which he charges on the disposal of the former, has a manifest interest in checking the advance and introduction of the latter.—George Grote.

Paine's Birthday will be celebrated in Farmington, Utah, by the Liberal League, which has procured the services of Charles Bright, the eloquent Australian lecturer.

The Institute of Heredity holds its second meeting for the discussion of this subject on Thursday evening, January 25th, at the parlors of Dr. Foote, 120 Lexington avenue, corner of Twenty-eighth street. All interested in the subject are welcome.

Communications.

Those Wicked Materialists.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Mr. Lynn says that I call Spiritualists fools. In that assertion, made in a late number of The Truth Seeker, he is entirely mistaken. It is not my style to apply such epithets to people who differ from me. Because I think Spiritualism is a delusion it does not follow that I believe Spiritualists are idiots. Many a wise man has been victimized, deluded.

Mr. Lynn talks about the experiences in his own home. Christians hav "experiences" in their homes, too. But Spiritualists reject them as not proving what Christians claim. I reject the Spiritualists' claim also. What is evidence to one mind is not to another. What Christians term evidences of a holy ghost, and what Spiritualists say is evidence of common ghosts, furnish Materialists no proof of either.

It may be that it took me too long to find out Spiritualism, and that I am mistaken about it, for Mr. Lynn has searched thirty years, and he concludes that it is true. Seems to me I hav heard the same "argument" in favor of the truthfulness and divinity of the Christian religion. In fact, a number of very learned gentlemen, jurists and statesmen, after twice as many years' investigation of Christianity as he has given to Spiritualism, decide that the Christian evidences are overwhelming. But those very evidences Spiritualists reject. What matters it to them that a great legal light, Greenleaf (with whose law writings every well-read lawyer is familiar), has written a masterly work on the genuinness and authenticity of the Bible? Even "Greenleaf on Evidence" of Christianity is no proof to Spiritualists that the Bible is the "word of God." Such evidences do not satisfy Mr. Lynn, nor do they satisfy me, for I presume they are no better than those I hav witnessed in spiritual homes.

One reason which he urges for not rejecting Spiritualism is that I "feasted" with its believers, "traveled with them," "heard and saw" them in all their "whims, moods, and peculiarities." Probably if I had duly weighed all this years ago I would hav still been "sound in the faith" to this day. I see now the great mistake of my life. No one should ever repudiate any idea that he has once held as true, provided he has been hospitably entertained and well feasted.

There are several Spiritual lecturers who were formerly clergymen, educated in Christian colleges by Christian charity. Their former friends hav never failed to remind them of their base ingratitude.

He gravely assures us that a "few months" were sufficient for him "to expose the abominations of orthodoxy, the wickedness of chattel slavery, the weakness as well as folly to doubt the safety of investigating any and all subjects that directly or remotely relate to the well-being of our race, and the comfort and well-being of the lower orders that contribute to our health and pleasure." All this to show that I took an unconscionable long, long time to find the falsity of Spiritualism. He required a "few months" to run through the errors to which millions still cling. Oh, well, I may as well own right up that I could not hav done it. It takes most people a lifetime to do as much as that, while some very learned and intelligent orthodox people never find out so much as long as they liv.

As he informs us that he uses his muscles and soils his hands instead of depending upon "pure talk-work" (Is that a hit at Ingersoll, Underwood, and H. L. Green?), the tremendous amount of work accomplished in so short a time is easily explained.

Mr. Lynn says I must be mistaken regarding my supposed persecution, as he knows nothing of that particular element among Spiritualists "worth the mention." He does know of a little, then. There is a small amount in the Catholic church, a sprinkling in the Protestant, and a trifle among Spiritualists. They will all acknowledge that much, but not a grain more. Do Spiritualists bear no ill-will to any person who has abandoned Spiritualism? Are they just as willing to hear him giv reasons against it as they were to hear discourses by the hour in its favor? The dozen or more Spiritual papers which frequently attack Materialism (an unquestioned right), do they, with one or two exceptions, accord to Materialists the right to reply? To bring it home: Do Spiritualists never use their influence with Liberals and Liberal Leagues to prevent W. F. Jamieson from receiving lecturing engagements? Do they never write to editors of Liberal papers threatening withdrawal of patronage if the aforesaid editors permit him the use of their columns to write against Spiritualism? Is this "all clean work" and a specimen of their sense of justice and freedom? This may not be persecution "worth the mention!" That they hav often been successful in persuading Liberals to giv me no call to lecture is a well-known fact. Fortunately for me I am possessed of force enough to rough-hew my own way, with or without engagements. A lecturer who is not, who cannot maintain his own convictions in the teeth of opposition, had better never mount the speaker's platform.

Even Mr. Lynn in some degree exhibits the animus of Spiritualists generally. He says Herbert Spencer's great work on "Education" would outweigh all my public labors. He unwittingly does me more honor than I ever expected to receive. The idea of comparing my humble labors with any part of the work of the profoundest thinker that ever lived! But what will the reader think when he discovers that our friend actually meant to belittle my lecture work? Hear him: "I will be honest with Mr. Jamieson by telling him that I hav read a good many of his reported debates, and though, as a whole, they were smart and logical [Oh, thank you! I am now ready for any bitter pill which may follow], yet as they were on (to me) the old threadbare story of the Bible, I was not able to see that they did much to advance human progress."

Perhaps my life work ought to hav been of a higher grade, and adapted especially to satisfying Mr. Lynn. It may be humiliating for me to confess it, but I never thought of him.

I saw that the mass of my fellow-men were in slavery to a book, and I hav done my best to help emancipate them. And now if millions yet enslaved to that same book would, or could, be persuaded to view it in the same light that I do, not another dollar would go to carry Christianity to the heathen; not another church would be allowed to go untaxed; not another Christian sermon would be preached; not another day would the minions of the church interfere with liberty of speech and press and person; not another church edifice would be dedicated to a god, but temples of learning instead devoted to humanity. All this would logically follow the adoption of the anti-Bible views. For a few years Ingersoll has been engaged in the same sort of "threadbare" work. D. M. Bennett, also, for years kept at the "threadbare" until it became shiny as a poor Methodist minister's poor pants.

Put all our work together, and I think we will unanimously agree that Spencer would outweigh us.

But it is not true that I hav confined my efforts to that "old, old story;" although as long as Bible fables are taught by popular parsons, so long should there be unbroken iconoclastic ranks. For years I hav employed much of my time in studying a few branches of science, and hav interwoven the truths I learned in my lectures on geology, astronomy, electricity, acoustics, psychology. Fifteen years ago I commenced the study of Spencer and Darwin; and later, Wallace and Gray and Mayer, Tyndall Helmholtz, Haeckel, and Huxley. My progress is slow; and since writing these lines I hav several times sighed for the genius of Brother Lynn, for then I could in a "few months" master the great thoughts of those master minds. Perchance he has discovered a "royal road" to knowledge.

I am perfectly willing to meet the issue as between Spiritualism and Materialism. There is no use for any one to suppress the discussion. It is a living issue, and ought to be debated in good humor. If Spiritualists and Materialists will not work with each other for reforms in this world, in which they do agree, because they differ about the existence of some other world, then they will not harmonize by seeking silence for the sake of peace.

Yours for debate, as well as truth,

Lake City, Minn. W. F. Jamieson.

Thoughts for Thinkers.

When we look around us at the order of nature we discover life upon every side in a great variety of forms.

We might, with some degree of propriety, say that the whole surface of the globe is covered with animal life, which includes human life, vegetables, insects, fowls, and fishes; and we find it to be a law of nature that each and all of these numerous forms of life must hav nourishment, suited to their various wants and requirements, to sustain that life and build them up to maturity, or they perish.

We find it also to be a law of nature that everything that has life has an end of that life in death, and after death they sooner or later go to decay; that throughout all the numerous forms and varieties of life one form of life becomes nourishment and food for another, but before it can become such nourishment death must take place, and the process of decay must begin; but to become nourishment for any form of life except vegetable life, the process of decay must go on in the stomach of the animal, insect, fowl, or fish, and while this process of decomposition is going on the system takes up whatever is useful and necessary to sustain and build up each particular variety. The balance passes off as waste matter, which, like all other decayed matter when mingled with the dust again, becomes nourishment for all forms of vegetable life. Thus life and death succeed each other—the same particles of matter passing from death to life, and from life to death, over and over again. Vegetable life, it is believed by this writer, can sustain itself, independent of all other forms of life, by the death and decomposition of vegetable matter alone mingled with the dust. But other forms of life could not long exist without vegetable life. The nourishment required to sustain nearly all forms of life must be composed of something that has had life and is dead; therefore it is absolutely necessary that one thing should die that another may liv. But, notwithstanding this general rule that everything that has life has an end of that life in death, human beings are supposed to hav a life which has no end in death.

Our Spiritual friends claim to hav abundance of evidence of the existence of such a life. Aside from this, all we know about this everlasting life is what Bible writers and priests hav told us. They also inform us that there is such a life; which would seem to argue that human beings hav a sort of double life. The life of the body, which, like everything else that has life, has an end in death, and the life of the human being proper, so to speak, which they tell us remains in the body during the lifetime of the body, but which does not die with the body, is invisible, cannot be seen, heard, or felt, yet is supposed to possess or retain all of these qualities; it requires no space to occupy, no nourishment to sustain, and yet it livs forever.

What disposition our Spiritual friends propose to make of these human beings proper when they are liberated from the body, by the death of the body, I am not definitly informed, but I am inclined to the opinion that they permit them to liv at their ease, go where they wish to, and do what they please.

But our Bible writers and expounders inform us that there are two places prepared for their reception when they leave the body, which places are very unlike each other—one a place of great happiness, the other a place of great misery; and that there are certain conditions required of each individual while in the body to entitle them to this place of happiness when they leave the body. And if they fail to comply with these requirements, when the body dies they are turned off into this place of misery; and, whichever place they get to, they must remain to all eternity—there is no possibility of escape.

They also inform us that this Bible record which we hav is given by divine authority to lead us in the paths of righteousness and truth, and especially to inform us what will be required of us while in the body to entitle us to this place of happiness when we leave the body. But as some parts of this book are conceded to be somewhat difficult for common people to understand, it has been thought wise and proper to employ learned men whose business it should be to study this record and inform us what our duties are, and what will be required of us to entitle us to this much-to-be-desired place of happiness.

There are large numbers of these men employed, but notwithstanding they hav made this book their whole study, they fail to understand it exactly alike in all of its details. Yet if I hav a correct view of their teachings, there are some points upon which they all agree. One is that no amount of goodness, such as honesty, uprightness, purity of purpose, charity, love, and good will for our fellow-beings, will entitle us to this place of happiness; we cannot do good enough to get there. There is one other point upon which, I believe, they are equally united, and which they tell us must positivly be complied with to entitle us to this place of happiness; and that is, we must believe the Bible is the word of God; we must believe that Christ is the son of God; we must believe that he died to make it possible for the human family to get to this place of happiness; we must believe there is no other name given under heaven, nor among men, by which we can reach this place of happiness but by and through Jesus Christ.

But this belief alone will not excuse us for evil doings; we must be honest, charitable, and kind. But we may be excused for evil doings on condition that we repent of the evils we hav done, become truly penitent, and call upon God to pardon our transgressions for Christ's sake. If this is done during the lifetime of the body, we hav an assurance that we may and will be excused for any evils we may hav done; for the poet tells us that "while the lamp holds out to burn, the vilest sinner may return."

But this repentance and plea for pardon and forgivness will avail us nothing unless we believe the things enumerated above that we are required to believe; for the Bible plainly tells us that he that believes and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believes not shall be damned. And here let me ask whether it does not look a little unreasonable that our everlasting happiness should depend upon a particular kind of belief—especially when we take into consideration the fact that that belief is not a matter of choice. We cannot believe just what is dictated to us, nor even what we might desire to believe. We can only believe upon evidence presented to the mind sufficient to satisfy the reasoning faculties of the truth of the matter. But there has been provision made in the book itself for this very thing, which is calculated, by a certain system of reasoning, to make it easy for us to believe the book came from divine authority. There are numerous large, marvelous stories recorded in the book as things that once actually happened, and by first conceding them to be true because the Bible says so, and then to say of them, We know that these things could not be done by any ordinary process of nature's law, makes it clear that it must hav required some superior power to hav accomplished such remarkable results.

By this system of reasoning it is intended to be made easy for us to believe that this book came from some superior power. The only difficulty is, the evidence comes in a circle—the marvels are proved true by the Bible, and the Bible is proved true by the marvels recorded in it. Had the same marvels been recorded in any other book not called the word of God, a candid, honest reasoner would be likely to say of them, They are glaringly inconsistent and altogether unworthy of belief.

Now, the writer of this article does not presume to say whether there is or is not a life beyond the grave which has no end in death. He is willing there should be, but he cannot entertain so poor an opinion of the deity as to suppose that that power would pardon an individual who had committed a long list of crimes during a long life, or until his career of crime was brought to a close by force of human laws, and then, while the halter was being adjusted around his neck, when he found he could commit no more crime, would repent and ask for pardon; and, because he entertained a particular kind of belief, that pardon would be granted, the penalty for the crime he had committed would be transferred to an innocent party, and the criminal himself would go away into everlasting happiness; while the individual that had a lived a life of the strictest propriety—always been honest, charitable, and kind, doing at all times to others as he would that others should do unto him—when he came to die, should be condemned to everlasting pain and misery—not for any crime that he had done, but simply because his reasoning faculties would not permit him to believe what to him appeared unreasonable things. It would be much more in keeping with my sense of right and wrong, and with the influence it might hav upon society for good, that the honest man be permitted to go away into everlasting happiness, and the criminal be compelled himself to suffer the penalty for the crimes he had committed, just as surely as he himself would be compelled to endure the pain of an aching tooth or a bruised finger.

There is another point in which belief is supposed to hav much to do with results. Very many of our friends call upon God daily, asking that power to grant them many favors, thousands of voices perhaps soliciting aid at the same moment of time, and this power is supposed to listen attentivly to what each one says, and understand distinctly what they desire. We are told that when asking for divine favors we must believe that we shall receive the benefits asked for—which I understand to mean that when asking for divine favors we should request something that would be likely to take place without the asking, and then if it did take place we could easily imagin that our petition had been granted.

The pagan, we are informed, is accustomed to solicit like favors from his god of wood or stone, and to all appearances receives the same aid and the same consolation from his visible god of wood or stone that the Christian gets from his invisible god. Were I to express an opinion upon this point, it would be that the universe is governed by fixed and unalterable laws, that everything which takes place does so strictly in accordance with the causes that produce it, and that all the aid we ever get from any imaginary being beyond the skies is imaginary aid.

But when we come to realities, if the naked are clothed, if the hungry are fed, if crimes are punished, and virtue rewarded in this present life, it must be done by man and by man alone. An experience of upwards of seventy years has demonstrated to my satisfaction that reading Bibles and making prayers will not protect us from the cold storms of winter. But houses and clothing and fires will.

I may be told, and probably shall be, that houses and clothing and fires could not be made without God's assistance—that a carpenter could not raise his hand to move a saw or plane, or grasp the handle of a hammer to drive the first nail, without God's assistance. And so with everything else that human beings do—if God should withhold his aid we could do nothing. This theory may look plausible to some, but if we adopt it we shall make God responsible for all the crimes committed in the land; for by this rule, without God's assistance, Guiteau could not hav raised his hand to discharge the weapon that sent the fatal bullet into Garfield's body. I say, by this rule, that without God's assistance this crime could not hav been committed, and so with every other crime that human beings do. By this rule, without God's assistance no crimes could be committed. Which would make God responsible for all crime that is committed in the land.

There is one subject more I wish to notice. In soliciting divine aid we return many thanks, and lavish much praise and flattery upon this power that we solicit aid from. Now I freely concede that there is no harm in all this. It is simply a useless agitation of the air, but it is certainly commendable to do honor to this power that controls the universe.

But we can do it in no other way than by doing kind, noble, and generous acts for our fellow beings. Christ is supposed to hav said some wise and sensible things, and in Matt. xxv, in a parable to his disciples, he represents, among other things, a king praising his righteous subjects, telling them what good things they had done for him. They had fed him when he was hungry, clothed him when he was naked, administered to his wants when he was sick, had visited him when he was in prison, etc. And they asked him when they had done so many good things for him. "And he answered them by saying, Inasmuch as you hav done it unto the least of these my brethren you hav done it unto me."

Now this power that controls the universe is so much above and beyond all human conception that, though we may do our utmost, we cannot directly do that power a particle of good or a particle of harm.

But we can do much good or much harm to our fellow-beings around us. And in that direction lies all of our duty, and if that duty is performed in a spirit of friendship and love, charity and good will, by doing to others as we would that others should do unto us, and by trying to make the world a little the better world to liv in for having lived in it, we shall by so doing do honor in the only way we can do honor to this power that controls the universe. By so doing we shall increase our own happiness, we shall merit the good will and wishes of those with whom we associate, and if there is a life beyond the grave which has no end in death, and rewards and punishments there for deeds done here, in the opinion of the writer of this article, if these duties to our fellow-beings hav been well performed, we need entertain no fear of the vengeance of an angry God. And now, in conclusion, please to bear in mind that I do not ask you to "measure your wheat in my half-bushel;" but I do ask you to exercise your reasoning faculties, and adopt such measures as your better judgment tells you come nearest the true standard. Adopt such measures as to you seem rational, reasonable, and right. Do not adopt the conclusions that I do simply because I hav adopted them; do not adopt the popular view simply because it is popular. For I trust you will agree with me upon this point, if you do not upon any other: that if the whole world should embrace an error and stoutly proclaim it to be true, that would not make it a truth; the facts would remain the same. LEONARD GAGE.

Hagaman's Mills, N. Y.

Prohibition the Leading Question.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I see that the prohibition question is drawing forth a little discussion occasionally, and I like it. It seems to me that if Liberals would argue such questions as this more, and pay less attention to unimportant matters, such, for instance, as the question whether women are more or less religious than men, and other similar questions having no vital point at issue, Liberal journals would gain subscribers, and subscribers would gain enlightenment of a practical nature.

Now I want to say a few words about prohibition, and if what I say is worthy of publication I hope you will insert it. I find that Liberal journals publish hardly anything from new correspondents, except upon matters of business, and commendation, which in the case of THE TRUTH SEEKER fall into the department "Letters from Friends;" while the bulk of the paper is reserved almost entirely to the regular correspondents, such as Susan H. Wixon, Elmina, T. Winter, and others. Now while I heartily approve of most of the contributions from these Liberal veterans, I nevertheless meet with considerable from them which is of no particular interest or consequence, and which I am led to presume is inserted more for the satisfaction of the writers than for the good of the paper or its subscribers. I am not picking flaws in your management, Mr. Editor, but I am aiming right square at these regular—entirely too regular—correspondents, the "Alfred T.'s" of the Liberal press. A great many of your readers care nothing about writing for the paper, until occasionally a point is overlooked in some discussion which they deem of importance, and would like to suggest, and it adds a great deal to one's interest in a paper to know that it is open to a little suggestion of one's own now and then.

And now to prohibition. It seems to me this question hinges not upon the magnitude of its importance, nor the ease or difficulty of enforcing it, but rather upon the point as to whether it is proper and right to enact laws governing people's actions when they are injuring no one but themselvs. Do the advocates of prohibition claim that it is proper for majorities to enact and enforce all laws which such majorities believe to be for the general welfare? If so, then Sunday laws, Comstock deviltry, and the like are all right just so long as they happen to hav a majority to sustain them at the polls. But it will be claimed that a person by using intoxicating liquors excessivly injures others as well as himself—in fact, injures the whole community. But the Sunday law advocates assert the same thing with respect to Sabbath-breaking. Only the other day I heard a Christian complaining that California was disgraced in the eyes of the whole civilized world on account of its Infidelity. He seemed to be under the impression that the Sunday law, properly enforced, would make everybody here holy. He contended, in short, that an Infidel by the non-observance of the Sabbath not only injured himself but everybody, by the example he set, especially the rising generation. Now, Mr. Editor, I am decidedly opposed to Sunday laws, and all other laws tending to abridge the liberty of the individual to mind his own business without interruption. At the same time I am as heartily opposed to intemperance, prostitution, gambling, and everything else that injures the welfare of the human race, as any man living; but I can't help thinking that if we are justified in condemning and suppressing intemperance, etc., by force of law, we must giv the same liberty to the Christian to suppress Infidelity, provided he can obtain the requisit majority, because the Christian, presuming him to be honest about the matter, is aiming at the same object as we, i. e., the welfare of the human race, and he no more restricts the liberty of individuals than we would by enforcing prohibition. Not only this, but it would be also just as proper to stop the use of tobacco, tea, and coffee, intemperance in over-eating, and everything, in fact, that a majority of voters may deem detrimental to themselvs or others.

The conclusion we are forced to, then, is that laws must be confined to protecting people from injuries from others, and not from injuries from themselvs. It seems hard, indeed, to leave the evils of intemperance, prostitution, gambling, and the like, to the slow and gentle inroads of education and moral suasion. One can hardly help wishing them suppressed by almost any means, so plain is it that they are terribly injurious to humanity; but the same feeling is equally commendable in a Christian, even though in his ignorance he chooses Infidelity as the object of his wrath.

Yours for prohibition by safe, sure, and consistent means, COKE EWING.

Rio Vista, Cal.

Questions Proper to be Asked.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The St. Louis Christian Advocate of Dec. 27, 1882, has a long article headed, "Pay your Preacher Punctually." God Almighty commanded his disciples, "Go ye out unto all the ends of the earth, and preach my gospel unto every living creature, without money and without price." Whom must we obey, the divine St. Louis doctor, or the more respectable personage? Whose wrath is the more damaging, as a general thing? Whose remarks are the most valuable? Who shall decide when doctors disagree? We must hav another new revision. ROYAL.

Self-Appointed Critics.

From the Judge.

When the intelligence and good morals of the city of New York are represented by such men as the Brooklyn clerical gymnast, T. De Witt Talmage, who seems to hav a license to play the clown; the Rev. Howard Crosby, who assumes to hav a license giving him the right to interfere with everybody's business; and the notorious Anthony Comstock, who has a license permitting him to manufacture criminals, then the intelligence and good morals of the city of New York are, indeed, in a precarious condition. We hav recently had an exhibition of the influence which the persons here named exerted over two mayors of this metropolis. We hav nothing to say concerning the advisability of permitting the production of such a play as that proposed by Mr. Salmi Morse.

We doubt very much whether the "Passion Play" would do harm in this community, but are well aware that persons of strong religious belief might be shocked, and that those of superstitious natures might tremble if permission were given for its production. But without discussing the subject in its moral or religious aspect, we feel bound, in behalf of thousands of upright citizens, to protest against the appearance of Messrs. Talmage, Crosby, and Comstock as the representativs of the intelligence and good morals of the city of New York, for the reason that there are many gentlemen, church-members and non-church-members, in our midst who are better fitted to represent the intelligence and good morals of this city upon an occasion when the presence of such representativs is demanded. Mr. Talmage represents bigotry in all its fierceness and injustice, Mr. Crosby represents a prejudice that does not savor of the good work which a clergyman should perform, and Comstock represents "pure cussedness."

Mayor Grace and Mayor Edson were both informed by Messrs. Talmage, Crosby, and Comstock that the respectable element in this community is opposed to the "Passion Play," and, acting upon the information obtained from that precious trio, Mayors Grace and Edson, in their turn, declined to grant a license to Mr. Morse, and that gentleman has appealed to the courts. We care not whether Mr. Morse secures a license or whether the courts decline to order Mayor Edson to grant the license. Messrs. Talmage, Crosby, and Comstock hav insulted the intelligence and good morals of the people of this city by appearing as their representativs, and that fact we wish to put squarely upon the record.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. Macdonald, - - - - - Editor.
M. W. Bennett, - - - - - Publisher.
21 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing seven hundred square inches more reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

All Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders should be made payable to MARY W. BENNETT.

SATURDAY, - - - JANUARY 27, 1883.

A Waning and a Growing Power.

On another page we print copious extracts from Bishop McQuaid's paper in the North American Review. It presents some facts which will make Freethinkers rejoice, although, of course, due allowance must be made for Catholic prejudice and Romish exaggeration. Yet it has a very substantial basis of truth, further confirmed, since it was written, by the apostasy of Newton. The estimate of Beecher as the barometer of American Protestantism is likewise shown to be correct by the latest lecture of the Brooklyn preacher in this city, in which he accepted evolution as the record of the world's progress. That disbelief in the Christian religion is spreading fast and wide no one of any knowledge whatever denies. People are leaving the church by scores and hundreds and seeking the more truthful plain of science. In the cities especially the church presents curious anomalies. While one portion of the clergy are endeavoring to revive the blue laws and re-establish the inquisition, with fines and imprisonment for all who incur its displeasure, another—and the brainier portion—are fast becoming heretics. They are throwing doubt upon the Bible as a sacred book, discarding whole chapters and modifying others, rejecting inspiration for any portion of it, and otherwise treating it like a classic. Arguing from this, many hav said that the work of Liberalism is practically accomplished, but no greater mistake could be made. In the country the ministers are still fossilized in the barbaric faith of their fathers. They are still making life unhappy to the masses not yet emancipated; they are still forging chains and riveting fetters; their influence for evil is still unbounded. They are teaching falsehood and fighting with all their power against progression. They still think the universe, including hell, was made in six days; that Eve fell and dragged Adam with her; that the deluge was a historic freshet; that the tower of Babel would hav reached to heaven but for the providential confounding of tongues; that Abraham's faith was tested in the mountains; that Jacob saw a ladder let down from heaven; that the Ten Commandments were written by God; that Samson caught the foxes, and pulled the temple about his own ears; that Jonah was swallowed by a whale; that Jesus was born without a father, of a virgin, in a manger over which a star stopped in surprise; that Herod slaughtered all the little ones in the vain hope of hitting the right one; that he descended into hell to test the temperature, and was satisfied with three days' trial; that three are only one after all, if you look at it through spectacles of faith; that a son is as old as his father, and a little older, if anything; that an omniscient God didn't know that his creatures would be bad if they got the chance; that an omnipotent God was a little weaker than iron; and in that crowning infamy that an all-wise and all-good father would make a hell to burn eternally his erring children, and an incarnate fiend to superintend the roasting. And right in the cities where Beecher renounced Genesis and discarded this hell, where Newton flings away the Bible, and Adler has his Ethical Society; where the Liberal club holds forth weekly, where Spiritualists' meetings are many and well attended, there are events occurring almost daily that set the blood boiling in the veins of every true lover of liberty. The law that drove an Atheist from the witness chair in Brooklyn is not repealed; millions of dollars' worth of unremunerativ ecclesiastical property still goes untaxed; hundreds of thousands of dollars are still voted annually to church corporations; chaplains still draw pay from the people for opening our legislatures with unheard and unheeded prayers; sumptuary laws are enforced with tyrannical exactness; a code has been enacted that would hav done honor to any inquisitor of the seventeenth century, and is not only being enforced so far as the church can, but is being strengthened to resist all attempts at repeal; ecclesiastical societies are usurping the functions of our civil officers, and prosecuting and persecuting indiscriminately; Comstockism is neither dead nor dying. We hav gained nothing practical by these ministers renouncing their creed; they are only dilettante recruits who hav not yet shown a disposition to do away with any of these evils. The Protestant church is crowding the Infidels the harder because it feels its power waning, and making more strenuous exertions to steal from the people under the garb of religion.

It is the duty of Liberals to drive these dogmas into the sea, to relegate these stories to the fable books, to repeal these laws against Atheists, to force these churches to bear their share of the public burdens, to exclude these hypocrits from the legislatures, to repeal sumptuary laws and penal codes that conduce to crime, to abrogate the charters of all ecclesiastical societies that intermeddle with the enforcement of laws, and to kill Comstockism. Until these are accomplished there must be no rest on the part of Liberals. It is a matter of rejoicing that Protestantism is dying, but it must be remembered that dying struggles are the fiercest, and that nothing is gained by the death if the corpse not only clings to all it gained in life, but another and more rapacious monster is growing from its grave! The Catholic church is not dying; it is not even sleeping. It is but waiting to get its strength. Years ago we wrote what every keen observer saw—that the coming struggle is to be between Infidelity and Catholicism. There is no logical resting-place between Rome and Reason. The Protestants but halted at a half-way house. In setting forth again some will retrace their steps and return to the foot of the mountain, while others will climb the sunlit hights and from the pinnacle see all misty superstitions swept away. Let the Liberals already at the top help the climbers, but not forget to roll a stone occasionally at the cowards in retreat. It may go through their ranks and spread a little devastation in the army waiting in the mire below.

This very article shows the Catholics are arousing to the situation. Familiar as she is with death-beds of Protestants, she scents decay from afar. Like a vulture hovering near a dying beast, the Catholic church is trying to rob the corpse. That she would strangle Infidelity as well is patent to everyone. Her strength in the older countries which hav suffered for centuries from her cruel tyranny is fast waning. France is honeycombed with Freethought. All her holidays are on Sunday. When the French leave the Catholic church they do not stop at Protestantism, but, like Gambetta, become out-and-out Freethinkers. Italy has likewise thrown off the yoke, and the world was but recently treated to the spectacle of the pope being served with a tax notice like any other citizen of Rome. Spain is disrupted, disorganized, and a little tired of the exactions of the priests. Ireland is too poor to afford her much substantial help. It is in the United States that she will make her determined and desperate stand. By importation and domestic culture she is gathering around her a horde of uneducated, unreasoning men, thoroughly in her power and under her directions, and these men hav the ballot and can subvert our government at will if but numerically stronger. And this church considers herself "Christ's appointed pilot," and that without her guidance nothing but shipwreck is left. If this were so it would still be better than having her on board. It is more agreeable to be drowned than burnt to death. But her claims to pilot nations, in the face of her record, are brazen impudence. Every country in which she attained supremacy has gone to ruins. There is not to-day one prosperous nation ruled by the church. Every argument against Protestantism can be brought with tenfold force against Catholicism. The creeds formulated by Luther and imposed on his followers were inspired by the teachings of the church from which he had broken away. That coming generations should break away as he had done is but natural, and the Methodist preacher who said that "education, culture, and refinement" had killed his creed but gave utterance to undisputed truth. Methodism, like Catholicism, suffers much from culture, while education, thorough and scientific, will in time destroy not only all creeds and dogmas, but all systems of religion founded on such essentially false bases as is the Christian.

This breaking up of the Protestant church has been going on for years. In fact, the founder was also its destroyer. If it is right to think at all, to go part way in analyzing the Bible, it is right to go the whole way. If one verse is uninspired, the next, probably, is too. To-day the brightest, best, and bravest brains are Infidel. But we cannot mourn. On the contrary, we see in the church's decline nothing but good to the human race. In her downfall is seen the uprising of science, the supplanting of error by truth, of guess-work by facts, of faith by reason, of ignorance by knowledge; and it will be a glorious day when men and women are really free, and the great majority of the world does not cast itself upon its face before the idols of a barbaric superstition.

Protestantism holds the mediate position between the debasing superstitions of Romanism and the elevating principles of Freethought. In its creeds and ceremonies it clings to the former; by the stout defense of private interpretation of the Bible it paved the way for the latter. There is no logic in its position, and its followers must sooner or later take sides with these two eternally opposing forces—Romanism and Reason. Catholics are undoubtedly grieved that they do not get more recruits from this fast disbanding army. But their grief will avail them little. Just so sure as the right must triumph, so sure as the world progresses, and sunlight dispels darkness, so sure will science triumph over superstition. Between the upper and lower millstones will Protestantism be crushed, and then come the final struggle, as Bishop McQuaid sees and admits, between Infidelity and Catholicity. But the strength once possessed by this power can never be regained, and in this age of the world the conflict can hav but one ending. Fraud and fiction will be overthrown, and the institution which has so long tyrannized over men's minds and bodies will be trampled in dust. The nineteenth century and the United States are not the time and place to rehabilitate a religion whose grave-clothes were cut and fitted three hundred years ago.

Postmasters as Censors.

The beautiful workings of the Comstockian postal laws are known to most of our readers, but their practical infamy has never been more clearly shown than in a case that has just come to the surface, out in La Salle, Ill., where Mr. A. J. Reddick edits and publishes the Democrat, in whose columns he prints the local police reports, humorously and sensationally written. The town is blessed with the usual quantity of postmaster in the person of a Mr. Corbus, at one time a personal friend of the editor of the Democrat. Mr. Corbus is a Republican and Mr. Reddick is a Democrat, but until recently this made no difference in their feelings toward each other, and the postmaster would often help the editor by giving him points about matters which could be used advantageously in making a "racy" report for his paper.

But last fall Mr. Reddick opposed one of Mr. Corbus's friends in the political campaign and to such good purpose that not only this particular man but all the Republicans were defeated. And then the trouble began, and the cloven foot appeared. Constituting himself judge, jury, and complainant, the postmaster seized upon the offending Democrat and denied it the privileges of the mail. The reports of two police cases were declared obscene, and before Mr Reddick was even bound over for trial he was condemned and the offending issue suppressed. The reports were no worse than hundreds that appear every day in the papers, but the law makes the postmaster the judge, and he having a personal spite to gratify was nowise backward in condemning it.

Were it a mere personal squabble between two politicians, or a trial of an obscenity vender, it would hav no interest for the outside public. But there is a deeper significance to this case. It practically applies the laws in just the manner The Truth Seeker pointed out would be done, when these ecclesiastically-procured laws were under discussion years ago. They can be and are being used by the party in power to oppose and destroy their opponents. The least thing can be seized upon and declared obscene, for the word has as many meanings as the chameleon colors, and is more elastic than the conscience of a priest. Anything from Shakspere to a local paper, if looked at with true Christian bias, can be obstructed in its transmission through the mails by some petty despot who holds the office of postmaster. The law makes him an irresponsible censor, and even if his victim is cleared by the courts, the taint of obscenity clings to him and injures him for many years to come. This law has nothing whatever to do with postal business and should be taken from the statute books and flung in the faces of the despicable tyrants who procured its passage.

An Unprincipled Slanderer.

The Rev. Joseph Cook denounces Mr. H. S. Olcott's Theosophical Society as "a mere money-making affair." He says all the initiation fees are sent to the president, and he adds:

"It has taken up and made a hero of the publisher of a fifth-rate Infidel rag in New York. I was simply obliged to expose him. I was called upon to meet him in public discussion, but I would not allow the platform given me by reputable gentlemen to be soiled by the feet of Infidel jailbirds."

The "publisher" herein referred to is D. M. Bennett, late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER. The foregoing is from one of Cook's published lectures delivered since the death of Mr. Bennett. Joseph Cook has no spark of manhood nor any sense of justice in his make-up. From the crown of his head downward, from the soles of his feet upward, and from the circumference of his carcass inward, he is the most unprincipled blackguard that ever abused himself into an asylum or escaped when malice instead of reason had resumed control of his brain. He has placed himself in the pillory of disgrace to eat the bread and drink the water of scorn and contempt till death kindly relieves him of the life which he has devoted to making himself infamous.

The Monument Fund.

The following additional amounts hav been subscribed by friends to this worthy object. In the last acknowledgment in THE TRUTH SEEKER Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Hiller's subscription should hav been $5 instead of $1. We much regret the error:

Dr. H, L. Horton,	$5.00	C. B. Hawes,	$2.00
Mrs. Phoebe Patch,	1.00	M. E. Felton,	1.00
W. A. Dexter,	1.00	E. Rhim,	1.00
Phillip Wootton,	5.00	N. D. Goodell,	5.00
Nathaniel A. Myers,	1.00	Richard Matlack,	1.00
Wm. Black,	1.00	Mrs. Richard Matlach,	1.00
J. M. Ordway,	1.00	J. C. C. Kenrick,	5.00
C. C. Glenn,	1.00	J. Henrichs & Bro.,	1.00
Mrs. Wm. T. Minchen,	1.00	J. T. Dickens,	1.00
R. W. Farrelly,	1.00	Charles Knorr,	1.00
H. Chase,	.50	N. N. E. Wood, M.D.,	1.00
Richard Slusser,	1.00	J. P. Mendum,	1.00
A. V. Slusser,	1.00	L. DeWitt Griswold,	1.00
Peter Clark,	2.50	J. S. Verity,	1.00
John Musgrove,	1.00	Frank Rivers,	1.00
James C. Lehmer,	10.00	Dr. E. F. Beals,	1.00
A. F. Albright,	1.00	Mrs. M. A. E. Green,	1.00
John R. Kelso,	10.00	T. J. Andrews,	1.00
Abbie Knapp,	1.00	H. Jackson,	1.00
Mr. Knapp,	1.00	A. R. Stoneburner,	1.00
Byron Boardman,	1.00	James Allen,	1.00
L. G. Barnes,	1.00	W. H. Jordan,	1.00
Morgan E. Lewis,	1.00	B. F. Hyland,	5.00
James Campbell,	1.00	J. Irby Iles,	1.00
Charles Mayturn,	1.00	R. H. Love,	1.00
H. G. Anderson,	1.00	Annie Everest,	1.00
Geore Salter,	1.00	Noah Coler,	5.00
Judd Griswold,	1.00	A. J. Stough,	1.00
Mrs. E. Heddon,	1.00	Madden Burlingame,	1.00
B. F. Humphrey,	1.00	P. Hartman,	1.00
E. R. Shoemaker,	1.00	H. Cardwell,	1.00
H. L. Wright,	1.00	George Disbrow,	1.00
Isaac Alsbacher,	1.00	H. N. Prouty,	1.00
Wm. Holgate,	1.00	Henry Lawson,	5.00

Paine Celebration in New York.

We hope that every Liberal in and near this city will come to the meeting to be held on the one hundred and forty-sixth anniversary of the birth of Thomas Paine, at the German Masonic Temple, 220 East Fifteenth street, Sunday evening, January 28th. Although the 29th is his natal day, it is deemed best to hold the meeting on Sunday to accommodate many who could not attend so conveniently on Monday. That the occasion will be worthily celebrated is assured by the list of speakers engaged, among whom will be T. B. Wakeman, Wilson McDonald, S. P. Putnam, S. P. Andrews, Courtlandt Palmer, and Louis Post.

A collection will be taken to defray expenses of the hall, etc., but the admission will be free.

Every admirer of the life and genius of Paine should not fail to attend, and thus aid in rescuing from Christian calumny the name of one who should share at least equally with Washington the glory of establishing this splendid republic. If the 22d of February is kept as a national holiday, so should the 29th of January. New York is the largest city of our country. Let the celebration be in keeping with the city.

"THE Bible," says Dr. Collyer, "is like a table with fourteen sides." Everybody can get a seat. "From it the Quaker gets his quietness, the Calvinist his brimstone, the Salvation Army the inspiration for their turmoil in the street. It was the Bible that brought the Puritans over here, and it was the Bible that backed them in their persecutions of the Quakers, the Baptists, and the witches." And Mr. Collyer forgot to say how it was that such a many-sided book could be the sole literary product of one unchangeable and unchanging deity. Perhaps he don't believe it, for when he finds a man who can only look at it with Calvin's eyes, he says he tells him to let it alone. This would hav been heresy twenty years ago.

THE Salvation Army at Geneva, Switzerland, is not meeting with either a cordial reception or marked success in making converts. A notice which its captain distributed on the streets read as follows: "The Salvation Army will wage its first battle against Satan in Geneva to-night." The hosts of Satan, in the form of small boys, repelled the attack by turning out in large numbers and making it impossible for the speakers to be heard. The queer ways of the army excite great curiosity in the minds of the people of Geneva, and the public seems to frown upon the whole movement.

If any of the friends of THE TRUTH SEEKER know of any Liberals who do not now take the paper, but who might do so if it was brought to their attention, will send the names of such to us we will forward sample copies to them and feel grateful to the senders. We want to see the list grow.

The Donation Party, the Kiss, and their Effects.

Next to staying the alarming spread of modern Infidelity, the question which of late most disturbs the Advocate is the habit of donation parties which the Christian world has fallen into, and the concomitant practices of hugging and kissing which go along with them. A correspondent of that paper writes to know if the thing is proper in the sight of heaven, and calculated to puncture with a thrill of joy the infinit viscera of omnipotence. This question the editor, the Rev. J. M. Buckley, D.D., with the able assistance of the Rev. W. H. De Puy, answers in the negativ. The fundamental postulate of the reverend editors is that the donation party is in itself an evil, and should be resorted to only in cases of the direst necessity. They mention an instance where a brother received 113 pumpkins and a bucket of dried apples, estimated by the donor to be worth $6.00, and which the minister was obliged to count on his salary. As man cannot liv by dried apples and pumpkins alone, the foregoing editors regard this as highly unjust.

Having thus shown the vicious nature of the donation party, they next address themselvs to the task of throwing light on the subject of hugging and kissing. Owing to the "indiscriminate mixing of the sexes" which it brings about, it is considered nearly, if not quite, as bad as dancing; and only the elevating influence of the pastor and his wife, and the superior piety of the members present, can prevent its having a lowering effect upon the neighborhood. It is further set forth that unless the parties who do the kissing afterward repent and with a contrite heart ask pardon of their pastor and their creator, the beneficiary is not justified, in the opinion of the Advocate, in receiving the profits of the party, in case such profits occur. This decision of the Advocate will hav great weight in mitigating the evil.

But there is another side to this subject besides that considered by the previous writers. The occurrences at a donation party in a New Hampshire town constitute a case in point. The generous members of the Unitarian society had assembled at the parsonage on one of the occasions of which mention is made, and the center-table fairly shrieked beneath the combined weight of their unsparing contributions. The cider-mug had gone around—and returned empty—several times, and social conversation was indulged in, when a young man and woman who had already thought somewhat of marrying each other, in a fitting moment withdrew to an adjoining and empty room, where their inclinations led them to indulge in some casual osculatory exercise. Scarcely had the first smack been accomplished when they heard the sound of confusion in the room which they had just quitted; and, upon returning, were surprised to remark that the company had disappeared, with the exception of a retired warrior, who was visible seated on the projecting end of a floor timber, entirely isolated from the rest of the society, who upon closer examination were found to hav descended into the cellar, carrying the floor with them, one end of which, dropping lower than the other, had allowed the visitors to slide gently down its sloping surface, an indiscriminate mixing of the sexes being one of the results. A package of silverware which was on the center-table when the descent began found its way unaccountably into the pocket of a first deacon, and ten pounds of dried apples were discovered to be strung like beads about the neck of the pastor as he arose from the heap of brothers and sisters which had collected on the cellar bottom. The amorous couple stood horror-stricken in the doorway and looked with dismay upon the lowering effects which kissing at a donation party had apparently brought about.

It is not designed to giv a detailed description of the scene which followed, nor even to explain how the ostracized warrior recovered his standing with the rest of the community. The matter might be enlarged upon, but it is merely desired to bring this question to the attention of the Advocate: Was the inclination to kiss a God-given impulse implanted in their hearts which led this young couple to leave the room that the bottom fell out of so suddenly, and thus escape the exposure of male and female life and limbs which attended it; or was the consummation of their desire the cause of the disaster which immediately followed? It is the mental labor in the solution of questions like this that has so exhausted the intellectual resources of ministers and editors of religious papers as to giv the impression that they are mentally inferior to other people; but the credit of having solved them is one of the most gratifying rewards of a Christian life.

THERE are many patrons on the list a long way in arrears. To such we would remark with considerable urgency that it will be a fitting and graceful thing for them to square up the accounts. We feel sure that no one wants to defraud THE TRUTH SEEKER out of its just dues, but many appear to hav forgotten about the matter. It is a very unpleasant duty to hav to remove names on account of delinquency, and it is hoped that none will force us to this extremity.

COME to the Paine celebration on Sunday night.

A Note from Mr. Griswold.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: To me this thought has just suggested itself, which I think is a noble one, and will heartily meet the approbation of all live, progressiv, reverential Liberals: to publish in neat pamphlet form the obituary and obsequies of the late D. M. Bennett, the same to be headed by his likeness in deep mourning, all to be an exact copy of that published in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Dec. 16th.

His birth, career, influence, founding THE TRUTH SEEKER, persecutions, conviction, and imprisonment, illness and death, are too sacred not to preserve in some such way as herein suggested. Though myself well acquainted with these memoirs, I know there are thousands of good Liberals who are not. It seems to me that every Liberal who has ever heard or read of this great reformer of the nineteenth century would certainly desire something of this nature. I was very much gratified to see and read so grand an instrument in the paper which he founded, portraying so nobly his manly character, his life, his career, his influence in behalf of a progressiv constituency. I read and re-read it, although regretting greatly that the sad occasion necessitated its chronicling. If this thought has not already been introduced either by yourself or some other one of the hero's admirers, I hope it will be brought about at your earliest convenience. I think the pamphlet would sell rapidly among Liberals, and should be published in good form for preservation. I hope my proposition will not be considered made from mercenary motivs, but for the sake of commemorating the life of the great and good Mr. Bennett.

L. DEWITT GRISWOLD.

Auburn, N. Y., Jan. 20, 1883.

The suggestion of Mr. Griswold has been anticipated by the fact that all this will appear as an addendum to the fourth volume of Mr. Bennett's travels around the world, to which Mr. Griswold was an early subscriber. The book is in preparation and will be completed at as early a date as possible. We thank him heartily, however, for the interest shown, and should hav done what he suggests ere this but for this better way of preserving the record.—ED. T. S.

Selections.

The Decay of Protestantism.

From the North American Review.

Unbelief is spreading in the world, causing great unrest. The life to come and man's relation to it engage his thoughts and excite his hopes or his fears. The natural, the material, the present, are around him, and ever at hand; they arrest his attention and claim his time. The supernatural, the spiritual, the future, are far off, are not seen, and so are relegated to another time—to the next world.

Protestantism, taking its rise in the beginning of the sixteenth century, began by rejecting the teaching authority, and substituting therefore the right of each individual to judge and choose in all matters of religious faith and morals. Private interpretation of the scriptures, without note or comment, without guide or limit, became the cardinal tenet of Protestantism—its very essence. By it Protestantism was to liv or die. In leaving the Catholic church it carried along many of the old points of doctrinal belief, and some of the familiar and cherished religious observances. But when it thus left the Catholic communion, it was much like a mariner going out to sea in a ship without a rudder, who, when the storm arises, casts out one bit of cargo after another, in the vain hope of saving the sea-tossed and foundering vessel. Protestantism went out to sea without Christ's appointed pilot, and has been discharging cargo ever since to escape shipwreck. Now that there is little left to throw overboard, above all wrangling and contention the cry of distress is heard, that danger is imminent and disaster inevitable. In all its multitudinal forms Protestantism is decaying—is dying.

On all sides this confession is heard. It comes from the review and the newspaper; from the pulpit and the platform; from friend and foe alike.

So long ago as 1847, Brownson wrote in his "Review:" "That Protestantism in most countries, especially in this country, is developing into Infidelity, irreligion, naturism, rejecting and losing even all reminiscences of grace, is too obvious and too well known to be denied, or to demand any proof." The Westminster Review, in its July number of this year, sweeps the whole body of believers in the supernatural away from the world of to-day, leaving only a few fossilized fanatics, succinctly cognizable as knaves or fools. It says:

"The result is that intelligent men cannot accept as true the current forms of theology, nor yet can honest men day after day act the falsehood of apparently countenancing opinions which in their hearts they know to be false. Those who are thus left as the exponents of the popular faith are those so intellectually dull that they cannot master the logical effect of recent criticism, and are unable to realize the spirit of the age in which they liv; or they are those whose moral susceptibilities are so blunt that they perceive no moral incongruity in the advocacy of opinions they do not hold in the ordinary and conventional sense. But a class which is intellectually dull or morally blunt cannot long retain ascendancy over the public mind; and that process of deterioration in the character and influence of the clergy, which during the last three centuries has materially compromised their position, seems likely to result in the total extinction of all respect for the office and services of the class."

These are, it may be alleged, unfriendly witnesses. Their testimony would avail little if it were not corroborated by mournful avowals within the fold.

The purport of this paper is to show by facts and figures, and by the admissions of sincere and sorrowing friends, that Protestantism as a religious organization is decaying. This decay is found in:

1st. Church creeds.

2d. Church government and ministry.

3d. Church membership and attendance at church worship or services.

Some of the causes which hav led to this decay will then be indicated.

First. There is decay in church creeds. At the outbreak of the sixteenth century schism, Luther, Calvin, Zwingle, and their associates formulated creeds which they imposed on their followers, and sought to impose on others. Each new sect, as it broke away from its parent sect, announced its special creed, made up of what it brought away, headed by its peculiar and distinguishing doctrin justifying the separation and an independent organization. The multiplication of these sects was so rapid, and the dissensions among them so bitter, that all pretense of unity and Christian comity ceased. Before Protestantism had celebrated its first centennial, a refuge in Deism as a relief from unending disputes and uncertainties seemed the only alternativ. This threatened lapse into Deism alarmed the ablest and most earnest of the leaders in the Protestant ranks. From Deism to Atheism was but a question of time. It was within this first century that Protestantism made all its gains. Steadily since, in spite of state protection, the smiles of wealth and power, its easy facility in yielding to the whims, the demands, the social exigencies of its adherents, it has lost ground. From time to time the need of unity was felt. Lopping off of doctrins, modifications in church creeds and disciplin, failed to bring it about. At last an agreement to disagree was offered distracted minds in the delusory hope of peace. The various sects hav continued to disagree, to discard old points of belief, to cast away the substance of Christian doctrins, while still retaining phrases and forms, until now little remains of the original teachings of the fathers of Protestantism. Although Episcopalians still profess to stand by the Thirty-nine Articles and the prayer-book, the utmost latitude is allowed in interpreting their meaning. Nineteenth century Presbyterians of all schools combined could not produce a disciple acceptable to John Knox. The old Puritans of New England would never recognize as brethren the Congregationalists of to-day. It is becoming the fashion to eschew doctrin, and to philosophize rhetorically on conduct. According to Rev. Mr. Pullman, as reported in the New York Herald, even this minimized creed is not believed in. He says:

"Another great drawback to effectiv Christian work is in the clergy itself. This body, which was once so powerful for good, finds itself paralyzed, and the secret is that the ministers hav nearly all lost belief in the religion they find it necessary to profess. They preach a creed openly, but secretly their souls are honeycombed with doubt, and thus they hav to a great extent become more reasoners, arguers, and platform lecturers."

Whatever else may be said of Henry Ward Beecher, it can be safely admitted that he interprets correctly the progress and aims of American religious thought as developed day by day. His career at Plymouth church shows a gradual curtailment of doctrinal teachings, and an emasculating of others to harmonize with the notions of his hearers. He is something of a barometer in American Protestantism. Lately he withdrew from a Congregationalist organization, that its orthodoxy might not be disturbed by his advancement in religious teachings—this advancement consisting in a further pruning of his church creed. Whereupon the Rev. Dr. Edwards A. Park, a leading theologian among the Congregationalists, admitted, at a meeting of ministers of his denomination, according to the New York Times of Nov. 6th, "that Congregationalism is no longer what it once was, and that it ministers show a tendency to discard one doctrin after another." For his part, he would admit no candidate to the ministry who did not make profession of a belief in the atonement, in eternal punishment for the wicked, and in the scriptures as a perfectly trustworthy religious guide.

Beecher, seemingly disgusted with all the schools of Protestant theology, in a letter to a friend writes: "But, wherever I may go, I am determined, before I die, to find a theology which will pass muster at Bangor, at Andover, at Cambrige, at New Haven, at Princeton, at Alleghany, at Oberlin, at Chicago, and at Park street—then I shall willingly die." In other words, a search after a theology in which all the schools of American Protestantism are in accord is a hopeless task.

The writer of "Certain Dangerous Tendencies in American Life," published by the Riverside Press, Cambridge, displays intimate knowledge of the American Protestant public, and of their present condition of religious thought. Of those who still retain belief in their church creed, he remarks, "they are too few to regenerate the American church, though their influence is highly valuable in resisting some of the evil tendencies of the age. Most of them are old, and they hav few successors among the younger people, ... and their number and strength diminish from year to year." Of another very large class he says: "Church work is for them, in all its forms, a kind of sacred amusement. Public worship, with its pulpit oratory and modern church music, is an esthetic entertainment. They hav developed a religion which is not religious. . . . . They do not believe the creeds which they subscribe when they join the church, and generally make no secret afterward of their doubt or disbelief respecting various fundamental doctrins of Christianity. Their ministers," he writes, "are men of intelligence and of considerable culture. They believe even less than their people of the doctrins of their creeds."

Here I might rest, but, as in so serious a question the authority of representativs of religious creeds should be adduced, as well as that of individuals, I cite the Pan-Presbyterian Congress that met in Edinburgh, Scotland, July 4, 1877. It was composed of over three hundred delegates from all the divisions and subdivisions of Presbyterianism in the world. To bring these discordant sects of a sect together at all, it was necessary to determin in advance that dogmatic questions should not be mooted. The official organizers of the council shut out doctrinal discussion by the following program: "To consider questions of general interest to Presbyterians; to strengthen and protect weak and persecuted churches; to explain and extend the Presbyterian system; and to discuss subjects of church work—evangelization, use of the press, colportage, suppression of intemperance, observance of the Sabbath, systematic beneficence, and the suppression of Romanism and Infidelity." The canny Scots must hav enjoyed the bit of humor thrown in at the close of this bill of entertainment. The delegates to the convention carefully avoided doctrinal subjects and the condemnation of heresies. The zealous but inexperienced minister that introduced dogmatic topics was promptly quieted. Not even in religious worship could these three hundred delegates come together as one. Only one hundred and thirty partook of the "Lord's Supper," on the one day of the congress appointed for a general act of worship. When teachers abdicate their office, is it any wonder that pupils lose confidence in them and pass from under their influence? The transition to doubt and negation, to indifferentism and Infidelity, to Rationalism and Atheism, becomes logical and certain.

Second. Protestantism is decaying in church government and ministry. It will be conceded that no society or corporate organization can liv that has not the power and the will to enforce disciplin and coerce refractory members—that cannot compel obedience to its rules on the part of all who choose to remain within its body. How is it with Protestant churches?

The Methodist denomination, once so strong in church government and disciplin, is weakening under the influence of wealth and desire for the good things of the world. Its most effectiv power was found in ministerial itinerancy. A strong and activ party is forming within the bosom of Methodism, to do away with the periodical removal of its ministers. This growing feeling is so far deferred to that popular ministers are assigned to large towns, and when the round of rich churches has been run in one conference they are transferred to another.

No Protestant denomination holds more tenaciously to the forms of authority than the Episcopal church, and none fails more lamentably in its exercise. Its right to excommunicate those who withdraw from its body is exercised only when they hav openly turned their backs on Episcopalianism and joined another church. While the name of fellowship is kept up, they may belong to the broad church, the high church, or the low church; their teachings may be in favor of baptismal regeneration, or against it; in favor of the "real presence," or against it; in favor of auricular confession, or against it. The church governmental agency for self-protection seems powerless. When a congregation is largely composed of advanced thinkers, their chosen minister preaches according to the views of his employers. Whatever authority is in the church to control the abuse is inoperativ. Ritualist and cultured Rationalist are at home and in peace within the same fold.

. . . . . .

Third. Protestantism shows decay in church membership, and in attendance at religious services. Proof of this assertion flows in from many sources. These proofs are startling and conclusiv. They are found in the admissions of Protestant clergymen, in official documents, and in the statistics gathered by impartial secular newspapers. Empty pews tell the tale Sunday after Sunday. Churches are lavishly furnished and made cosily snug, the music is fascinating and artistic, the social standing of the members is above reproach, but the favorite minister, who is most acceptable on every other score, fails to draw and fill the pews. The attendance is beggarly in spite of the opulent membership, except on a few special occasions when piety takes a start, or the religious inducements are unusually seductiv.

Within a few years statistics carefully collected amply confirm the statement that church membership and attendance are falling off. According to the "Christian Alliance," of the 1,100,000 inhabitants of Berlin only 30,000 go to church. Deduct the Catholics from this number, and the remainder discloses a woful condition of religious life. Yet the state religion in Berlin has many aids to growth. It is well paid; it is the religion of the court and of the aristocracy; it has no embarrassing load of dogma to carry, and conforms readily to the advanced and progressiv theories of the day; secret societies do not plot against it. When the government dispensed with the observance of religious rites on the part of its Protestant subjects, these dispensed with the services of ministers of religion at baptisms, marriages, and funerals. American clergymen visiting the centers of European Protestantism return with dismal accounts of its decay.

In England and Wales statistics of church attendance hav been gathered by secular newspapers in about seventy cities and towns. These statistics hav been made in the interests of Nonconformists, as against the Established church. They show that the latter is steadily decreasing, with all its advantages of wealth, an educated ministry, and the prestige of respectability. They also demonstrate that a majority of the people spend their Sunday elsewhere than in church.

The object of this paper is, however, chiefly with the condition of religion in this country. Here, also, secular papers hav at times of dearth of general news, busied themselvs and interested their readers with accounts of the growth or decline of the churches in their respectiv localities. Some statistics hav been based on church membership; others on church attendance. The Rev. Dr. Rylance, of the Episcopal church, thinks the former very misleading, as he said to a New York Times reporter: "I am sorry to say that in nearly all church returns there is much dead wood. Often there are names on the books that can be duplicated from grave-stones, especially in large organizations. But this is nothing compared to the number who continue to figure on the roll, and who hav dropped away through indifference or other causes."

On April 16, 1882, the Boston Advertiser caused a census to be taken by its reporters of attendance on divine worship at the churches in that city, obtaining the following result: In 160 Protestant churches, 75,572 worshipers were counted; and in 30 Catholic churches, 49,337. Catholics do not receive the credit to which they are entitled, as this count was made in some instances at only one mass. A stronger spirit of faith and piety is needed to attend service at six o'clock in the morning than at ten. Besides, Boston is only at the beginning of the good work of establishing Catholic church schools.

On a Sunday in January, 1881, canvassers counted in 131 non-Catholic churches of Philadelphia, 42,140 heads, and in 19 Catholic churches, 82,653. The accuracy af this count having been called in question, the Philadelphia Times sent its reporter on a Sunday of March in the same year, who found in 56 non-Catholic churches, 19,946 attendants, and in 9 Catholic churches, 38,019. Though but a partial report, it verified the first enumeration.

The 40 non-Catholic churches of New Haven showed a less number of worshipers on a Sunday in April, 1881, than its 5 Catholic churches.

St. Louis gave 34,109 at 104 non-Catholic churches, and 85,171 at 34 Catholic churches.

A count of church attendance made by the Rochester Morning Herald on Sunday morning, Nov. 26, 1882, gave these figures: At non-Catholic services, 10,784 were present; at the mass in 11 Catholic churches, 18,913 worshiped. The non-Catholic attendants were distributed as follows: 1,397 were in 8 Protestant Episcopal churches; 2,633 in 11 Presbyterian; 1,271 in 5 Baptist; 1,248 in 7 Methodist Episcopal; 3,311 in 11 German Protestant; 924 in 8 miscellaneous churches.

In Baltimore a secular paper adopted another plan on which to form an estimate of the religion or irreligion among its people. It gathered statistics of church membership. It consulted the latest official documents and submitted the figures to the inspection and correction of prominent clergymen. The totals gave 177,689 in a population of 340,000, distributed as follows: 110,000 Catholics; 23,642 Methodists, of 10 different sects; 11,474 Lutherans; 8,561 Episcopal Protestants; 6,887 Baptists; 4,995 Presbyterians, of three subdivisions; 4,109 of the Reformed church; 1,003 Friends; 2,010 scattered among seven other denominations. The editor remarks that religious indifference is chiefly found among the large evangelical churches of the nativ Americans.

The most exhaustiv study of this kind was made by the New York Times in the summer and autumn of last year. Its canvassers explored New York city, Brooklyn, and the surrounding country. It placed before its readers statistics of church membership, of church Sunday-schools, and of church charitable contributions. A mine of wealth in facts and figures on these subjects is opened to interested seekers after this kind of knowledge. The reporters of the Times, in continuance of their labors, interviewed prominent clergymen to learn what they thought of the figures thus displayed before the community. There was no getting around these figures; nor could an honest mind ignore their lesson. They demonstrated that growth in the Protestant sects kept no pace with increase of population in the cities of New York and Brooklyn. Want of space necessitates the briefest summary. The non-Catholic population of New York city in 1882 is estimated at 800,000. The total membership of all the non-Catholic churches, including synagogs and miscellaneous, was 97,497. Brooklyn held its own better, for out of an estimated non-Catholic population of 390,000, it had 69,000 church-members. A comparison is made between 1845 and 1882, showing that while the population of New York has increased over 300 per cent the percentage of increase in church membership has been startlingly small. When the Rev. Dr. Curry, of the Methodists, was called on by a reporter of the New York Star, he admitted the lesson of the figures, but acknowledged his inability to explain the falling off of Methodism. A brother Methodist preacher gave his solution of the problem that "education, culture, and refinment hav killed them (Methodist preachers) as preachers of the gospel." Rev. Dr. Hall is hopeful, in spite of empty pews in other churches than his own, but does not believe in spasmodic efforts and revivals. Rev. Dr. MacArthur, says, "While things are not so bad as some pastors think, they are bad enough."

The religion of the future, the religion of nature, the scientific religion, into which all Protestantism is rapidly lapsing, having eliminated supernatural truths from its creeds, where it has not blotted out creeds altogether, has only polite phrases with which to designate a condition of religious life more correctly characterized as indifferentism, irreligion, Infidelity, Atheism. Into this avowed Atheism largely increasing numbers of Protestants are passing.

Much more might be said. Let this suffice. It may be asked, Do Catholics rejoice at the evident decline of Protestant sects? If Protestants drew nearer to the one true fold as they forsake their own pastures, Catholics would indeed be glad, and, with happy hearts, giv thanks to God, through whom alone such a mercy can come, and welcome them to peace of mind and refreshments of soul. But as the decay of Protestantism is a transition from church organizations, that held some of the great truths of salvation and administered baptism, to the ranks of indifferentism and Infidelity, Catholics grieve. The late Rev. Dr. Spring, of the Old Brick Church of New York City, publicly announced his preference for the Infidelity of Voltaire over the teachings of Catholicity. His co-religionists are heirs of his preference with a vengeance.

Yet Americans are not Infidels of the stamp of the continental European Infidels. These glory in their Infidelity, and hav no shame in blaspheming God, whom they seem to hate. When Americans doubt and deny they do so with regret. Our "Bob Ingersolls" are not numerous, while the crowd of those willing to pay to hear his revilings of sacred truths is great.

Most commendable indeed are the earnestness, the zealous work, aud the large generosity of many non-Catholic church people in the Mnited States. Catholics believe that their efforts are misdirected, yet giv them credit for well-intentioned sacrifices for religion, for charity, and the religious education of the wealthier members of their churches. Catholics appreciate the many good words spoken in the past by able non-Catholics, in favor of the inspiration of the scriptures, of a belief in God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; in the incarnation and redemption, in eternal rewards and punishments, and in other truths. They sincerely regret that, in the impending struggle between Infidelity and Catholicity, their aid shall be wanting, and regret yet more that so many who were once members of evangelical church organizations shall be seen in the ranks, not of indifferentism, but of open and avowed Atheism. B. J. McQuaid.

Mind Analyzed.

The subject of mind is one which agitates the religious world more at present than that of "geology" ever did. Theologians especially are making many efforts to ascertain its origin, nature, and durability. "If man die, shall he liv again?" is a question, the solution of which, by thousands, is of vast importance. I, for one, for many years hav been reading the fruits of the investigations of scientists, theologians, Spiritualists, and others, but as yet I am not much the wiser for all the metaphysical speculativ philosophy introduced as evidence of the mind's existence or continuance beyond the extinction of physical life.

Having learned something of the connections and relations existing between the several parts of a clock and the time indicated upon the dial in early life, and in my riper age devoting several years to the study of anthropology (the science of mind and organic matter united), I hav been able with these two simple branches of science to solve the problem of life and death, at least to my own entire satisfaction. None are able to determin which one of the several parts of a clock is the primary cause of the measurement of time. All are absolutely necessary; break the connection anywhere we please, and time ceases to be measured. Each part must perform its own labor, working in harmony with the movement of every other part.

I am satisfied that mind is the result of twenty-one distinct, yet harmoniously blended, intellectual faculties. Each has a distinct office to perform; and when any number of them are in exercise, performing their delightful services, they produce what is termed mind. The great diversity of degrees of strength of mind in different individuals is, in part, owing to the fact that only a certain number of faculties are absolutely required in any one of the diversified pursuits of life.

The greater the number in exercise by any one person, the greater his versatility. If one or two only are exercised in any one pursuit for a great length of time they will, in their labor, absorb the vitality of neglected ones, and subject the individual to a single vocation. Again, the great diversified intrinsic strength existing between the intellectual faculties, as well as the importance of the work they severally perform, is another principle producing degrees of strength; but most of all, the amount of time and an application of a goodly number in a valuable cause is nature's method of not only increasing strength, but breadth and comprehensivness.

As this subject of mind and its connections with the propensities and passions of man's animal nature and the influence exerted by the fine moral sentiments cannot fully be amplified in one article, I shall confine myself in this to an analytic investigation of nature and primary use of each intellectual faculty, proving conclusivly to my own mind that a physical world and physical things only are calculated to satisfy their nativ desire.

The first and great center, around which lesser intellectual lights revolve, is our power and love of reflection—a desire to investigate, to inquire into, and to know the chain of causes of all things presented by the fine physical senses for its decision. The portion of brain substance producing this faculty we name "Causality;" it not only sees how to reason, but has a corresponding desire and love in its pursuits, and by a judicious exercise attains a degree of strength, breadth, depth, and comprehensivness far too great for the appreciation and respect of ordinary minds.

Comparison sees how and loves to trace manifestations to first principles—will study natural laws, and strives to liv in obedience to their demands.

Human Nature sees character, loves to study motivs, feelings, passions, propensities of all organic matter, and is seldom deceived.

Imitation sees a copy or pattern and loves to imitate; will be in harmony with public sentiment, will often sacrifice manhood by doing as others do and saying what others say; will follow fashions, however foolish.

Agreeableness sees the spirit and emotions of others, and delights in conformation; pleasing to the mind and senses of others.

Construction sees the connections and relations existing in all mechanism, and loves to produce these connections; and, if acquisitivness be small and benevolence activ, will sacrifice much in its gratification.

Ideality sees and delights in the cultivation of purity of feeling, perfection of character, refinement, taste and beauty in art, and will, if not controled by reason, spend much of its time in the perusal of fanciful literature.

Sublimity sees the lofty and sublime in nature, art, and literature, and loves to cultivate personal grandeur, and is never happy except when gorgeously clothed.

Form sees shapes and delights to trace them, and in proportion to the cultivated strength of the higher faculties will retain, mentally, the formation of everything presented by the sense of physical sight.

Size sees the hight, depth, breadth, and width of physical things, and loves survey; few only cultivate.

Weight sees how and enjoys reducing quantities to pounds and ounces; will balance well, and loves to elevate itself from the earth; by exercise marvelous feats are performed.

Color sees beauty in colors, and delights in blending them; many are color blind.

Time sees time as it passes, and loves to beat or measure time; will be in time, speak in time, and despise being out of time.

Tune sees and appreciates harmony in sounds, and enjoys producing them; will cultivate voice and love music; much real pleasure is derived in this "vale of tears" in exercising this semi-intellectual faculty.

Language delights in the use of words and loves to elect them; will express ideas clearly, and if activ, and the reflectiv or causality be feeble, the individual will be considered by the more wise as having "more mouth than ears"—an unreasonable verbosity.

Calculation sees how, delights in the computation of numbers; will spend much time in all kinds of games requiring mental calculation, such as cards, chess, checkers, and others unnamed.

Locality sees the position physical things occupy, and enjoys physical geography; notices points of compass, is not easily lost.

Eventuality sees past events and delights in the rehearsal; if language is full and the restraining influences feeble, will consume much valuable time relating to others the particulars of life.

Order sees the position physical things should occupy, and delights in producing order; is annoyed at disorder, discord, clamor, noise, and confusion.

Mirthfulness sees the ludicrous, comical, and clownish, and loves to produce fun; its nativ expression is laughter; its exercise is pure, harmless, and healthful, when controled by reason.

Individuality sees all things singly and loves to individualize. This mental eye sees the impressions made upon the five physical senses of all things in the physical world. If individuality be small, the whole intellectual man is correspondingly beclouded and feeble.

With several years of careful observation, mingling in all grades of society, in most of the states of the Union; delineating the original qualities and diversified developments of fifteen thousand different subjects, I hav become thoroughly satisfied that each of the twenty-one intellectual faculties is dependent upon a particular portion of brain substance corresponding in size and quality with the degree of tone and quickness of mental sight enjoyed by each individual, and cannot exist independent of the numerous harmoniously-blended connections existing with life-forces. Sever the union at which point we choose, sensation, consciousness, and thought cease. "There is no more device, wisdom, or knowledge."

I said at the commencement of this article none was able to determin which one of the several parts of a clock is the first principle producing indication of time upon the dial. Well, for the pleasure of any who may feel an interest in this science, I would say the primary principle cannot be found in the clock. The first principle of mind does not exist in man.

If any desire assistance in the labor of tracing these causes to the first cause, and believe me competent to render the desired aid, I am at their service.

Osceola, Iowa, Dec. 3, 282 N.E. L. M. Hastings.

Letters from Friends.

WEALAKA, I. T., Jan. 10, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: My paper tells me that Brother Bennett is dead. He was "the noblest Roman of them all;" a true friend to the working class. Giv my kind regards and sympathy to Mrs. Bennett and all the friends. Yours truly, WM. J. ROSENKRANS.

INNERKIP, ONT., CAN., Jan. 6, 1883.

The old hero has gone, but his mantle falls upon a host, who will go forward to victory. When I look back to his treatment by Comstock and Cook I conclude there is no use of saying there is no devil. More contemptible devils than these men do not exist. F. MALCOLM.

WYOMING, IOWA, Jan. 1, E.M. 283.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed I send $1 for the Bennett Monument Fund.

What a loss to the Liberal cause to lose our dear Brother Bennett. I commenced taking THE TRUTH SEEKER when it started, and hav taken it ever since. I am glad it is going right along, and hope the Liberals will help it along better than ever before. I sympathize with Mrs. Bennett in her great bereavement. ABNER KIMBALL.

RIGDON, IND., Dec. 28, 1882.

MRS. D. M. BENNETT: Language is inadequate to express my sorrow on hearing of the death of Brother Bennett. I deeply sympathize with you in your sad bereavement.

Inclosed please find $2, for which send me the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World," and send THE TRUTH SEEKER to Jno. Burzenderg, Rigdon, Ind. Yours truly, L. R. WEBB.

P.S.—Put me down for $5 to the Bennett Monument Fund, and the "V" will be forthcoming whenever wanted. L. R. W.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been reading your paper, THE TRUTH SEEKER, for some few weeks, and hav had my eyes opened pretty wide, I can assure you. Reared as I hav been from my youth in the folds of prejudice and bigotry, pinning my faith, as has been said, on the coat-sleeve of another, you may know that when I came to look at matters in the light of reason and common sense it opened a new world to me, as it were. I now want to subscribe for THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I also send for a few books, and will send for more as soon as I read those. Thanking you for sample copy, and wishing you great success, I am, Yours truly. FRANK LACLAIR.

AURORA, O., Dec. 23, 282.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me to say that I do not know where there could hav been a greater loss in the Liberal ranks than in the death of D. M. Bennett. Mr. Bennett desired to liv many years yet, and for the purpose of fighting that curse of curses, namely, Christianity. In remembrance of D. M. Bennett, I would say—

He was brave, truthful, patriotic, and sublime;
He should be honored by the present and future of mankind.
Life, love, liberty, three words to him sublime;
Justice, Truth, and Charity found within him human kind.

Respectfully always in remembrance of the brave,
B. O. FENTON.

EAU CLAIRE, WIS., Dec. 30, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: You may put me down for $5 for the Bennett Monument Fund. I never was more surprised than when I read the death of Mr. Bennett. I entertained strong hopes of seeing him this winter, and hear him lecture, but, alas! I shall never hear him. It is a pity that he could not hav lived five years longer, so his friends could hav done him more honor; and, as Dr. Foote said some time ago, we would hav sent him to Congress. When reading his death and funeral oration it brought tears to my eyes several times. I will close by saying that I fully indorse the resolution of the Bennett League. Hoping that THE TRUTH SEEKER may long liv, I am,
Yours truly, W. D. CURTIS, JR.

SACRAMENTO, CAL., Jan. 5, 1883.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: As you are receiving so many sympathizing letters I shall not attempt to write one, and will only say that you hav my heartfelt sympathy for your great loss. I was glad to hav met Mr. Bennett here in Sacramento, and of having the privilege and pleasure of taking him around our beautiful city, and pointing out to him all of the most prominent places of the same. I was sorry and disappointed not to hav met him again when he passed through here on his way home from San Francisco, but somehow he got through without our knowing it, consequently we did not meet him at the depot.

I was glad to hear, however, of his safe arrival home and in apparent good health, but I think now that he was far from being well. Oh! that he could hav lived on another five years, what good he might hav done; but such are the the laws of nature. It was not possible for him to remain with us longer; and all that we can say is, Peace to his ashes.

Yours truly, N. D. GOODALL.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Jan. 11, 1883.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: My wife joins me in the following expressions: May THE TRUTH SEEKER gain in prosperity, may it continue to free, enlighten, and ennoble the human race; and may you enjoy a long life of good health, and all the blessings that money can procure.

I knew your husband personally, and admired him as the most brave, truthful, honest man I ever met, and I feel sure no one could liv with him, if even less intimately than you hav, and not also be made better thereby. And considering the relation you hav borne to him, I know I can expect much truth, bravery, honesty, and courage to be shown in the part assigned to thee, and that blessings will abound in consequence.

Truly, RICHARD MATLACK.

PINE GROVE, Jan. 8, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Can it be that our hero, D. M. Bennett, is dead?—he, acquainted with the pleasures as well as the trials and turmoils of life; a contestant with the greatest institution of the country—the Christian religion.

His successful voyage around the world, the innumerable dangers he faced from time to time, made one to think he was not destined to die. And if his physical body is dead, his mental work, impressed in books and on the minds of the people, is still alive, and will be a power combating the popular superstition of the day. If there is any such thing as a conscious existence hereafter, may he hav the satisfaction of seeing his favorit paper, THE TRUTH SEEKER, prosper and become an enlightening power in the land. Yours fraternally, W. I. HALDEMAN.

NEW ALBANY, IND., Dec. 11, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: It was with extreme sorrow I heard of the death of my dear friend, D. M. Bennett. But few persons knew him better than myself. I hav been personally acquainted with him over forty-eight years, and I do say that I hav never known a better, more noble, just, and kind man than D. M. Bennett. He was always ready to help those in distress. I always found him candid yet firm in his opinions, which he had the manhood to express, and which he defended with the boldness of the lion. He was the noblest work of God, an honest man. He was a genial and loving companion, and had the tender heart of a child. Those who knew him well could not help but love him. I feel as if I had lost a kind friend and brother. Please giv my love and kind regards to his dear wife, who has been a friend to me, and who has known me ever since I was a little babe. Your friend, JAMES A. WILSON.

VALLEY FALLS, KAN., Dec. 31, 1882.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: We hope you will not consider because we are so tardy in sending you a line expressing our sympathy with you in your great bereavement, that therefore we are indifferent in regard thereto. In a case like this, words amount to but little, and of these there certainly has been no lack in the present instance. We can only say that we most heartily join with the multitudes of Mr. Bennett's friends and yours in proffering you our heartfelt sympathy in what must necessarily be one, at least, of the great trials of your life, and also in expressing the hope that your health has not been seriously injured by the strain to which it has been subjected.

It is sincerely to be hoped that the Liberals all over this broad land will join with you in an earnest endeavor to keep the grand old TRUTH SEEKER up to the high character as a brave and earnest defender of the principles of Liberalism that it has always borne. Sincerely your humble fellow-worker,
M. HARMAN.

EXIRA, IOWA, Dec. 31. 1882.

MR. EDITOR: There were none more surprised and saddened than I on hearing, or rather seeing, the dark lines in my paper of the 9th inst., and the announcement that its editor was dead, as I had not learned that he was sick. I had hoped that a score of years of usefulness were yet before the veteran truth seeker, that we and the world might learn much from his ripe experience and his mature wisdom. With seventy thousand hired defenders of dogma and mythological nonsense in this country, we can ill spare such a brave, able, promulgator of truth and denouncer of superstition as the departed D. M. Bennett was universally acknowledged to hav been. But the inexorable laws of nature are no respecter of persons, and they pass over the human family as the merciless tornado passes over the forests, taking alike the tenderest plant and the sturdiest oak. A giant oak has fallen. Liberalism's great defender succumbed to death's passing scythe, and superstition, trivial dogma, and legendary nonsense are the gainers, while science. truth, and logical conclusions, born only of reason, hav lost a friend.

While it would seem that our loss is irreparable, and none are able to stand where the mighty one fell, yet we hope and really believe the great work of destroying the fables born of ignorance and in scientific darkness which was his purpose in life, will go on, and that a forest of working giants will arise to take the place of the one just fallen.

Sincerely yours, J. A. HALLOCK.

DANVILLE, WIS., Dec. 26, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: The inclosed $2.50 is for THE TRUTH SEEKER another year. As you hav knocked fifty cents off the price of your paper, I mean to try and drum up at least half a dozen new subscribers, for one good turn deserves another. THE TRUTH SEEKER is my choice over all the other papers. I should greatly enjoy at least one column weekly on "occultism," and now and then an editorial on the origin and duration of existence, and final end of the universe and its contents, and more especially on that of the animal kingdom; and on the question whether all things, both animate and inanimate, become extinct in turn, as the mastodon has. I like the solid articles on Materialism from T. Winter, and miss those on Spiritualism from E. A. Chapman. What has become of him—has he fallen by the way?

Was Dr. Henry Slade finally shown up as a humbug?

I commenced taking your paper while it was printed in Illinois, and, though I fell in love with it then, I can testify that each year since has increased my attachment to it. Yours in true progress, J. W. HARTLEY.

RICHMOND, INDIANA.

MR. EDITOR: The great worker, D. M. Bennett, will long be missed from the Liberal ranks. Whatever faults he might hav possessed, nobody ever charged him with having been an idler or loafer. On the contrary, he was an indefatigable worker. The productions of his pen are almost sufficiently numerous to make a library. And they all show that the writer was a great reader, as well as an able penman, On the announcement of his death the inquiry was raised in the minds of many readers, What will become of THE TRUTH SEEKER? Will it still be continued? Will it possess the same interesting feature it has done in the past?—still be as worthy of support? I feel highly gratified in being able to say that on the several occasions when Mr. Bennett left home to be absent a long time from the office he left a very able substitute in his place, who conducted it with the same skill and ability as that displayed by the editor-in-chief, so that no reader would discover that the paper had fallen into other hands, or lost anything in interest by the change. And I am pleased to learn that the same editor will conduct the paper in the future. And if subscribers will do their duty in supporting him THE TRUTH SEEKER will still be as interesting as ever.

KERSEY GRAVES.

NEW YORK, Dec. 31, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: I hand herewith $5 for the Bennett Monument Fund, with the earnest hope that a thousand times that amount may be raised to make such a monument that all may see how we honor brave men in the righteous cause of liberty.

I giv this amount for this purpose, but there is a work for which I will giv twenty times that. I mean the other project that was mentioned at the League meeting where the matter of erecting the monument was broached—that of purchasing land and building thereon a hall which shall be devoted to the progressiv movements and those only; a building that might be properly called Revolution House, where THE TRUTH SEEKER and other such concerns might occupy the store spaces, and the second story be used as a great hall, with small halls and offices in the third story. I should like to see such a building erected by subscription, each subscriber becoming a stockholder only in so far as to entitle her or him to a vote in the election of officers to control the concern, and not to the reception of any profit that may arise from the rental or otherwise; all such profits to be turned by the directors into the treasury of the Liberal League, or in such other direction for the advancement of progressiv ideas as the directory may elect. And this stockholdership should be be perpetual and assignable by will or otherwise, except that its assignment to one already a stockholder should not entitle the holder to more than one vote. What a precious heirloom such a holding would be!

If a movement for the building of such a house as described could be started, I verily believe we could purchase the land and erect the building, free of debt, in three years. There is money enough among us to do it, if the movement is only started in the right faith.

If you desire, I would be only too glad to sketch out the full plan for such a concern, which I hav been a long time revolving, and wish I could hear more of the matter from others.

Yours truly, CHANNING BURNZ.

JOLIET, ILL., Jan. 3, 283.

MR. EDITOR: I wish to say Amen to the vow and pledge of Grace L. Parkhurst in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Dec. 30th. Most heartily do I second the idea of building a Bennett Hall, to be devoted to the promulgation of all advanced Liberal thought, the cause nearest the heart of our departed hero. I would make this hall subserve the great aims and objects of his life so far as it can possibly be done. To this end I would hav it the home of THE TRUTH SEEKER for all time to come, free of rental, and by some title of conveyance to be forever prevented from being diverted into the purposes or uses of religion as is now being done with Girard College. If THE TRUTH SEEKER is to be furnished us at $2 50 per year it certainly should hav room in this hall free of rent. I do not believe that the Liberals of this country could do any other thing with their money that would so deeply interest and gratify Brother Bennett as to build such a hall, and endow his paper with a free home there forever. I put this in the present tense, fully believing that Brother Bennett still exists and is cognizant of the acts and doings of both his friends and enemies. And in view of this belief I do not favor putting much money into a monument. I think that his practical utilitarian views of life and its duties would lead him to say, "Put your money where it will do humanity more good than it can locked up in a monument to my memory. I want to liv and be remembered in the live, warm heartbeats of humanity, instead of the cold, lifeless walls of granit and marble." Believing this, I will pledge the full six dollars toward the Bennett Hall, and I do hope that every Liberal in the land will add whatever amount his circumstances will allow to the same end. And let us do it now, while the great life and deeds of our hero are fresh on memory's altar, and will prompt us to do all that our reason will justify to the accomplishment of this object. Liberals, speak out at once. The cause is deserving, the object good. The reward will be yours and humanity's. With much sympathy for Mrs. Bennett and all more nearly affected than myself, I remain,

Sincerely yours, I. B. CURTIS.

YPSILANTI, MICH., Dec. 28, 283.

MR. EDITOR: When THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 9th inst. came to hand draped in mourning, my heart almost ceased to perform its functions, fearing the saddest of all information had reached me. Turning to the editorial, my worst fears were verified. The great, the wise, the good man, D. M. Bennett, had joined the host of invisible spirits. The sadness that came over us was too great to be expressed in any known language except the silent language of the heart. If we sought for consolation, it could be found only in the knowledge that work had been accomplished in the interest of humanity by a master workman—by D. M. Bennett. His labor has made thousands to rejoice in their emancipation from the creeds of superstition and bigotry coupled with Christian hate and intolerance. His iconoclastic labor has been immense, and proves the hero a giant. His last writing as it appeared in his paper, that we all love so well, reminded us of the last act in the drama of life, and it seemed that the great thinker was conscious that his work in this field of usefulness was about to close forever.

Our leader in the cause of humanity, and in the cause uppermost in the minds of thousands, leaves the duties of life to be continued and completed by others, and especially by our common friend, Mr. E. M. Macdonald. The thunder of D. M. Bennett has shaken the very foundation of the Christian church beyond all fear of its ever regaining its evil grasp upon the mental or physical liberties of man.

My wife unites with me in expressions of sympathy for the loving and true woman whose grief can never be realized by any person except herself.

Yours most sincerely, JOHN W. BABBITT, M.D.

LAKE CITY, IOWA, Dec. 23, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: I deem this a good time to look a little at the treatment our good kind old brother, D. M. Bennett, received, and is still receiving, at the hands of the Chicago Inter-Ocean. You will remember, I presume, the outrageous, lying, slanderous article that appeared in that paper just previous to Mr. Bennett's return from his Round-the-World trip. I thought then, and still think, of all the mean, low, slimy, filthy, lying attacks I ever knew that was the meanest. But when he thought he was going to hav to answer to a slander suit he retracted just enough to save his bacon. But anyone could see at the time that it was grudgingly done. In fact he acknowledged that he varied from his usual custom in publishing the piece without any investigation in regard to the matter, whether it was true or not. Now why did he so willingly publish so foul a lie to the world? Was it not because Mr. Bennett was well known to be one of the most powerful Infidel writers of the age, and he. not having a mind capable of comprehending a good and noble man like Mr. Bennett, thought it a splendid chance to ruin the reputation of an Infidel, all done, I presume, for the love of Christ and the glory of God?

The same paper now speaks of Mr. Bennett as the late D. M. Bennett, who achieved such an unenviable reputation as editor of the New York TRUTH SEEKER. So you see the little, narrow-minded, priest-ridden creature is not yet satisfied in regard to Mr. Bennett. Now, I come to the main point in writing this letter, and it is this: Let every man that has a particle of love for the good and great man that has passed away, swear that he will neither by word, act, or deed contribute one cent to the Chicago Inter-Ocean. I will not, neither will my children, nor children's children, until the fourth generation.

I was a Whig first, and Republican next, and took the Inter-Ocean for years, but began to see the cloven-foot stick out some years ago, and finally I quit taking it about six months ago. I think there are other papers much better and ten times as honest as the Inter-Ocean. I believe hundreds in the Western states will quit taking it for the dishonest course it pursues in regard to Freethought.

With the greatest love and regard for yourself and Mrs. Bennett, I am, Truly yours, J. L. TOMPKINS.

BOSTON, MASS., Jan. 13, 1883.

MRS. BENNETT: Yours just received this morning, and it repeats the sadness of mourning when compelled to part with those we love. My sympathy for you cannot be expressed in words. I know your life is in part wrecked. I know you hav lost a companion, a friend—but only for a little time, for death, though its touch chills our life-forces, yet it cannot reach our love. It may remove from us those that we so tenderly care for; it may crush our fondest hopes—destroy our life's highest idealities; but it can never destroy one tie of our love. All I can say is but vain and trifling to you, and to this great people of whom thousands mourn his loss. But I am so glad he lived in my age, that I could know him, brave, true, and noble as he was. His name will liv as a defender of human rights, and be placed alongside of those of the noble heroes that hav passed on before him. His memory will continue in the lives of this great people while time lasts. But, great as he was to us, true as he was to himself, he could not avoid wearing out, and when sufficiently weakened was obliged to giv way and pass to other spheres, where truth is better understood, and where all will be appreciated for their real worth, and impartial justice becomes the wealth of each. I do hope you will not grieve too much, for the rays of the sunlight of your life are each day lengthening and in a little time will reach across the line of life (where he you so fondly love now is), leaving but the shadow behind.

I did not return to Boston by way of New York city as I expected. I was telegraphed for to go from Philadelphia to Western New York, my only sister being then at what was supposed the point of death. She got better, and I came directly from there here. I was much disappointed myself, as I hoped to see you both again. I felt a little uneasy about Mr. Bennett while there, but hoped for the best. I did not hear of his change till I arrived here and Mrs. Smith told me. I couldn't believe it; I thought it could not be true. This was Saturday, after his leaving the body. Had I known it in time we should hav tried to be at the funeral, both of us; but Mrs. Smith had already written you, telling how we mourned with you and rejoiced with him. We know that your sorrow and the nation's grief must throw over his spirit a vail of lesser light, to be removed only when your life here is through and you join him in that life where lover's vows are not crushed by death.

Some two weeks after his funeral I had a vision. This occurred in the morning, just as it was merging into sunlight. I promised to giv it to you and will do so. I felt I was in the presence of Mr. Bennett. He looked as usual, only a slight shadow seemed to come over his countenance. He spoke of you, and asked me to write you these words: "Tell her not to mourn thus. The ages for love are as countless as the rays of sunlight through the eternity of past time; but the days for mourning are numbered." A smile was around him and he passed from my vision.

That he livs and loves you still I know, and your great distress is felt by him, and he fain would tear it asunder if possible. We shall both see you at our very earliest opportunity. The friends in this city are trying to arrange for us to lecture in Paine's Memorial Hall for a year, but it is not yet decided. We lecture there through this month, and perhaps longer, if not through the year.

Now please try and be cheerful, and your spirit will be better prepared to feel his influence as he is near you. With much love,

As ever your friend, AMELIA H. COLBY.

LOCKPORT, ILL., Jan. 7, 283.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: I was conscious when I read of the sudden translation of your husband, and the dear friend of many thousands of us, from this to a higher condition of life, that you would be inundated with letters of condolence for your loss (and the world's), which would at the same time express, in the most sincere manner, their hearty commendations of love and respect for the industry, integrity, and ability of the dear departed.

Few men in the world's history hav carved so grand and unselfish a record as D. M. Bennett; and it is no exaggeration to say that as respects honesty of purpose, devotion to principle, and untiring industry in the propagation of his honest thoughts, he had few equals, and no superiors. His scholarship was of the intensely practical order, and whatever it lacked in polish it more than made up in honest matter of fact, in a keen perception of the right use of words, and in a mental garb and presentation of his subjects that was almost marvelous.

His finely-developed social nature, in connection with his detestation of all shams that militated against the well-being and freedom of the human body and mind, enlarged very rapidly the number of his devoted friends, and in the same ratio, almost, intensified the bitterness of his many opposers, and the jealously of those who desired to rule where he stood, but who, it is sad to say, were found unworthy.

While conceding to none a more profound respect and love for D. M. Bennett than I myself entertain, I cannot feel as many do at his sudden departure from the earthly and rudimentary state of existence. I do not think for one moment that he is cut off from his career of activ life in the work so essential for human progress, and that was so all-important to him. Neither do I believe that the ideas he so grandly and unselfishly aided will be in the least retarded by his change in life conditions. Did I so believe, my faith in human progress and the evolution of truth would be materially weakened, and instead of feeling as I do, that ideas are immortal, and that no single individual can do so much to advance or retard them as to make more or less than a great wave in their favor, or a great depression to obstruct in the broad sea of evolution, both of which are forgotten after a little storm, I can but feel what we may esteem as the greatest loss has its compensations. Since my thorough acquaintance with our dear and noble friend, there has been the consciousness that he confided to me to that extent known only to the purest friendship. In his private letters to me I read much more than the literal import of the words would seem to indicate. I was conscious that he was aided and sustained in such a way as a man can only be, by a devoted and loving wife, and that this was the power behind the throne (I will not say greater, but perhaps equal to the throne itself). It is certain to me that herein lay his great ability to perform the prodigious amount of work he did. This was the great source of his inspiration. This, to the world, silent influence was doubtless an important factor in keeping alive THE TRUTH SEEKER, and in making it possible for Brother Bennett to carry on his crusade against superstition, tyranny, and mental progression.

I can scarcely account for the universal surprise manifested at what is termed the sudden death of your dear husband, and can only account for it by supposing his many injudicious friends thought him immortal, and unlike common humanity subject to natural laws.

The amount of mental labor he performed was such as to assure me he might at any moment giv way under the intense strain, and yet, strange as it may appear, while all acknowledge his labors herculean, they seemed, with almost wicked persistency, to pile on the load, and goad on with whip and spur this over-willing worker. He no sooner came from the Liberal Congress than they must send him around the world, and ere he had finished his notes for his great work the same injudicious spirit was planning to send him again on the wing.

That this was all through love and admiration for him and his work, I do not doubt, and yet am equally conscious that it was injudicious and wanting in that true spirit of perception that recognizes what is due to home life and domestic relations at his and your time of life. These things were never consulted, and you, in obedience to the desire of a great many, were ready to make the same sacrifice and bid him and his work "good speed." Much more than we anticipate, his ability to resist disease was affected by these inroads upon his and your domestic relations; and under such circumstances, all things combined, 'tis surprising he did not leave us sooner. His last great work, as the result of his circuit of the earth, will be an enduring monument to his memory; no Liberal library will be complete, without it, and yet it is my opinion that all that is gained here is lost in other directions equally important. Though he has left the form at a rather early age, his life-work has been immense; to expect or desire more of one human being would be evidence of a state of unreason, inconsistent with justice and Liberalism.

Of this we are all conscious: the world is richer for his existence; he has bequeathed to us the memory of his integrity and the evidence of human possibilities, as illustrated by his moral and mental make-up. It will be to us all a continued benediction to hav (in spirit at least) known and appreciated him, and to hav learned to what extent so grand a human soul could suffer, endure, and dare for truth and righteousness.

In his strength we were made strong, and in his love for truth and honest confession of a mistake that might produce social ostracism, we were taught not only his very human kinship, but, what was noblest and best of all, that neither love of friends nor fame or popularity, nor the loss of all, could tempt or deter him from speaking the whole truth, however unpalatable it might be, or however much it might be misunderstood.

Such a character is royal in the best sense; it rules by conceded right in the hearts and minds of the brave and true.

No man wore this crown more justly than D. M. Bennett—he wears it still. The light of his grand life is still burning; the work to which he was devoted will go on. His mantle will fall on no other shoulders, for he will continue in the work he is so well fitted to perform. The ideas he advocated will find kindred workers on the material plane, and I hav no doubt that in your hands, with the assistance of those your judgment selects, THE TRUTH SEEKER will maintain its former usefulness as the most important journal in this country in the interest of radical reform.

Wishing you all that is best, in peace, prosperity, and happiness, I am,

Yours with respect, GEORGE LYNN.

The Brakeman's Conclusion.

From the People's Advocate.

"Parson, you've cut off a bigger chunk
Than I can chaw at a time.
Your talk is all very smooth and nice,
And has a flowery sort of chime.
What's the use of his watching sparrows,
And noting the least one fall?
Then leaving a human being
Without any guidance at all.
Why, think of poor Nick Shoreling,
One of our Lake Shore men,
Switchman at Forty-seventh street;
And from daylight till night at ten
He stood at his post of duty—
Honest, tried, and true.
His home to him was a little heaven—
The only one he knew—
There he and his wife and little girl
Lived in each other's smiles.
Though his face was tanned and hands rough,
His heart was soft as a child's.
That little child, how he loved her;
And that he could do his duty right,
She was sent toddling to him with his dinner,
And also his supper at night.
The other night she came with his supper,
And he laughed at her childish vim;
Then he sent her down to the corner store
To get tobacco for him.
He had scarce missed the sound of her little feet,
Till he saw her coming back,
And his heart stood still, after one great bound,
For he saw coming down the track
A special train; while from the other way,
Attracting the little child,
Came the through freight, some two hours late,
Which now was running wild.
He did not pause an instant,
But with a cry of alarm,
He rushed between those engines,
And threw his child from harm.
But poor Nick Shoreling's body
Was a mass of crushed flesh and bone.
A crazy mother and child are left
To battle the world alone;
And of this being you call Providence
(Who watches sparrows fall),
That he could be doing better business
Is my belief—that's all."

"Modern Thinkers."

"Justice is the virtue of rendering every man his due" (Aristotle).

"There is a sufficient recompense in the very consciousness of a noble deed" (Cicero).

This work will add much to the information of all who studiously read its pages. Great men are like the suns that illuminate the numberless planets that whirl in the boundless ocean of space. As the centuries roll on great men shine forth as the stars in a night of a cloudless sky. The book presents unequivocal evidence of having been written by one eminently versed in ancient and modern thought, and skilled in the art of presenting the same in a terse and graphical language.

This volume treats of seven of the modern thinkers of the world, two of whom are still living, and among the greatest of scientific men, if not themselvs the greatest. A portrait of each is given. The introduction is from the pen of Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, which is "lucid in its style, forcible in its diction, and happy in its illustrations." He can throw the charms of poetry over the "statue of reason," and gain the admiration of all unbiased minds. A biographical sketch of each is given, after which the character is considered as to his philosophical or unphilosophical merits.

Regarding Swedenborg, the author looks upon him as a man of natural endowments, and, to a degree, as an original thinker, but whose mental faculties after a time, by the overpowering influence of a bishop and through disappointment in love, became unbalanced and his mind impaired. He was, however, an extensiv writer, and did much toward leaving the world better than he found it.

Adam Smith was a political economist. Writing upon the financial question, he produced his work, "Wealth of Nations." He is regarded as philosophical and unphilosophical; that is to say, our author thinks he was sound upon some points, while unsound upon others. Smith looked upon all "protection as a hurtful and ignorant interference," save for the good of Great Britain. Many valuable ideas can be gathered from a close reading of this chapter.

Jeremy Bentham is next considered, and successfully shown to hav been a man of great ability and vast acquirements, reading history at three years of age, and performing upon the king of musical instruments at five. He regarded as the sum of human wisdom "the greatest happiness of the greatest number"—in so far as wisdom will apply to pure happiness.

Thomas Paine follows Bentham; and while I cannot fully indorse all that is here so graphically related in regard to the man of three nations, disowned by all, I can see a noticeable determination toward impartiality, and to arrive at and establish facts. Thomas Paine has been the prey on which licentious and infamous priests hav hurled their anathemas and driven deeply down their shafts of hate. Thomas Paine more than any other man fed the flame of the American Revolution, and put a afloat in the breeze of heaven the stars and stripes of peace. Strong grounds are taken by Mr. Denslow that Mr. Paine, and not Mr. Jefferson, was the author of that unequaled production, the Declaration of American Independence. On page 163 he says: "The Declaration of Independence must hereafter be construed as a fabric whose warp and woof were Thomas Paine's." I am inclined to think that there is much connected with the earlier part of Paine's life that has as yet never been brought to light, and through his matchless secretivness, and as a flood of years hav elapsed, it has become buried in a vault of mystery, and perhaps the lock has become so thoroughly rusted that the key cannot turn its spring. I hav said, and will again say, that 1882 is a century too soon to write a full, correct, and truthful life of Thomas Paine. The last life of the man under consideration was written by J. E. Remsburg. I desire here to call attention to this small but valuable work. There are one hundred testimonials given from the unprejudiced brains of men of France, England, and America as to Paine's abilities, his honor, philanthropy, and patriotism. Further, there is an appended "Supplement" from the pen of the late Hon. E. B. Washburn, late United States minister to France, which was first published in Scribner's Monthly of September, 1880. There are many things brought to light here that hav been kept in the vaults of France for at least eighty years. This clearly shows that Vale and other early biographers of Paine did not know the life of the man of whom they tried to write. Those who desire to inform themselvs upon the relation of Thomas Paine to the French Revolution I unhesitatingly advise to purchase a copy of Remsburg's "Life."

To return: The author of "Modern Thinkers" pays Paine the following tribute: "We hav had no writer in America to this day so practiced in the handling of pure and elegant English, or that could hav written either of the chapters of 'Common Sense'" (p. 148).

This is certainly saying a great deal. Nevertheless it may be true. Mr. Denslow thinks that the present lives of Paine should be revised and amplified, suggesting that a closer research in England might conclusivly demonstrate him as the real and true author of Junius. And right here I will say this volume contains a valuable treatis upon the much obscured subject of Junius. W. H. Burr has also labored to this end, to prove that Thomas Paine was Junius. I hav no doubt that Paine was Junius, and if he was, the idea of a republic was in his mind, no doubt, when writing those word, "Junius shall come again." I think that he came again in that irresistibly argumentativ demonstration against monarchical power, "Rights of Man." In that monument of ideas I think Junius reappeared, trying upon his first attempt to shatter monarchical powers privately, and upon his second attempt publicly. Infidels generally know in reality but very little about Thomas Paine. Many of them think if they hav read the "Age of Reason," picked up "Common Sense," and laid down the "Rights of Man" that they hav familiarized themselvs concerning the life and labor of this much talked about but little understood character. In those "black days" of anticipated disaster, when Washington had been driven to the conclusion that "ten days more will put an end to this army," for he was the author of those words; when Franklin had gone to France; when Jefferson was at his home in Virginia with contentment and ease, and John Adams also had gone to be "brave in his home by the sea," where was Thomas Paine? He was writing upon the head of a drum by the light of a flickering torch. I must stop upon this man. Those who are but little acquainted with him should obtain his works and "Lives" from THE TRUTH SEEKER office, and read them diligently.

When doubt and fear pervade the land,
And Washington maintained his stand
With trembling honor for the cause,
Or bow to England and her laws;

Not yet had come from Thomas Paine
That fiery burst of living flame
Which should consume Britania's laws
And light the way for freedom's cause.

The "Crisis" came in this distress;
Hope sprang anew in every breast;
A kingdom crumbled 'neath its blows,
Columbia from the ruins rose.

Charles Fourier was a Frenchman. "Mathematics, botany, and music were his favorit studies." He was a great philosopher, entertaining some singular ideas, which are set forth in his work. His works are extensiv, hard to find, and still more difficult to understand. Owing undoubtedly to his remarkable abstruseness, his works hav become nearly extinct. "No philosopher of modern times has left so wide or so undefined, and, on the whole, so inadequate an impression on the popular mind as Fourier."

Herbert Spencer is one of nature's intellectual giants. A philosopher of renown, and one that ranks among the highest up on the intellectual thermometer of the world, he is a man that has hewn a pathway of his own, and walked therein. He is, however, considered unsound by the author of "Modern Thinkers" as to some of his conclusions; and a negativ argument from that of Mr. Spencer is given which makes this part of the volume intensely interesting as well as instructiv.

We are, and forever will be, indebted for our advancement in scientific affairs to brave and noble men of the past, present, and future; those that thoroughly and irrefutably demonstrate the demonstrable of nature, and leave the unknowable to priests and Bible commentators. As the centuries roll away, the immortal name of Herbert Spencer will be cherished in the minds of the thoughtful as one of the greatest luminaries of the nineteenth century.

Haeckel's scientific acquirements and undeniable demonstrations are undoubtedly without a parallel in all of the annals of scientific researches of man from time immemorial. There hav been for thousands of years theorizers upon man and his existence, but to little or no purpose. But a demonstration upon this mighty, bewildering, and most important problem of problems has been at last successfully and irrefutably brought about by Ernst Heinrich Haeckel. His name has won the admiration of all the truly scientific of the world—those who dart downward and strive to fully understand their own natures and the elements that surround them. Let man strive to know more about himself and less about the gods of all ages, and he will attain to a degree of intellectual development to which at present he is a stranger. Let us say of Professor Haeckel as Volney did of Napoleon, viz.: "If circumstances favor him, we shall see the head of a Cæsar upon the shoulders of an Alexander" (this is here understood to be taken in a scientific sense). Haeckel has made it utterly impossible to write a history of the scientists of the world with his name omitted. Strip from "Modern Thinkers" every other chapter, and the one upon Prof. Haeckel is of far more value than the cost of the entire work.

Auguste Comte is the last, but by no means least, of the seven characters under consideration. "Auguste Comte is distinguished in the scientific world for his original logic and profound analysis of the sciences." He was the founder of the Positiv philosophy, a system which at this day has for its followers many of the foremost men of all enlightened countries. Comte, like many of earth's closest thinkers, became insane for a time, but only for a time. He was a voluminous writer, and did much for the elevation of mankind.

In the preparation of these articles (which were originally written for and published by the Chicago Times), now comprising the volume known as "Modern Thinkers," the author, Prof. V. B. Denslow, has greatly transcended the hight reached by most writers. It is a meritorious production—a literary masterpiece. The versatility of his talents is everywhere recognizable. His unprejudiced mind has been the scales in which the subjects hav been carefully weighed. It is by no means a work of simplicity; it is abstruse, and requires the closest of reading if one would understand it. Professor Denslow may be termed a "stone wall" writer, with a sufficient amount of mortar added to smooth the surface. B. O. FENTON.

Aurora, O.

TO TRIAL SUBSCRIBERS

THE TRUTH SEEKER,

with sixteen large pages, will be sent for THREE MONTHS, postage paid, FOR FIFTY CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 21 Clinton Place, New York.

Iron-Clad and Manna Series.

IRON CLAD SERIES.

Atonement. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Secular Responsibility. G. J. Holyoake. 5 cts.
Buddhist Nihilism. Prof. Max Muller. 10 cents.
Religion of Inhumanity. F. Harrison. 20 cts.
Relation of Witchcraft to Religion. Lyall. 15 cents.
Essay on Miracles. David Hume. 10 cents.
Land Question. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Were Adam and Eve Our First Parents? Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Why Do Men Starve? Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cts.
Logic of Life, Deduced from the Principle of Freethought. G. J. Holyoake. 10 cents.
A Plea for Atheism. Charles Bradlaugh. 10 cts.
Large or Small Families? A. Holyoake. 5 cents.
Superstition Displayed, with a Letter of Wm. Pitt. Austin Holyoake. 5 cents.
Defense of Secular Principles. Chas. Watts. 5 cents.
Is the Bible Reliable? Charles Watts. 5 cents.
The Christian Deity. Charles Watts. 5 cents.
Moral Value of the Bible. Chas. Watts. 5 cts.
Freethought and Modern Progress. C. Watts. 5 cents.
Christianity: Its Nature and Influence on Civilization. Charles Watts. 5 cents.
Thoughts on Atheism. A. Holyoake. 5 cents.
Is There a Moral Governor of the Universe? A. Holyoake. 5 cents.
Philosophy of Secularism. C. Watts. 5 cts.
Has Man a Soul? Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Is There a God? Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Labor's Prayer. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Poverty; Its Cause and Cure. M. G. H. 10 cents.
Science and Bible Antagonistic. C. Watts. 5 cents.
Christian Scheme of Redemption. Charles Watts. 5 cents.
Logic of Death; or, Why Should the Atheist Fear to Die? G. J. Holyoake. 10 cents.
Poverty; Its Effects on the Political Condition of the People. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.

MANNA SERIES.

New Life of David. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
200 Questions Without Answers. 5 cents.
Dialogue Between a Christian Missionary and a Chinese Mandarin. 10 cents.
Queries Submitted to the Bench of Bishops by a Weak but Zealous Christian. 10 cents.
Search After Heaven and Hell. A. Holyoake. 5 cents.
New Life of Jonah. Chas. Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
A Few Words About the Devil. Chas. Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
New Life of Jacob. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Daniel the Dreamer. A. Holyoake. 10 cents.
Specimen of the Bible. Esther A. Holyoake. 10 cents.
Acts of the Apostles; A Farce. A. Holyoake. 10 cents.
Ludicrous Aspects of Christianity. A. Holyoake. 10 cents.
Twelve Apostles. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Who Was Jesus Christ? Charles Bradlaugh. cents.
What Did Jesus Teach? Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
New Life of Abraham. Chas. Bradlaugh. 5 cts.
New Life of Moses. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
A Secular Prayer. A. Holyoake. Per doz., 10 cts.

A LIBERAL COLONY.

1,200 FREE HOMES!

THE NEW COLORADO!

Those desiring a valuable home on the public domain at a nominal price ($1.25 per acre, and 33 months in which to pay for it), will find it very greatly to their advantage to correspond with the undersigned.

Address with 2 3-cent stamps O. A. PHELPS, President Gunnison and Uncompahgre Colonization Society, LONGMONT, COLO. 3m

THE

BOOK OF THE CHRONICLES

OF

The Pilgrims in the Land of Yahweh.

D. M. Bennett, Scribe.

ALSO

THE EPISTLE OF BENNETT THE APOSTLE TO THE TRUTH SEEKERS.

From Volume II. of "A TRUTH SEEKER AROUND THE WORLD."

Price $1.00 D. M. BENNETT, 21 Clinton Place, New York

ENGLISH PUBLICATIONS.

Strauss and Renan; an essay by E. Zeller. Translated from the German. $1.25.

The Apocryphal New Testament; being all the gospels, epistles, and other pieces now extant, attributed in the first four centuries to Jesus Christ, his apostles, and their companions, and not included in the New Testament by its compilers. $2.25.

The Coming Era. By Alexander Calder, 8vo., 425 pp. $3.50.

History of Rationalism; embracing a survey of the present state of Protestant theology, with an appendix of literature. By John F. Hurst, D.D. $2.50.

The English Life of Jesus. By Thomas Scott. $2.50.

Idols and Ideals; with an essay on Christianity. By Moncure D. Conway, M.A. $3.

Brief History of the Indian People, containing a map of the Indian Empire. By W. W. Hunter. Price $1.75

Legends of the Old Testament traced to their apparent primitiv sources. By Thomas Lumisden Strange. $2.25.

Life and Struggles of Wm. Lovett, in his pursuit of bread, knowledge, and freedom. $3.

The Sources and Development of Christianity. By Thomas Lumisden Strange. $2.25.

Essence of Christianity. Translated from the German of Ludwig Feuerbach. By Marian Evans. $3.75.

The Life of Jesus, for the People, with an introduction of 248 pages. By David Friedrich Strauss; 2 vols. 8vo. $10

A Commentary on the Text of the Bhagavad-Gita; or, the Discourse between Krishna and Arjuna of Divine Matters. Cloth, $1.75

A Forecast of the Religion of the Future. Being short essays on some important questions in religious philosophy. By W. W Clark. $1.50.

The Language and Literature of China. Two lectures. By Robert K. Douglas. $2.25.

The Development of Creation on the Earth. By T. L. Strange. Cloth, $1.25.

The African Sketch Book, with maps and illustrations. By Winwood Reade; 2 vols. $4.

New Religious Thoughts. By Douglas Campbell. Second edition. $2.

Letters of William Von Humboldt to a Female Friend. Translated from the German by Catharine M. A. Cooper. 2 vols. Cloth, $2.75.

The Life of Jenghiz Khan. Translated from the Chinese by H. K. Douglas. Cloth, $1.50.

The Jade Chaplet. A collection of songs from the Chinese. By G. C. Stent. Cloth, $1.50.

The Sphere and Duties of Government. Translated from the German of Baron Wilhelm Von Humboldt by Joseph Coulthard, Jr. Cloth, $1.50.

Nagananda; or, the Joy of the Snake World. A Buddhist drama in five acts. Translated from the Sanskrit by Palmer Boyd, B.A. Cloth, $1.50.

Reverberations. By W. M. W. Call. Cloth, $1.50.

Heroes and Martyrs of Freethought. By Charles Watts and G. W. Foote. $1

Review of the work of Mr. John Stuart Mill, entitled "Examination of Sir William Hamilton's Philosophy." By George Grote. Cloth, $1.

Sermons Never Preached. By Philip Phosphor. $1.

The Folk-Songs of Southern India. By C. E. Gover, Cloth, $3.

Truth vs. Edification. By W. R. Greg. Cloth, 50 cents.

The Unity of Creation. By F. H. Kingston. Cloth, 85 cents.

Theism, Doctrinal and Practical. By F. W. Newman. Cloth, $2.25.

Hebrew Theism. By F. W. Newman. $2.

Morning Prayers in the household of a believer in God. Limp cloth, 50 cents.

Scenes from the Ramayana, Meghadnta, etc. Translated by Ralph T. H. Griffith, M.A., Principal of the Benares College, Cloth, $1.75.

The Value of this Earthly Life. A reply to W. H. Mallock's "Is Life Worth Living?" 40 cents.

Life and Mind, on the basis of modern medicin. By R. Lewins, M.D. 75 cents.

The Book of Job. By J. A. Froude, M. A. 50 cents.

Secularists' Manual of Songs and Ceremonies. 40 cents.

The Dathavansa; or, the History of the Tooth Relic of Gautama Buddha, in Pali verse. Edited, with an English translasion, by Mutu Coomara Swamy. Cloth, $1.75.

What is Vital Force? Treating of Vital Physics, Animal Morphology, and Epidemics, with an Appendix upon Geology. By Richard Fawcett Battye. Cloth, $2.25.

Retrospect of the Religious Life of England; or, the Church Puritanism and Free Inquiry. By John J. Tayler, B. A, $2,50.

Ancient Mysteries Described; Especially the English miracle plays, founded on Apocryphal New Testament story, including notices of Ecclesiastical shows, etc. By Wm. Hone. Illustrated. $2.25.

Sutta Nipata; or, Dialogues and Discourses of Gautama Budda (2,500 years old). By Mutu Coomara Swamy. $1.75.

Monuments of Upper Egypt. By Mariette-Bey. $2.00.

Wit, Wisdom, and Pathos. From the prose of Heinrich Heine. Selected and translated by J. Snodgrass, Cloth, $3.75.

The Speaker's Commentary. Reviewed by T. L. Strange. Cloth, $1.25.

Biography of Charles Bradlaugh. By Adolph S. Headingley. 332 pp., crown 8vo. $2.50.

Civilized Christianity. A Reply to "Modern Christianity a Civilized Heathenism." Being some reflections on orthodoxy. Cloth, 50 cents.

Edda Sæmundar Hinns Froda. The Edda of Sæmund the Learned, translated from the Old Norse by Benjamin Thorpe. Cloth, $2.25.

Extracts from the Koran. Compiled by Sir Wm. Muir, K.C.S.I, LL.D. Cloth, $1.

The Church under the Tudors. By Durham Dunlap, M.R.I A. 75 cents.

Republican Superstitions as illustrated in the Political History of America. By Moncure D. Conway, M.A. $1.25.

In Search of Truth. Conversations on the Bible and Popular Theology. By A.M.Y. Cloth, 75 cents.

The Saint's Travel to the Land of Canaan. By R. Wilkinson, Cloth, 75 cents.

History of the Great French Revolution; A course of six lectures. By Annie Besant. Cloth, 50 cents.

Freethinkers' Text-Book. The history of Freethought, its rise, progress, and triumph. In cloth, $1.25.

Theological Essays and Debates. By Annie Besant. $1.25.

The Founders of Christianity; or, Discourses upon the Origin of the Christian Religion. By Rev. James Cranbrook. Cloth, $3.00.

The Trial of Theism. Handsomely bound. 260 pages. $2.00.

Credibilia; or, Discourses on Questions of Christian Faith. By Rev. James Cranbrook. Cloth, $1.00.

Rig-Veda-Sanhita. The Sacred Hymns of the Brahmans. Translated and explained by F. Max Muller, M.A., L.L,D. Vol. I. $5.75.

Mind in Animals. By Prof. Ludwig Buchner. Translated from the German by Annie Besant. $3.50.

ENGLISH PAMPHLETS.

Auguste Comte; Biography of the great French thinker, with sketches of his philosophy, his religion, and his sociology; being a short and convenient resume of Positivism for the general reader. By Annie Besant. 25 cents.

Christianity. By Moncure D. Conway, M. A. 50 cents.

Christian Evidences Criticised. By Chas. Watts. 30 cents.

Christianity in Relation to Freethought. Skepticism, and Faith. Replies to three discourses by the Bishop of Peterborough. By Chas. Bradlaugh. 20 cents.

Clericalism in France; Speech of Prince Napoleon Bonaparte to the Chamber of Deputies, Nov. 24, 1876. 25 cents.

Debate on the Christian Evidences; Verbatim Report of the two-nights' debate between Chas. Watts and C. H. Cowper 25 cents.

Disestablishment and Disendowment of the English Church. Verbatim reports of two night's between Chas. Bradlaugh and W. Simpson. 25 cts.

Essays, chiefly Theological. By Melapus. 25 cents.

Four Nights' Discussion; Between Rev. Alexander Stewart and Chas Watts. 25 cents.

Heresy; Its Morality and Utility. 30 cents.

Human Sacrifices in England; Four discourses by Moncure D. Conway, M. A 50 cents.

Is it Reasonable to Worship God? A two-nights' debate by Chas. Bradlaugh and Rev. R. A. Armstrong, 40 cents.

Impeachment of the House of Brunswick. By Chas. Bradlaugh. 40 cents.

The Meaning of History; Two lectures by Frederick Harrison, M. A. 50 cents.

Merits and Demerits of Secularism; A discussion between the Rev. Thomas Crew and Charles Watts. 25 cents.

Natural Reason vs. Divine Revelation; An appeal for Freethought. By "Julian." 25 cents.

On the Philosophical Classification of National Institutions; A lecture by F. W. Newman 25 cents.

Reasoning from Facts; A method of everyday logic. By G. J. Holyoake. 75 cents.

Secularism in Its Various Relations. By Chas. Watts. 25 cents.

Secularism the True Philosophy of Life; An exposition and a defense. By G. W. Foote. 20 cents.

Taxation; How it Originated, Who Bears it, and Who ought to Bear it. By Chas. Bradlaugh. 25 cents.

The Bible and Xianity. By Chas. Watts. 20 cents.

Thoughts on Theism; With suggestions toward a public religious service in harmony with modern science and philosophy. Revised and enlarged. 50 cents.

Wealthy and Wise; A lecture introductory to the study of political economy. By Joseph Hiam Levy. 25 cents.

What does Xian Theism Teach? A two nights' discussion between the Rev. A. J. Harrison and Chas. Bradlaugh. 25 cents.

When Were Our Gospels Written? Reply to Dr. Tischendorf. 25 cents.

LIFE-SIZE

LITHOGRAPH

OF

D. M. BENNETT.

Heavy Plate Paper,

SUITABLE FOR FRAME OR WITHOUT FRAME.

Sent by Mail for Fifty cents.

ADDRESS THIS OFFICE.

The Figures of Hell; or, The Temples of Bacchus.

Dedicated to Licensers of Beer and Whisky.

By MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.

Published by the Author.

A neat little volume of between two and three hundred pages.

Price, $1.00.

THE

BIBLE—WHENCE AND WHAT?

BY

Richard B. Westbrook, D.D., LL.B.,

The questions, Where did the books of the Bible come from? What is their authority? and, What is the real source of dogmatic theology? are treated fearlessly in the light of history, philosophy, and comparativ religions. It is impossible to giv even a condensed statement of what is itself a marvelous condensation.

WHOLE LIBRARIES ARE HERE CONCENTRATED INTO ONE LITTLE BOOK.

The author's conclusions are, of course, against the supernatural origin and infallibility of the Bible, while the dogmas of the dominant theology are shown to be priestly perversions of the ancient mythologies.

Printed in good type and bound in cloth. Price, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 21 Clinton Pl., New York.

THE SEMITIC GODS AND THE BIBLE.

Treating upon the gods of the Semitic nations, including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, the Virgin Mary, and the Bible. To the latter 290 pages are devoted, showing that book to be a very inferior production for a first-class God. By D. M. Bennett. 339 large pages. Paper covers 60 cents: cloth, $1.

SEND FOR

The Crimes of Preachers

From May, 1876 to May, 1882.

TRANSLATED OUT OF THE ORIGINAL NEWSPAPERS,

And with previous Translations diligently compared and revised:

By Col. M. E. BILLINGS.

SECOND EDITION.

Price Twenty-five Cents.

D. M. BENNETT, 21 Clinton Place, N. Y. city.

STANDARD BOOKS.

Sold at The Truth Seeker Office.

MEDICAL and HYGIENIC WORKS

Sent on Receipt of Price.

Trall's Sexual Physiology. A Scientific and Popular Exposition of the Fundamental Problems in Sociology. Price $1.

What Our Girls Ought to Know. By Dr. Mary J. Studley. Price $1.

Hygiene of the Brain and the cure of Nervousness. By M. L. Holbrook. Price $1.50.

Parturition Without Pain. A Code of Directions for Avoiding most of the Pains and Dangers of Child-bearing. Edited by M. L. Holbrook, M.D. Price $1.

The Relations of the Sexes. By Mrs. E. B. Duffey. Price $1.

Fruit and Bread. A Natural and Scientific Diet. By Gustav Schlickeysen. Price $1.

The Better Way. An appeal to men in behalf of Human Culture through a Wiser Parentage. By A. E. Newton. Price, paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

New Hygienic Cook Book. Containing Receipts for Preparing a Hygienic Food. By Mrs. M. M. Jones, M. D. Price 30 cents.

Talks to my Patients. Hints on Getting Well and Keeping Well. By Mrs. R. B. Gleason, M.D. Price $1.50.

Chastity; or, Our Secret Sins. By Dio Lewis, M.D. Treating of the Sexual Relations in their Higher Aspects. Price $2.

Prenatal Culture. Being Suggestions to Parents. By A. E. Newton. Price 25 cents.

Aids to Family Government; or, From the Cradle to the School. By Bertha Meyer. Price, cloth, $1; paper. 50 cents.

The Diet Cure. The Relations of Food and Drink to Health, Disease, and Cure. By T. L. Nichols, M.D. Price 50 cents.

Youth: Its Care and Culture. By J. Mortimer Granville. Price $1.

Eating for Strength. Including the Science of Eating; Five hundred Receipts for Wholesome Cookery; One Hundred Receipts for Delicious Drinks; One Hundred Ever-Recurring Questions Answered. By M. L. Holbrook, M.D. Price $1.

Muscle-Beating; Or, Active and Passive Home Gymnastics. By C. Klem. Ten Illustrations. Price 30 cents.

Marriage and Parentage. In their Sanitary and Physiological Relations and in their Bearing on the Producing of Children of Finer Health and Greater Ability. By M. L. Holbrook, M.D. Price $1.

Our Girls, and Some of the Things they Ought to Know. By Dio Lewis, M.D. Price $1.50.

Dr. Foote's Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. By E. B. Foote, M.D. Price $1.50.

Vegetarianism the Radical Cure for Intemperance. By Harriet P. Fowler. Price 30 cents.

SUPERSTITION IN ALL AGES.

By JOHN MESLIER,

A Roman Catholic Priest, who, after a pastorate of thirty years at Etrepigny and But in Champagne, France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and left as his last will and testament to his parishioners, and to the world, the work entitled, "Common Sense."

Meslier's book is a death-knell to all religions, also to all imaginary nonentities. It is only a commendable act of justice to say that his work is unanswerable. It is lucid in style, and undoubtedly one of the most powerful appeals in behalf of reason, common sense, and justice that ever was produced in any age or country.

Cloth, . . $1.50. Paper . . $1.,00.

Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

PRICE REDUCED TO $1.00.

The BRAIN and the BIBLE,

OR,

The Conflict between Mental Science and Theology.

By Edgar C. Beall,

With a preface by

Robert G. Ingersoll.

"This book, written by a brave and honest man, is filled with brave and honest thoughts. The arguments it presents cannot be answered by all the theologians in the world!"—R. G. Ingersoll.

Price $1.00. For sale at this office.

DEITY ANALYZED

AND

THE DEVIL'S DEFENSE.

By Col. John R. Kelso, A.M.

Not since Hudibras has there been such damaging blows given to these old myths and fables. The colonel has made the sacredness of the scriptures appear as absurd as Cervantes made that of the knights of the age of chivalry. The singular audacity with which he attack, the foundations of Christianity shows the earnestness of his own convictions in regard to its fabulous origin.—L Hutchison.

Price, $1.50. Address D. M. BENNETT, 21 Clinton Place, New York.

Liberty and Morality.

A capital full lecture on these important subjects.

BY W. S. BELL.

A pamphlet of thirty-six well-printed pages mailed for 15 cents. Sold at this office.

THE OCCULT WORLD,

BY A. P. SINNETT.

This book describes many alleged phenomena brought about through the agency of the so-called Astral Brothers of India. Mr. Bennett quoted it at considerable length in his Round-the-World letters and the book has caused much comment wherever it has been circulated

Price, cloth, $1. Address D. M. BENNETT, 21 Clinton Place, New York.

PRICE REDUCED.

Self-Contradictions of the Bible.

Price reduced to 15 cents, from 25 cents

A perfectly reliable, accurate pamphlet of 58 pages. Compiled by one of our ablest correspondents; should be on the table of every scholar For sale at this office.

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.

A TRUTH SEEKER

Around the World.

FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. I. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last words penned by the great author were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter. The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 21 Clinton Place, New York city.

THE BOSTON INVESTIGATOR,

The oldest reform journal in the United States,

Is published every Wednesday at the Paine Memorial Building, Boston, Mass.,

By JOSIAH P. MENDUM.

Edited by HORACE SEAVER.

PRICE, $3.00 per annum; single copies, seven cents. Specimen copies sent on receipt of a two-cent stamp to pay postage.

The Investigator is devoted to the Liberal cause in religion; or in other words, to universal mental liberty. Independent in all its discussions, discarding superstitious theories of what never can be known, it devotes its columns to things of this world alone, and leaves the next, if there be one, to those who hav entered its unknown shores. Believing that it is the duty of mortals to work for the interests of this world, it confines itself to the things of this life entirely. It has arrived at the age of fifty-one years, and asks for a support from those who are fond of sound reasoning, good reading, reliable news, anecdotes, science, art, and a useful family journal. Reader, please send your subscription for six months or one year, and if you are not satisfied with the way the Investigator is conducted we won't ask you to continue with us any longer 2m5

THIS WORLD.

A WEEKLY LIBERAL MAGAZINE, PUBLISHED BY

George Chainey.

51 Fort ave. (Roxbury), Boston, Mass.

Terms $2.00 per annum.

Each number contains a lecture in full by Geo. Chainey and during 1883 a portrait and biographical sketch of some distinguished Freethinker or Liberal.

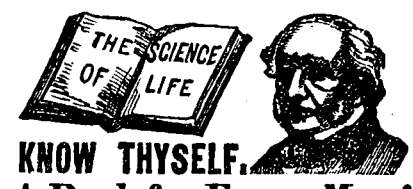
A sample copy, containing portrait of the lecturer and prospectus for 1883, sent free to any address.

The Kansas Liberal.

A FORNIGHTLY

FREETHOUGHT JOURNAL.

Devoted to the Fearless Discussion of all Human Interests; believing that the greatest obstacle to Progress is Authority, and that the most essential aid to Morality is LIBERTY.



TERMS:

Per Year,	$1.00
Six Months,	.50
Three Months,	.25

Specimen Copies Free.

8 W. HARMAN, E. C. WALKER, } Editors and Publishers.

MANHOOD!

KNOW THYSELF.

A Book for Every Man!

Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man, Errors of Youth, etc, but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 paves, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now.

Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. 1y88

Gems of Thought.

LIFE is made up of breaths, of inhalations and exhalations, and while taking a breath any person can perform his duty, and not fall short in it; and what he could do while taking one breath he can do while taking a thousand.—D. M. Bennett.

By oppression's woes and pains,
By our sins in servil chains!
We will drain our dearest veins,
But they shall be free!

Lay the proud usurpers low,
Tyrants fall in every foe!
Liberty's in every blow!
Let us do or die. —Burns.

THEOLOGIANS no longer speak with authority. They are content to suggest, to deprecate hasty contradiction. Those who doubted before now openly deny. Those who believed on trust hav passed into uncertainty. Those who upheld orthodoxy cannot agree on what ground to defend it. Throughout Europe, throughout the world, the gravest subjects are freely discussed, and opposit sides may be taken without blame from society. Doctrins once fixed as a rock are now fluid as water. Truth is what men trow. Things are what men think. Certainty neither is nor can be more than the agreement of persons competent to form an opinion, and when competent persons cease to agree the certain has become doubtful—doubtful from the necessity of the case. This is a simple matter of fact. What is generally doubted is doubtful. It is a conclusion from which there is no escape. The universal assent which constitutes certainty has been dissolved into the conflicting sentiments of individual thinkers.—Froude's Science and Theology.

CHRISTIAN morality has had its turn, and the present state of society, its crying shames, its cruel sufferings, tell us that authoritativ morality has failed. Intuition givs us no hope for the masses, the uncultured, the despised, who hav no intuitions beyond the blind yearning for a change which will bring them some gleam of hope, or at least some lightening of despair. Surely it is time, then, that we should bestir ourselvs to place morality on some firm basis before the lowering storm breaks over our heads and sweeps us and our present feeble structure away. Amid the fervid movement of society with its wild theories and crude social reforms, with its righteous fury against oppression and its unconsidered notions of wider freedom and gladder life, it is of vital importance that morality should stand on a foundation unshakable, so that through all, political and religious, human life may grow purer and nobler, may rise upward into settled freedom, and not sink downward into anarchy. Only utility can afford us a sure basis, the reasonableness of which can be accepted alike by thoughtful student and hard-handed artisan.—Mrs. Annie Besant's True Basis of Morality.

THE great principle and foundation of all virtue and worth is placed in this: That a man is able to deny himself his own desires, cross his own inclinations, and purely follow what reason directs as best though appetites lean the other way.—Locke's Treatise on Education.

I HAV heard myself from the lips of an orthodox preacher, that by the necessity of the case the disbeliever in a personal god must steal and lie, as if he were under a sort of moral compulsion to do it! The speaker could not say anything else, could not think otherwise than he spoke. Of course he believed what he asserted. He was honest and candid, but what a spirit it must be that can make an honest man conceive and utter a blasphemy like that! For this was said not a year ago in my own hearing and said in the face of the fact that there are disbelievers in a personal god among ourselvs, in our own community, in England, France, Italy, Germany, bearing the highest stamp of character, men of consecrated lives, who devote themselvs with the full capacity of their conscience to the task of making the world better; men like Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Tyndall, who cannot confess any definition of deity, who are yet irreproachable in their lives and spotless in their character.—O. B. Frothingham's Radical Pulpit.

EVERY sect clamors for toleration when it is down. We hav not the smallest doubt that when Bonner was in the Machelsea he thought it a very hard thing that a man should be locked up in a jail for not being able to understand the words, "This is my body," in the same way as the lords of the council. It would not be very wise to conclude that a beggar is full of Christian charity because he assures you that God will reward you if you giv him a penny, or that a soldier is humane if he cries out lustily for quarter when a bayonet is at his throat. The doctrin which from the very first origin of religious dissensions has been held by all bigots of all sects, when condensed into a few words and stripped of rhetorical disguise, is simply this: I am in the right and you are in the wrong. When you are the stronger you ought to tolerate me, for it is your duty to tolerate the truth. But when I am the stronger I shall persecute you, for it is my duty to persecute error.—Macaulay's Essays.

MR. SPURGEON has drawn pictures of hell which, if true and revealed to him by God, are most disgustingly frightful, and which being, as we believe, false and but the creation of his own vulgar, morbid fancies, induce on our part a feeling of contempt as well as disgust. . . . The fashionable preachers in the neighborhood of Belgravia mostly eschew the devil and avoid the taint of brimstone; treacle is the commodity they dispense.—Bradlaugh's Few Words About the Devil.

IT is mostly the idle, shiftless man who has all the "bad luck." It is the unsettled, unreliable tradesman, "always waiting for something to turn up," who thinks the world is against him and complains that "he never has a chance." The upright, honest man, if also of fair skill and perseverance, seldom fails—I do not say to get rich—that can hardly be counted the fair end of man's life, but to get a living and to find the world not a very bad world to him on the whole.—Brooke Herford's Day of Judgment.

Odds and Ends.

NO, Paul, the window of the soul is not a pane in the stomach.

A MICHIGAN horse ate ten pounds of starch without feeling very much stuck up.

IT was a trifling circumstance that clouded the domestic bliss of a recently married Brooklyn couple—she had corns, he hadn't a razor.

BILL NYE ON THE INDIAN'S FUTURE.

Will a few fleeting years extirpate and exterminate from the face of the earth a race which has long filled our fourth readers and our school declamations with crude oratory, and leave it to exist only as a smoke-tanned, bead-trimmed memory? Will the beautiful picture of the brunet Indian maiden at last become nothing but the frontispiece of a time-honored legend and the trade-mark of a fine-cut factory? Let us hope that it will not. We hav crossed the wide ocean and wrested from the people their lands, and then, to add insult to injury, we hav taught them the mysteries of our civilization. With the white man came the doctrin of vicarious atonement and the open-back shirt. He brought with him the dictionary and the garden hose, salvation and saleratus. The tale was soon told, and now on the vertebræ of the continent the telephone and the morning papers are crowding the red widower and the pigeon-toed scion of Powhatan into the moaning sea. Now he stands upon the rocky battlements that border the new states, and, bathed in red sunlight and nothing else in particular, he shakes hands with his approaching doom. Had he taken more kindly to the bath-tub of the pale-face and fraternized more adequately with the crash towel of the European, his oblivion would hav been less speedy and the black tom-cat night of eternal sleep less formerly. Nature gave to thee, thou dusky warrior, strength like the eagle and swiftness in the chase, but in her wisdom denied thee the copper lining that is required to meet and conquer the vintage of a progressiv age. The mountain lion may meet thee and yield up his life at thy hands, but the juice of the centipede, that is distilled by the pale-face and sold to thee, tangles up thy duodenum and cracks the crown sheet of the digester. Brave orator of the school book, grim relic of the days of Pocahontas, we watch with tear-dimmed eyes the closing hours. Adieu, thou Indian mother standing on the steep, precipitous shore of eternity. Behind thee rest the dead heroes of thy race; at thy side the brindle relic of a mighty tribe of Indian dogs, fatigued and listless, pets his favorit flea. No one can look upon this sad and smoky group unmoved—the fading remnants of a glorious petty larceny mob.

COME INTO THE ALLEY, MAC.

[Written at the time of the attempted enforcement of the Sunday laws in New York's new penal code.]

Come into the alley, Mac,
For the Sathurday noight has gone;
Come into the alley, Mac,
Ol'd discourse wid yeself alone;
For the roundsman shure will not come back,
And the sergeant's bloind as a sthone.

The throuble will soon begin
Wid the new Sunday law, d' ye see,
And we'll hav our hands full wid runnin' 'em in,
And consthruin' the code lagally;
So Ol'd hav ye attind till the wag av me chin,
And poshted on law ye will be.

All noight was Oi kept awake
By a chap wid a big bassoon,
And Oi foind by the code it'll be lagal to make
An exhample av that gossoon,
On the charge av wilfully thryin' to break
The Sabbath all up wid his chune.

By the selfsame section, av ye hear a dhrum
Wid a funeral gang on Broadway,
Aresht the corpse, Mac, the son-av-a-gun,
For not dyin' some other day.
And shnake in thim Dutchmen, ivery wan—
It's no roight has a band to play
And sorely disthract wid haythenish fun
Thim payple as wants to pray.

Oi'd advoise ye to slug and take to the jug
That naygur down on yer bate,
Av ye catch him shavin'; ye've a roight to lug
Any barber tru the sthrate
For breaking the Sabbath wid a lather-mug;
It's a croime now to be nate.

Thim bootblacks, too—we hav thim foine,
And the Arabs as sells the Sun;
For the code sez naythur av thim shall shoine
On Sunday for annywan.
Such deshperate villains do be in our loine,
And Oi'm antishipathin some fun.

It's a jooty, d'ye see, to squelch the news
What thim rashcally papers do print;
And anny mon wid black on his shoes
Is on worldly vanity bint,
An' divil a bit betther nor Chatham sthrate Jews
Who won't kape Sunday or Lint.

And by the same token, there's orthers given
Reshpecthin' the measures to take
Wid Moses an' Aaron, who niver count sivin
From the proper front ind av the wake,
But shpile all their show av gethin' to hivin
Giving the code a cowld shake.
We'll hav thim pulled in by half-pasht elivin,
For the law and the goshpel's sake.

But, Mac, av ye think to remain on the foorce,
Kape in wid the boss av the ward.
Thin selfin' av rum there's mony things worse,
And a wink's as good as a nod
To wan av "the foinest," the same's a blind horse;
So ye'll govern yerself in accord
Wid the charity clause in the code, av coorse,
The consthruin' av which is broad.

There's more Ol'd call till yer moind
Consarnin' thim Sunday laws,
But it's dhry Oi'm gethin', Oi foind,
Wid exshpoundin' the why an' because;
Oi'm thinkin' it's toime to be takin' some koind
Av a dhrink to moisthen me jaws;
Which being necessithy, codes don't boind
You and me to shplit laygal sthraws.

—Max in Liberty.

ANSWERS TO

Christian Questions

AND

Arguments.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Price, Twenty-five Cents.

Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

Admirers of Walt Whitman

Will each want his last work. Just out.

SPECIMEN DAYS AND COLLECT.

Including

AUTOBIOGRAPHY, HOSPITAL SKETCHES, DEMOCRATIC VISTAS, ETC,

Three hundred and seventy-four pages of hearty, whole some prose and poetry, never before published. Will be sent on receipt of $2. Address,

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Moral Education; Its Laws and Methods.

By DR. J. R. BUCHANAN, President of the American University, Boston.

400 pp. Cloth, $1.50. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"It will do a great work towards emancipating the race from error and superstition, and building up a higher humanity" (Gen. E. F. Bullard, of N.Y.).

"It contains more and higher wisdom on the subject of which it treats than all the other books ever written on education" (Rev. B. F. Barrett, of Pa).

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

THE PEOPLE'S READER.

A sketch of man's physical, political mental, and social development in past, present and future.

Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A man of Liberal views, under 35, wishes to correspond with a lady of like views; must not be over 30, and with some means, and fair education.

Address, M. REEVES,
New Bridge, Union Co.,
2t4 Oregon.

Correspondence Solicited.

A young man of 29 wishes to correspond with a young lady, with a view to matrimony; one willing to come to a new country and help him build up a home.

Address JNO. SIMONS,
Utica, Meagher Co.,
4t3 Montana.

Housekeeper Wanted.

One who is capable of managing a small family can hear of a good situation by addressing WM. ALLEN,
2t4 Fenton, Mich.

WANTED

A situation in a grocery store, as clerk or manager, by a man who is thoroughly familiar with the business, and competent to take charge, if necessary. Must be in some healthy town; inland in the Western States preferred. Would like to locate in some growing place where employment could be obtained for my two sons, aged respectivly 22 and 19 years—strong, industrious, intelligent boys; and for my two oldest daughters. For reference as to character I can refer to Benjamin C. Sweet, Hamilton, R.I., or to the Hamilton Web Co., of the same place, where we hav been known and employed for the past ten years. Address

ABRAHAM FIRTH, SR.,
Hamilton, Washington Co.,
Rhode Island.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

THE

COLLEGE OF THERAPEUTICS,

Boston, Mass.

(Medical Department of the American University),

begins its spring session on the 2d of April, 1883. For information address the president,

3t4 DR. J. R. BUCHANAN, Boston.

SPECIAL OFFER

TO

TRUTH SEEKERS.

The J. R Perry Piano and Organ Company desire to introduce their instruments to all lovers of music, at the lowest cost to purchasers, by selling direct. The Perry Piano contains the latest and most important improvement yet made—a self-sustaining sounding-board and bridge, which will never permit the board to spring, nor allow the tones to become thin and wiry. The Organs contain more patented inventions than any other make. The Mason & Hamlin are the only Organ Company who are using any of them, they having purchased the use of Perry's Flute and Celeste and Reed Board in 1876. We offer to place these Pianos and Organs by the side of any other, no matter what their reputation, and will compete both in price and quality. For full particulars address J. R. PERRY, P. O. Box 367, Wilkesbarre, Pa., who will furnish illustrated catalog. 9t47

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Rubber Elastic Appliance, in 30 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for Circular. (Say in what paper you saw advertisement.) Address CAPT. W. A. COLLINGS, Smithville, Jefferson Co., N. Y. ptifeb

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLET & Co., Portland, Me.

80 Court st. Brooklyn

THE

"WILSONIA,"

TWO YEARS AGO

WILLIAM WILSON,

THE INVENTOR OF

WILSONIA,

AN ENGLISH SCIENTIST, MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN, LECTURER ON ELECTRICAL THERAPEUTICS, AUTHOR OF THE "TRIAL OF MEDICIN," THE "LANGUAGE OF DISEASE," "MEDICAL FALLACIES," ETC.,

Introduced to the People of the United States His

MAGNETIC GARMENTS

For the cure of Disease without Medicine or Medica Treatment. The Statement made by him at that time that his Magnetic Clothing, if worn for any form of Disease (and as advised), would cure ninety per cent of the so-called Incurables, has been verified, he having Clothed and Cured Thousands of Persons of all Forms of Disease. Positive proof of this has appeared in all the leading Newspapers by Testimony of many of our most Prominent and Wealthy Citizens, who, having been Cured by the

Wilsona Magnetic Garments

After all other Treatment had failed, were pleased to assist the Inventor in giving confidence to the Suffering Invalids of America by allowing him to use their well-known and respected Names as Reference; and it is now admitted by many most highly accomplished Scientists and Physicians that the Success and Cures attending the introduction of "Wilsonia" Magnetic Clothing has been unprecedented in the history of Electrical Therapeutics. In the face of such Positive Proof as given by us no person can doubt the value of this Invention in all cases.

Therefore why continue the Suicidal System of taking Drugs?

SEND $1.50 FOR A PAIR OF

"Wilsonia" Magnetic Insoles.

Sure Preventive of Cold Feet—the Forerunner of All Kinds of Disease.

Consultation Free.

Send for Pamphlet and Information to the only Office where the Inventor can be seen.

Address all Communications to

DAVID J. COTTER,

80 COURT STREET, BROOKLYN

"VICTORIA"

MAGNETIC APPLIANCES

FOR THE TREATMENT OF ACUTE AND CHRONIC DISEASES IS UNEQUALED IN THE HISTORY OF MEDICAL THERAPEUTICS.

We hav repeatedly been asked what the difference is between the VICTORIA MAGNETIC GARMENTS and its other old predecessors. We desire to be brief, and feel that this information is demanded at this time, as it has been asked over and over again,

At this point all comparisons end, and contrast begins. The old garments were slow in their action. The VICTORIA is quick and sure.

The old garments lacked the power to giv more than temporary relief, while the VICTORIA penetrates the system, and permanently cures the trouble for which it is recommended.

The old appliances DID NOT HOLD THEIR MAGNETIC CURRENTS OVER THIRTY DAYS. The VICTORIA, however, is constructed on scientific principles, being permanent in force by the aid of its "ARMATURES," "VOLTAIC PILES," and "CONDUCTORS."

In brief, the old appliances, like Stephenson's discarded engin, are switched off the track, while the VICTORIA goes on its way, winning golden opinions from all sorts of people.

Those who use these reliable and scientific goods can verify this fact, wherein lies the greatest danger that "HYPOCRISY IS THE TRIBUTE VICE PAYS TO VIRTUE." "IMITATION IS THE CONCESSION FAILURE MAKES TO SUCCESS."

NO INVALIDS NEED DESPAIR.

VICTORIA HAS NO EQUAL.

Send for circulars and price-lists to

Dr. Thayer,
455 Fulton Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Please write us a history of your case and we will giv you full information.

Don't waste time and money with vile patent medicin, which kills more than it cures. 13t3

DR. FELLOWS,
Vineland, New Jersey,

A regularly educated and legally qualified physician and most successful, as his practice will prove, cures all forms of Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases. Spermatorrhea and Impotency, as the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an External Application in from 30 to 90 days.

MIDDLE-AGED AND OLD MEN.

There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuation of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen, will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows's External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the organs.

☞ Consultation by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable, and correspondence strictly confidential.

PRIVATE COUNSELOR.

Sent to any address securely sealed for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhea or Seminal Weakness, giving the cause, symptoms, horrible effects and cure followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuinness. Should be read by all.

☞ Remember no medicin is given. Address DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey. Be sure and state in what paper you saw this.

THE TRUTHSEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 5. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY M. W. BENNETT. | New York, Saturday, February 3, 1883. | NO. 21 CLINTON PLACE, NEAR BROADWAY. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

DR. PARKER laments that in London "you cannot maintain one single daily religious newspaper. In three months it would be dead."

MR. CRAWFORD, a Glasgow merchant, is about to present the city of London with a statue of Burns, at a cost of $15,000. Mr. Crawford is an Ayrshire man, as Burns was. The statue will be placed in the Thames Embankment Garden.

A MINISTER complains to the Observer that he "lacks ideas and the faculty of expressing them." He may not be aware of it, but he possesses the accomplishments which more than anything else distinguish a man of God from a white man.

NINE-TENTHS of the crime of the world is perpetrated after sundown, and if the Society for the Prevention of Crime is sincere in its work, it will immediately ask Congress to enact a law to prevent the sun going down before ten o'clock P.M.—Norristown Herald.

QUEEN VICTORIA is about sixty, very rich, with an annual income of over $3,000,000, but spends only about $100,000, yet her son, the Prince of Wales, when he gets into debt applies to Parliament for relief. No wonder paupers are legion in Great Britain, and Ireland goes hungry.

ACCORDING to the Publishers' Circular, the number of religious works which saw the light of last year in England was 789, while the number of novels was only 420. This fact may go far toward justifying the general complaint about the "pernicious tendencies of modern literature."

GEORGE C. MILN, the tragedian, has printed an advertisment in the daily papers announcing in a commercial manner the dissolution of partnership with Colonel Burleigh. He has also announced his retirement from the editorial chair of The Alliance, and says that the public will hear no more of him except as an actor.

THE Tombstone, Arizona, Epitaph contains this announcement of a unique sort of church festival: "On Saturday evening, the 20th inst., a grand dramatic and musical entertainment will be given at Schieffelin Hall for the benefit of the Methodist and Presbyterian churches. The third act of 'Caste' will be given; also the mad scene from 'Article 47;' the whole to conclude with refreshments and dancing."

THE wife of John Zimbrick, of Milwaukee, Wis., killed her three children one day last week, the oldest of whom was seven years of age, and the youngest eighteen months, in a most brutal manner, literally cutting them to pieces and disemboweling them. Mrs. Zimbrick was at once arrested. She took her arrest very calmly, saying that she had read in the Bible that it was right to sacrifice children. She is suffering from that species of mental disease known as a beleif in the Bible in the case of an innocent person, and "religious insanity" in a criminal.

As odd a looking bride and groom as one ever sees, and who, after the circumstances surrounding them were known, set tongues a-wagging and made laughter contagious, were seen at the Union Depot this morning. The couple consisted of an old man fully seventy years of age, over six feet in hight, with flowing gray hair, and carrying on his arm a pair of that kind of saddlebags used thirty years ago, and a girl just fourteen years old, who in hight would reach about to the old man's vest pocket. They are on their wedding tour. They came in from some point in Alabama last night, and are bound for some point in Oregon. A passenger on the same train on which they came in last night says they were the center of observation, because of their childlike lovingness and general "greenness." The old man is by profession a Methodist minister, going to a conference in Oregon, and combines pleasure with business by taking along with him a living Christmas present.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

THE total eclipse of the sun on the 6th of May next will last six minutes, and no longer one will probably occur within the next hundred years. It will be partially visible in many places, but few will see it in its entirety, as its path lies almost entirely through the ocean, touching land nowhere but on a little island in the South Pacific called Caroline Island, which is out of the track of any established commerce or travel. The French government has determined to send an expedition to the island, and it is probable a grand international gathering of astronomers will meet there to take part in the scientific quest.

A VERY estimable woman, so far as character is concerned, says the Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette, was sent with high recommendations to Senator Vest, of Missouri, for a place in one of the departments. Understanding that a clerical post was what was wanted, the senator told her to make her application in writing. Next day the good woman brought her formal application. The senator and a friend looked over it, and concluded that it she was incompetent for the position sought. She was informed of the verdict, and said with a burst of tears: "Now, see how easy it is to make a mistake. That was written by a person high up in the department. As for myself, I can't write at all."

THE Boston Transcript says: "Rev. Joseph Cook has been around the globe. Emptying his treasures before his Tremont Temple audience, Monday, it could not be found that he had picked up anything new abroad. It was the same familiar lot. There was our old friend 'environment,' and our intimate acquaintances 'axiomatic theology' and 'natural supernaturalism,' together with a job lot of German names and picturesque dogmatism, but nothing new. Hold! there was one thing, to wit 'the coronal eye,' which is accorded to the people of Great Britain. And a fine thing a 'coronal eye' must be—that is, to a bald-headed man; but even he must doff his hat to utilize this new optical feature."

FOR a minister of the gospel, says the San Francisco Chronicle, the fervency of whose piety has earned him the sobriquet of "Hallelujah," the Reverend Henry Cox, D.D., United States Pension Agent, is a peculiarly thrifty man. He has just swindled a blind soldier of the Mexican and civil wars out of $5,000 back pension, and is now being investigated by the United States authorities. He was only recently mulcted in the sum of $2,535, placed in his hands by a confiding widow, and declares that if he is ruined in the present exposure he will resort to preaching again. The blind soldier's prospects of recovering his money are considered slim. His case is a sad one, but people in general are beginning to lack sympathy for those who lose money nowadays by foolishly intrusting it to a minister or priest.

THE collection of papers relating to Benjamin Franklin which Henry Stevens has been making for many years in London, and which has been purchased by the United States, is said by a correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette to be invaluable. Some of the manuscripts were found in a tailor's shop, where they had remained seventeen years. One was cut into a pattern for a sleeve, and another was crossed with the figures of a customer's measurements. The papers hav been carefully mounted, and bound in sixty volumes. The most curious and valuable is the original of the petition of the Continental Congress to the king, indorsed by its presiding officer, Henry Middleton, and marked as having passed through Franklin's hands on Oct. 26, 1774. Another gem is the earlist autograph of Franklin, the manuscript of his "Articles of Belief and Acts of Religion," dated 1728. There is a letter by Franklin to Cadwallader Colden, earnestly advising him to marry, and giving many reasons why a man is likely to become worthless and unhappy unless he is a husband. Moral and other considerations are mingled in the most amusing way. An argument is even made in favor of marrying old women—"they are so grateful."

PROF. C. A. YOUNG, of Princeton College, in a recent lecture, made the following interesting statements: The earth is about 8,000 miles in diameter. If you could make a straight railroad around the equator it would take just about twenty-six days to make the circuit of it, at forty miles an hour, without any change of stations. No practical means of conveyance will take you around it in less than three months. Then the moon, our next neighbor, is about thirty times as far away as the earth's diameter—about 240,000 miles. That is not so very inconceivable. Then, when we come to the sun, we find its distance is about four hundred times as great as that of the moon—about 95,000,000 miles. Those figures mean nothing until you take an illustration. Take a railroad from the earth to the sun, with a train running forty miles an hour without stops, and it would take about 265 years and a little over to make the journey. So that, if the first settlers of this country, at the time they started from the mother country, had started from the sun by this railroad, they would be just about reaching this country now. But very few of them could hav afforded it, for even at a cent a mile the fare would hav been $930,000. But when we come to consider the nearest star, whose distance is two hundred thousand times as great, we can do nothing with it, even in our imagination. If we should count the money that it would take for a railroad journey to it, even at a cent a mile, it would come to two hundred thousand millions of dollars—a hundred times the amount of the national debt of the United States. I do not suppose there is money enough in the world to pay the fare of one person.

COOK is getting into disrepute with his Christian brethren. Evidently his shallowness and vulgarity are coming to the surface in Boston. Speaking of one of his efforts, the Christian Register says: "The lecture was as numerical as usual, containing eighteen propositions to prove that death does end probation. Among other evidence, he presents ten or a dozen scripture texts, some of which were rather strained for the purpose of the occasion. Others do undoubtedly giv color and support to such a theory. But, then, the thought arises, Are the words of Peter and Paul on this subject to be accepted without question? Let their utterances be tried by tests of reason and conscience and the best light of to-day. It is not strange that Peter and Paul should teach some of the superstitions of their day; but it is strange that we should not appeal to-day from their utterances. Let us prove all things, and hold fast that which is good." And the Christian Union voices its poor opinion of him in this wise: "What I do not know about the 'new theology,'" it suggests as a truthful title to his recent prelude. "The new theology," it says, "is the nineteenth century thinking on religion for itself. Mr. Cook looks at this stalwart thinker, pondering the problems of God, man, and destiny, and endeavors to tell him in five propositions what his thinking amounts to. The new theology is a mountain stream rushing forward to an unknown ocean of eternal truth, with eddies, and swirls and back-currents; with some mud, and not a little foam, but with real force and progress. Mr. Cook endeavors to convert it into a pond with very narrow shores and no current. His five propositions are almost as much like the real thing as the bottle which a traveler brings home from the Holy Land is like the River Jordan. His suggestion that Professor Dorner is the father of the new theology shows how utterly he fails to conceive its source; his statement that it concerns mainly eschatology shows how utterly he fails to conceive its nature. He gets just as near an adequate conception of the new theology as the Romish priesthood did to an adequate conception of the Reformation when they attributed it to Martin Luther's desire to get married."

News of the Week.

A REVOLUTION is in progress in Ecuador, S. A.

LOSSES by fire in this city in 1882 amounted to $4,194,960.

THE winter carnival at Montreal came to an end last Saturday.

THE many recent fires hav somewhat embarrassed the insurance companies of Chicago.

EDWIN BOOTH, the American tragedian, is playing in Berlin, Germany, with great success.

THE president of the Michigan College of Medicin has been sued for $10,000 for alleged malpractice.

THE American Peace Society, of Boston, has come into full possession of $40,000, recently bequeathed to it.

A HURRICANE in Limerick, Ireland, last week knocked down many houses, damaged several vessels, and blew a railroad train off the track.

JANUARY 25th was the 124th anniversary of the birth of Robert Burns. The event was celebrated in this city by the various Scotch societies.

GEN. GRANT was recently offered the presidency of the National Rifle Association, but declined it as he would not hav time to attend to its duties.

DAVITT, Healy, and Quinn, Irish agitators at Dublin, hav been given a week to choose between giving bail or going to prison for inciting lawlessness.

A SOCIETY has been formed in Philadelphia for the purpose of providing non-sectarian religious reading in raised type free for the use of blind persons.

A "NINETEENTH CENTURY CLUB" has been formed in New York. Its members are of almost every shade of religious belief. The president is Mr. Courtlandt Palmer.

A MAN in this city is endeavoring to eat thirty pairs of quails in thirty consecutiv days to decide a bet of $1,000. Thus far he has had no set-backs, and the thirty days expire on the 5th.

HENRY BERGH, the president of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, writes to Mayor Edson asking him to forbid the practice of glove contests between pugilists in this city.

THE Rev. J. M. Masters, the Cambridge, Mass., clergyman, is accused of having a $1,000 bond in his possession, which had been stolen from ex-Gov. Weston, of New Hampshire. The case is on trial.

COMMITTEES hav been appointed by the Chamber of Commerce and the board of aldermen of New York to take steps for the celebration of the centennial of Evacuation Day on the 26th of November next.

THE Catholic church of Wheeling, W. Va., is making war upon the Knights of St. John, a German Catholic Society. Members of the society are threatened with excommunication unless they withdraw from it before March 1st.

GOV. GROVER CLEVELAND of New York is said to be developing into a most exemplary governor. He works hours before the legislativ sessions, and the senators and representativs hav his example daily pointed out to them as worthy of being followed.

AN Overdank Club has been organized in Vienna, Austria, in memory of the young Italian Freethinker recently hanged by the Austrian government for alleged conspiracy. The members of the club are persecuted by the police, and arrested on trivial pretexts.

THE old building at the corner of Tremont and Court streets, Boston, with which many historical events are associated, is to be razed and another erected on the site. Gen. Washington occupied a portion of it in October, 1780; Harrison Gray Otis, the celebrated lawyer, was one of its first occupants; and Daniel Webster and many other noted members of the bar had rooms in it.

Selections.

Evolution.—The Radical Ideas of a Preacher.

From Henry Ward Beecher's Lecture at the Cooper Union.

The subject that I am to speak on to-night is Evolution. There is often, and often justly, a prejudice against a man attempting to preach upon science who has not devoted his whole strength to it, and scientific men are apt to regard them with the same species of benevolent contempt with which moral teachers regard scientific men when they undertake to draw moral inferences from scientific facts. Men whose business it is to propagate moral ideas hav one standpoint; men whose business it is to find out simple scientific facts hav another, and if I were to-night to discuss different standpoints of fact I should feel myself amenable to criticism. I propose nothing of this kind.

A great change has taken place within the last thirty years—a greater change probably than ever took place in any former period of—well, I may say five hundred consecutiv years. It has been quite a revolution, but it has become so general, and so affects the underlying thought and feeling of the community, that I think one should giv it more than a mere passing attention. And, especially, as I am in profound sympathy with the general tendencies of scientific investigation, and as it is my business professionally to deduce from all truth some application that shall better human life, sweeten human dispositions, encourage men to do good and to do what is right, I hope I may pass unscathed the criticism if I undertake to show that the revolutionary tendencies of the doctrin of Evolution are more in seeming than in fact, and, though extremely radical, are radical in the right direction, and are of the right kind. The doctrin of Evolution has itself gone through evolution It was hinted at long ago, but disappeared and came up again and again, each time occupying more space and educing more and more probabilities, until at last, in one day, it has assumed a form so definit, with roots so deep, that it surely has come to stay.

What is Evolution? As contradistinguished from the old notion of creation by the instantaneous obedience of matter to the divine command, it is the teaching of creation as gradual, and as the result of steadily-acting natural laws through long periods of time—periods so long that not even the imagination can stretch to the borderland of their far-off horizon. We hav been brought up largely to found our notions of creation upon the poetic expressions of scripture. The command, "God said, Let there be light, and there was light," is sublime poetry. We all felt as if God came to the fore-front on the creating day and said, "Let there be light," and instantly there was light. This is the almost universally-prevalent impression. But it has now been sufficiently demonstrated, as I think, to enter easily into the belief of men, that the method of creation was utterly different from this; that it was a creation beginning with the very smallest elements—elements inconceivably small—and then, gradually, through the force of natural laws, unfolding little by little, the whole terraqueous globe. This, in short, is the theory of Evolution.

Now, when this is propounded, as regards the formation of the globe itself, the astronomers tell us that the world was ether and that through a process of condensation it came into a nebulous condition, and that the conditions kept on changing, but under natural laws, until at last it assumed approximate solidity, at any rate fluidity, and that little by little it became solid, and rocks were deposited; then upheavals, grindings, and various other influences created soil; and so instead of the world being created by the immediate fiat of God, and in instantaneity, it has been slowly forming through myriads and myriads and myriads of ages. Then came successiv stages of existence; the inorganic first; then the lowest forms of vegetable life, then slowly with many cataclysms, revolutions, and disasters, animate existence—conscious life, or life below consciousness—gradually began to prevail upon the earth; not without many interruptions, now plunging into dust and now appearing again, and little by little growing stronger and stronger, the whole tending to adaptation to climate, and to the thousand and one other physical conditions, and working in a spiral line, from the simple to the complex—from lower to higher organizations, from poorer to better—until we come to that class in the animal kingdom which is called the mammalia—the vertebrates—and finally reach the point: Man.

Up to this point, while there are many divergencies among scientific men as to details, I think I may say that there is absolutely no difference of opinion as to the general application of this doctrin to the formation of the globe, of the vegetable kingdom, and of the animal kingdom—until you come up to man. When we come to that point, my own strong impression is that were it not illusory, or supposed, moral influences—I suppose that the whole human family would be swept, without exception, into the same general category, and it would be thought that man himself has been unfolded from the lower forms into the human form, and with human intelligence. If this thought in regard to man—that he is a creature proceeding from and being the unfoldment of the inferior animal creation—were to separate man from the idea of the divine creativ force, it would indeed throw a shadow upon our minds. The very idea that man—who, if he has no other quality, is proud enough of himself, should hav descended the royal highway of the ape and monkey, is repugnant to every man's feelings. It is, therefore, a great comfort to me to assure you that you were not considered even worthy of coming down from the ape. The prevalent teaching of scientific men is that at a certain period there came a point where the developed animal (whatever his name was) stood, and a bifurcation was developed, the ape and all his tribe going off to the left, and the man to the right—the unfolding of man continuing but antedating the ape. You may therefore put aside any fear of descent from the ape, and even if you should see traits of that kind in the human being, you may rest assured that they do not come from the ape, but farther back.

On three points scientific men are at a disagreement. For there are three classes of evolutionists when you look at them in reference to moral questions—the Atheistic, of which class Mr. Haeckel, of Germany, is a very able exponent; the Agnostic, to which class most of the eminent English physicists belong; and the Theistic, or Christian, evolutionists.

The doctrin of evolution being the underlying philosophy of to-day, it is the philosophy by which ninety-nine per cent of the scientific investigators of our time are working. It is gradually spreading to all departments of effort. Its nomenclature and its thought are getting into the schools and the newspapers. The attempt to suppress it will fail. It had better be welcomed. If it be the truth, it is sure to bring forth righteousness. Of all things on earth, to undertake to disturb men's consciences and religious emotions by setting the public against it is one of the most unwise things conceivable, and the old folly of throwing the Bible at it ought not in our day to be repeated. They threw the Bible at the sun and the moon once, and it came back on their heads, and astronomy stands. They threw the Bible at geology, and geology stands. Let not the folly be repeated of throwing the Bible at the origin of man. I am not prepared to say that I believe man came from the lower animals, but I am prepared to say that if he did, it will afford explanation of many difficulties for which I can find no solution anywhere else. As yet it is a hypothesis, and the process of procedure with a hypothesis is to see if it will giv a solution of all difficulties, and giv a better solution of them than any other theory. That is what I think Evolution does.

Let us look, then, for a moment at the relation which it sustains to the almost universal belief in the existence and agency of a supreme intelligence. There are many who say that this notion of Evolution is the product of Atheism, and that it will lead to Atheism. In my own judgment, it leaves the question just where it found it. The scientific man tells me that it is not possible to prove the existence of God; and I say the same.

There are a great many men that say: "Admit that there is an Atheistic ground on which we can stand: what is going to be the influence of this doctrin of Evolution upon the sacred scriptures?" Very beneficial. In the first place, it is going to correct the absurd uses to which that book has been for so many ages condemned. The Bible itself is a most wonderful evolution. When you come to measure the time represented by that sacred book one is surprised. What other book ever was there that it took probably more than ten thousand years to write? Many people hav an idea that certain reporters, called prophets, went to see God and interviewed him; and that they sat down and he told them what to write; and everything in the Bible, they think, came right from the lips of God. The old doctrin of what is called plenary and verbal inspiration—that every word in the Bible proceeds from the mind of God, and that every statement in the Bible is ratified by the authority of God—is dying out among intelligent men. Mr. Ingersoll's whole pivotal power is the fact that among so large a number of men there has been an impression that everything in the Bible has been derived from God. What is the Bible? It is a history—that is what it is.

The period before the legends that are contained in Genesis is simply immeasurable. No one knows about it; no luminous interpretation of things preceding, yet we know that there was preceding existence. We come down to the time of Moses, and there were scattered through all the years certain documentary legends of the origin of man. They were the best statements of the then idea that prevailed in the East. They had certain notions in respect to the methods of creation; they were gathered together, not as absolutely true, but as giving the history of the thought and the beliefs of men in these very earliest periods. They might be true—they might be not; but they were the best that men had in those early ages, in the infancy of human thought and human intelligence. When writing the life of any man we write the life of his childhood; not that what he thought and did then was the best thing for him, but because it is necessary to the complete idea and understanding of the full-grown man by and by.

Then on, step after step, after five hundred years had rolled away another book would be written, and it gathered up the experience of the human race up to that time, in regard to government, the family condition, the great moral lights that had begun to develop themselvs. Four hundred years roll away, and there would be another addition, representing what had been gained in that four hundred years. A thousand years rolled by, and another part would be written, giving what was then the state of progress, and what was believed and thought and felt up to that time. And hundreds and thousands of years rolled away, and then came Jesus Christ. He never wrote a word, except on the ground. It was thirty or forty years after his death before there was a syllable written that the New Testament contains.

I hav said that the descent of man from an inferior race throws light on many points. Allow me to say a word on that subject. In the doctrin of human sinfulness the origin of evil has been greatly sought after and not found. Many generations of theologians hav had their rest disturbed by it. Now, if men were unfolded, step by step, rising higher and higher—if when they began to be men they were animals—you hav a good, firm foothold upon which you can stand, and from which you can throw light on many theological difficulties. In my childhood there was a great question rife, namely, What are the means necessary to the greatest good? New Haven discussed it, Princeton discussed it, and many other centers of religious and intellectual thought discussed it. We can see what they were looking after. Now, if it was the divine purpose that man should ascend from the lowest form, little by little, to the higher, then it is inevitable that man should go on under difficulties. If this was the divine idea, then you see produced what you see in every household in which a child is born. From unconsciousness, the child begins to hav a glimmer of consciousness; it begins to talk, but its English is broken; it begins to walk, but does so haltingly, and it is some time before it can run. It is inevitable that that child should make mistakes at first. The road to knowledge leads through blunders, as when a man, attempting to get into an inclosure in the dark, should butt his head against every picket in the fence until he should reach the gate, which should open almost without effort and permit him to enter; so largely has it been the history of the whole human race. If the whole race got along as we know the child gets along, then we know that the whole race got along by making mistake after mistake.

But if we conceive man at the highest point of mere animal development, these apparent sins then become virtues. The lion is not guilty of murder when he kills. He violates no restraint, because that is what he is made for. Look at his claws. The wolf was wade to be a wolf and the fox a fox. You might as well find fault with granit for being hard, or with clay for being soft, as with the animal creation for having the qualities of their nature. To them was given no reason, no moral sense, no sense of beauty, of taste, of imagination—nothing but to feed themselvs, to propagate their species, and then die. Now, man in his early history was an animal, but superinduced upon his animal sense was the moral sense. Here is the line between instinct and moral consciousness. The moment that came in, then the question was, Which shall rule, the animal sense or the higher sense? That struggle is going on to-day with every man. There is not a man anywhere who does not feel day by day, in the battle of life, that his purposes are better than his acts. It is a conflict between the upper man and the under man that constitutes the great bulk of sinfulness; and there you hav a theory that throws light upon a whole field that has hitherto been shrouded not merely in twilight but in impenetrable darkness.

Of course beyond this point there are a great many nice questions as to the nature of sin—the voluntary doing of that which a man knows to be wrong. These are questions of profound importance, but do not belong exactly to the topic of the lecture this evening. Here, then, is the doctrin of universal depravity—not, however, the old scholastic theory of Adam's fall and the imposition upon all mankind, for countless generations, of the penalties of this disobedience. When natural science comes in and tells us that that is not the divine method, and has not been the method of the ages, it takes away a monstrous nightmare. You do not believe in hell, and the men that preach it do not believe it. They think they do—and they are honest. There is a thing that may be called belief that is not a personal belief—a realizing belief. Do you suppose that any man who really believed it could rest a moment at ease? How could such a man be happy while believing in his soul that hundreds of millions of his fellow creatures were doomed to everlasting fire. Who would dare enter into marital relations and bring into life children, while really believing that the chances were ninety-nine in a hundred that they would go to hell forever? Every man with a heart says, "It is not so!" This does not touch the question whether consequences follow conduct, in life. I believe they do. I believe in probation, and I believe you carry out of life that which you hav sown and gathered in this life, and if men are prepared for the higher course they will enter it; and if not prepared, that they will go through a probationary period until they come to it.

Another point. Men will say: "If this doctrin be true what light will it throw on the struggling questions of to-day?" There is a form of Socialism, for example, that is the lowest form of radicalism—as in the case of the Socialistic missionary who lately went West. But above and beyond that there is a noble and dignified idea. There is endless strife and endeavor to equalize the conditions of men. Evolution throws light on this also. It says the line of ascent is the line of the nerve; rank is according to the complexity of the brain. So we go on from the lowest instincts of the animal in man to the highest conception of the human intellect.

There are various schemes for the reorganization of society meaning to do this—to equalize weakness and strength. That is not nature, and nature will not tolerate it. We cannot equalize weakness and strength of brain. If a man has a little brain he has got to be a little man, and if he has a large brain he has got to be a large man. It is a generous conception to form such a partnership as that the strong shall care for the weak. That is an idea which is beautiful, and it may be possible to do that in the millennium; but at present the law of nature prevails, and the man that has got brain power will succeed, and the man that has no brain power will not succeed. You can't make an unthinking man equal to a thinking man. You can't make a spendthrift equal to an economical man. Men are essentially different in their composition, and nature, that sifts and riddles everything from the lowest to the highest, and always in the direction of increasing strength, sacrificing the relativ imperfection all the time, throwing it away, and from generation to generation advancing the stroke, that by and by the average strength will be vastly increased—nature is still alive and still doing the same thing. You can never baffle that great law of nature that makes two twice as much as one; that makes four twice as much as two; that makes a man all through five times as great as a man that is only half a man. With all your schemes of benevolence—they are very benevolent and oftentimes very noble and effecting great good—yet you cannot touch the bottom until you get to this law, that the human mind determins the condition of a man and his worth everywhere. He is strong not in physical strength, but in mind and moral strength.

That man is the highest, and if there are many of them that class is the highest, and you cannot by any boosting, or by any method of screws or adjustment, make the under equal to the upper under such circumstances; and the way out from poverty and insignificance and all the miserable experiences of undercast men is: Go up yourself, and your affairs will come up after you; development, education, more brain, better brain; and if you are the prophet of your children, to go over into the promised land, send your children higher. The elevation of mankind in moral and intellectual culture is the only way to cure the evils of society. There are men who say: "Well, if the doctrin of evolution is true, your churches are all cut up by the roots." I beg your pardon; theology is going—no doubt about that. I shall not mourn it. All my early days were spent in the West, in that state populous with trees, Indiana, and there we never could raise a good crop fit for human food until we had cut the trees off. Theology looks to me like a thicket in the forest, and as soon as we can get a good deal of it open to the air we will plant better theology and hav better crops.

The whole theory of morals is to be profoundly advantaged, I think, by the question of evolution. Of course just now there is a great deal of thinking, and more or less comparison of thought, on the principle of an amicable adjustment of controversies as respects the orign of morals; but one thing is very certain, and that is that the human race unfolding is unfolding in the direction of reason and moral sense and affectionate sense. Essential truths run down and throw their roots into the great natural laws. For every great precept, for every essential, practical doctrin, it is better for the world that we should be able to say that it stands, not on the authority of the priest, nor even on the authority of experience, but that it stands rooted as a part of nature itself. If we cast off intolerable superstitions, year after year, influences will work with the very seasons in favor of virtue and of a true religion. I thank God, therefore, for the growing light and power of the great doctrin of Evolution.

Pleasant Words.—We Hope They Are True.

From the Universe.

Mr. Eugene M. Macdonald, the new editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, is a clear, vigorous, and forcible writer, and has the important tact of dealing with practical subjects which profoundly interest the intelligent masses. He will safely and bravely guide that good ship of thought on its destined course.

Infidel Philosophy.

Can any one inform me where there is a lot of souls lying around loose ready for family use? There never was a soul or mind or thought without a physical organization, a nervous system, and a nerve center, and never can be. The mind is developed only as the brain is developed. "It grows with its growth and strengthens with its strength." There may be brain without mind (as in the case of idiots), but never mind without brain. It is just as idle to talk about a soul or mind after the brain has been dissolved as it would be to expect music from an old fiddle after the instrument has been destroyed. The idea of a future existence, of living on indefinitly, of getting good and doing good, is a grand thought, and I can truly say that I ardently desire its realization; but castles built in the air will never do to liv in.

Ministers may be regarded as barnacles; they serve no good turn, but always impede the motion of the vessel. Every advance in science has been fought step by step by the priesthood. In another respect they are like sponges, absorbing the substance of society and giving back nothing. They are always declaiming against Voltaire and Paine, but never attempt to answer their arguments. They always shun a fair and open encounter, but take shelter behind the coward's castle, and stab in the back those whom they dare not meet in an open field. There is a certain substance which Webster defines as "a kind of paste, composed of whiting and linseed oil," which enters too largely into their composition, and a great lack of that kind of stuff which brave men are made of.

There are in the town in which I liv four churches. Two church edifices hav been recently built and equipped at an expense of nearly $30,000. The other two are worth about $10,000. The interest on the amount invested would feed, clothe, and educate every poor child in the town. The money paid to preachers, and otherwise expended to keep the churches in running order, would more than pay the poor taxes, alleviate the wants of every cripple and invalid, and in every way provide for the poor and dependent. But Christianity has a great mission to perform, and the plethoric priest must be petted, though the poor starve and the children grow up in rags and ignorance. I ask the candid thinker to canvass this matter fairly. Look about your own town or village and see if you do not find the statement verified. Ask yourself what humanity requires at your hands, and if there is any system of religion with higher claims. The Christian religion has been on trial nearly two thousand years; let us feed the hungry and clothe the naked and educate the ignorant for half that length of time, and Christianity will be at a discount. Then we shall find out what we must do to be saved.

"Take no thought of to-morrow."

If this injunction had been followed, the keel of a vessel would never hav been laid, nor an acre of land plowed. There would be no fields of waving grain, and the primeval forests would hav remained unbroken. Man would hav been but one grade above the ourang-outang, dwelling in caves and subsisting upon wild fruits and such animals as he could capture. Every house built, every rail laid, every crank turned, every sail spread, is in direct violation of this command. As man rises higher in the scale of being, as he learns more of nature and her laws, one by one these holy fetters will be laid aside; and long before he has reached the eminence which he is capable of attaining they will be discarded altogether.

If man is capable of making progress, thus clogged and fettered, who can predict the progress which will be made when he becomes entirely free? The mind will always be subject to blind-staggers until the fear of hell is wiped out. The man who fears hell is a coward. The man who does a good act only to secure heaven is a selfish sneak. Away with rewards, away with punishments! The truly noble man will do acts of kindness regardless of the fear of hell or the hope of heaven.

Many efforts hav been made to harmonize the scriptures with science and the laws of nature. Such efforts must ever prove abortiv. The Bible was written by ignorant men in an ignorant age. The people were too ignorant to understand and too superstitious to investigate. If God had written a book, he would hav spoken in terms which plain people could understand. If he meant an "indefinit period of time" he would not hav spoken of a day, and then mention "the morning and the evening," which has no fit application to an "indefinit period of time." If he meant to tell us not to be "over-anxious about the future" (so ministers explain it; query, how should a minister know what God means when he says something else?) he would not hav told us not to think about it at all, and then call our attention to the lilies of the field to show us that it will be just as well for us if we don't.

Any book may pass for inspiration if the big lies are taken for miracles and the mistakes for mysteries. The superstitious claim that the Bible is the cornerstone of our free institutions, but the builders hav rejected it as unfit material either for the foundation of our free institutions, or for the temple of science. The six days of creation, a flat earth, making man out of mud and beautiful woman out of crooked ribs, seeing all the kingdoms of the earth from a high mountain, the story of the flood, Joshua's cup-and-ball tricks with the sun and moon, will never do for science to tie to, and are about as fit for our common schools as the "Arabian Nights."

Let some genius take all the big stories in the Bible, such as chasing a flock of devils into a herd of swine, for instance, converting ribs into women, the tricks performed by the great planetary juggler, the apple and snake story, the athletic performances of Samson, the sea voyage of Jonah (in which he lost heavily on a venture in sperm oil), the great tricks of legerdemain up in Egypt, the feat of the three fire kings, the story of Samuel and the dreams of the prophets, how Lot's wife turned into an "Old Salt," and weave them into a romance then combine; "Arabian Nights," Gulliver's Travels, and Baron Munchausen, and it would amount only to a puff of smoke compared to this thunderbolt of Bible lies. Selah! Then take this Bible romance made up from these big lies, with all the obscene stories as an appendix, introduce the choice bit of literature into the common schools, and put God in the Constitution, then lift up thy brazen face, O Christian, and shout "Nearer, my God, to thee!"

My dear fellow-sinner, go to church, hear the choir sing, hear a long chapter read from the Bible, and a long prayer made, hear a long sermon preached, and the benediction pronounced, then go home and digest what thou hast learned. Ordinary fog will do for supper that night.

In a certain province in Spain, all the asses met in convention, and resolved "that long ears are an ornament, that we are superior to horses, that we will not associate with them, and that we will carry the officers at the next general parade."

Moral.—When Christians assert their superiority over such men as Paine and Ingersoll and Wakeman, and many others who might be mentioned, and denounce them as coarse and vulgar Infidels, it might be well for them to remember that the horses were not seriously affected by the resolutions of the asses, that they did not feel particularly envious on account of their long-eared ornaments, that they did not go into mourning because the asses cut their acquaintance, and that it was the officers, and not the asses, who decided how they should be mounted at the next general parade.

JOHN PECK.

Religious Poison.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Intolerance inheres in the religious spirit, says the historian, Milman. It would be too much to expect all Liberals to be free from its taint. Nobody who has carefully considered the nature of Liberalism looks for unity of thought among the host which reject orthodox fables. Diversity, not unity, is the natural outcome of individual, independent thinking. While all Liberals agree to this, is it not lamentable that any professed Liberal should condemn any other Liberal because of dissonance of views? It matters not what the subject matter is, ghosts or gods; temperance, time, or eternity. It is all the same. If the method of the old church remains, we will find the bitter poison of religion vitiating the humanitarianism of Liberal thought. Liberals affected by the ugly disease of sectarianism sigh for separation. They may agree upon ninety-nine points and differ upon one, and they want to separate and set up a small church-like establishment on the basis of the one point, on the well-known religious rule that he who "offends in one point is guilty of the whole," which would be a very queer principle in modern law courts.

In the Liberalist army are Free Religionists, Democrats, Republicans, Greenbackers, Socialists, Anarchists, Spiritualists, Materialists, Atheists, Agnostics, etc. They range from conservativ to radical. Religion has always insisted upon unity of thought as the only basis of agreement. Liberalism, on the other hand, affirms freedom of thought, without which there can be no Liberalism. Now, how does it look for a Liberal to measure his fellows with the yard-stick of the church?

In my late lecture trip to Minier, Braidwood, Gardner, Durand, Davis, I hav encountered more opposition from Liberals of the Free Religion type than I ever before encountered. In Gardner particularly there are professed Liberals who opposed my coming on the ground that I am "too radical." They confidentially declared they themselvs are radical, but I am "too-too." About this time I received an invitation to visit a Wisconsin city to lecture for the conservativ branch of a dismembered League. As I hav lost many engagements on account of my radicalism, I took occasion to promptly lose this one from the cream city. I propose in the future, as in the past, to be a free man, free to discuss any "ism" or "ology" on the wide earth, and I wish to hav it distinctly understood that I want no engagement from any society which fears the discussion of any question.

W. F. JAMIESON.

Davis, Ill., Jan. 29th.

BARNES, the evangelist, expects a call from Cincinnati to try his faith cure on the preservation of hams.

Translation.

The Tomb of Fanaticism.

[An examination of Lord Bolingbroke's doctrines. Written by Voltaire in 1767 and translated from the French by Avery Meriwether. Continued from THE TRUTH SEEKER of Feb. 4, 1882.]

CHAPTER XXVI.

THE MARTYRS.

Why did the Romans never persecute those unfortunate and despised Jews for their religion, and never compel them to renounce their superstitions, but permit them to practice all their rites and laws, and allow them to have their synagogues in Rome, and even count them among the citizens to whom they gave donations of wheat? And how does it happen that these same Romans, so indulgent, so liberal toward the unfortunate Jews, about the third century were very severe upon the worshipers of one particular Jew? Was it not because the Jews, occupied in selling gewgaws and love philters, were not incited by passion against the religion of the empire, while the Christians were intolerant and filled with passion?*

There were a few, in fact, who were punished, during the third century, for their fanaticism, but the number was so small that a Roman historian has not deigned to mention it. The Jews who revolted under Vespasian, Trajan, and Hadrian were severely chastised as they deserved to be; but the emperors defended them, even to protecting them in their little city Jerusalem, the name of which was changed because it had been the center of rebellion. The law, however permitted them to circumcise their children under the shadow of the Capitol and in all the provinces of the empire.

The priests of Isis were punished at Rome under Tiberius. Their temple was demolished, because it was merely a market of prostitution, and an abode for thieves; but the priests and priestesses were permitted to exercise their calling everywhere else. They would march with impunity from town to town; they performed miracles, cured sickness, predicted good fortunes, and went through the dance of Isis with castanets. This is what is fully explained in Apulius. Now observe that those same movements hav lasted unto our day.

There is still in Italy a few of those wanderers called the Zingari—among us they are called Gypsies, which is a contraction for Egyptians; in France they are called Bohemians, I believe. The only difference between them and the Jews is that the latter hav always pursued their business as idolaters, while the followers of Isis were small in number and were almost extinct.

The Roman magistrates who permitted the followers of Isis and the Jews to hav so much freedom permitted the same to all other sects of the world. Each God was welcomed at Rome:

Dignus Roma locus, quo deusomnis est (Ovid, Fast. lib iv, v. 270).

All the gods of the universe were becoming citizens of Rome. No one sect was sufficiently mad to wish the subjugation of the others, so all lived in peace.

The Christian sect was the only one which, at the end of the second century, dared to say that it wished for exclusive rights in the empire and that it would not only rule but would destroy all other religions; the followers of Christ ceased not saying that their God was a jealous God; a beautiful character for the supreme being, to impute to him the meanest of the vices!

The enthusiasts who preached to the assembly of Christians were a fanatical set. It was impossible not to find, among an assembly of such passionate people, unfeeling ones who insulted the priests, who disturbed public order, and who committed disgusting crimes. This is what has happened among the various sects of Europe, all of which, as we shall prove, hav destroyed a far greater number of martyrs than the number of Christians who were persecuted under the emperors.

The Roman magistrates, excited by the complaints of the people, allowed themselves to be led sometimes into doing cruel things; they condemned women to death, it is said, although that species of barbarity is not proved. But who will venture to reprehend the Romans for having been too severe, when we see the Christian Marcel, a centurion, cast his military girdle and his sword in the midst of the Roman eagles and cry out in a seditious voice: "I will only serve Jesus Christ, the everlasting king; I renounce the emperor." In what army would such pernicious insolence be allowed to go unpunished? I would not hav permitted it when I was secretary of war;* and the Duke of Marlborough would no more hav permitted such want of discipline than I would.

If it is true that Polycute, when in Armenia, and on the day he returned thanks to the gods in the temple, for a signal victory, chose that moment for overturning the statues and pouring the incense on the ground, is it not in all countries the crime of a fool?

When the deacon Laurent refused, at the request of the prefect of Rome, to contribute to the public taxes, when having promised to pay some of the money from the treasury of the Christians, at that time a very considerable body, he gave it away to beggars, was not this an insult to the emperor? Was it not a criminal injury to his majesty? It is doubtful whether there is a gridiron with six prongs for the priest Laurent, but it is certain that he merits the punishment.

The bombastic Gregory of Nyssus praised Saint Theodore, who thought of burning the temple of Cybil in Amassus, just as it was said that Erostratus burnt the temple of Diana. That incendiary, who certainly deserved death, was made a saint. We are thus forced to worship those who were punished with the extreme penalty of the law. All the tales of the martyrs, whom the writers hav copied from age to age, resemble somewhat the story of the "Golden Legend," so that in truth there is not a single tale which does not excite pity. One of the very first is the tale of "Eternity and Happiness." Eternity sees a ladder of gold which goes to heaven. (Jacob saw one of wood only; in this is marked the superiority of the new law.) Eternity mounts the ladder, she sees in a garden a large white shepherd attending to his flocks, who givs her a spoonful of milk and curds. After three or four such visions Eternity and Happiness are exposed to a bear and a cow.

A French benedict, named Ruinart, who answers to our compatriot Dodwell, received the pretended acts of the martyrs, which he called the Sincere Acts. Ruinart commenced with the martyr James, the eldest brother of Jesus, who was mentioned in the "Ecclesiastical History" of Eusebius, three hundred years after the event.

We must not forget that God was the brother of men. That eldest brother, it is said, was a very orthodox Jew; he did not cease praying and sacrificing in the temple even after the descent of the sacred spirit; he was not even then a Christian. The Jews called him Oblia, the Just; they requested him to declare from the platform of the temple that Jesus was an impostor; those Jews were fools for addressing themselves to the brother of Jesus. It then remained for this brother to declare that Jesus was the savior of the world. For this he was stoned.

What shall we say of the conversation of Ignatius with the emperor Trajan, who said to him: "Who art thou, impure spirit?" and of the unhappy Symphorosius, who was denounced by his household gods to the emperor Hadrian? And of Polycarp, whom the flames of a burning wood-pile refrained from touching, but who could not resist the cutting sword? And finally, what shall we say about the shoe of the sainted martyr Ephiphod, which cured a gentleman of the fever?

What shall we think of Saint Cassien, the schoolmaster who was whipped by his scholars? Of the holy woman Potamine, who refused to lay with the governor of Alexandria and was plunged for three hours in boiling resin, and came out with a finer and whiter skin?

What about Pionius, who rested sound and fresh in the midst of the flames, and then died in an unaccountable manner?

And then what must we say about the comedian Genest, who became a Christian while acting in a farce,† before the emperor Diocletian, and was condemned to death at the time when the emperor most favored the Christians?

The one Theban legion which was sent from the east to west to repress the sedition of the Bagaudes, which had already been put down, was slaughtered in a time when no one was persecuted and in a place where it was not possible to take four hundred men in battle; this was finally committed to writing two hundred years after that fine adventure!

It would be an unbearable burden to report the names of the pretended martyrs. However, I cannot refrain from running over the list of a few of the most celebrated.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

*There is no certain answer to this question of Lord Bolingbroke's. It is demonstrated that the ancient Romans did not persecute any one for their doctrines. That horrible crime has only been committed by Christians, and above all by the modern Romans. Even to-day there are ten thousand Jews at Rome who are countenanced though it is well known that they regard Jesus as an impostor. But if a Christian undertakes to say in the church of St. Peter, or in the place of Navone, that three are three and that the pope is not infallible, he would be infallibly burnt.

I hold it to be true that the Christians were only persecuted as factious revolutionists of the laws of the empire; they wished to bring about the destruction of the empire, and they succeeded [1771].

*Voltaire again boldly insinuates that Bolingbroke, who was once the secretary of war, is the author of this work.

†He counterfeited sickness, so the "Sincere Acts" say. "I am very stupid," says Genest. "Can you not cheer up?". "No; I must take the extreme unction of the Christians." As soon as two actors could anoint him, he was converted. Bear in mind that in the time of Diocletian the extreme unction was positively unknown in the Latin church [1771].

THE TRUTH SEEKER will be sent three months to new subscribers for half a dollar. Those interested in the spread of Freethought should exert themselvs to get up clubs of trial subscribers.

Scandal.

"Man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn."

If we would but contribute one-third as much to the comfort of our suffering fellow-creatures as we do to add to their miseries; if we could break loose from the bondage of selfishness, and partake of the feelings, the wants and woes, of the more unfortunate around us; if we would but take half as much pleasure in affording them relief as we do in intensifying their troubles by aspersing their motivs; if we would but speak all the good we know of others, instead of all the evil we imagin—we should giv evidence of our progress in true Liberalism—"doing as you would be done by;" that would proselyte more effectually than the loudest denunciation of error or valiant defense of our pet theory, while a calm sunlight would continually rest upon the placid waters of our bosoms, which now are too often ruffled by the winds of envy, avarice, and an inordinate desire to rise up by crowding others down.

Let any one perform a really meritorious act and very few will ever mention it, unless with a sneer, a knowing nod, a shrug of implication, or a positiv assertion that the good was only seeming—the motiv really infamous.

Let some idle chatterer, whose reputation for veracity is below that of a horse-trading deacon or a lightning-rod agent, tell some stupid, libelous story, or make some foul, miserable charge against the best and purest, and, like the crow cawing at the discovery of carrion, a whole flock will at once gather, echo the cry, and repeat and add to the hideous caw, caw, till they swell the first infamous croaking into a demoniacal, howling chorus of defamation.

Scandal has become our national sin. The great, the pure, the noble, and true hav but to accept places of trust and honor, and with the position comes the vilest misrepresentations, the foulest calumny. Let the victim seek to chase the scandal to its origin, to punish its author, and it is like pursuing the ignis-fatuus—it leads only through bogs and quagmires, ending in increase of vexation, sorrow, and defamation. You discover at the end of your search, it originated with the invisible, uncatchable fiend, "they say."

So true is this that our best citizens, those who would most ably fill places of trust and responsibility, shrink from the overwhelming deluge of calumny that is sure to be heaped upon any one that ventures to become a candidate for a position of honor or emolument; while convicted rogues and unscrupulous demagogs, with unblushing effrontery, shield themselvs from just censure and the denunciations of an outraged people behind the miserable fact that all public characters are liable to be the victims of scandal.

O slanderer of the pure and good, when you gaze upon the sad, dead form—when you stand beside the grave and think how you hav defamed and wronged, made war upon the handful of dust that lies moldering beneath your feet—on cne whose heart's pulsations prematurely ceased, palsied by anguish, occasioned by your false and cruel, though perhaps thoughtless, words—how shall you atone the wrong? Oh, indeed! indeed! a vicarious, bloody sacrifice may befoul and befog your conscience; but can it ever cleanse your skirts of the foul wrong? You did not really mean! Where there was so much smoke, you thought there must be some fire! and then, "they say."

Ugh! the diabolical phrase, preface to the cowardly stab in the back. It should induce every honest, liberal man to invest in and wear double-soled, cowhide boots, and every intelligent, free-thinking woman to carry an extra heavy-whaleboned, lead-loaded handle, sun umbrella, so that they might be in constant readiness to apply the umbrella with true womanly grit over the head, and the cowhides with forty-mule power to the other end, of any and every one who commences to scandalize with, "Well, you know, they say."

Of all the miserable, sneaking, dodging, cowardly imps ever created in the brain of the disciples of the fierce, blood-minded African Tertullian, the ancient father of the church, who first taught a hell of devils and everlasting burnings, "they say," is the most abominable. Why take more interest in idle rumor than important news?

Why so fond of picking flaws in others' reputation? Why so patiently, zealously, unravel the private character of the great and good in the hope of finding a few rotten threads in it?

Scandal is the source of infinit mischief. It undermines peace, saps the foundation of friendship, destroys families, brings discord into social gatherings, rends in pieces the very heart and vitals of charity, and makes the evil, mean, and malicious at the same moment, the accuser, witness, judge, and executioner of the innocent.

Puritanical old maids may practice it, the world listen to it, the church wink at it (or instigate it, which they seldom fail to do against those who dare to doubt or deny the creed); but the Liberal will shun, abhor, and denounce it, for true Liberalism and love of scandal can no more exist together than a lovely young maiden of purity and truth could amalgamate with a hyena.

In the language of the great poet and teacher:

"Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'twas something, nothing;
'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;
But he that filches from me my good name
Robs me of that which not enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed."

Rochester, Jan. 18, 1883. C. B. REYNOLDS.

A Cold Day for the Converts.

From the Indianapolis Herald.

To what unholy uses religion may be prostituted where blind zeal usurps the place of reason! The Lafayette Courier says:

"Cold day in Chicago—20 degrees below zero. Hogs frozen in the cars—frozen in stockyards. Trains delayed. Trains derailed—is the Sunday record. And yet they broke the ice at Rochester, Ind., and immersed three Baptist converts."

How many other similar cases of the open defiance of the laws of health and the desecration of all sentiments of true religion occurred on that frozen Sunday we do not know. The News of Thursday furnishes one other example as follows:

"On Sunday Rev. W. T. Cuppy baptized fourteen persons in Big Raccoon Creek, near Holland's Bridge, Park county, while the thermometer was at or near zero. A hole was cut in the ice for the purpose. The work was done in nine minutes. The immersed people were compelled to go nearly a mile in their wet clothing before a house could be reached."

If the General Assembly would pass an act to punish those guilty of these "criminal blunders" it would be legislating in the line of wisdom. Immersion in frozen streams when the mercury is down to twenty degrees below zero ought to be illegal. For such an act some one is responsible, and, on such, punishment might justly be inflicted. The utility of baptism by immersion is not here called into question, nor are its benefits as a means of grace disputed, but as a matter of health, immersion should be forbidden in water which marks a temperature below the freezing point. Where the ice has to be cut and the victims hav to go down not only "into the water" but under the water, there is bodily harm done to the one immersed. Disease in many shapes stands ready to begin work upon its victims the moment they are resurrected from the ice-cold watery grave.

The Late D. M. Bennett.

From the Boston Investigator.

Mr. EDITOR: D. M. Bennett combined industry with his genius, which is not always the case with men of talent. His industry was remarkable and surprising to his friends, to see the ready flow of his pen. His mind coined its sentences in a ready and harmonious flow of smoothly-rounded periods and paragraphs. He wrote like the great English lexicographer, essayist, and biographer, Samuel Johnson.

He came to New York city from the West about ten years ago, and commenced the publication of THE TRUTH SEEKER, a Freethought weekly newspaper, and continued it up to the present time, and which will be continued with unabated ability, to the dismay of persecuting Comstock Christians.

He first published, in 1875, biographical sketches of "The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers" of all ages. This he followed by the "Crimes and Persecutions of the Champions of the Church;" then by Amberley's "Analysis of Religious Belief;" then by the great works of Thomas Paine; then by "Thirty Discussions by D. M. Bennett;" then by "Winwood Reade's Outcast and Martyrdom of Man;" then by "The Burgess-Underwood Debate;" "The Humphrey-Bennett Discussion;" and also several other large volumes and numerous tracts too tedious to particularize.

He published also the writer's "Sociology; or, the Scientific Reconstruction of Land Ownership and Republican Goverment into a Homestead Democracy." In the midst of all these labors, during the past two years, he journeyed around the world—saw the fossil sculptured remains of the heathen gods of India in the mountain excavations of Elephanta and Ellora, and the devotees of Brahma carrying on their shoulders in hollow canes the supposed holy water of the Ganges—esteeming its virtue as the Christians do the supposed holy water of their baptismal fonts.

Mr. Bennett's specialty ran more for abolishing the evils of religion than for government. But in his strictures on traveling through Ireland—on seeing the heartless evictions of landlord government and famin, he saw the necessity of all for a share of the soil, and was perceiving the evils of state as much as the church.

How much more patriotic and honest was Mr. Bennett's course toward the pauperized mass than that of Mr. G. J. Holyoake, who in early life suffered eleven months' imprisonment for saying in one of his lectures that the working people were too poor to support the church and government of England! He is now arranging for the expatriating of the landless Catholics of Ireland to this country, to make room for landlord grazing and hunting-grounds for Episcopal Christians, as more profitable. He is now tramping around here, as an agent of an emigrating board, and applying for aid from our government for facilities to exterminate the workers of Ireland and England to this and other countries. He is paid, like other non-producers, an annuity out of the producers, to aid in this extermination, and fears my plan for dividing the soil into scientific townships and homesteads. He has endeavored to ridicule it in the Nineteenth Century Magazine of London.

He is an editor of the Secular Review, and boasts of letting religion alone, and of attending only to "secular things," which means the grasping at such a monopoly of property as will force the masses into such a rack-tenancy as will keep a cheap supply of servants, soldiers, and police, for a homestead entailed aristocracy through all time, instead of entailing a home to all. Yours, LEWIS MASQUERIER.

Greenpoint, Brooklyn, E. D., Dec. 8, 1882.

The Monument.

Make it of glistening marble, for his heart
Sent a pure radiance from its inmost shrine;
No saint revered performed a better part,
Though rays of glory made his form divine.
His wakeful toil knew daylight's earliest sigh,
And crimson morning's bright, unerring dart
Wove fairy shapes between each written line
When the first incense of the wood passed by,
And warblings faint awoke the drowsy sky.

He toiled while every flower was bathed with dew,
And some might think a holy ardor wrought
Within his breast which prophet never knew,
For every word a noble lesson taught.
His foes from precious thoughts a poison drew,
And though they cast him in a loathsome cell,
No hermit ever told his beads so well.

Lift it to heaven, that matchless, snowy shaft,
To which sweet flowers their odorous hymns may waft.
Will it press coldly on that brow of light
Whose beams could soothe away the woe and blight
Of hearts down-stricken by dark, priestly craft?
His gesture guided every soul aright;
His burning thoughts in truthful accents fell
Sweet as the sound of far-off vesper bell.

And loving hearts are faint with sorrow where
He offered roses at mild Buddha's shrine,
To rock-hewn temples did his steps repair;
Deeply he delved in learning's ancient mine,
And goblets filled with truth's enduring wine;
Fondly he lingered by each burning strand
To bring thought's treasures to his nativ land.

And spring shall wake where marble snow shall rise,
And summer weave a rich, enchanting wreath,
And shade and sunshine change with mild surprise,
While the sweet south wind yields its balmy breath;
Calmly he'll sleep beneath those chiseled flowers
While its bright crimson rain the autumn pours,
And sacred truths the tablet white shall tell
To wanderers lingering in that shaded dell. ALHAZA.

Mr. Heywood's Case.

From the February Word.

On our motion, Jan. 1st, Judge Nelson kindly continued the case till March, when, contrary to our desire and previous intention, we are to conduct the defense. In behalf of citizen right assailed we are profoundly grateful to Messrs. Pickering, Searle & Cobb for special service rendered. Assaulted in the path of duty by ecclesiastic fraud; dragged into court and held for "trial" by invasiv yet deluded power; guilty only of speaking truth; doing right further than ignorant or perverse people can yet understand, self-respect declines stooping to "plead" for liberty no act of one's own has justly forfeited. When one is struck down in well-doing, by-standing citizens—in order, at least, to vindicate their own rights invaded—should be alert to repel the assault and assure liberty to work unmolested. It was the negro's part to resent bondage. Garrison, Sumner, and Lincoln liv in history because they stood between invasiv laws and citizen right. A graduate of that struggle, having borne our part in it, we, the negro of to-day, are again and again waylaid because we voice intelligent growth and moral order in social life. Where are our seniors in antislavery endeavor? What death-sleep has fallen on citizens that they do not rise en masse against this persecution of opinions? No resident in our town, state, or section; no one knowing us personally, or who is conversant with our views, purposes, character, enters this complaint. A mercenary, foreign spy—too ignorant, lewd, to know what constitutes morality—accuses us. Had we forged a note, robbed a bank, or shot a president, we might hav been "respectable." But we put truth between the sexes, insist on intelligence, honor, responsibility in love and parentage, and the "crime" is so appalling that persons flee in terror! The network of falsehood and treachery he cages citizens in is so cunningly devised, the venom of his fangs so deadly, that few resist, or even survive, this viper's attack. It may be well that one, direct from the people, put dissecting-knife to this monster in court. As the task comes to us without our seeking—the inevitable having power if not the right of way; as the air seems to order us to cross-examin Comstock and address the jury, we are at its service with whatever power the cause and the occasion may inspire. Friends, please continue to giv us all the pecuniary aid possible in the fight for free speech and free mails. These raids drag us from our regular line of work, making it very hard to float the Word, books, conventions, and keep family and self from going over the verge of destitution.

Dr. Wittig.

The following is a letter from Germay, written by Dr. P. G. C. Wittig, in respect to matters that hav appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER:

LEIPZIG, Dec. 2, 1882.

To Prof. LaRoy Sunderland, Quincy, Mass., U. S. A.

DEAR SIR: I received and read all your articles on Ideology, with a great deal of pleasure. In my first letter to you, dated Nov. 26th, written in English, which, as you see, I cannot write so well, I hav stated how fully I agree with you. Your first article in THE TRUTH SEEKER on Ideology, "The Trance Idea in History," is interesting and complimentary, and I hav translated it, and also your article on this subject in the Spiritual paper, Mind and Matter, of Sep. 30, 1882. They shall appear in Psychische Studien, edited by the Right Honorable Alexander Aksakow (whose secretary in redaction I am). And your article in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Nov. 11, 1882, on Ideology, "The Nineteenth Century Wonder," is, indeed, a very striking essay, and I hope you will continue, and finish it in one strain. What you hav said, as to the "mystic rap," as the only thing proved, or that we can know, I hav myself said in a similar manner.

My printed translations of your articles will be sent to you, in the Psycho-Studier for Jan. and Feb., 1883, by the publisher, Oswald Mutze. I read all your articles and letters with the deepest interest and attention. I believe your position is the right one. You admit all the facts and of which you giv the most rational explanation. Mr. Roberts, of Mind and Matter, is evidently overworked and too passionate in his defense of mediums, who are certainly more innocent than their adversaries admit, albeit they are not infallible, as Mr. Roberts attempts to make them appear.

Pray send me your reply, and also your brief biography, and all your articles and works, and be assured of my everlasting high respect and esteem. In which I remain,

Yours truly, Dr. PHIL. G. C. WITTIG.

Mr. Winter Very Positiv.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Has it become a crime to be a Materialist? Must such a man stultify himself and cringe before any creature who has some peculiar superstitions, religious seeds, lurking in his or her fantastic notions? The man of honest convictions must not openly express his sentiments, fearing some pious crank will take great offense! If, sir, my sincere opinion and my firm faith in Materialism are repulsiv to any paper claiming to be Infidel, I would like to know it. I claim that Materialism hath the grandest laws in nature for its support and confirmation, and every phase of religious faith, outside of mundane life and action, is founded, in a greater or less degree, on supernaturalism, which is the biggest fraud of the entire world. Sir, giv me a fair hearing; I ask no more, and will take no less.

In conclusion, I would assert that at this day every true and highly gifted scientist is a confirmed Materialist and hath no faith in supernature or two distinct entities. Sir, yours for Nature's truth,

T. WINTER, Materialist.

P. S.—Sir, I will never play hypocrit to gratify fanatics, and there is no true Infidelity to-day but that of a Materialist, and that stands on a principle which will outliv and must triumph over all canting religions, including spookism, because it is the truth and robs nobody. W.

Cincinnati, O., E.M. 283.

Food for Thought.

From the Chenango Tribune.

We are in receipt of the book "Answers to Christian Questions and Arguments," by the late D. M. Bennett, editor OF THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is a volume of 150 pages, tastily bound in granit paper covers, and selling for the low price of 25 cents. As the title of the work implies, it is devoted to giving answers to Christian queries from one who is seeking to become enlightened from mythical biblical darkness. We cannot enter into an extended notice of the book owing to the crowded condition of our columns—indeed, it is hardly necessary, as its late lamented author, as a deep-read, thinking man, fearless in advocating the right, was too well known. The arguments are reproduced from his paper, and are written in all his usual fairness: advocating the right and condemning the wrong at all hazards. Every one of our readers, whether Christian or Infidel, should possess the book. It is food for thought, and what do men and women amount to unless they think? Read both sides; then draw your conclusions.

Census Bureau of the National Liberal League.

Infidels, Freethinkers, skeptics, Agnostics, Liberal Spiritualists, names wanted for record and for circulating documents. A twenty-five cent book premium will be sent for a list of ten or more good, reliable Liberal names and addresses.

Also wanted, subscribers for Man, a semi-monthly Liberal journal, exponent of the plans, purposes, and principles of the National Liberal League, and a live, enterprising reform newspaper generally. T. B. Wakeman and T. C. Leland, editors. Terms, $1 per annum. Trial subscribers three months for twenty-five cents. Sample copies free. Address, T. C. Leland, Sec. N. L. L., 744 Broadway, New York.

ON an average in Switzerland only one in ten goes to church.

Communications.

The Truth Seeker is Dead! Long Liv "The Truth Seeker!"

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: When The Truth Seeker came to me clad in deep mourning it seemed impossible that it was the editor whose death was announced. Such men are usually permitted to withdraw from activ labor and quietly look on while younger men take up the tools and push forward the work. He fell in the field fully harnessed and armed with a weapon mightier than the sword. I hav no doubt that his life was shortened by the persecutions of his enemies. It is equally certain that his enemies hav lost many friends, and hav also abridged the period of their own existence. The grain fields need the rain from heaven to mature the crops upon which our material lives depend. The fields of thought hav been fertilized by tears and blood in order to mature the crops upon which our spiritual lives depend. The material food is eaten in the sweat of our brow; the spiritual food in the throbbing of the brain. Every step of the toiler who drives hunger and want from our world is bedewed with the sweat and the ashes of broken muscles. Every step of the thinker who drives ignorance and superstition from our world is bedewed with blood from broken hearts and with the ashes of shattered brains. Progress has her price, and humanity has the purse. She givs heart and brain, and is rewarded sevenfold.

The editor is dead, the editor livs; long liv the editor! Men die, man livs forever. The editor that was livs in the editor that is; long liv the editors!

Error keeps lies in stock, and one of them is Comstock. When Error puts Truth in the stocks the stocks begin to blush and hide in the darkness of the night out of which they were born. When Superstition locks Truth up in prison all truth seekers fall in love with the prison and make haste to embrace it. This embrace was so cordial in France that the Bastile could not stand the pressure. It did the next best thing—it fell; and great was the fall thereof.

Superstition, beware! Go! the dawn is at hand. Owls fear the light as tyranny fears the truth. Let us think a moment. "Be in submission to the powers that be, for the powers that be are ordained of God." George III. was a power appointed of God, and all his subjects were bound to obey. "All just government derives its legitimate powers from the consent of the governed." George I. was chosen by the people, and as their servant resisted the servant of God effectually. These two ideas still contend for victory—Anthony as a servant of God; D. M. Bennett as a servant of the people. Politically the Revolution swept the servants of God out of the halls of legislation. There can be no lasting peace until these self-delegated servants of God are driven from the temple of humanity also. These blind fools cannot see the logic of history—which is, that all institutions, political, social, religious, are subject to revision at the will and for the benefit of the people. Our present form of government is not definitly fixed, but the right to improve it remains with the people. Our other institutions of family and church are equally open for discussion and modification. It was the defense of this right to modify and improve all existing institutions that was D. M. Bennett's mission. The Truth Seeker did not attempt to define what the ultimate social relations of man and woman, labor and capital, the land and the landless, would be under scientific supervision; but it insisted upon the absolute right of free discussion on all these questions. When that question is definitly settled, then, I hav no doubt, The Truth Seeker will open its pages to the consideration and advocacy of all needed changes in government, the family, the conservation of wealth in its producers.

Mr. Bennett patiently considered the arguments of anarchy, which insisted on the destruction of all existing institutions, because there is so much of repression and cruelty in them all. He also considered, and I think accepted, the arguments of evolution, which favored their continuance, but improvement, because there is so much that is good and essential to human welfare in them all. The very name of his paper indicated his mental bias. "Let there be light," is the first demand in a world of chaos. We cannot discover truth amid the darkness. He was the steel that struck the hard flint rock of established order, and the sparks illumined the darkness. The steel was battered and worn, but the rock was broken and is fast crumbling into dust.

The Shakers hav established Protestant monasteries. They had to fight a hard battle against religious and legal tyranny in order to establish a modified form of family life. Bennett had been a member of one of these families, in which reproduction was religiously suspended. He had witnessed a grand struggle between the Shakers and the courts. The question was, Hav a company of men and women the legal and natural right to organize a new form of social life, holding property in common and regulating their own social, spiritual, and temporal affairs? The Supreme Court, after a long struggle, decided that they could. An adverse decision would hav destroyed every Roman Catholic convent in the United States. It is a somewhat curious coincidence that Thomas Paine, the son of a Quaker, and himself a Friend in a much broader sense than any member of the Society of Friends, should be the man to overthrow political tyranny, although belonging to a society which refused to recognize any temporal government, or to vote for any officials, or be voted for to any office; and that D. M. Bennett, a member of a Shaker family, and who proved to be a Shaker in a broader sense than any Shaker of them all, is destined to be the man to overthrow that ecclesiastical tyranny whose last stronghold is the old theological family, which imposes life-long suffering on a wedded pair whose union was a mistake and whose wedded sexual cohabitation is a crime, as all enforced and unwilling unions are. Thomas Paine did seek the destruction of civil government. He wished to place it where it belongs, into the hands of the governed. D. M. Bennett did not seek the destruction of the family, but, if I understand him correctly, he regarded it as a purely human institution devised to benefit the contracting parties, just as governments are; and that the parties who voluntarily enter into it may also voluntarily dissolve it under equitable restrictions to guard the best interests of the parties and their offspring. I do not think he proposed any model for the new demands of an advanced civilization, but he insisted upon the right of free discussion and rational experiment. Of one thing he seemed well assured: that all existing institutions which are under theological control must necessarily undergo many changes, and that the duty of man to remove defects follows the right to discover them. "Try all things and hold fast that which is good" applies now as of old, otherwise how could involuntary polygamy hav been superseded by a less inhuman involuntary monogamy?

The inductiv method is as essential in social science as in any other department of science; and we hav now reached a transition period when social experiments are absolutely necessary in order to test the relativ merits of different modes of family life. D. M. Bennett tried one mode and abandoned it, yet spoke of the one he left with the utmost kindness and respect—nay, even with affection. But he never hesitated to condemn whatever of theology and monasticism entered into Shakerism. He was equally clear in his condemnation of Mormonism on account of its ecclesiastical and despotic tendencies.

I am glad to know that the new editor will make the paper equally conservativ for progress, and aggressiv against all forms of fixed or reactionary despotism. There are many Liberals who do not need any more argument to convince them that Christianity is false in philosophy, vicious in morals, and utterly absurd in its objects of worship. Has the time come when The Truth Seeker can honestly say to the truth seekers: "I hav found a philosophy that is true, a moral code that is right, and objects worthy of the homage and worship of the whole human race?" If that time has come, then will come the judgment, when the son of man will place on his right and his left all those who for love of man and of the truth as it is in nature hav passed through the fires of persecution and are entitled to wear the crown of martyrdom and take their places in the history and hearts of the human race as its saviors and redeemers.

Hoping that those who are redeemed from superstition and inhumanity will feel it their duty to work earnestly for the redemption of others—and I know of no better way than to aid the press which holds up error to derision and truth for respect, among which The Truth Seeker stands first and foremost—I remain the sincere friend of all who may deem it an honor to serve man, in even the humblest capacity.

G. L. Henderson.

Mammoth Hot Springs, Wyoming.

More Legal Injustice.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I note a communication in your paper of Jan. 20th about "Czarism in America." I hav little doubt that it is a hard case for Mr. Wilson, but I think my own case to be one of greater hardship, because my business of $46,000 in the "Edson Diaphragm Lift Pump," sold previous to the 3d of May last, was entirely broken up, when and because a district judge gave a patent on accessibility of the valves by hand through the diaphragm of a pump for cleansing, etc., to a man who did not invent it, and who never has to this day made and offered to the public any mechanism that attained it. The same judge forbade the man who made the first mechanism that did attain it, and who got a patent on that mechanism, from using his mechanism, or manufacturing or selling it. The consequence is that the pumps, which previous to May 3d, 1882, were sold freely at twenty-five to thirty dollars each, cannot now be bought of anybody for one hundred dollars each. I hav been offered one hundred and sixty-five dollars for three of them, but the pump as an article of manufacture is extinct—like the dodo—because the United States judge chose "on account of the state of the art," to giv one person a patent on what he did not invent or describe in his patent papers, and forbade the actual inventor to make it. The law givs no authority to any judge to giv any patent to anybody on "accessibility of valves from a pump," or "accessibility of spectacles to be taken from the nose for any purpose whatever," unless that accessibility was incidental to the mechanism that person invented. As this person never invented any such mechanism, and never applied for a patent on it, of course he never had a patent granted on it by the patent commissioner, and he has only a judicial decree for a patent on another man's invention. The Edson Diaphragm pump now in the market is a different article of manufacture, and not covered by this curious decree. The state of the art was that when the party who was favored by the judge applied for his patent, no one had invented any mechanism that allowed accessibility of valves through a diaphragm, except a man about seven years before, who made such a pump, with a crow-bar so close to the upper valve that the valves could not be taken out without having the two holding nuts put on loosely. This he had a right to do, but the judge has now forbidden him to do it in effect by this decision. The party who did invent the mechanism that attained it simply made two posts, which he called standards, which raised the crow-bar up high enough to take out the valves, and obtained a patent for it from the commissioner. The right to use this, or an equivalent to it, has been given to the other man, who did not invent it, by the district judge. But his favorit cannot use it, because the other parts of a diaphragm pump are so covered by other patent claims that any pump made under his patent would be useless. The public therefore cannot hav it, and the most popular pump for vessels made previous to May 3, 1882, cannot be purchased in the market by anybody. The tickets on the Pennsylvania railroad can be bought at some price of somebody, but the kinds of Edson Diaphragm Lift Pump sold previously to May 3, 1882, cannot be bought of anybody for the above reasons. Who says we hav not czarism in America?

Respectfully yours, Henry N. Stone.

Boston, Mass., Jan. 18, 1883.

Ideology.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: The following contribution having been refused by the Spiritual paper in Philadelphia, I now offer it for the columns of the free and independent Truth Seeker. I rejoice in the belief that you hav a large number of intelligent and Liberal Spiritualists among your patrons, toward whom you are, as I am myself, friendly; and toward whom all Liberals would be friendly if they knew this class of people as well as I hav known them from the beginning. And it seems to me that these Liberal Spiritualists ought to be permitted to see what their own press will never lay before them, and that is the proof that their own papers are not perfectly free and independent. Hence we look in vain beyond the so-called Infidel press for free discussion. Nor could any Liberal paper be named that ever refused a hearing to any Christian or Spiritualist whom it had criticised. For a series of years I was myself an editor of an antislavery paper, and never, in a single instance, did I close my columns against anyone whom I had censured, as Mind and Matter has served me. And its conduct in this regard is in perfect keeping with the treatment I received for six years from a slave-holding Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. Roberts says that he did not know of any "trance idea in history" (Truth Seeker, Oct. 28, 1882) until he had been supernaturally informed of it by an Italian bishop that has been dead two hundred years. But my article had not been written quite so long ago as that. As Mr. Roberts's statement is a curiosity of its kind, and a slender peg upon which to hang his excuse for his four columns of verbosity, I quote it here:

"On Thursday, the 2d inst., Mr. A. James was incidentally in our office, when he was constrained to sit for spirit control. A spirit purporting to be Geronimo Grimaldi, Archbishop of Aix, France, in the seventeenth century, controled him and gave the following communication, in broken Italian:

'I salute you, signor. I think that, as the champion of real, unadulterated Spiritualism, you should reply to an article published in The Truth Seeker of last week, from the pen of LaRoy Sunderland, on "Ideology." The idea held forth in that article is that Spiritualism tends to degrade the minds of those who accept it, and, in short, to produce insanity. Such is not the case, for I do not believe at present that two per cent of all the insane in the world can be classed as insane Spiritualists; while I think that by examining the periodicals of the day you will find that a much larger proportion of Materialists hav committed suicide within any given time.' The spirit gave quite a long communication, but on other topics which will be published in another connection. Thus requested, we hav attentivly read the article referred to, and now propose to reply thereto" (Mind and Matter, Nov. 11, 1882).

And then to call his five columns of rigmarole a "reply" to my article! Had Mr. Roberts been moonstruck, and filled his paper with what the "spirits" in that luminary said to him, he would hav given an equal display, both of his logic and his candor. And the dead priest he has conjured into his tirade against facts and arguments he could not answer is as far from the truth in his statements as Mr.

Roberts himself is. Verbosity is not argument. And in his paper of Nov. 25, 1882, he has four more columns that I should no more think of answering than of stopping a gale of wind. And this is what he calls "Ideology Humbug." He can repeat as much of that sort of stuff as suits his taste. His tirades seem to please him, and they do not harm me. The larger half in the ranks of Spiritualism he berates, similarly, nor do they seem to mind it at all.

Quincy, Mass. LaRoy Sunderland.

THE REJECTED CONTRIBUTION.

Ideology: The doctrin of ideas; the science of mind; the operation of ideas (Webster's Dictionary).

Ideology: The science of mind; the history and the evolution of ideas (Worcester's Dictionary).

To the Editor of Mind and Matter, Sir: Above you hav the literary authority for what you hav called my "hobby." And thus maybe you spoke wiser than you knew, and did you mean it as a slur or as a compliment to me, as a writer? If the latter, I am sorry I cannot sincerely reciprocate the compliment. Certainly not, if the personality in your issue of Nov. 11th is to determin your caliber! Those characteristics I overlook, and I shall treat you as my equal brother-man—a gentleman, and deserving of due respect. I thank you for sending me, as I suppose you did, a copy of your paper that I might see what an estimate "faith" in mysticism has of mental science! And now, if you did send me this copy, I return you my thanks, and interpret it to signify that the columns of Mind and Matter are open for this response from me. But ere I come to the mistake you hav made allow me to premise that since I emerged fifty years ago from the fogs of ancient mediumism I hav always given on my public platform, and in the different papers I hav edited, an "open ring and fair play" to Christianity; and I would now thank its God or its devil if either were to do me a favor. And precisely this same disposition I hav always felt and manifested toward modern mediumship. Since 1847, when the modern "raps" commenced, and when the spirits and the Fox family learned what could be done through human mediumship (what had never been known before), I hav extended to it the same "open ring and fair play." From the first mystic rap, in reply to me in the Fox family, to the last one, made today, I hav always thanked the "spirits," even when every word as to their personal identity was utterly false. The "spirits" did this, I suppose, to oblige me. At first, as all children do, I took everything for granted; as, indeed, by far too many good people are doing still! The three mediums in the Fox family (and I supposed they must know all about it) assured me that if I should receive any "communication" it would come from some one that had known me in this world before their death. This I then believed, because I did not know then, as I hav since proved, that the "spirits communicate" no knowledge of our person that they are not able to obtain by their contact with this external, physical world. But never since the "spirits" made this discovery hav I heard the first word or the first rap from any one I ever knew before their death. Six of my nearest friends, now dead, promised me with their dying lips that "if Spiritualism was true" they would, for my sake, return to this external world and confirm it to me. Rufus Elmer, of Springfield, Mass., was one of this number. The last words he uttered to me, lifting his hand, were: "As there is a heaven above, if Spiritualism is true, and I die before you do, I will come to you, if there is a medium on the face of the earth, and will demonstrate to you that I am Rufus Elmer, and nobody else." And to which I replied: "Rufus, if you die in California (where he was going), you will scarcely become cold in your grave before the Banner of Light will hav a message from you in its columns." And this proved true! For he died soon after reaching San Francisco, and the Banner of Light a week or so after had a "message from Rufus Elmer" before the news had reached me, but no more like Rufus than the Digger Indian!

A dozen times I hav proved the fraud in what is called "reading sealed letters by the renowned world's medium in New York." And to him, and other mediums like him, I hav written letters to the spirits of these dear friends of mine, only to hav them returned without an answer, or, if with an answer, there was no proof of personal identity. But, leaving this personal identity out of the question, when I happen to be in the presence of mediums by whom I am not recognized, the "spirit messages" are poured out to me in abundance, and from "Dr. Franklin," "Geo. Washington," "Henry Clay," "St. Luke," "Daniel the Prophet," and whatever dignitaries the medium has ever heard of. When I called on Mrs. Benedict in Auburn, N. Y., she was at work, and, as I entered the room, loud raps were made on the floor by "James Madison," formerly president of the United States.

And now, my friend, I do not see how you can ignore the conclusion that what you call spirits must in the nature of things be less spiritual, or they could not come in contact with this external world. And, besides, how do you account for it that they waited a hundred thousand years before accepting Mrs. Fox's suggestion as to the zig-zag method of communicating ideas with us in this world? Hence there are two horns to this dilemma, and one of them I am compelled to take, while my shoulders, I think, are broad enough to bear up under any amount of personal vituperation. Thus: Either these spirits never inhabited human bodies like ours, or, if they did, then it is manifested that they entered the next sphere after death similarly as they were born into this external world. And how was their birth and your birth? What is nature's order in this regard? Did we hav any knowledge of this world before we had been born into it? Nay. And how many years do we hav to liv in this "primary department" before we find out our ever having been born? And, if we hav mediums at all, why not hav them to "communicate" and inform the fetus what sort of a "physical life" this world is? And, moreover, one law, one force, controls all worlds! If man exists after death, it is in a higher state, while nature's order there is similar to its order here, so that we must begin in each sphere knownothings, but where we can learn all that it is essential for us to know of the state we are in. Here we can evolve ideas, true or false, of many things; while our knowledge is confined to things essential. But, born here into this world of which we know nothing, where we hav learned of nature's order, it does not inform us either how long we shall liv here, nor how, or how long our existence will be perpetuated elsewhere, if at all.

And how do you prove that the whole of our existence in the future is not controled by the same order as it is here? Learning anew, and forgetting! It is as natural to forget as it is to remember. All persons now living over, say, forty years of age, hav forgotten more than they can now be said to know. Thus, indeed, the human mind grows, by forgetting the past, after the body has ceased to grow. And to me the idea is perfectly absurd that represents the spirits of all the inhabitants of this earth, that can no more be numbered than the sands of the sea-shore, and yet all the angels, or "spirits," are conscious of all that is going on upon this earth, while for uncounted thousands of years they waited to make a few raps in Hydesville, N. Y. But, then, I know that no idea can be too absurd for human credulity.

We hav thus to learn this is nature's order: living, learning, forgetting, and learning anew. The history of modern mediumship shows that on both sides alike everything has been learned since 1847, for the raps began that year. Nor can any satisfactory reason be given other than this why there should be mediums at all, or as to why the spirits waited a hundred thousand years before modern Spiritualism was born. And bear in mind that to the standpoint here given I hav been pushed by Spiritualism itself. And now, while I do not dub human or physical phenomena with the term of "Spiritualism," still I would not object to being classed with the Spiritualists I know, who are Liberal and progressiv people. I do not depend upon the trance, while in regard to that state I could, I think, tell some things not generally known, especially by Catholics and Christian people. I understand enough, as to the power of ideas and the tenacity with which they hold the human mind, to forbid any hope of convincing you, or any one else, as to the false in any idea. Hence, I say to all, do your own thinking. If you are honest and sincere it would not add to your goodness of character merely to change your belief in ghosts or gods. Nor is anything gained by disputes between parties that differ in their ideas of things that neither of them can really know anything about. All men alike believe what each one may think is true.

It Is Not True.—You hav erroneously represented that in my article on "Ideology," of Sept. 30th, I took a stand with two doctors whom you name in regard to the entrancement of mediums; whereas, I never did know what the ideas of those doctors were on this subject. It was of my own idea of the trance that I spoke. Nor did I ever ignore Spiritualism entirely in my theory of the trance, except in two respects. 1. It is a state of more or less hallucination, and especially as to the power by which it comes on. It is never produced by the mere volition of another. It is vastly over-estimated now, as it was by the writers of the Bible. My allusion to the doctors was merely to show that they had adopted my idea in the use of new terms. The idea of self-hood, self-healing of disease, as in case of wounds; self-growth from within; self-control by our own ideas; and the law of self-induction, supreme, over all—this was my idea, on which I hav issued a half a dozen volumes, and upon which I lectured throughout the United States. And this idea has been adopted and newly named, viz., "omnipothy," "statuvalance," "vitapathy," by any number of quacks in their advertisments of medical nostrums.

Kinship in Nervous Phenomena.—I allude to this aspect of the subject in order to be, perhaps, better understood. The human will is equally the same in all. It is the power in choice. It is the same, as personality and self-hood are the same; but if, as I suppose, it is the perfection of motion, it cannot be annihilated nor wiped out by gods or spirits. And still I know very well that we may form erroneous ideas of both, and to be "controled" by false ideas is always injurious, more or less.

I spoke of a likeness in the class of phenomena witnessed in revivals, mediumship, and all epidemics purely mental. And here I name some of these classes. Let the well-informed and unbiased mind weigh these facts:

1. Trances always occurred in the revivals I got up for twenty years as a Methodist minister. Persons entranced under the sensational ideas I preached entered paradise and saw "God," as Abram, Paul, and Peter did. Now I hav seen mediums far more inspired in this state than is true of any case recorded in the Bible, or reported of the nuns in the popish church. And I always noticed that all that were the easiest and soonest converted were of the same temperament. 2. When in 1836 one of my converts had been entranced by the idea suggested by her husband, Rev. Charles McReading, she declared it was possibly the same state she was in when converted under a sermon that she had heard me preach. 3. Whereupon, I immediately found as many of my converts as I could in the different cities where I had gotten up revivals, and without a single exception, among the hundreds that I tested, they each of them became entranced on my merely suggesting the idea, and when entranced they shouted and sung, and one Methodist minister, entranced on my platform, in Tremont Temple, Boston, shouted at the top of his voice, "Glory to God, Brother Sunderland! This is better than any camp-meeting." 4. My scientific lectures on ideology were continued fourteen years, up to 1852. The trance was an afterthought in Spiritualism. And in 1870, after J. J. Hutchinson, the first one entranced, had ended his life by suicide (I attended him), as the trances began to be common, I noticed that all persons who became mediums had been previously entranced in my public lectures. Hence I had good and sufficient reasons for saying there was a manifest kinship in the phases of entrancement, whether we s[illegible] "converted," "sanctified," "entranced," "mediumized," or "inspired."

Your Medium and Spirit Erred.—I suppose it all the same, whether I say you, or the medium and the spirit that you refer to "called your attention" to my article on Ideology in The Truth Seeker of Oct. 28th. I can admit, if necessary, that the medium may hav seen that paper in a way that he may not hav remembered. And why not? One medium I know stole another lady's gold watch, and when called on for its return the medium asseverated that she did not know when she took the watch, and she had "supposed that her spirit-guide had given it to her." But that your spirit erred I know. I never held forth the idea that your spirit attributes to me—never. Nor do I admit that any "god" or "ghost" knows, or can know, what my motivs are, so well as I do myself. Nor am I at all surprised that a "spirit" that allows itself to be dubbed with a name that belongs to this external world should misinterpret my language, instead of attempting to solve the solemn and heart-rending problems dwelt upon in that very article which the medium says he did not see. Of the numerous cases I mentioned, take one where the medium was murdered under spirit control, and presenting this serious problem. What is the remedy, when the spirits combine (if there be more than one) and predict the sudden death of a beautiful young lady, and then, to fulfil that prediction under the same "spirit control," she commits suicide? At that time A. E. Newton was editor of the New England Spiritualist in Boston, and he vouched for Miss Aeger's trances, and published her "prediction," and announced her death as proof that Spiritualism was what it was estimated for. And when I had exposed her suicide by a post mortem examination Mr. Newton replied in his paper, "Well, admit that Hattie A. Aeger was murdered by spirits. And what then?"

I do not find that your invisibility of an "archbishop" took any notice of the case of that youth, only nineteen years of age, Charles H. Whippo (not Whipple, but Whippo), of Philadelphia, who fell in love with a married lady who was also a firm Spiritualist. She did not reciprocate his passion far enough to suit him, and he committed suicide in order as a spirit to be as near to her as he had here wished to be! And also the murder and the suicide in this town in 1850, when the young man shot his wife, who was only fifteen years age. They were Spiritualists, I know, for the young wife, dressed in a male garb, consulted the spirits at my house, and afterward she wrote to me on the subject of suicide. And if the editor has any doubts whether these and the other cases were Spiritualists, or that any similar reports of suicide hav occurred among Infidels within thirty-two years past, let him signify to me that his columns are open to me, and I will lay before him all the proof necessary that an unusual number of Spiritualists hav committed murder and suicide. Nor is there any record of Infidelity like that of modern mysticism in this regard.

Another Misrepresentation.—My article, which Mind and Matter pronounces a "mutilation," appeared Sept. 30th. The article he says I mutilated it from was not published till Oct. 28th. It seems to me a small-potato affair to make a charge like this. I had a right to do as I pleased with my own property. But his statement is not true. It comes with an ill grace in this case, as he himself "mutilated" my article of Sept. 30th that he published. But it will do him no damage. I hav received a heap of approving letters from brave, thoughtful, and scientific men, suggested by it, and two from foreign countries, the language of which I do not understand. When I wrote that article for a Spiritual paper I very well knew its editor did not agree with me in his ideas, and I could hav no more thought of criticizing him or his ideal "hobby" than I should hav of finding fault with the food upon the table of a friend that had allowed me to eat with his family.

At Issue With Science and History.—The reader will bear in mind that in the Mind and Matter criticism of me, Nov. 11th, he quotes from the passages in the Bible by which I prove that the Bible "inspirations, visions, and revelations from the Lord" all came from a state of trance. Moses (Deut. v, 5) says he was a medium. Jesus was the medium in chief. And who doubts? Who but the editor of Mind and Matter would undertake to show that the prophets, the apostles, and every minister of the gospel is not to be considered a medium between "God" and humanity, similarly as all modern mediums are between the living and all the dead of past ages? Who that has been familiar with the columns of Mind and Matter does not know that it has always boasted of its scope and drift in favor of mediums as the base of that mystical structure called Spiritualism? But for its mediums there never would hav been any discovery by spirits of this external world, no mystic raps, no "messages" from lips sealed by death. But for a medium the editor would never hav known of my article in The Truth Seeker. And yet he was so obfuscated by my scientific analysis of the trance, a state of the nervous system I investigated before he was born, that he goes to an Infidel paper to find a charge of ammunition for his mystical blunderbuss, and in its explosion the editor of Mind and Matter commits the entire issue between humanity and all forms of mysticism in the following statement. He says, "Neither Christianity nor modern Spiritualism is based on mediums." Indeed! Were this true there would be no ancient or modern mediumism, and humanity's jubilee would then be sung. Then we should hav no more spirit babes begotten by ghosts. Mary was a medium for the Holy Ghost, and upon her mediumship in that regard Christianity is founded, as it is on the mediumship of Moses (Deut. v, 5), and Jesus and all the prophets, the apostles, and all Christian ministers. As to the two modern "Marys" that hav borne spirit babes I will not giv the details here, but refer to the interested parties, who will not shrink from giving all the particulars, if questioned upon the subject; and, I refer to Mr. A. E. Newton, and to Mr. John W. Spear. In case they should (in an "unconscious" state) ignore what I here affirm, I will inform the editor of Mind and Matter as to what I know as to these two ghostly babes, born under the auspices of modern mediumship; conditioned, of course, that J. M. Roberts shall publish in his paper, Mind and Matter, the report of these two cases, with which I will furnish him. Long ago, it was said: "If an offense come of the truth, better it is that the offense come than that the truth should be concealed." LaRoy Sunderland.

Quincy, Mass., Nov. 17th, N. E. 107.

AN ERROR CORRECTED.

In my article (Oct. 21, 1882) there is a typographical error—"core" for "corn." But perhaps I might never hav felt it essential to call attention to this fact but for the needless pains taken by Mr. James Hale to immortalize the error. Mr. Hale has not touched my argument in favor of the chemism, the materiality of the human mind. He has not proved that the corn is not the result of plant life. The human mind is the result of human life; and if we suppose it to be the perfection of chemism, or motion, it must exist till it is overcome by some form of motion by which it can be dissolved. The body is the perfection of matter and is dissolved by death. But, as the mind grows after the body ceases (at twenty years) to grow, it may, for aught we know, continue its growth after the body is dead. But this is among the things that we do not know, nor hav we any faculty for knowing. LaRoy Sunderland.

Quincy, Mass., Jan. 22, 107.

An English Friend's Lament.

From the London Republican, George Standring, Editor.

It is with the deepest regret that we hav to record the death of D. M. Bennett, a portrait of whom appeared in this journal last month. Before the paper containing it had reached New York, the genial, indefatigable editor of The Truth Seeker had ceased to exist. His illness was very brief. Gastric fever, complicated with an affection of the heart, carried him off in a few days. In all probability the fatigue and excitement of his recent journey around the world—no slight task for a man past sixty—had undermined his robust constitution. He was in harness to the last, and expired peacefully on December 6th, in his sixty-fourth year. Bennett worked well and unceasingly in the cause that he believed to be right. Evil things were said of him, as they are said of every man that combats boldly the ignorance and the prejudice of his time. I speak of him as I knew him: a kindly, unassuming, faithful, affectionate friend; an upright man; and an ardent worker in the cause of progress. In the heart of one at least of his English friends will his memory be cherished while life remains.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - - - - Editor.
M. W. BENNETT, - - - - - - Publisher.
21 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing seven hundred square inches more reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

All Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders should be made payable to MARY W. BENNETT.

SATURDAY, - - - FEBRUARY 3, 1883.

The Cost of Maintaining Error.

Very few realize the immense amounts of money spent annually by the various denominations to sustain a religion which is not only erroneous in fact, but positivly immoral in its tendencies. Millions of dollars are used every year in the endeavor to get people to "lean on Jesus" when they ought not to do anything of the kind. At present Jesus is having all he can do to support himself, without acting as a post for the 9,003,030 members of the Protestant church in this country to lean against.

Religious statistics just published show that the enormous sum of $75,252,866 was expended last year for the maintenance of the Protestant church, its ministers and missionaries. In the United States there are 92,653 buildings devoted one day in seven to perpetuating this form of ignorance and insanity. Many country churches cannot afford a whole minister, and hav to depend on the itinerant variety of religious vagabonds who wander about the country making love to other men's wives and eating the chickens prepared for their coming by devout women. So to these 92,653 churches there are only 71,602 ministers, but this number is quite enough. The value of church property in this city alone is about fifty-three millions, and the aggregate in the the whole country must be simply enormous, yet not one cent of taxes is paid on the whole mass. The church's stealings from the people in this way alone foots up millions, but are not taken into account at all by the church statisticians. This, added to the seventy-five millions, would bring the grand total up to not less than one hundred millions wasted every year upon seventy-one thousand and odd ministers reported by the church, or about $2 for every man, woman, and child in the United States. If taxed, church property would yield a revenue of about twenty-five millions, or about fifty cents per head for the population of the country. Now the states are defrauded of just this much and the burden falls upon all alike. There being only about nine million Protestant church-members in the country, who it may be supposed are willing to be taxed, some forty-one million people are left from whom the church forces fifty cents a year. Of these a little over seven millions are Catholics who ought to pay, as the Protestants are assessed to pay their taxes, leaving some thirty-four millions of men, women, and children who pay fifty cents involuntarily every year to support a system they care but little about or openly oppose as being detrimental to the best interests of the community. This is only one matter. Over $31,331,150 was raised last year for ostensible "charity," but most of it went to the benefit of the managers of the societies. A case was brought to light last year in this city where it cost something like six dollars to get one dollar distributed among the poor. And even this thirty-one millions does not include the amount appropriated by the states to the different enterprises which are only Christian-manufactories disguised under the name of charitable institutions. The old folks and the orphans, the lunatics and the drunkards, are used as pretexts to get money from the state. Every one knows how little is really spent on these unfortunates, but few realize what vast sums are raised in their names. The state could take care of these at about one-fourth the cost, as is seen by comparing state with religious statistics.

But aside from all these there remains over seventy-five millions of dollars spent annually by the Protestant church, and over seventy-one thousand men supported in idleness, for what? What did the church ever do to deserve this at the hands of the American people? Has it reduced crime? Did it save us from slavery? Has it made the people temperate? abolished vice? done away with poverty? reformed the vicious? Where is the invention or discovery fostered and aided by the church? Hav the scientists been aided in their researches by any of this seventy-five millions? This vast sum of money has been expended to make people believe—what?

1. That they were conceived in sin and brought forth in iniquity.

2. That there is a place of never-ending torment for the most of them, to which they were unchangeably predestined from the first.

3. That a just God made this place.

4. That this God wrote a book, a proper understanding of which is necessary to salvation.

5. That this book was never understood since it was written.

6. That God knew his people could not understand it, and consequently would go to this hell.

7. That he made the hell and the book to fit together in this beautiful manner.

8. That all mankind are original sinners; that the nature of every man is corrupt and inclined to evil.

9. That men could be good if they wanted to, but God made them so they would not want to.

10. That man can only be justified by faith, which faith he cannot get because of his own inherent and natural depravity.

11. That good works hav nothing to do with salvation, for no matter how good a man is he is totally depraved in the sight of God because of Adam's transgression, by which he became dead in sin, and wholly defiled in all the faculties and parts of soul and body.

12. And finally that man is bound over to the wrath of God and curse of the law, and so made subject to death, with all miseries, spiritual, temporal, and eternal.

It may be that it is worth seventy-five million dollars a year to hav people believe all this—we would not believe it for twice the money—but misery ought to be bought cheaper. Hell is dear at that price.

And how do these seventy-one thousand ministers earn their salaries? Mr. Billings, in his "Crimes of Preachers," estimates from the statistics he has been enabled to gather that about one in every six of the Methodist ministers has committed a crime; about one in eleven of the Baptists; about one in every twenty-two of the Presbyterians; about one in twenty-five of the Congregationalists; about one in forty of the Lutherans; about one in forty-eight of the Episcopals; of the Campbellites, a small sect, one in seventy-nine, and even one out of every ninety-five Adventist preachers hav broken the laws of the country. In the last six years over twelve hundred ministers hav figured in our criminal courts. How many crimes hav been committed by the clergy and hushed up by Presbyteries and synods for "the good of the cause" will probably never be known. And these statistics of crime are taken from only a portion of the United States, and include less than one-half of the seventy-one thousand preachers. Concerning this Mr. Billings says:

"Eminent writers on crime estimate that but one crime out of sixteen is detected and traced to the criminal. There is no probability that half of those which are ascertained are ever published, even when there is no superstitious excuse for keeping it from the public. All these suggestions then assist the reader at arriving at a correct estimate as to the amount of criminality which exists among our 'guides to holiness.' For instance, if 35,000 preachers in the 'intellectual belt' of the United States commit 917 crimes in five years, 70,000 preachers in the whole United States commit 1,834 crimes; if the author has collected but one-half of the number published, then 70,000 preachers hav committed 3,668 in five years; if but one crime out of sixteen is traced to the criminal, then the 70,000 preachers hav committed 29,344 in the United States in the last five years; and even that list must be again doubled if but one-half of the instances of discovered crime are published."

That is, they earn their salaries by teaching error and committing crime. No other profession furnishes so great a percentage of criminals as the ministers of the United States, and none is so totally useless. They are a constant drain upon the people. One school-teacher is of more value than a hundred preachers to any community. One school-house is better than all the churches. And not only are the ministers of no use, but they are a positiv detriment to the country. Better spend the money for good books and schools, for lectures on art and science, or even burn it.

The minister is a man hired simply to make guesses, and he is generally a very poor guesser. The growth of human knowledge is relegating him to the past, and rendering him unnecessary by showing the falseness of his teachings. The inspiration of the Bible is practically given up, and the question now is, Was there ever any God to inspire it? Instead, therefore, of spending all this money for nothing, if the people will use it for teaching facts, for furthering science, for ameliorating the condition of the poor, for restricting vice and reducing crime, the condition of the country would be vastly improved in a few years. This army of destruction should be changed into an army of construction. The idlers should be set at work and no longer be a drain on the producers. These seventy-five million dollars and seventy-one thousand men can do a great deal of good if properly used. At present they are a worse than useless expense to the world.

Still With the Same Spirit.

As was expected, the reverend Heber Newton is to be tried for heresy before the Presbytery. Getting new ideas is contrary to all the rules and regulations of the church, and there is scriptural authority for damning a man who takes away from the Bible or adds thereto. After Beecher had swept away the comforting doctrin of eternal torment he felt compelled to resign from the Congregational Association before the old fossils had time to realize what he had done and expel him. Perhaps Mr. Newton will anticipate the action of the Presbytery and resign, but unless he does he will be expelled. A memorial has already been placed in the hands of Bishop Potter, signed by twenty of the bell-wethers of Episcopalianism in this city, formally calling the attention of the bishop to the heretical and Bible-subverting sermons recently preached by Mr. Newton, and praying him to take such action as will best defend the threatened faith. Dr. Dix, Dr. Potter, and other stagnant minds are the leaders in this movement, being perhaps jealous of Mr. Newton's popularity, and taking this means to get even with him for drawing their congregations away from them. In an interview, Dr. Dix said:

"There is not the slightest doubt that the Rev. Dr. Newton will be tried for heresy; and unless he anticipates matters by a resignation of his office in advance of the trial, there is as little doubt that he will be speedily deposed. There is no disposition on the part of our clergy to show any mercy for so pestilent a heresy, nor, if we were so inclined, do we believe our vows of ordination would allow us any choice in the matter. As is usual in such cases, Bishop Potter, as I hear, has written to Mr. Newton, calling his attention to the matter and asking an explanation, which is not yet forthcoming. The trouble is that the erring clergyman is suspected of a strong desire for martyrdom, which his brethren are not inclined to gratify if they can avoid it. They would prefer that he would step quietly out of the way and avoid scandal, and it is supposed that Bishop Potter, who is old, conservativ, and always inclined to compromise, will urge Mr. Newton to this step. Personally, I do not believe it will do any good, and I look for a grave theological scandal in the church. As I said, it can hav but one result. Mr. Newton will be deposed and will be compelled to air his new creed outside of the church and the building he now occupies. If his congregation go with him, they will be compelled to seek another roof to cover them."

Thus is church charity for new ideas and the men expressing them again shown. The moment a minister discovers that he has been preaching error, and goes ahead in the endeavor to rectify it, he is seized by the church authorities and either forced to recant or be excommunicated. In times not so very far back it was, Recant or be burnt! The church does not want new ideas, nor does it want the truth when it is in conflict with its old ideas. Once let the people thoroughly understand that not only is Deuteronomy a literary forgery, as Mr. Newton says, but that scarcely any one of the books of the Bible has a whole leg to stand upon, and the church's very existence is perilled—and with it the fat living of the luxurious priests. When the people understand that the Christian religion is founded on error, they will not be apt to raise $75,000,000 a year to feed the 71,000 ministers who weekly throw the dust from their pulpit cushions into the eyes of their congregations. What is the use of the churches, the people will ask, if the Bible is not true, and there is no hell to escape from and no heaven to go to? The Presbytery knows this well, and makes haste to stay the flood. It will discharge Mr. Newton as a heretic, and resolve that a graveyard is the only place for a minister to get ideas. Nevertheless, the world will go right on, and by and by the Presbytery will go to sleep, and that will be the last of it.

Canada Still Wrapped in Darkness.

The following letter explains itself:

MEAFORD, ONT., Jan. 22, 1883.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I sent to your office some five weeks ago for a copy of Col. Ingersoll's reply to Talmage. It came all right, but fell in the hands of C. R. Sings, a custom house officer here, and he has retained it and says it is not fit to go out in the public. What can be done? I hav not seen the book and don't know what it is, but should judge from the title that it is a pretty good book. There are others here would like to see it. I should be glad to hear from you about it. S. VANDERBURG.

We do not see what can be done by our friend unless he applies to the courts for redress, for such is the power exercised by the church that argument and expostulation are useless. This is as clear a case of wanton interference with the rights of citizens as was ever exercised by ecclesiastics. The church of course regards all heretical literature as unfit to go out to the people, but Canada is the only country we know of so besotted in brutality as to deny her citizens the right to read such works as "Ingersoll's Reply to Talmage." Last year some of Ingersoll's works were seized by the customs officials, but were afterward released. Paine's "Age of Reason" and Volney's "Ruins" were also condemned. Perhaps Col. Ingersoll's influence at Washington may help our friend if he can get him to use it. If the people of Canada are to be deprived of the reading matter of their choice at the instance of every little official who may choose to exercise his power it is time every one knew it. We advise Mr. Vanderburg to lay his case before the press of Canada, and call the attention of the whole province to it, and hav it settled once for all whether Freethought books are to be admitted or not. At present it seems to rest with each individual collector. If there is a law against such books it should be repealed. If there is none, then these officials should be taught a lesson they will remember for several months. On previous occasions they hav been forced to back down and admit the books. They can probably be made to do so this time, but what is needed is to hav the status before the law of Freethought literature definitly defined. When this is settled, then the Liberals of both countries can take such action as the case demands.

TALMAGE is a valuable auxiliary to the Liberal cause, and does great good by his pulpit pyrotechnics in showing the absurdity of the Bible and the Christian religion. Last sunday he cut Heber Newton off from any share in the "book of life" and the eternal city of gold for having expressed a desire to take the indecent parts of the Bible away. "There is nothing in the Bible that staggers me," said this valiant champion "there is a great deal in it that I do not understand, and do not pretend to understand and never shall understand, but it would be a very poor God who could be understood by all mankind. Here I stand, the fossil of the ages, dug up from the tertiary formation—fallen off the shelf of some antiquarian—but believing in the whole Bible from lid to lid! There is nothing in it that arouses my skepticism." Talmage believes that God made the sun and moon and that if he could do that he could make them stand still, at least he could "cause a refraction of the sun's rays so that they would appear to stand still." Although he protests that nothing in it arouses a doubt in his mind, yet he hedges a little on the Joshua story. Probably there is not another minister in New York of any brains at all who would say these things. A negro preacher of Virginia said them a year or two ago, and he was laughed out of public existence. Talmage is evidently anxious to share his fate.

THE Radical Review comes to us this week instead of the Alliance, the latter having died simultaneously with the disappearance of the ex-Reverend Mr. Miln, the Agnostic actor, from activ work in the Liberal field. Mr. Schumm was interested with Mr. Miln in the publication of the old Alliance, and in connection with Emma Schumm now announces his determination to continue the paper under the above name. It has been reduced one-half in size and four pages added to hold advertisments. In general tone it is half way between the Index Expurgatorius and the Investigator, without, however, the haughty I-am-holier-than-thou style of the former, or the sterling Infidel qualities of the latter. It regards Spiritualism as strikingly absurd, and holds that any union of Spiritualists and Materialists can be only evil. It doesn't think enough of Liberals or Liberalism to spell them with capital "L's," while it givs the Christians the benefit of the big "C's" every time, which is a relic of superstition we propose to hit whenever seen. It derides the new calendar, and talks as though itself were the first Freethought paper ever issued, when the fact is, this number is intellectual milk and water compared with many others which hav been established much longer.

Having pulled these motes out of our neighbor's eye, we giv him our hand and wish him success in establishing a Freethought paper in Chicago, which from the amount of crime committed there seems to need a moral missionary. The paper is exceedingly well made up, mechanically, and although its contributors, with the exception of our genial friend S. P. Putnam, are unknown to the Liberals of the country, they will not long remain so. Materialists will be delighted with its close communion doctrins, and Spiritualists will hav a new foe to vanquish. The price is $2 per year.

Be Sure You are Right, then Go Ahead.

Since the article, "More Legal Injustice," on page 70 of our present issue, was printed, we hav received the following, which the writer desires should stand as a substitute for the sentence in the seventeenth line, beginning with the same words that the present correction opens with:

"The consequence is that the pumps which, previous to May 3, 1882, were sold freely at from twenty-five to thirty dollars each, cannot now be bought at any reasonable price, as the holder of a claim under this judicial patent demands a large sum, twenty-five dollars each, and a royalty on Edson's pump No. 2, which is the pump the public wants, and no single part of which Loud, the plaintiff, invented or ever described in his patent papers, or anything substantially like it. The judge said he gave a patent on accessibility of valves by hand through the diaphragm of a pump "on account of the state of the art," but gave no reason why in any state of the art a man should hav a patent or any authority whatever on what he never invented or described."

THE Rev. J. M. BUCKLEY, Methodist, in a sermon preached last week, said: "I stand here to proclaim that all the sanguinary punishments recorded in the Bible were necessary and just. The Israelites had no prisons, nor any scheme of law except as propounded by Moses. The Lord had to govern them by sanguinary punishment. God taught them by miracles because they were ignorant. God, with all his infinit power and knowledge, could not go one step beyond what the Jews could understand." Did it never occur to the reverend gentleman that the Lord made these people just as they were, and that if it was necessary to kill them he made the necessity, and they consequently, were not to blame for their wickedness? And couldn't he hav made them so good that he would not hav had to kill them? And couldn't he hav reformed them by some milder method than death? Either he loves to kill, or his power was insufficient, as Mr. Buckley intimates. Which horn will the Christians choose to be impaled on?

CHARLES WATTS, editor of the London Secular Review, for several months past traveling in this country, has closed his Southern tour, and wishes to devote the next five months to lecturing in the North and Northwest. He is a very able and brilliant speaker, and will do good wherever engaged. Let him be kept busy. He may be addressed at THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

Mr. Watts will lecture next Sunday evening, Feb. 4th, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East Fifteenth street, on "The Spirit of the Age—Is it Christian or Secular?" We ask for him a full house.

"PRIESTCRAFT," said the Rev. Dr. Pullman, last Sunday, "is the child of hell—that is to say, that priestcraft which preaches what it does not believe and knows is not true." We wonder if this is a hit at some of these ministers who hav lately been crawling out of their theological shell, but hav not yet resigned their positions. Instead of priestcraft being the child of hell, it is usually considered that hell is a creation of priestcraft, which it is now trying to get rid of. We never heard that Hades had a large family.

THE Paine Celebration last Sunday night was a glorious feast of reason and eloquent flow of eulogy. The speeches, to which between four and five hundred people listened, were marked by keen analysis, able reasoning, and patriotic purpose. We hav not room in this issue for such a report as we desire to print, and will hav to defer it until next week, when the remarks will be given at length.

"Satan Rebuking Sin."

The daily Truth is getting off the track. It was once an independent paper in religious matters, but with success it has grown conservativ, and we look it over in vain for the manly utterances that once filled its columns. Not only has it ceased to print Liberal opinions, but it is actually turning Christian, as witness the following article on the London Freethinker, which is as sharp a little thorn as ever pricked the skin of an English bishop:

THE LOGIC OF BLASPHEMY.

We receive from England a weekly paper called the Freethinker which frequently quotes Truth, and we assume, therefore, reads it. We take this means of requesting the publisher to cease sending it. It professes to be an organ for the dissemination of Freethought. With its object we hav no fault to find. If a man believes there is no God we concede him the right to enjoy his faith.

We see neither offense to true religion nor injustice to any creed in a calm, earnest, critical examination of the origin, authenticity, or meaning of the scriptures.

But we hav grave objection to such a publication as the Freethinker, which is merely a vulgar, offensiv, and unintelligent publication, evidently issued to catch the pennies of the thoughtless and pander to the ribald.

Neither reason nor faith demands that those faculties shall be blindfold in the presence of religion which hav unraveled the intricacies of geological problems, which hav torn down the blue-lined dome with its gilt stars, and exposed to view vast realms of space peopled by glorious worlds; which hav thrown rays of magnifying light upon the dust of the earth, and seen it teem with its myriad forms of perfect but infinitesimal life; which hav heard in the murmurs of the shell buried for ages the history of long, long ago.

Nor will reason be thus bound, though all the shackles of tradition be swathed about her limbs. The healthy, robust, curious, activ human mind will penetrate the dark recesses of the legendary forests; it will mercilessly hew down the false creations of superstition, and stripping off the veneering of generations of sophistry, will ultimately reveal in its perfect beauty the original structure of the temple of truth.

But that we are far from that goal of our research yet is very evident. Meantime millions cherish the belief which has been handed down from father to son, and it has become sanctified in the hearts of the people.

Philosophy has not satisfied the hunger of the soul, nor has science extinguished the mysterious element in man's nature.

So strong is the religious instinct, so powerful the acquired influence of centuries of tradition, that any doubt thrown upon the old conception is a painful shock to many.

These are entitled to all consideration, and, therefore, while we eagerly accept any fresh elucidation of the religious problem, we deprecate silly, wanton, purposeless blasphemy such as the Freethinker circulates.

Its pages and its pictures add nothing to human knowledge, its flagrant and unreasoning attacks upon religion unconvince no believer. Its language and its engravings not only shock the pious, but offend against every canon of good taste.

We admit the incongruities of interpretations, and confess the inadequacy of the church's teachings, but we appreciate the fact that some of the purest-minded, the noblest of men hav venerated the creeds of the ancients; and, above all, we are convinced that the longings of the heart for the impalpable and invisible something which is yet unknown can never be quenched by idle words or ribald ridicule.

The Freethinker is now being prosecuted for blasphemy by the pious people of England, and Mr. Bradlaugh is being dragged into the case in the hope of disqualifying him for office. He is indicted for printing a paper he neither owns, edits, nor writes for; the only connection he has with it is that he is a friend of G. W. Foote, who does own and edit it. This shows very clearly the straits to which the church people of England are reduced to prevent his taking his seat in Parliament, to which he has three times been elected by Northampton. We presume the Freethinker will admit the charge of blasphemy, as defined by a Christian, but it will be hard to convince any fair-minded man that it is vulgar or indecent. For a paper which devotes columns to social scandals to make this charge is as inconsistent as it would hav been for Absalom to preach against adultery.

W. F. JAMIESON is lecturing in Davis and Durand, Ill. In February he will return to Braidwood, Ill. Address him for lectures at Lake City, Minn.

But We Giv These Up.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I see you are very good in answering questions asked by the Christians. I would like to know why, because Mrs. Adam ate one apple, the human family hav to suffer pain and torment throughout all time. And I want to know how it affects my case that Christ died to atone for my sins eighteen hundred years before I committed any. These questions bothered me very much as long as I belonged to the church, and if you can answer them satisfactorily to my mind, you can do more than any priest has done. I was conversing yesterday with a young man who is studying for the ministry. He said I must believe or I would be lost.

New Albany, Pa. A. HEVERLY.

Communications.

The Infidel Element in the Republican Party.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE REV. DR. LEONARD.

DEAR SIR: Your criticism of the Republican party, and the Infidel element of the country, in your little speech before the Methodist ministerial association, was very narrow-minded, bigoted, and unjust.

You say you "are a Republican, and it is humiliating to say it, that the Infidel element of the country is in the Republican party."

If it is so humiliating to you, why not step out of it? We could well spare you. But let us examin the Infidel, and see if he is a man that you should be ashamed of. I will name a few of them—Darwin, Huxley, Haeckel, Draper, Spencer, Spinoza, Comte, Tyndall, Hume, Mill, Gibbon, Pope, Byron, Burns, Shelley, Goethe, Schiller, Voltaire, Rousseau, Volney, Humboldt, Shakspere, Descartes, Bradlaugh, Bruno, Paine, Ingersoll, Franklin, Jefferson, Lincoln, Garrison, Smith, Phillips. I might extend this list into the hundreds, but it is not necessary. You no doubt know that all, or nearly all, of our scientific men hav been denounced by the church, and called Infidels. Our first astronomers, geologists, naturalists, philosophers, and all our great poets and reformers of the world hav been denounced by the clergy, and called Infidels.

Civilization, science, and skepticism hav all advanced together.

The church has never advocated any reform. first, she only takes it up after it becomes popular—she never originates.

The most advanced nations of the world are Germany, England, France, and America. Infidelity has made them so. Europe, and a part of Asia and Africa, were governed for sixteen hundred years by the church, and during all this time the world made no progress, until Infidelity stepped in

During the Dark Ages, from 755 to 1517, Christianity had supreme power, and science made no progress. In Italy in 1180 out of 24,000,000 of people 17,000,000 could not read.

Where there is the most Infidelity there is the highest development of science and civilization. Look at Russia, Italy, and Spain—the most Christian countries, where the ignorant and superstitious swarm around the church.

It was Christianity that established an Inquisition to torture and burn innocent men by the thousands.

The Parisian massacre, which sacrificed 70,000 people or more, mostly in one night, while they were asleep, was done by the holy mother church—by good Christians, like yourself, who hated Infidels.

Henry VIII. and Queen Mary of England, who burnt people at the stake, were good Christians. Under the reign of "Bloody Mary" of England, in four years 288 people, including 5 bishops, 21 clergymen, 55 women, and 5 children, were put to death, and several hundred more were punished in other ways, many being allowed to starve to death in prison.

"In 1680 a Polish gentleman who was convicted of having denied the existence of God was executed in Warsaw; his body was burnt, the ashes put into a cannon and shot into the air toward Tartary."

The Emperor Constantine of Rome, who presided over Nice A.D. 327, was the first man to bring the Christian religion into notice. He murdered his mother, brother, and son, to prevent them from ascending the throne. He also drowned his wife in boiling water.

Copernicus wrote a book on astronomy, but did not dare to giv it to the world until just before he died for fear of persecution from the church.

Galileo, nearly a hundred years after, avowed the truth of the Copernican system. For this he was twice persecuted by the Inquisition, first in 1615, and again in 1633.

Roger Bacon was persecuted by the church, and suffered ten years' imprisonment for his scientific writings.

In Russia, some two years ago, a man and his wife were flogged before one thousand people who gathered to witness the scene, because they denied the Greek church. The woman was held by the hair of her head while three men, one after the other, each flogged her until their strength was exhausted, and the punishment ceased only when the poor creature was too far gone to exhibit any signs of pain.

You hav no doubt read the history of the good Christian Calvin, who tied the books and writings of Michael Servetus to their author, and roasted him alive over a fire of green wood, with a wreath of straw and green twigs bestrewed with brimstone about his head.

Mr. Lecky, the European historian, who was at one time a clergyman, declares that "no organization of men upon the face of the whole earth has shed so much innocent blood as the body calling itself the church of Christ."

But I will not dwell on the crimes of the church of olden times, but will review a few of the crimes of the good Christians of our own country, of whom you are a member.

The Puritans of New England, who hung innocent old women for being witches, and also hung Quakers and whipped and drove them out of the state, were not Infidels, but good Christians.

In 1646 Friends or Quakers first came to Massachusetts. Laws were passed against them and four executed.

In 1648 Margaret Jones of Charlestown was executed for witchcraft.

In 1651 the legislature of Massachusetts passed laws against extravagance in dress.

So you see those good Christians even dictated how a man should dress.

In 1683 the governor of Virginia ordered that no printing press should be used in that colony on any occasion whatever. He was not an Infidel.

In 1692 nineteen persons were executed for witchcraft in Massachusetts.

In 1700 the legislature of New York made a law to hang every Popish priest who should come into the province.

In 1750 Massachusetts enacted a law against theatrical entertainments.

No doubt, Rev. Dr. Leonard, you think this a good law, and would like to see it enacted in every state in the Union to-day.

In 1753 Miss Julian Cox was hung for witchcraft in Glastonbury, Conn.

Rev. Dr. Leonard, how do you like these quotations from history?

"Oh," you say, "we do not believe in witches now." But does not your Bible teach of them as plainly now as it did two hundred years ago?

You say "the Infidel element is trying to get the Bible out of the public schools." True, we do not wish to see the old superstition revived.

In speaking of witchcraft Ingersoll says: "A woman was tried and convicted before Sir Matthew Hall, one of the great judges and lawyers of England, for having caused children to vomit crooked pins." Think of that! The learned judge charged the intelligent jury that there was no doubt as to the existence of witches—that it was established by all history and expressly taught by the Bible. The woman was hung and her body was burnt.

Sir Thomas Moore declared that to giv up witchcraft was to throw away the sacred scriptures. John Wesley, too, was a firm believer in ghosts, and insisted upon their existence after all laws upon their existence had been repealed in England; and I beg of you to remember that John Wesley was the founder of the Methodist church.

In New England a woman was charged with being a witch, and with having changed herself into a fox, it being said that while in this condition she was attacked and bitten by some dogs. A committee of three men were ordered by the court to examin this woman. They removed her clothing and searched for what they were pleased to call "witch spots"—that is to say, spots in which a needle could be thrust without giving pain. They reported to the court that such spots were found. She denied that she had ever changed herself into a fox. On the report of the committee she was found guilty, and she was actually executed by our Puritan fathers, the men who braved the dangers of the deep for the sake of worshiping God and persecuting their fellow-men.

The Bible says, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to liv." I do not believe that one ever did liv, nor do I believe that the witch of Endor ever raised Samuel from the dead. This doctrin of witchcraft, as taught by the Bible, has been the cause of many thousand innocent people being put to death; yet you want it taught in the public schools; and I am called an Infidel because I do not believe in such things as are taught by the Bible.

I do not believe that a whale, which has a throat not much larger than a man's, and livs on sprat—a fish so small that you could hold a thousand in your hand—ever swallowed a man, and that the man lived for three days in its stomach without air or without being dissolved by the gastric juices of so large an animal as the whale. Nor do I believe that three Hebrews passed through the fiery furnace without being scorched; nor that Samson slew one thousand Philistines with the jawbone of an ass; nor that his strength lay in his hair.

I do not believe in the astronomy of the Bible; that the sun ever stood still at the command of Joshua that he might hav more time to murder his fellowmen. Nor do I believe that Balaam's ass talked with him; nor that a serpent talked with Eve, and pointed out the way to knowledge. If he did, we are more indebted to the serpent for the knowledge he brought into the world than we are to God for our existence; for what would life be without knowledge? Nor do I believe that God covered the face of the earth with water to the depth of the highest mountains in order to drown all living creatures, except two of a kind or seven of a kind (I do not know which, for the Bible givs two accounts; I suppose you believe them both):

"And the Lord said unto Noah . . . Of every clean beast thou shalt take to thee seven . . . And Noah did according to all that the Lord commanded him" (Gen. vii, 1, 2, 5).

"Of clean beasts . . . there went in two and two unto Noah into the ark, . . . as God had commanded Noah" (Gen. vii, 8, 9).

I might go on and giv hundreds of such absurd things that no sensible man should believe. Yet you want the Bible in the public schools to teach the law of Moses, the leader of the Jews, who massacred the Midianites (read Num. xxxi). When the soldiers were tired of killing, and stopped to rest, Moses appeared on the field, and asked: "Hav ye saved all the women alive?" He then gave the command, "Kill every male among the little ones, . . . but keep the women children for yourselvs." The first act recorded of Moses when he became a man was the killing of an Egyptian. Bibles to teach our sons Solomon's sensual sway over seven hundred wives and three hundred concubines. Bibles to teach how David (a man after God's own heart) murdered Uriah to get his wife. Bibles to sanction the acts of Abraham, who represented his wife Sarah as his sister, gave her in marriage to Pharaoh, and became the father of Hagar's (his slave) children. Isaac also passed off his wife as his sister. Bibles to teach Paul's command: "I suffer not a woman to teach;" if they wish to learn anything, "let them ask their husbands at home." This good book, the word of God, that you want taught to my children is filled with self-contradictions.

Slavery is held to be a divine institution by the Bible, and it used to be sanctioned by the church.

"Cursed be Canaan; a servant of servants he shall be unto his brethren" (Gen. ix, 25).

"Of the children of the strangers that do sojourn among you, of them shall ye buy. They shall be your bondmen forever" (Lev. xxv, 45, 46).

"I will sell your sons and daughters into the hands of the children of Judah, and they shall sell them to the Sabeans, to a people afar off; for the Lord hath spoken it" (Joel iii, 8).

Then we find adultery sanctioned:

"But all the women children that hav not known a man by lying with him keep alive for yourselvs" (Num. xxxi, 18).

Intoxicating beverages are recommended:

"Giv strong drink unto him that is ready to perish, and wine to those that be of heavy heart. Let him drink and forget his poverty and remember his misery no more" (Prov. xxxi, 6, 7).

"And thou shalt bestow that money for whatsoever thy soul lusteth after, for oxen or for sheep, or for wine or for strong drink" (Deut. xiv, 26).

"Drink no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake, and thine often infirmities" (1 Tim. v., 23).

"Wine which cheereth God and man" (Judges ix, 13).

God commands human sacrifices:

"And he [God] said, Take now thy son, thine only son, Isaac, whom thou lovest, and get thee into the land of Moriah, and offer him there for a burnt offering" (Gen. xxii, 2).

Many such beautiful commands of the Lord might be given.

Lying is also approved of.

"And there came forth a spirit and stood before the Lord and said, I will persuade him. . . . I will go forth and be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets. And he said, Thou shalt persuade him and prevail also. Go forth and do so" (1 Kings xxii, 21, 22).

Many more such passages might be given from this word of God that you want taught in the public schools.

It was not uncommon for God's chosen people to sell their daughters to be used as slaves or concubines. Christianity never abolished slavery. It lasted eighteen hundred years after that religion was established. Of the Methodist Episcopal church which held its conference in Cincinnati in 1836, two members of the conference were charged with lecturing through the country in opposition to slavery, which led to the adoption of the following:

"Resolved, That we are decidedly opposed to modern abolitionism, and wholly disclaim any right or intention to interfere with the relation, civil and political, as it now exists between master and slave in the slave-holding states of the Union."

For the benefit of those who wish to know if the Bible is an obscene book and fit to be taught in the schools, I would refer them to 1 Cor. vii; Isaiah xxx, 22; Isaiah lxvi, 9; and 2 Kings xxiii, 27.

Ingersoll has offered one hundred dollars in gold to any orthodox clergyman who will read to his congregation chapters in the Bible that he would point out to them. Until you are willing to accept his offer you should not recommend the Bible in the public schools.

You say we are "trying to oust chaplains from public institutions." True, we do not believe they should ever be appointed by state or government, inasmuch as our Constitution does not recognize any religion. "Navy chaplains receive $2,500 a year—$300 additional for each five years of service, and at sixty-two are retired with $2,500 for life."

There is about $800,000,000 worth of church property in the United States; the most of it free from taxation. There are some 70,000 clergymen in the country. The cost of supporting the church is about $200,000,000 yearly. How much better it would be if all this vast amount could be expended for the benefit of poor, suffering humanity, instead of being devoted to the support of a class of lazy, useless drones in the great hive of humanity, who produce nothing nor giv anything in return for their liberal support!

You say: "How humiliating was the action of that convention! It was a concession to the Infidel and beer element of the Republican party." I will defy you to name any temperance law that has ever been passed that has not been passed by this Republican and "Infidel element" which you so despise. The first pamphlet written on the temperance question was written by Judge Thomas Herttell, an Infidel. Infidels hav been at the head of all reforms. Woman's rights were first advocated by Mary Wollstonecraft, Frances Wright, Ernestine L. Rose, and other Infidel women. They were Infidels who first advocated the ten-hour system of labor. All true reforms hav been inaugurated by Infidels. The Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States are Infidel documents Thomas Paine was the first man to advocate antislavery in this country. He wrote, "Man has no property in man." He was the first man to advocate the independence of this country. He no doubt wrote the Declaration of Independence, or had a hand in it; he did more to make this country a republic than any other man.

"In freedom's cause the chosen led the van,
And Paine upheld the sacred Rights of Man."

But see how he has been abused by the church, because he could not believe all the absurd stories in the Bible, and did not believe it to be the word of God.

The next men to agitate the antislavery question were William Lloyd Garrison, Gerritt Smith, and Wendell Phillips—all Infidels. Let us see what these men received at the hands of Christians for it. They dragged Garrison through the streets with a rope, threatened the life of Smith, and greeted with hisses Phillips at his antislavery lectures.

The "Fugitiv Slave Law," enacted in 1850, was introduced into Congress by Mr. Mason, of Virginia. This law made it a penitentiary offense in a northern man to aid or abet the escape of a slave from his master. Mr. Mason declared that "his main purpose was to humiliate the Abolitionists by compelling them to do this menial service to the slave-holding aristocracy or go to jail." Please remember that Mr. Mason was not an Infidel, but a good Christian.

Georgia offered $5,000 for the head of Garrison, dead or alive; please remember this. Also remember that Abner Kneeland, of Boston (an Infidel), was the only man who offered his hall to the Abolitionists for lectures.

The credit for breaking the chains which bound four million human beings in bondage belongs to the "Infidel element" of this country which you so much abhor.

Abraham Lincoln, the emancipator of American slaves, was an Infidel. Let us see if the Infidel is charitable.

Robert Owen gave nearly half a million dollars for the poor laboring people. John Redman gave four hundred thousand dollars for free beds in the hospital in Boston. Peter Brigham donated more than a million dollars to the hospitals of Boston. William Machire, of Indiana, gave half a million dollars to the workingmen of that state. James Lick gave several millions for benevolent and scientific purposes. Stephen Girard founded an orphan college which cost several millions.

Now let us examin a few statistics and see how the morals of the Infidel compare with those of the Christian. In an official parliamentary report, in 1873, of the criminals in England and Wales we find 146,146. Of the different religions of the people of those countries we find:

Church of England	6,932,935
Dissenters	7,235,159
Catholics	1,500,000
Jews	57,850
Infidels	7,000,000

Crimes to the 100,000 of population:

Catholics	2,500
Church of England	1,400
Dissenters	150
Infidels	5

This needs no comment.

A "History of Prostitution," by William W. Sanger, M.D., New York city, givs the following questions and answers put to the prostitutes of that city:

Question.—Were your parents Protestants, Catholics, or non-professors?

Protestant	960
Catholics	970
Non-professors	63

Q.—Were you trained to any religion? If so, was it Protestant or Catholic?

Protestant	972
Catholic	977
No religious training	51

Q.—Do you profess the same religion now?

Profess religion as educated	1,909
Non-professors	91

How much good has religion done these women?

Ex-Governor Robinson read a paper last year at the State Liberal League meeting at Ottawa, as follows:

Convicts in the Kansas penitentiary	640
Number of those having Christian education and attending Sunday-school	440
Not having Christian parents but attending Sunday-school	127
Without Sunday-school training, but believing in the Bible inspiration and the dogmas of the Christian church	37
Unbelievers	—

I worked one year in the penitentiary of the state of Ohio (not as a convict, though), where there were, I think, some fifteen hundred prisoners at that time. I found no Infidels, but many good praying Christians who would steal everything they could get their hands on, even the things out of my pockets.

Stuart Robson, of the Detroit Opera House, in an open letter to the Rev. A. T. Pierson (Feb. 21, 1880), who had slandered the theater, made this offer:

"I challenge the Rev. Pierson to name a single state prison which numbers among its inmates an actor, and I will contribute $100 to the Irish Famin Fund if he can name a single state prison which does not hold a preacher."

During the year 1877 forty clergyman were convicted of crime in the United States.

Now I will make you, Rev. Dr. Leonard, an offer; I will agree to giv you the names of one hundred ministers that hav committed crimes within the past five years, for every one Infidel that you may name that has been convicted of crime within the same time.

I would advise you, until the Christian record stands better than it now does, to be careful what you say about the "Infidel element."

C. D. WALLACE.

Whence Come We, and Whither?

Who can tell? Various theories hav obtained in different portions of the world as to the origin of the race. There is no agreement in the world as to its cosmogony. Hence there can be no authority to settle the mooted question, only that of might. That power has been in actual force in all countries, and always exercised without regard to race, sex, or color. Some in all ages hav used a natural right to doubt what was not proven, as Descartes said, "giv unqualified assent to no propositions but those the truth of which is so clear and distinct that they cannot be doubted." To doubt tends to increase thought, which tends to knowledge. The doubters hav increased in numbers and lore to such an extent that they hav contributed an ocean of thought, which continually breaks and surges against the rock of falsehood, or, as Watts sang, "rock of ages, cleft for me." This tidal wave of thought has so attenuated the old rock of belief that we doubt in no fear of personal danger—a true indication of progress, which is also shown by the fact that no intelligent preacher will stand before the people and say the world was made in six days; and, should any one be found who would dare to make such a statement, it would be conclusiv proof that he was not intelligent on that subject. We can more readily decide that the world was not made in six days than we can tell the time it has taken to bring it to its present condition. We are so certain that the first man and woman were not created as the record states that the fable has lost all power over us. Yet we hav not solved the question who were the first couple, nor where they lived, and in what age of the world. Neither is it essential that the positiv truth should be attained before giving up belief in what is proven to be false. It is often said we must not destroy a belief until something has been provided to take its place. That is not always possible to those who decide by their reason, for as soon as the revelation comes to them that it is unreasonable and false, it is destroyed, and it is afterthought what shall take its place. They may not know what to substitute for it, as the question might be an enigma so recondite that time would be required to determin what the truth was. One thing is certain, we are better without any belief on that question, until the truth appears, than to say we believe what our reason has proven false. We cannot be worse off in the future even if a falsehood for a time should appear to us a truth. Agree as to how the first man and woman came into being, and when; then conclusions readly follow. Theology considers it all-important to hav the child receive impressions of religious faith while the mind is in a plastic state, hence the first question—Who was the first man? Adam. Who was the first woman? Eve. What an amount of time has been wasted in learning the child to say:

"Then I must learn to know the Lord
And learn to read his holy word;
He clothes my back, and keeps me warm,
He saves my bones and flesh from harm;
He givs me bread, and milk, and meat,
And all I hav that's good to eat."

While such mummeries and falsehoods are taught to the young, what can be expected of those in mature age? Just what has happened in the ages past, accepting whatever the priest declares, never doubting, being always opposed to an inquiring mind, endeavoring to keep themselvs in such a sequacious frame of mind that they are satisfied with the kind of mental pabulum dealt out to them by the preacher in a lachrymose tone. Time and thought are the elevators of the race, by showing the falsity of the old, bringing forward a new truth, so that to day when we hear the pragmatical priest put forth that exploded dogma, it falls harmlessly upon us. Are we to blame if a thought comes up that he knows better, or at least ought to? Who is injured if we pretermit the whole thing and seek for truth in other directions? In 1806 Lewis and Clarke made explorations on the Missouri River 1,000 miles above its junction with the Mississippi, and described the remains of ancient fortifications, but, like other statements made by them, these were received with incredulity, because the time allowed by the Bible, from the birth of Adam to the present, would not serve to explain the formation of those evidences of men in America for a much longer period of time than theologians had prescribed. About thirty years ago Squire and Davis published a work on the strange monuments of a long vanished civilization through the valley of the Mississippi. Their travels, with illustrations, were read with great interest, being published in a leading magazine. It was the beginning of a literature on the mound builders. Theology and the supernatural had lost their hold on the minds of the people to such an extent that what would not be listened to in 1806 was read by great numbers of people fifty years later with an evident desire to learn the truth. They had become doubters of the Bible story about the first man, and made an application to be insured in truth, come from what source it may. The United States Geological Surveying Expedition of 1872 fully confirmed all that Lewis and Clarke had reported, and showed still farther that similar monuments are to be seen in great profusion all through the Yellowstone region and most of the tributaries of the upper Missouri. Works of man everywhere! We cannot determin the time when man appeared on this planet, neither is it known when this continent first received the impress of his foot, nor whence he came. One theory was that it must be settled from Asia, that Bhering Straits were probably frozen over, some persons went over on the ice to America, and when the ice broke failed to get back. Professor Agassiz and others thought that the prehistoric man was indigenous to the soil, a separate development of creation. "We maintain" he says "that, like all organized beings, mankind cannot hav originated in single individuals, but must hav been created in that numerical harmony which is characteristic of each species. Men must hav originated in nations as the bees hav originated in swarms, and as the different social plants hav covered the extensive tracts over which they hav naturally spread." John T. Short published a work on the origin of the North Americans of antiquity. His theory is that America was peopled from the Eastern Hemisphere. He devotes a chapter to the origin of the prehistoric American, and still it is left in uncertainty, vague speculation, as is shown by the fact that the ablest men who hav labored to solve the problem are divided in regard to the solution. Mr. Short is certain that the Central American region south of the Isthmus of Tehauntepec was the one which first became the abode of a civilized race in the Western Hemisphere. What hav we gained by examining the origin of man, having failed to positivly determin the question? It has demonstrated that the story of Adam and Eve cannot be believed by any reasoning person; it also disproves the old geogony which was started contemporary with Adam; it has made us chronic doubters of every statement put forth by persons who pretend to speak by authority of belief in those old ideas of creation, but, above all, it has taught us to look within ourselvs to determin the right or wrong of any question. Belief in the quick creation of Adam, also that "in Adam's fall we sinned all," makes it necessary to establish a penal colony in an unknown world, where Adam and his innocent posterity can be adequately punished, and at the same time furnish pleasure for the saints in heaven. Rev. Dr. Emmons said, "The sight of hell torments will exalt the happiness of the saints forever." Peter Pindar said:

"The man whose soul the blackest vices taint,
For heaven's glory makes a damned good saint.
Repent, then, all ye rogues, ye'll be forgiven,
And giv the saints a holiday in heaven."

We doubt their futuritial theories, having less evidence to sustain them than they had to favor their theory of creation; as the world is here to speak for itself. It speaks continually, and disproves them. They cannot show the world of which they claim to know so much, and issue letters of credit for the believers to use in that fairy "land of milk and honey." It is called the bourne from whence no traveler returns. No geographer has mapped out its location, no geological survey has ever disturbed its solitude, no mound builder has left traces of his handiwork in that unexplorable region, nor has there ever been found any evidence of early civilization, or any relics of remote barbarism. The scientist can giv us no ideas of any thing in that world, although telling us definitly of events that transpire in worlds at such a distance that it tasks the imagination to conceive of it. Shall we do penance, mortify the flesh, and humble ourselvs during life, hoping thereby to become actual settlers in the realms of country known only by faith in the imagination? A hope is the only result, the ultimate of all the preaching. Hope is not knowledge; when that is attained, hope has vanished. It is now a fact, with which hope has nothing to do. Can we know more of the actual duties of life by having such a hope? Within ourselvs are the powers that decide the right or the wrong, and the possession of them makes it imperativ that all questions should be settled by that tribunal, regardless of any deterrents put forth by priests or creeds.

CHARLES C. JOHNSON.

Milford, Mass.

Letters from Friends.

NEW YORK, Jan., 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $14. You will notice that I hav increased my contribution to the Monument Fund to $5, which I think is even yet too small for such a worthy purpose. H. L. HORTON.

RIXFORD, PA., Jan. 9, 283.

MR. EDITOR: There are a great many things I feel in my heart I would like to say in the way of condolence, but think it would be out of place; but you know my sympathy is with THE TRUTH SEEKER, from the fact that I hav been a constant reader of it since it was first published, and I hope the time will come when I can assure you of it in a more material way.

Yours for truth, J. L. BROOKS.

BURR OAK, MICH., Jan. 13, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed $4 00 — $1.00 for the Bennett Monument Fund and $2 50 for my favorit paper, the grand old TRUTH SEEKER. You can count on my wife and myself as life subscribers, as long as you battle against God's vicegerents.

Our heartfelt sympathy is extended to Mrs. Bennett and all of the friends in the Liberal ranks at our great loss. Yours fraternally, M. A. DEXTER.

JOPLIN, Mo., Jan. 3, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me to assure you that the announcement of the death of D. M. Bennett, the great Infidel head of America, was a terrible shock to the Liberals of this city, and that away down deep in the heart of all of us is a feeling of deepest sympathy for that brave, patient little woman, Mrs. Bennett, and for yourself. Sincerely hoping the recollections of this bitter cup may be removed from both of you, and that all things may work for the good, permanency, and prosperity of the noble old TRUTH SEEKER, believe me ever fraternally thine,

WM. M. CARTER.

VEAL STATION, TEXAS, Jan. 10, 283

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $5—$1.50 for the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World," 50 cents for a life-size lithograph of D. M. Bennett, $1 for the Bennett Monument Fund, $1.75 for the continuation of THE TRUTH SEEKER for 283, and 25 cents for postage.

We cannot express to you the sadness of our hearts in the loss of dear Brother Bennett. We will ever hold his name sacred in our memory. It was the light of his dear TRUTH SEEKER that led us out of superstition's darkness, and long may it wave.

Yours for truth, C. C. GLENN AND WIFE.

GALT, ONT., Dec. 27, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: I cannot express the surprise and shock the news of the death of D. M. Bennett caused me to feel. He was a man that I greatly admired for his sterling honesty of purpose, and his bold and manly advocacy of those principles to emancipate the minds of the race. I sincerely trust that although our champion is passed from the scene, the great paper that he has built up will continue to prosper and shed its light as brilliantly as in the past. I will in the future do what little I can to further its influence. When the "Bennett Hall" takes shape I will be glad to be put down for a subscriber. I hope it will be such an institution as will do credit and honor to the Liberal cause.

Yours fraternally, JAMES BROWN.

ST. CATHERINE, Mo., Jan. 10, 1883.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: In the language of Col. R. G. Ingersoll, I realize how vain it is to attempt to gild a grief with words. If I could say anything to lighten the burden of your grief I would be happy to do so. But I, too, am a mourner, for in him I hav lost a dear friend. I hav followed him with interest from the first issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER at Paris, Ill., to the present, having never missed a copy. The news of his sudden death was a severe shock to me. My first thought was, Will THE TRUTH SEEKER still liv? His friends all say yes. The object for which he has labored so hard must be perpetuated. His works are immortal, whether he has a continued existence or not.

Inclosed find $3 for renewal of my subscription and Bronson Keeler's "Short History of the Bible."

W. E. CRANDALL.

LEBANON, OREGON, Jan. 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: With a sorrowful heart I glance over my dearly beloved paper, THE TRUTH SEEKER, in mourning for my dear old friend, D. M. Bennett. He is gone, but not his memory; it will last with me forever. I feel sympathy for his dear wife, but may she bear the blow with fortitude; and as regards the paper, I hope and trust that you may keep it alive as a monument for Mr. Bennett. You did well when he was gone on his Round-the-World trip; you can do so now, though he is gone forever.

Hoping that all may be well, and wishing Mrs. Bennett and yourself well, I remain

Yours in love and truth, A. ERVIN.

P. S.—Send me two copies of "Crimes of Preachers." A. E.

ANAHEIM, CAL., Jan. 8, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me also to contribute my mite of sympathy to Mrs. Bennett, yourself, and associates for the irreparable loss just sustained by the immutable law of nature in the demise of the great and noble defender of the faith, D. M. Bennett. The emotions awakened by this sad news I can safely say with kindred spirits here in this far-away corner of our country, are better felt than expressed; suffice it to assure you I mourn from the depths of my heart, as I never hav before, the loss of our great beacon-light, the chivalrous Bayard of truth, sans peur et sans reproche. May the mantle of his genius and honesty of purpose with a fixed and steady design of will fall upon worthy shoulders, and the good fight go on.

Please find inclosed $2.50 for renewal of my subscription. E. A. PULLEN.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., Jan. 15, 1883.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: Please find inclosed $4—$2.50 to pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER for 1883, and $1.50 for the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World." Please accept our warmest and most heartfelt sympathy in your great bereavement in the loss of your honored husband. We never had the pleasure of seeing him personally, but having taken THE TRUTH SEEKER from its first number we felt well acquainted with him, and when the sad news of his death reached us we felt as though a friend and brother had been taken away. May his good influence ever surround you to sustain and direct in all your cares, and may THE TRUTH SEEKER liv and flourish in its good management, and become a beacon-light to all who are groping in darkness and superstition, is the sincere wish of JOHN D. EAGER.

CLARA A. EAGER, M.D.

MORRISONVILLE, ILL., Jan. 10, 283.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: It is useless for me to try to tell you how I was shocked when I read in THE TRUTH SEEKER of the death of Mr. Bennett. For many years I had hoped some time to take our noble leader in the cause of Freethought by the hand. But now he is gone. I join with you to carry out his wish that THE TRUTH SEEKER shall liv. Inclosed please find $2 50 for the year 283. I want to tell the readers of your paper that my family of six children are all married but one. My wife and self, and all the children, and all those they married are outspoken Infidels, and are raising their children in the same way. I first saw THE TRUTH SEEKER when that good man, D. M. Bennett, was in prison. I read the paper, and it brought me to the front in the cause of Freethought, where I intend to battle the remainder of my days. I am the only one that takes your paper at this office, but that one is doing a vast amount of good. I hope every Liberal will come up to the work and pledge that THE TRUTH SEEKER shall liv. M. S. GOWIN.

DANVILLE, ILL., Jan. 14, 1883

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: It was with feelings of sorrow and regret I read of your husband's transition to spirit life. We hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER since it started (a mere leaflet) in Paris, Ill. Hav followed him through his many trials which he suffered at the hands of the enemies of Freethought. How nobly he toiled and bore all for the sake of humanity, toiling when others would hav sunk under the weight of persecution he so bravely bore. But he has left a monumental work more lasting and useful than marble, and crowded the work of a lifetime into a few short years. No wonder the feeling of sympathy and regret flows in from all quarters, for all feel humanity has lost a true friend—"not lost, but gone before." Now that our noble old chieftain has lain off his dusty sandals, I am glad such loyal hands grasp the standard of Freethought and bear it aloft. Long may THE TRUTH SEEKER wave, and every Freethinker in the land rally to its support until it shall accomplish the work so nobly begun for universal mental freedom.

Inclosed please find $10.50—$2.50 for my subscription, and the balance for "A Truth Seeker in Europe." and the four volumes of "A Truth Seeker Around the World." If THE TRUTH SEEKER continues as Liberal in the future as it has been in the past, consider us life subscribers. MRS. L. H. GURLEY.

BERRYVILLE, OHIO.

MR. EDITOR: I received my paper at last. They were retained by the postmaster. Language would fail to express the sorrow I felt at the sad intelligence of Mr. Bennett's death, for in him I think mankind has lost a true friend. I was somewhat acquainted with his trial and the unfairness with which he was treated, and admired the calmness and resignation with which he bore it all. Persecuted by bigotry and intolerance, by those who hav cried out against honesty and reform, thinking they were doing God's service, I admired that man for his untiring energy and the great success which has followed his work. It now remains for those who are left to follow out his great life work. I believe he has done as much as any other man in removing the scales of superstition and ignorance which hav been accumulating for ages upon the mental vision.

I, too, like many others, hav been raised in the ranks of orthodoxy, and it was hard for me to giv up my old cherished opinions; but when I saw that reason, truth, and science were all against me I had to yield. Now I expect to throw my help and influence on the side I believe to be battling for the right, and if we as Freethinkers hold fast to what we believe to be right we will finally come out as victors, and the whole world will gradually rise into the blessed light. B. M. RENO.

BIRMINGHAM, MICH., Jan. 10, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: You will find inclosed $3.50—$2.50 for my subscription, and the balance for the Bennett Monument Fund. I will pledge $1 for The Truth Seeker Hall when needed. I wish I was able to giv more. I hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER since it was first published, and it's my intention at present to take it as long as I liv, that is, if it proves to be as good as it always has been.

Words cannot express my feeling when I opened my paper and saw it dressed in mourning. I said, "Mr. Bennett is dead, I know." How rejoiced I am that he lived to get home and be with his wife and friends in his last moments. I felt it was a great undertaking for a man of his age to undergo such a journey around the world. I never expected he would liv to get home, and in his last letter when he wrote that he should hav to make that letter a short one as he did not feel very well, I mentally said, "Oh, I do hope he will liv." I must close this letter with wishing Mrs. Bennett and our young editor success in their great undertaking in publishing a Freethought paper. You will hav so many things to contend with, pray keep out of all libel suits. I hav trembled for Mr. Bennett so many times, it's so hard to prove what we know is true sometimes. MRS. PHEBE PATCH.

GRASS LAKE, MICH., Jan. 15, 1883.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: In reading over letters of condolence from friends and loved ones I wonder that none appears from Grass Lake, Mich., where the deceased editor stood second to none among his friends as a great reformer. Business is business in this city, but on hearing the sad news Mr. Bennett's friends buried this motto out of sight and wended slowly to Rustic Hall, and there strong men wept over the loss of their departed benefactor. Mr. Bennett made us a short call last summer, and grasped the hand of us all as his neighbors, and only gave us one short lecture so great was his anxiety to return to his family within the year from his Round-the-World trip. His death is a lesson of hopefulness to the living. Men of hope, like the lamented Bennett, are men of enterprise, and his strong, hopeful spirit has sustained thousands and preserved them from ignorant superstition. Many religious papers hav no regard for sacredness of character, and print with gall the most pernicious and cruel epithets against the departed. The clergy of all denominations were afraid to meet his convincing arguments, and why do they condemn him without proof? The lowest courts in the land hold the most notorious and vile criminals innocent until proven guilty, and I hope no more such presidents and clergy will ever disgrace this republic as they did in Mr. Bennett's case. His enemies are guilty of that kind of stealing to which Shakspere refers when he says:

"Who steals my purse steals trash,
But he that filches from me my good name
Robs me of that which not enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed."

But they cannot make our departed hero "poor indeed." Let his light shine, and his monument reach the Polar star. D. L. BALL.

ACROSTIC.

CARVERSVILLE, PA., Jan. 1, 283.

MR. EDITOR: With other lines ascribed to the memory of D. M. Bennett (founder of the New York TRUTH SEEKER), a star of the first magnitude among men, whose demise to a higher sphere occurred at the transit of Venus, Dec. 6, 1882, i.e., 282, 23,360 days old.

Dear departed chieftain true,
Entered on a life that's new,
Round thy memory clings a fame
Of honor to thy honored name;
Blessed with intellect most grand
It flowed profusely from thy hand,
Gave freedom a more glorious start,
Now budding in the human heart.
Entombed thy body it may lay,

More potent will thy life bear sway.
Onward, upward, never weaker,
Rolls the car of THE TRUTH SEEKER,
Turning darness into light
In its onward, upward flight,
Manifesting truth sublime,
Eternal in eternal time;
Rolling onward in its course,

Bounding with resistless force;
Ever anxious for the right,
Never shunning of the light,
Nor the ignorance of mankind;
Embalmed a mummy in the mind
That's bent and warped in many a way
Through influence of a priestly sway.

Freedom's champion now has risen,
Other spheres to roam
With brave spirits gone before
To their celestial home,

Who taught while here from the authority of truth, and not as the scribes and Pharisees after the traditions of men that lead to bewilder, and dazzle to blind the eagle intellect of man's immortal soul, that should be ever free as the bird that flits the air untrammeled from a cage, like our departed brother

Whose intellect was bright and clear
That nothing could subdue.
He rose triumphant in his sphere
A hero brave and true,
He viewed all shams as worthless trash,
Whatever they might be,
Fit only for the fire of truth,
To blaze the light of liberty.

Respectfully, E. E. ALLEN.

TO MR. A. W. LOGAN.

OMAHA, NEB., Jan. 10, 1883.

You ask, Why should not the government issue paper money and loan it at interest not to exceed three per cent per annum? Because interest is theft, and as the government has created the national banks to be the curse of all curses—the thief of all thievery—I object to the government going into the same line of business. But your question shows that you feel with the rest of us that there is a need of money. Why should there be a need of money? Why should not the government furnish money as it furnishes postage stamps—free, in unlimited quantities just as it furnishes postage stamps? Why charge interest for one more than the other? Money is as truly a universal necessity as postage stamps, or as anything else you use; and no man has any more right to charge interest for money after it passes from his possession than he has to charge toll from every one who passes along the highway after he has passed over it. The banks, by contracting the amount of money in use, compel all business and all men to borrow their shinplaster bills, and during the past sixteen years there has not been money enough in all of the United States to do the business of New York city alone on a cash principle, as it should be done. All the rest of the business of the country has had to be done on credit or debt-drawing interest. Many years ago it was stated by those qualified to know that the aggregate indebtedness of the United States was not less than fifteen thousand millions, and the interest on this vast unjust debt has been an unbearable burden upon all of the labor and business of the country for so long that it is astonishing to think how it has been borne with so much patience. There is, there can be, but one remedy: Pay all debts in legal, lawful money, and let the crime of interest forever cease.

J. H. WOOD.

AUBURN, Jan. 11, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $5.00 for the following purposes: $2 50 for renewal of subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER, $1.50 for the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World," and $1 for the Bennett Monument.

I am very happy to learn that THE TRUTH SEEKER is still going on as before, and that you are to be its editor, and, since entering upon that high and responsible duty, hav at the outset pledged your faithfulness to both the paper and its many supporters. O Friend Macdonald! I rejoice once more over the encouraging prospectus which fortunately seems to be in store for its success. Then again I, for one, renew my determination to aid in its continued support. This pledge I made to its founder while he was in prison, serving out an unjust Christian sentence, and it givs me much pleasure to think that I hav been true to it and ever shall be as long as we both liv. Yes, Mr. Editor, you may rest assured that I shall not forget THE TRUTH SEEKER. I feel that I hav already done not a little for its success, in my humble way, and hope to be able to do much more. I hope to be able to send you a few subscribers this year, and to aid as far as possible to perpetuate the cause and mission so fearlessly espoused by its great, good, and noble founder, D. M. Bennett.

I am glad to know that you intend to giv ecclesiasticism no rest, but to show up its contemptible debauchery, rottenness, and bold, bare-faced lies, and trust that the church will find in you just as firm an aggressor, dealing your irresistible, sledge-hammer blows upon the anvil of priestcraft, superstition, and ignorance, as your departed predecessor was, whose name is destined to liv and be commemorated in the minds of his countrymen centuries after his Christian persecutors, maligners, and defamers hav passed from the face of the earth into oblivion. Oh, how more than ever do I revere his illustrious labors. I take from my shelvs the writings which he has left behind him as a monument to his memory, and again peruse them, knowing they are the expressions of honesty, sincerity, and a noble uprightness of a true and holy manhood. His writings and teachings will in after years be read and respected by millions yet unborn, and hav a greater and much better influence for good than the delusiv mouthings of a thousand priests.

D. M. Bennett spent the whole of his advanced life in promulgating to the world the great truths of nature and science, corroborated by careful investigation, strong, unanswerable argument, and sound historical facts, in contradistinction to those of Christian fanaticism, fabulous theology, ancient barbarism, superstition, and error, which hav for two thousand years stigmatized and cursed the whole world. Forever your friend,

L. DEWITT GRISWOLD.

GREAT VALLEY, N. Y., Jan. 15.

MR. EDITOR: I should like very much to see Sister Bennett's picture in the paper. We hav Brother Bennett's, and we never can be easy until we hav that of her who has been the efficient partner and faithful wife of him whom all loved to think of while living and revere now though gone from us—I won't say dead—I don't like the word, neither do I think it would convey the truth, for I am one of those crazy fellows who think they hav evidence of that kind and nature that is proof to us that that ordeal called death is only change or transition from one state of existence to another. Hence I am of the opinion that D. M. Bennett is more alive today than ever, and, if I am not mistaken, will change his tactics a little, and we shall hear from him ere long in a manner so direct and of such a nature as to satisfy many of the most incredulous that death does not end all, and it is no more a mystery that we liv after throwing off the old material body than that we existed with it. As Brother Bennett said, it is no gift of a personal God, but rather a great fact in nature. Thus I regard it, and I think it is so regarded by thousands of Spiritualists now. Pardon me, Mr. Editor, for this great digression, and now to resume. I would say that Sister Bennett's picture must be forthcoming or there will be a fuss in THE TRUTH SEEKER family, for we are all uneasy, and many of us hardly know what is the matter. But I think I hav divined the cause of it—that it is the want of knowing more of her whom we hav all thought of so much in times past, and while her dear partner was absent seeing to things at home and about the office without a murmur of complaint, doing her share and doing it well, while the absent husband was abroad supplying us with mental food. Which food, by the way, he gave to us in quantities that were all we could do to digest, and that of a wholesome nature, not of the manna sort that would swell and shrink. Neither did he furnish to his numerous friends such dainty fare as two loaves and a few small fishes, but rather by the ton, well rounded up and shaken down, solid, substantial, and running over. God bless him! we all say, and he who says nay to it either did not know the man or has an ill-balanced brain. But why this uneasiness after being surfeited with mental food? I opine it is for the want of seeing and knowing more of her whom our great hero thought worthy to carry on to completion the great work so nobly commenced and well established by him whom so many mourn as dead, though many, knowing to the contrary, rejoice. Yet we feel sad to think that he has left the primary or material side of life wherein he once labored and we now are left. We beg of you, Mr. Editor, to persuade Sister Bennett to hav her portrait inserted in THE TRUTH SEEKER, that the many friends and readers may in part if not wholly be compensated for the great loss of him who has so suddenly and unexpectedly left us. Don't say no, for you can't keep us still in that way. We may be a little whimsical, yet we are determined to hav Mrs. Bennett's picture in the paper, if it takes all summer to get it there, and then we are going to claim her as our own legitimate property. Shall not pay a cent for this one likeness of hers, but of course we shall all want Brother and Sister Bennett's likeness, life-size, some time in the near future. But not without paying full price for them. Inclosed find $1.50 for the fourth volume of Mr. Bennett's travels, and $1.00 for the Bennett monument. Truly yours, A. F. ALBRIGHT.

HORTON, MICH., Jan. 5, 1883.

MR. EDITOR; I was from home when the paper came containing the news of Mr. Bennett's death.

I am sure that the death of no other person outside of my own family could hav caused such sincere grief and sorrow as did his. I never saw him, yet I felt that we were brothers, and knew each other well. I missed seeing him at Jackson last July, on account of sickness. I had a premonition that if I did not see him at that time, and welcome him home again, and shake his manly hand—that hand that was ever ready and willing to assist and help a weary brother—my opportunity would not again occur on this side of the river. We were nearly of the same age, he being about six months my senior.

I hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER since its commencement, hav paid in advance, and always mean to, as long as I can raise the subscription price.

Be assured, my other brother, that I mourn with you, and the thousands of great, good, and learned truth seekers throughout the world, over the death of a dear friend and brother, a lover of his kind. And to Mrs. Bennett please convey my especial sympathy and condolence in this, her greatest of trials. Please say to her these words of consolation, that she should not mourn as one without hope, for if he will liv again in truth I cannot say, but this I do of a certainty know, that D. M. Bennett has created for himself an individuality of his own that will be immortal—yea, that will never, never die. And one other thing I know, that, so far as I can learn, the history of the race is a progressiv one, and if we liv again after what we call death our condition will be better than here.

To all whom I hav become somewhat acquainted with through your paper: Please turn your mental gaze in this direction. You will see an elderly man, say half past three score and three, with white hair and beard, and hand extended. He wishes to shake hands with you all, if you will permit. Yes, please shake. There, God bless you all, and a happy new year to you. If I had space I would call you by name, my brother. Please indulge me just a little, while I call just a few and see if they will respond. I may not hav another opportunity. To commence, then, it will do me lots of good just to pronounce your name once, Elmina. Bless your little—great, big, I meant—heart! Ah! I knew you would giv me your hand a second time. There, I feel twenty years younger. Amy and Lucy N., Elizur Wright, James Parton, and Pillsbury, H. L. Green and T. C. Leland, and that fellow and his wife who are traveling all over the country, making home thrusts and driving nails home, and clenching them, too, in the rotten old coffin of orthodoxy, and last, at this time, but not least, by any means, comes Thaddeus B.—not of Warsaw, but of New York—a perfect giant. Thaddeus, I beg pardon—I did not mean to be personal, but I am old, and "can't most always sometimes tell" what to say. Then there are Olive K., Daniel E., Courtlandt, and the others—to all I say good-bye.

I like the epitaph spoken of in the issue of Dec. 30th, by F. J. Emery—to wit, "D. M. Bennett, the truth seeker."

Please find inclosed draft for $5.50, for which credit three new subscribers, as below.

Respectfully, ISAAC SNYDER, M. D.

EUREKA, CAL., Jan. 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: It is with feelings of sadness I pen these lines. For years I hav had a strong desire to see Mr. Bennett, which I hoped would sooner or later be gratified; imagin my surprise and disappointment when I read of his death. I hav been a subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER from its first start, and although in the first few years of its existence there was much in it I did not approve, the paper being inclined to Spiritualism, I hav always admired the justness and manly principle with which it was conducted. Of late years it has been all that an Agnostic, like myself, could wish. The loss we hav sustained by Mr. Bennett's death is perhaps irreparable. But few men hav the moral courage to liv up to their convictions under all circumstances; but few men are willing to become martyrs to a cause they believe or know to be just; yet D. M. Bennett would not swerve from duty—he preferred to be a prisoner rather than a hypocrit, and would not bend his knee to priestly power, let come what may. While we lament his loss, let us honor him by walking in his footsteps.

I see in your issue of the 16th of last month that there is a movement on foot to erect a monument to Mr. Bennett. I am in favor of the monument proposed by Mr. Ryan—a valuable monument in some conspicuous place; a monument in which the blatant Jo Cook and the infamous Comstock can see their infamy; a monument in which those envious slanderers, Bundy, Abbot, and Underwood, can see their own disgrace; a monument which will proclaim to the world that the Liberals of America will no longer submit to being trampled under foot by pious hypocrits.

We owe it to ourselvs and to posterity to do something that is worth doing in regard to this matter. I am not one of those who believe in neglecting the living and raising costly monuments to them after they are dead. But, considering the relations which Infidelity now holds to Christianity, considering the general state of mind of the nation at the present time, and that notwithstanding our enemies are driven behind their bulwarks, with scarcely a weapon left to defend themselvs, they are still allowed to lord it over us by the protection and privileges the government affords them, I think it our duty to do all that is in our power to break down the lines of demarkation, and oblige the government to respect the rights of all citizens—the Infidel as well as the Christian; and it is my opinion that the erection of a monument to D. M. Bennett, who seemed to be the special target of the bigots, would go far toward breaking down that barrier we so much complain of. Let the world know that we are in earnest; that no obscenity dodge will frighten us, no persecution intimidate us, and our rights will soon be respected.

To a monument at the grave I see no objection; it can be erected by his intimate friends, outside of the regular monument; but I think it would be an insult to D. M. Bennett's memory to ask money from abroad for so small an object. Should Mr. Ryan's proposition be accepted I will giv $25 toward it—which I think is in proportion to my means—and if all Liberals will contribute according to their means in the same proportion, we will be able to erect a monument that will be an honor to the Liberals of America. I am opposed to a dollar subscription; it is both unjust and inadequate. There are no doubt men among us who can better afford to giv one hundred dollars than other parties can afford to giv one dollar.

Now, Mr. Editor, I hav given you my opinion on this subject. You may lay it before your readers if you wish. But whatever is done in regard to the matter, I hope the Liberals of America will not only be Liberals in name, but also liberal in their donations. With the best wishes for you and THE TRUTH SEEKER, I remain Yours fraternally,

ROBERT GUNTHER.

Woman's Love.

BY ETHEL ETHERTON.

One pale star ever shineth
Upon the brow of night,
And tireless vigils keepeth
Until the morning light.
Though clouds may veil the earth and sky,
Calm and serene it smiles on high.

Shrined in the breast of woman
Is one sweet, priceless gem;
A spark divine, not human—
Love's peerless diadem.
Nor life nor death can quench its flame;
It burns unchangedly the same.

In youth 'tis embryotic—
Sometimes in later years;
But never an exotic,
Though shining oft through tears.
Somewhere in Nature's vast domain,
One breath will fan it to a flame;

And only one! New loves may add
New luster to the gem;
But deep within her heart of hearts,
Far from the gaze of men,
Her heart acknowledges one king,
When those uncrowned hav taken wing.

Jackson, Mich.

The Goat and the Boy.

From the Inter-Ocean.

The goat stood by the bill-board,
And he tore a yard or so
From the gayly-colored bills which were
To advertise the show.
And as he chewed reflectivly,
With a quiet, soulful joy,
Another person there appeared—
An unsuspecting boy.

He did not see the animal,
Which rampant doth appear,
With fore feet on the oaken keg
Which holds the springtide beer;
But he gazed upon the posters,
And his young heart filled with glee,
For his means would gain him entrance
To the upper gallery.

The capricorn, however,
Saw the boy, and straightway he Left his meal, and hied him thitherward
With great velocity.
The boy went through the bill-board,
But the goat, unmoved by that,
With placid mien stood still and ate
The boy's abandoned hat.

Not Enough Religion.

A good thing is related as having occurred in a barber-shop in a certain town in this country recently, on the occasion of a too-too wedding.

"Well," said the barber to the usual crowd of loungers about such a place, "I guess the monkey show will come off this evening."

"What kind of a show is that?" inquired a stranger in the chair.

"Oh, there's to be a wedding in town," replied the barber.

"Who is to be married?"

"Well, some traveling man out West is going to marry old Mrs. Hornswoggle's daughter. They would hav been married a year ago, if it had not been for the old woman."

"What was wrong with her?"

"Oh, she's a regular old tom-cat with goggles on. She's too pious to blow her nose, and the fellow is an out-and-out Infidel."

"And how hav they fixed it, that the marriage is to take place now?"

"Well, he's worth about forty thousand dollars, and she hadn't enough religion to buck against that. But it's lucky for him that he livs a good way from the old woman."

The stranger was shaved, and as the barber was brushing his coat, he inquired:

"I say, mister, do you liv in this neighborhood?"

"No," replied the stranger, "I'm from the West. I'm the fellow that is to be married this evening!"—Chicago Grip.

Toning Up a Bean Dinner.

A few days ago a minister on one of the Western roads sat down to dinner at a station restaurant, and bending over his plate murmured a silent grace.

"Always do that?" inquired a rough-looking specimen who sat beside him.

"Yes, my friend," replied the dominie; "I never miss returning thanks to the giver of all mercies. You don't know how much good it does."

"Does it do the grub any good?" asked the stranger, becoming interested. "If it was going to do any good at all, I should want it to commence with the grub!"

"It certainly does!" returned the parson, earnestly, hoping to make a convert.

"Think that piece of boot-leg has been benefited?" and he pointed at the dominie's dish.

"I think so," said the preacher, sincerely; "I think there is no doubt about it."

"And it is a thing that you can make work right straight along, or is there a limit to the game?"

"It never fails," persisted the minister, who had an especially nice steak before him.

"Then!" exclaimed the stranger, grasping the parson's plate and substituting his own dish of doughnuts and beans, "you pray this business of mine up to a square meal while I get away with the grub already sanctified! Go it, stranger! Don't leave off a lick on my account, and if you make the riffle you can bet your eternal fortune is made right on the line of this road! Any man what can tone a bean dinner up to a satisfying meal can't go broke in this country, not while the raw material holds out, and my mouth is in order!"

But the parson finished the beans and doughnuts in silence, and the stranger wrapped up the "sanctified grub" with the further suggestion that if the dominie missed his grip on that plate there were penty more beans in the cellar for him to practice on until he struck the combination.—Drake's Magazine.

MUCH FOR LITTLE

We hav on hand a goodly number
—OF—
VOLUMES I. AND II.
—OF—
The Truth Seeker,
published in 1874 and 1875,
the same securely bound in good paper covers. The first volume is a monthly, and the second a semi-monthly. Vol. I. contains 160 pp, and Vol. II. 256 pp. We are disposed to send these out to friends who wish them at a trifle above the postage. We will send VOLUME I. FOR 25 CENTS,
—AND—
VOLUME II. FOR 50 CENTS.
THEY CONTAIN
a large amount of reading matter, and are worth nearly ten times the amount asked for them. They also are worth not a little to show what THE TRUTH SEEKER was in the first and second years of its existence. Let those who wish to secure these volumes not fail to make their wants known.
Address this office.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.

Being 3,000 questions propounded to his Jewish Godship upon a great variety of subjects.
BY D. M. BENNETT.
Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

THE FIRST EPISTLE
OF
Bennett the Apostle,
TO
THE TRUTH SEEKERS.
From the Borders of the LAND OF YAHWEH.
Being ten chapters of Excellent Moral Maxims and Instructions, somewhat after the style of Paul.
Price Ten Cents.
THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, N. Y. city.

WHAT OBJECTIONS TO CHRISTIANITY.
THE
Bennett-Mair Discussion.
BETWEEN
D. M. BENNETT and G. M. MAIR.
(CONTAINING 969 PAGES.)
The fullest Discussion yet Published, giving the Dogmas and Claims of Christianity a thorough Examination pro and con.
Price, ... $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place New York.

Alamontada, the Galley-Slave.

A narrativ by
Johann Heinrich Daniel Zschokke.
Translated from the German by
IRA G. MOSHER, LL.B.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, N.Y.
Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents

CENTENARY OF VOLTAIRE.
VOLTAIRE IN EXILE:
His Life and Works in France and Abroad.
(England, Holland, Belgium, Prussia, Switzerland), and unpublished letters of Voltaire and Mme. Du Chatelet.
BY BENJAMIN GASTINEAU.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, New York

ECCE DIABOLUS,

in which the worship of Yahweh, or Jehovah, is shown to be devil-worship, with some observations upon the horrible and cruel ordinance of bloody sacrifice and burnt-offerings.
By the very Rev. EVAN DAVIES, D.D., LL.D.
Arch-Druid of Great Britain. Price, 25 cents.

THE BIBLE
OF THE
RELIGION of SCIENCE.
By H. S. Brown, M. D.,
Author of "A Permanent Republic cannot be established by Despotic Family Laws," "Scientific Spiritualism is the Basis or a Scientific Religion and Government," and other works.
"This volume is most respectfully dedicated to those persons who will cordially unite with others to establish the religion of truth and a just government, by the scientific methods of reason, experience, experiments and observations. For this is the way to wisdom, and to the material, mental, moral, social, and spiritual sciences, that make peace on earth and good will among men."
The work is divided into five books, containing twenty-five chapters, is printed on clear white paper, in large type and embraces over four hundred pages.
Cloth. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

BIBLE MYTHS
AND THEIR PARALLELS IN OTHER RELIGIONS.
BEING A COMPARISON OF THE
Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles,
With those of Heathen Nations of Antiquity.
CONSIDERING ALSO
THEIR ORIGIN AND MEANING.
WITH NUMEROUS ILLUSTRATIONS.
Cloth, $4.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

The object of this work is to point ont the myths with which the Old and New Testaments abound: to show that they were held in common with other nations; and then to trace them to their evident origin and explain their meaning.
It contains quotations from nearly all the sacred books of heathen nations, and from other rare and valuable works which are not accessible to people in general. The chapters are so arranged that it is a perfect cyclopædia of reference. Years of research would be necessary to discover all the information it contains. It is a most searching investigation into the origin of Christianity. Every fact is verified by copious notes and authorities, so that it may be trusted as a thoroughly reliable work. It contains information which will be startling to many.

SOCIALISM
—AND—
UTILITARIANISM.
By John Stuart Mill.
PRICE 1.50. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE.

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
Including, "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child;" "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois;" "The Great Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, $1,00; cloth, $2.00.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

THE IMAGE BREAKER.
A Series or Radical Pamphlets.
BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.
No. 1. The Decline of Faith.
No. 2. Protestant Intolerance.
No. 3. Washington an Unbeliever.
No. 4. Jefferson an Unbeliever.
No. 5. Paine and Wesley.
No. 6. The Christian Sabbath.
No. 1 proves by the concurrent testimony of more than a score of eminent scholars and divines that the dissolution of the Christian system of religion is near at hand.
No. 2 portrays the bloody and intolerant career of Protestantism.
Nos. 3 and 4 present an overwhelming array of evidence in support of the fact that Washington and Jefferson were Infidels.
No. 5 compares and contrasts the labors of Paine and Wesley, particularly in the American Revolution, whe e the latter violently opposed the cause of Independence as attested by numerous passages cited from his writings of this period.
No. 6 gives a brief history of the Christian Sabbath refutes the false claims of theologians respecting it, and makes an earnest plea for the abrogation of Sabbatarian laws.
Price, single copies, 5 cents. Per dozen, 40 cents. Per hundred, $2.50, Per thousand, $20.00. Postpaid. Sold at this office.

Marriage AND Parentage
AND THE
SANITARY AND PHYSIOLOGICAL LAWS.
FOR THE Production of Children of Finer Health and Greater Ability.
BY A PHYSICIAN AND SANITARIAN.
"The virtues of men and women as well as their vices may descend to their children."
Price, $1.00. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
21 Clinton Place, N. Y

The Busts of
PAINE and VOLTAIRE.
By the celebrated sculptor
CLARK MILLS.
Price, . . $1.50 each.
Address D. M. BENNETT.
21 Clinton Place, New York

FOR GIRLS.
A
SPECIAL PHYSIOLOGY,
OR,
Supplement to the Study of General Physiology.
ILLUSTRATED.
BY MRS. E. R. SHEPHERD.
12mo. EXTRA CLOTH, PRICE $1.00.
We hav here a work, the need of which has long been felt by all intelligent women, and especially by mothers and teachers, conveying to girls that special knowledge so important to them, but which, for proper reasons, must be omitted altogether from the general and school physiologies. Written in a careful and entirely unobjectionable manner, it is so plain and practical as to be easily understood, and its perusal is sure to leave an impression of the importance of the subject on the minds of the readers. It discusses the physiology of woman; the proper relation of dress to comfort and health; the age of puberty; menstruation; some of the diseases of woman, their causes and prevention; something about marriage and motherhood, and many other topics of importance.
The special attention of mothers and teachers is called to this book, with the hope that they will read it, and convey to their daughters or girls in their charge the information given; or, better still, after reading, place it in the hands of the girls for whom it was written. Sold at this office.

"ANTICHRIST."
Proving conclusivly that
THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST
His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth.
TRUTH SEEKER Office.
Price, $2.00. 21 Clinton Place, New York

THE RADICAL PULPIT.
Comprising discourses of advanced thought by
O. B. FROTHINGHAM and FELIX ADLER
two of America's clearest thinkers.
Price, in cloth $1

FROM BEHIND THE BARS.
A series of letters written in prison.
By D. M. BENNETT.
Over 700 pages. Price $1 50

THE YOUTH'S
LIBERAL GUIDE
FOR THEIR MORAL CULTURE AND RELIGIOUS ENLIGHTENMENT.
By Prof. H. M. Kottinger. A.M.
Translated from the revised German edition. Price, cloth, $1. For sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

THE NEW VERSION.
Lectures by George Chainey.
IN EXPLANATION OF THE BIBLE, FROM GENESIS TO REVELATIONS.
CONTENTS:

The New Version.	Extraordinary Saints.
Nothing.	Priestcraft.
Utopias.	The Heart of Yahweh.
The Descent of Man.	The Folly of Solomon.
The Wandering Jew.	Self-Respect.
Fair Play.	Priest and Prophet.
A Biblical Romance.	The Hope of the World.
Bricks Without Straw.	Iconoclasm.
Celestial Barbarism.	The Man Jesus.
Divine Brigandage.	The New Religion.

Printed on a fine quality of paper, handsomely bound in cloth, and uniform in size with first bound volume Price $1.00. For sale at this office.

SING, BROTHERS, SING.
USE THE
Liberal Hymn-Book
In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. The LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly commended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and indeed by all who hav examined it Second edition. Price, half-bound, 25 cents. In cloth, 40 cents. Sold at this office.

BOOKS! BOOKS!
I hav an enormous stock of new and second-hand books on hand, which I offer at very low prices Send for books tried to obtain elsewhere without success. American, English, German, and French books. Catalogs on application, FREE.
A full line of Liberal books always on hand,
C. N. Caspar's Book Emporium,
411 35 Oneida street (opp. Opera House,) Milwaukee, Wis

A LIBERAL COLONY.
1,200 FREE HOMES!
THE NEW COLORADO!
Those desiring a valuable home on the public domain at a nominal price ($1.25 per acre, and 33 months in which to pay for it), will find it very greatly to their advantage to correspond with the undersigned.
Address with 2 3-cent stamps O. A. PHELPS,
President Gunnison and Uncompahgre Colonization Society, LONGMONT, COLO. 3m1

FRUITS OF PHILOSOPHY.
A treatis on the Population Question.
Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office

ENGLISH PUBLICATIONS.

Strauss and Renan; an essay by E. Zeller. Translated from the German. $1.25.

The Apocryphal New Testament; being all the gospels, epistles, and other pieces now extant, attributed in the first four centuries to Jesus Christ, his apostles, and their companions, and not included in the New Testament by its compilers. $2 25.

The Coming Era. By Alexander Calder, 8vo., 425 pp. $3.50.

History of Rationalism; embracing a survey of the present state of Protestant theology, with an appendix of literature. By John F. Hurst, D.D. $2.50.

The English Life of Jesus. By Thomas Scott. $2.50.

Idols and Ideals; with an essay on Christianity. By Moncure D. Conway, M.A. $3.

Brief History of the Indian People, containing a map of the Indian Empire. By W. W. Hunter. Price $1.75

Legends of the Old Testament traced to their apparent primitiv sources. By Thomas Lumisden Strange. $2.25.

Life and Struggles of Wm. Lovett, in his pursuit of bread, knowledge, and freedom. $3.

The Sources and Development of Christianity. By Thomas Lumisden Strange. $2.25.

Essence of Christianity. Translated from the German of Ludwig Feuerbach. By Marian Evans. $3.75.

The Life of Jesus, for the People, with an introduction of 248 pages. By David Friedrich Strauss; 2 vols, 8vo. $10.

A Commentary on the Text of the Bhagavad-Gi-a; or, the Discourse between Krishna and Arjuna of Divine Matters. Cloth, $1.75

A Forecast of the Religion of the Future. Being short essays on some important questions in religious philosophy. By W. W. Clark. $1.50.

The Language and Literature of China. Two lectures. By Robert K. Douglas. $2.25.

The Development of Creation on the Earth. By T. L. Strange. Cloth, $1.25.

The African Sketch Book, with maps and illustrations. By Winwood Reade; 2 vols, $4.

New Religious Thonghts. By Douglas Campbell. Second edition. $2.

Letters of William Von Humboldt to a Female Friend. Translated from the German by Catharine M. A. Cooper. 2 vols. Cloth, $2.75.

The Life of Jenghiz Khan. Translated from the Chinese by E. K. Douglas. Cloth, $1.50.

The Jade Chaplet. A collection of songs from the Chinese. By G. C. Stent. Cloth, $1.50.

The Sphere and Duties of Government. Translated from the German of Baron Wilhelm Von Humboldt by Joseph Coulthard Jr. Cloth, $1.50.

Nagananda; or, the Joy of the Snake World. A Buddhist drama in five acts. Translated from the Sanskrit by Palmer Boyd, B.A. Cloth, $1,50.

Reverberations. By W. M. W. Call. Cloth, $1.50.

Heroes and Martyrs of Freethought. By Charles Watts and G. W. Foote. $1

Review of the work of Mr. John Stuart Mill, entitled "Examination of Sir William Hamilton's Philosophy." By George Grote. Cloth, $1.

Sermons Never Preached. By Philip Phosphor. $1.

The Folk-Songs of Southern India. By C. E. Gover. Cloth, $3.

Truth vs. Edification. By W. R. Greg. Cloth, 50 cents.

The Unity of Creation. By F. H. Kingston. Cloth, 85 cents.

Theism, Doctrinal and Practical. By F. W. Newman. Cloth, $2.25.

Hebrew Theism. By F. W. Newman. $2.

Morning Prayers in the household of a believer in God. Limp cloth, 50 cents.

Scenes from the Ramayana, Meghaduta, etc. Translated by Ralph T. H. Griffith, M.A., Principal of the Benares College. Cloth, $1.75.

The Value of this Earthly Life. A reply to W. H. Mallock's "Is Life Worth Living?" 40 cents.

Life and Mind, on the basis of modern medicin. By R. Lewins, M.D. 75 cents.

The Book of Job. By J. A. Froude, M. A. 50 cents.

Secularists' Manual of Songs and Ceremonies. 40 cents.

The Dathavansa; or, the History of the Tooth Relic of Gautama Buddha, in Pali verse. Edited, with an English translation, by Mutu Coomara Swamy. Cloth, $1.75.

What is Vital Force? Treating of Vital Physics, Animal Morphology, and Epidemics, with an Appendix upon Geology. By Richard Fawcett Battye. Cloth, $2.25.

Retrospect of the Religious Life of England; or, the Church Puritanism and Free Inquiry. By John J. Tayler, B. A. $2,50.

Ancient Mysteries Described; Especially the English miracle plays, founded on Apocryphal New Testament story, including notices of Ecclesiastical shows, etc. By Wm. Hone. Illustrated. $2.25.

Sutta Nipata; or, Dialogues and Discourses of Gautama Budda (2,500 years old). By Mutu Coomara Swamy. $1.75.

Monuments of Upper Egypt. By Mariette-Bey. $2.00.

Wit, Wisdom, and Pathos. From the prose of Heinrich Heine. Selected and translated by J. Snodgrass. Cloth, $3.75.

The Speaker's Commentary. Reviewed by T. L. Strange. Cloth, $1.25.

Biography of Charles Bradlaugh. By Adolph S. Headingley. 332 pp., crown 8vo. $2.50.

Civilized Christianity. A Reply to "Modern Christianity a Civilized Heathenism." Being some reflections on orthodoxy. Cloth, 50 cents.

Edda Sæmundar Hiuns Froda. The Edda of Sæmund the Learned, translated from the Old Norse by Benjamin Thorpe. Cloth, $2.25.

Extracts from the Koran. Compiled by Sir Wm. Muir, K.C.S.I., LL.D. Cloth, $1.

The Church under the Tudors. By Durham Dunlap, M.R.I.A. 75 cents.

Republican Superstitions as illustrated in the Political History of America. By Moncure D. Conway, M.A. $1.25.

In Search of Truth. Conversations on the Bible and Popular Theology. By A.M.Y. Cloth, 75 cents.

The Saint's Travel to the Land of Canaan. By R. Wilkinson, Cloth, 75 cents.

History of the Great French Revolution; A course of six lectures. By Annie Besant. Cloth, 50 cents.

Freethinkers' Text-Book. The history of Freethought, its rise, progress, and triumph. In cloth, $1.25.

Theological Essays and Debates. By Annie Besant. $1.25.

The Founders of Christianity; or, Discourses upon the Origin of the Christian Religion. By Rev. James Cranbrook. Cloth, $3.00.

The Trial of Theism. Handsomely bound. 260 pages. $2.00.

Credibilia; or, Discourses on Questions of Christian Faith. By Rev. James Cranbrook. Cloth, $1.00.

Rig-Veda-Sanhita. The Sacred Hymns of the Brahmans. Translated and explained by F. Max Muller, M.A., L.L.D. Vol. I. $3 75.

Mind in Animals. By Prof. Ludwig Buchner. Translated from the German by Annie Besant. $2.50.

ENGLISH PAMPHLETS.

Auguste Comte; Biography of the great French thinker, with sketches of his philosophy, his religion, and his sociology; being a short and convenient resume of Positivism for the general reader. By Annie Besant. 25 cents.

Christianity. By Moncure D. Conway, M. A. 50 cents.

Christian Evidences Criticised. By Chas. Watts. 30 cents.

Christianity in Relation to Freethought Skepticism, and Faith. Replies to three discourses by the Bishop of Peterborough. By Chas. Bradlaugh. 20 cents.

Clericalism in France; Speech of Prince Napoleon Bonaparte to the Chamber of Deputies, Nov. 24, 1876. 25 cents.

Debate on the Christian Evidences; Verbatim Report of the two-nights' debate between Chas. Watts and C. H. Cowper 25 cents.

Disestablishment and Disendowment of the English Church. Verbatim reports of two night's between Chas. Bradlaugh and W. Simpson. 25 cts.

Essays, chiefly Theological. By Malapus. 25 cents.

Four Nights' Discussion; Between Rev. Alexander Stewart and Chas Watts. 25 cents.

Heresy; Its Morality and Utility. 30 cents.

Human Sacrifices in England: Four discourses by Moncure D. Conway, M. A. 50 cents.

Is it Reasonable to Worship God? A two-nights' debate by Chas. Bradlaugh and Rev. R. A. Armstrong, 40 cents.

Impeachment of the House of Brunswick. By Chas. Bradlaugh. 40 cents.

The Meaning of History; Two lectures by Frederick Harrison, M. A. 50 cents.

Merits and Demerits of Secularism; A discussion between the Rev. Thomas Crew and Charles Watts. 25 cents.

Natural Reason vs. Divine Revelation; An appeal for Freethought. By "Julian." 25 cents.

On the Philosophical Classification of National Institutions; A lecture by F. W. Newman 25 cents.

Reasoning from Facts; A method of everyday logic. By G. J. Holyoake. 75 cents.

Secularism in Its Various Relations. By Chas. Watts. 25 cents.

Secularism the True Philosophy of Life; An exposition and a defense. By G. W. Foote. 20 cents.

Taxation; How it Originated, Who Bears it, and Who ought to Bear it. By Chas. Bradlaugh. 25 cents.

The Bible and Xianity. By Chas. Watts. 20 cents.

Thoughts on Theism; With suggestions toward a public religious service in harmony with modern science and philosophy. Revised and enlarged. 50 cents.

Wealthy and Wise; A lecture introductory to the study of political economy. By Joseph Hiam Levy. 25 cents.

What does Xian Theism Teach? A two nights' discussion between the Rev. A. J. Harrison and Chas. Bradlaugh. 25 cents.

When Were Our Gospels Written? Reply to Dr. Tischendorf. 25 cents.

LIFE-SIZE

LITHOGRAPH

OF

D. M. BENNETT.

Heavy Plate Paper,

SUITABLE FOR FRAME OR WITHOUT FRAME.

Sent by Mail for Fifty cents.

ADDRESS THIS OFFICE.

The Figures of Hell; or, The Temples of Bacchus.

Dedicated to Licensers of Beer and Whisky.

By MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.

Published by the Author.

A neat little volume of between two and three hundred pages.

Price, $1.00.

THE

BIBLE—WHENCE AND WHAT?

BY

Richard B. Westbrook, D.D., LL.B.,

The questions, Where did the books of the Bible come from? What is their authority? and, What is the real source of dogmatic theology? are treated fearlessly in the light of history, philosophy, and comparative religions. It is impossible to giv even a condensed statement of what is itself a marvelous condensation.

WHOLE LIBRARIES ARE HERE CONCENTRATED INTO ONE LITTLE BOOK.

The author's conclusions are, of course, against the supernatural origin and infallibility of the Bible, while the dogmas of the dominant theology are shown to be priestly perversions of the ancient mythologies.

Printed in good type and bound in cloth. Price, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 21 Clinton Pl., New York.

THE SEMITIC GODS AND THE BIBLE.

Treating upon the gods of the Semitic nations, including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, the Virgin Mary, and the Bible. To the latter 230 pages are devoted, showing that book to be a very inferior production for a first-class God. By D. M. Bennett. 339 large pages. Paper covers 60 cents: cloth. $1.

SEND FOR

The Crimes of Preachers

From May, 1876 to May, 1882.

TRANSLATED OUT OF THE ORIGINAL NEWSPAPERS,

And with previous Translations diligently compared and revised.

By Col. M. E. BILLINGS.

SECOND EDITION.

Price Twenty-five Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 21 Clinton Place, N. Y. city.

STANDARD BOOKS.

Sold at The Truth Seeker Office.

MEDICAL and HYGIENIC WORKS

Sent on Receipt of Price.

Trall's Sexual Physiology. A Scientific and Popular Exposition of the Fundamental Problems in Sociology. Price $1.

What Our Girls Ought to Know. By Dr. Mary J. Studley. Price $1.

Hygiene of the Brain and the cure of Nervousness. By M. L. Holbrook. Price $1.50.

Parturition Without Pain. A Code of Directions for Avoiding most of the Pains and Dangers of Child-bearing. Edited by M. L. Holbrook, M.D. Price $1.

The Relations of the Sexes. By Mrs. E. B. Duffey. Price $1.

Fruit and Bread. A Natural and Scientific Diet. By Gustav Schlickeysen. Price $1.

The Better Way. An appeal to men in behalf of Human Culture through a Wiser Parentage. By A. E. Newton. Price, paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

New Hygienic Cook Book. Containing Receipts for Preparing a Hygienic Food. By Mrs. M. M. Jones, M. D. Price 30 cents.

Talks to my Patients. Hints on Getting Well and Keeping Well. By Mrs. R. B. Gleason, M.D. Price $1.50.

Chastity; or, Our Secret Sins. By Dio Lewis, M.D. Treating of the Sexual Relations in their Higher Aspects. Price $2.

Prenatal Culture. Being Suggestions to Parents. By A. E. Newton. Price 25 cents.

Aids to Family Government; or, From the Cradle to the School. By Bertha Meyer. Price, cloth, $1; paper, 50 cents.

The Diet Cure. The Relations of Food and Drink to Health, Disease, and Cure. By T. L. Nichols, M.D. Price 50 cents.

Youth: Its Care and Culture. By J. Mortimer Granville. Price $1.

Eating for Strength. Including the Science of Eating; Five hundred Receipts for Wholesome Cookery; One Hundred Receipts for Delicious Drinks; One Hundred Ever-Recurring Questions Answered. By M. L. Holbrook, M.D. Price $1.

Muscle-Beating; Or, Active and Passive Home Gymnastics. By C. Kiem. Ten Illustrations. Price 30 cents.

Marriage and Parentage. In their Sanitary and Physiological Relations and in their Bearing on the Producing of Children of Finer Health and Greater Ability. By M. L. Holbrook, M.D. Price $1.

Our Girls, and Some of the Things they Ought to Know. By Dio Lewis, M.D. Price $1.50.

Dr. Foote's Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. By E. B. Foote, M.D. Price $1.50.

Vegetarianism the Radical Cure for Intemperance. By Harriet P. Fowler. Price 30 cents.

SUPERSTITION IN ALL AGES.

By JOHN MESLIER,

A Roman Catholic Priest, who, after a pastorate of thirty years at Etrepigny and But in Champagne, France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and left as his last will and testament to his parishioners, and to the world, the work entitled, "Common Sense."

Meslier's book is a death-knell to all religions, also to all imaginary nonentities. It is only a commendable act of justice to say that his work is unanswerable. It is lucid in style, and undoubtedly one of the most powerful appeals in behalf of reason, common sense, and justice that ever was produced in any age or country.

Cloth, . . $1.50. Paper . . $1..00.

Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

PRICE REDUCED TO $1.00.

The BRAIN and the BIBLE,

OR,

The Conflict between Mental Science and Theology.

By Edgar C. Beall,

With a preface by

Robert G. Ingersoll.

"This book, written by a brave and honest man, is filled with brave and honest thoughts. The arguments it presents cannot be answered by all the theologians in the world!"—R. G. Ingersoll.

Price $1.00. For sale at this office.

DEITY ANALYZED

AND

THE DEVIL'S DEFENSE.

By Col. John R. Kelso, A.M.

Not since Hudibras has there been such damaging blows given to these old myths and fables. The colonel has made the sacredness of the scriptures appear as absurd as Cervantes made that of the knights of the age of chivalry. The singular audacity with which he attacks the foundations of Christianity shows the earnestness of his own convictions in regard to its fabulous origin.—L Hutchison.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

Price, $1.50. 21 Clinton Place, New York.

Liberty and Morality.

A capital full lecture on these important subjects.

BY W. S. BELL.

A pamphlet of thirty-six well-printed pages mailed for 15 cents. Sold at this office.

THE OCCULT WORLD,

BY A. P. SINNETT.

This book describes many alleged phenomena brought about through the agency of the so-called Astral Brothers of India. Mr. Bennett quoted it at considerable length in his Round-the-World letters and the book has caused much remark wherever it has been circulated

Price, cloth, $1. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 21 Clinton Place, New York.

PRICE REDUCED.

Self-Contradictions of the Bible.

Price reduced to 15 cents, from 25 cents

A perfectly reliable, accurate pamphlet of 58 pages. Compiled by one of our ablest correspondents; should be on the table of every scholar For sale at this office.

THE BOSTON INVESTIGATOR,

The oldest reform journal in the United States,

Is published every Wednesday at the Paine Memorial Building, Boston, Mass.,

By JOSIAH P. MENDUM.

Edited by HORACE SEAVER.

PRICE, $3.00 per annum; single copies, seven cents. Specimen copies sent on receipt of a two-cent stamp to pay postage.

The Investigator is devoted to the Liberal cause in religion; or in other words, to universal mental liberty. Independent in all its discussions, discarding superstitious theories of what never can be known, it devotes its columns to things of this world alone, and leaves the next, if there be one, to those who hav entered its unknown shores. Believing that it is the duty of mortals to work for the interests of this world, it confines itself to the things of this life entirely. It has arrived at the age of fifty-one years, and asks for a support from those who are fond of sound reasoning, good reading, reliable news, anecdotes, science, art, and a useful family journal. Reader, please send your subscription for six months or one year, and if you are not satisfied with the way the Investigator is conducted we won't ask you to continue with us any longer 8m53

THE UNIVERSE.

BYRON ADONIS, Editor and Proprietor.

A Journal of Practical, Useful Knowledge, Literature, Romance, and General News.

Advocates all that is tolerant, just, and noble in human life and conduct; opposes all that is evil and unjust, sumptuary laws, sectarian Sunday laws, and all attempts of the church to interfere with the state in any way, shape, or manner.

It is unalterably opposed to the attempt to amend the Constitution of the United States so as to recognize a sectarian "God" as the creator of the world and "Our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," the ruler of nations As Ingersoll says: "Our fathers retired all the gods from politics."

This journal is published weekly at the modest rate of 25 cents per month, payable as follows:

Yearly subscription $3 00

Six months 1 50

Address THE UNIVERSE, 615 Kearney street, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS WORLD.

A WEEKLY LIBERAL MAGAZINE, PUBLISHED BY

George Chainey.

51 Fort ave. (Roxbury), Boston, Mass,

Terms $3.00 per annum.

Each number contains a lecture in full by Geo. Chainey and during 1883 a portrait and biographical sketch of some distinguished Freethinker or Liberal.

A sample copy, containing portrait of the lecturer prospectus for 1883, sent free to any address.

The Kansas Liberal.

A FORNIGHTLY

FREETHOUGHT JOURNAL.

Devoted to the Fearless Discussion of all Human Interests; believing that the greatest obstacle to Progress is Authority, and that the most essential aid to Morality is Liberty.

TERMS:

Per Year, ... $1.00

Six Months, ...50

Three Months 25

Specimen Copies Free.

W. HARMAN, E. C. WALKER, } Editors and Publishers.

INGERSOLL

AND JESUS.

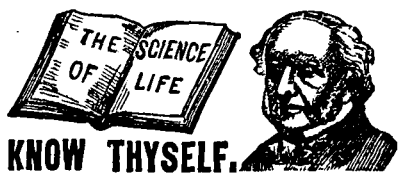
Conversation in verse between the two great reformers

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Price, 10 cents. THE TRUTH SEEKER, 21 Clinton Place, New York



GARRISON IN HEAVEN.

A DREAM.

PRICE TEN CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 21 Clinton Pl., New York.

MANHOOD!

KNOW THYSELF.

A Book for Every Man!

Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man, Errors of Youth, etc, but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, as proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now.

Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. 1y38

PLAIN HOME TALK,

EMBRACING

Medical Common Sense.

BY E. B. FOOTE, M.D.

This book is a plain talk about the human system, the habits of men and women, the causes and prevention of disease, our sexual relations and social natures. It is medical common sense applied to causes, prevention, and cure of chronic diseases, the natural relations of men and women to each other, society, love, marriage, parentage etc. Embellished with two hundred illustrations. Price $1.50. Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER office. 21 Clinton Place, N. Y. city.

Gems of Thought.

ALWAYS bear in mind that you hav but yourselvs and each other to depend upon, and that you cannot expect aid from supernatural sources, and that you hav no friend above the clouds who will come to your aid when you fail to help yourselvs.—D. M. Bennett.

ADDISON found that wine broke the spell which lay on his fine intellect, and was therefore too easily seduced into convivial excess. Such excess was in that age regarded, even by grave men, as the most venial of all peccadilloes, and was so far from being a mark of ill-breeding that it was almost essential to the character of a fine gentleman. But the smallest speck is seen on a white ground; and almost all the biographers of Addison hav said something about this failing. Of any other statesman or writer of Queen Anne's reign, we should no more think of saying that he took too much wine than that he wore a long wig and a sword.—Macaulay. [In the end of last century things had got to such a pitch that the keenest observers in Scotland did not hesitate to represent a "burning and a shining light," as bringing the failings of drunkenness before the Lord as an apology for a greater sin. These are squeamish times, but it is not safe or seemly to forget that the poet merely set down what he saw around him in daily life. "These things were written for our instruction."—Hylax.]

O LORD! yestreen, thou kens, wi' Meg—
Thy pardon I sincerely beg,
Oh, may't ne'er be a living plague
To my dishonor,
And I'll ne'er lift a lawless leg
Again upon her.

Besides I farther more allow,
Wi' Lizzie's lass, three times I trow;
But Lord! that Friday I was fou [drunk]
When I came near her,
Or else, thou kens, thy servant true
Wad ne'er hae steered her.
—Burns's Holy Willie.

THE language in which Jesus taught, if he taught at all, has not been preserved to us. Who recorded his actual words, if any real record ever existed, is all matter of guess. Who translated the words of Jesus into the Greek no one knows. In the compass of four small pamphlets, attributed to four persons, of whom nothing whatever can be ascertained, we hav what are, by the orthodox, supposed to be the words in which Jesus actually taught. What did Jesus teach? Manly, self-reliant resistance of wrong and practice of right? No; the key-stone of his whole teaching may be found in the text, "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." Is poverty of spirit a virtue at all? Surely not. Manliness of spirit, honesty of spirit, fulness of right purpose, these are virtues; but poverty of spirit is a crime.—Bradlaugh's What did Jesus Teach?

WHILE we hav been seeking imaginary paradises, we hav been blind to the one that is all about us. Another "idol" that must be destroyed is Jesus, for while the shadow of supernaturalism is permitted, in any way, to fall upon his manhood [i.e., upon the fact of his being a man—a man and "nothing more"] any relation for good between us and him is destroyed. Instead of being an inspiration he becomes a bewilderment; in place of an example of truth, love, and courage, he becomes an idol before which men ignorantly and stupidly worship.—George Chainey.

I SEE no proof of a personal God, who sits aloft and makes butterflies and counts hairs and conjures up squalls to upset the boats of Sabbath-breakers. I see an ever-activ force in nature, and all things are subject to law.—R. C. Adams.

MATTHEW xvii, 27. The story of Jesus commanding Peter to catch a fish in whose mouth he should find the tribute money, has a most pagan and unworthy character about it, harmonizes admirably with the peculiar narrativs which abound in the apocryphal gospels, and is ignored by all the other evangelists.—Greg's Creed of Christendom.

WHAT man is there of you who, if his son shall ask him for a loaf, will giv him a stone; or, if he shall ask for a fish, will giv him a serpent?—Matthew vii, 9 (R. V.).

ACCORDING to Lucretius (95–51 B.C., probably) the universe, of which man is a part, was a system of things which had been generated by natural forces. Gods there might be, somewhere in space, created by nature also, but not gods who troubled themselvs about man. All things proceeded from eternity in one unchanging sequence of cause and effect, and man had but to understand nature and follow her directions to create his own prosperity and his own happiness, undisturbed by fear of supernatural power. If the sufferings and enjoyments of this world were distributed by a superintending providence, it was a providence which showed no regard for moral worth or worthlessness. The good were often miserable, the wicked flourished, and a power so careless of justice, even if it existed, did not deserve to be reverenced. But it existed only in the brain of man. Evils, or what were called evils, were a necessary part of an imperfect existence. But evil was divested of half its power to hurt when its origin was known, and the more carefully the laws of nature were studied, the more successfully could man contend against it.—Froude's Science and Theology.

THE popular belief in a day-of-judgment portrays God on the throne as a vindictiv despot, his wrath [what a word to apply to the infinit maker and ruler of the universe if there be one] placated by the blood of innocent victims, even by the foul murder of his best-beloved son; and Christ himself judging souls by arbitrary technical tests that do not touch character or destiny. Punctilious ritualism, a creed shibboleth, or the momentary enthusiasm of a death-bed conversion, is accepted as the substitue for a well-spent life. The pious heathen or the saintly heretic is rejected; while many a stained character is elected into bliss. Not by personal purity, but by Christ's payment of our penalty, this unnatural judgment hall givs the passport to glory.—Rush R. Shippen's Judgment-days.

Odds and Ends.

SOME of the Asiatics are now cooking their meals on Yankee stoves. This is preferable to the old style of serving up Yankees on Asiatic stoves.

A DAILY chicken train has been started on the Pennsylvania Railroad. They hav a passenger cochin the rear and a locomotiv to pullet.

SOME people are so literal! When Fenderson was asked what were the most conspicuous features at last night's entertainment, he laconically replied: "The noses."

MARK TWAIN, lecturing on the Fiji Islanders, offered to show how the cannibals ate their food, if any lady would lend him a baby. The lecture had to go unillustrated.

"DON'T you think," said a husband, mildly rebuking his wife, "that women are possessed by the devil?" "Yes," was the quick reply, "as soon as they are married."

NOTHING annoys the manager of a church festival more than to hav one visitor say in a rather loud tone to another: "Hav they ever tried plating war-ships with this sort of sandwiches?"

"WHAT kind of a picture would you prefer, miss?" inquired a photographer of a young lady customer. "Well," was the reply, "take me with an expression as if I were writing a poem on love."

AN Ohio minister is charged with opening a prayer at a Monday evening class meeting in this fashion: "O Lord, thou has seen in the morning papers how the Sabbath was desecrated yesterday."

IT is a law among certain tribes of Indians that a widow must remain four years before remarrying. It is unnecessary to state that a woman of those nations is very careful of a husband while she has one in the house.

BJORNSTJERNE BJORNSON, the novelist, narrowly escaped having a middle name. His parents intended to call him Bjornstjerne Bjojorjsjnjtjonjrnstjse Bjornson; but the good pastor got the names all mixed at the christening.

A CHICAGO lady once applied to a learned judge for a divorce. "What is the name of the husband?" inquired the learned judge. "I hav no husband yet; but inasmuch as I contemplate matrimony, I feel that I should be prepared for the worst."

AT a church entertainment in a small town in Massachusetts, a choir of fifty young ladies sang: "What will the harvest be?" As most of the marriageable young men of the place hav gone West to grow up with the country, it is not believed there will be any "harvest."

IF inventors and scientists assert that the wasted energy of Niagra Falls and of the swell of the ocean can be utilized and transmitted to run all the machinery of all the factories in the world, why cannot a kind of harness be made to fit the lower jaw of a barber?—Texas Siftings

"WELL," remarked a young M.D., just from college, "I suppose the next thing will be to hunt a good location, and then wait for something to do, like 'Patience on a monument.'" "Yes," said a bystander, "and it won't be long after you do begin before the monuments will be on the patients."

AN Indiana avenue lady dropped in on one of her neighbors for an afternoon call.

"How is your daughter?" she inquired.

"Splendid. She has just got back from the State Normal School, where she ciphered clear through from ambition to chemical fractures, and then she took up pottery and jobbery, and says she can speculate the internal caculations."

"WELL, Father Brown, how did you like the sermon yesterday?" asked a young preacher. "Ye see, parson," was the reply, "I havn't a fair chance at them sermons of yours. I'm an old man now, and hav to sit pretty well back by the stove, and there's old Miss Smithie, Widder Taff, 'n Ryland's daughters, 'n Nabb Birt, 'n all the rest sittin' in frontof me with their mouths wide open a swallerin' down all the best of the sermon, and what gets down to me is putty poor stuff, parson, putty poor stuff."

A THERMOMETER was Observed in a State of Excessiv Agitation. "Why, my friend," inquired the Eight-day Clock, "why are you so Perturbed?" "Because," replied the Thermometer, "I apprehend that I am no Longer Capable of Performing my Functions. At the present Moment I am Registering forty degrees above Zero, when I should be Several degrees Below." "Oh, no, I guess Not," said the Eight-day Clock. "Yes, I am Confident of it," persisted the Thermometer, "for from my Position in the Window I just Overheard a policeman Decline a Drink, and it must be a Cold Day when such a Phenomenon Occurs."—Denver Tribune.

HERE is an account of a droll incident related to me a day or two since that has never been in print: An old lady who had purchased a new bonnet received it on Saturday. Not long after she was missed, and her absence was so protracted that the family became concerned about her and instituted a search. After looking thro premises all over her daughter found her in the chamber sitting quietly with tho new bonnet on. The daughter exclaimed: "Why, mother, what are you doing here?" "Go along down," the old lady replied; "I am only getting used to this thing so that I shall not be thinking about it all the time in church to-morrow."

"Do you see that old man near the frog pond on the Common?

"Thirty-two years ago that old man came to Boston with one suspender and a sore toe. He also had a basket of apples which a farmer in Lexington had given to him. He peddled the apples on Washington street and netted eighteen cents the first day. How much do you suppose he's worth now?"

"Oh, a million and a half," said one.

"Two millions," cried another.

"Six millions three hundred thousand," was the estimate of a third.

"I giv it up," remarked No. 4. "How much is he worth?"

"Not an infernal cent, and he still owes for the basket."

ANSWERS TO

Christian Questions

AND

Arguments.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Price, Twenty-five Cents.

Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

Admirers of Walt Whitman

Will each want his last work. Just out.

SPECIMEN DAYS AND COLLECT.

Including

AUTOBIOGRAPHY, HOSPITAL SKETCHES DEMOCRATIC VISTAS, ETC,

Three hundred and seventy-four pages of hearty, wholesome prose and poetry, never before published. Will be sent on receipt of $2. Address,

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Moral Education; Its Laws and Methods.

By DR. J. R. BUCHANAN, President of the American University, Boston.

400 pp. Cloth, $1.50. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"It will do a great work towards emancipating the race from error and superstition, and building up a higher humanity" (Gen. E. F. Bullard, of N.Y.).

"It contains more and higher wisdom on the subject of which it treats than all the other books ever written on education" (Rev. B. F. Barrett, of Pa).

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

THE PEOPLE'S READER.

A sketch of man's physical, political mental, and social development in past, present and future.

Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

Correspondence Solicited.

A gentleman of 30 would like to correspond with a Liberal lady under 25. A working-girl preferred. Object, matrimony. Address C. F. SMITH,
1t5 Box 285. Blair, Neb,

CORRESPONDENCE.

A man of Liberal views, under 35, wishes to correspond with a lady of like views; must not be over 30, and with some means, and fair education.
Address, M. REEVES,
New Bridge, Union Co.,
2t4 Oregon.

Correspondence Solicited.

A young man of 29 wishes to correspond with a young lady, with a view to matrimony; one willing to come to a new country and help him build up a home.
Address JNO. SIMONS,
Utica, Meagher Co.,
4t3 Montana.

Housekeeper Wanted.

One who is capable of managing a small family can hear of a good situation by addressing WM. ALLEN,
2t4 Fenton, Mich.

WANTED

A situation in a grocery store, as clerk or manager, by a man who is thoroughly familiar with the business, and competent to take charge, if necessary. Must be in some healthy town; inland in the Western States preferred. Would like to locate in some growing place where employment could be obtained for my two sons, aged respectivly 22 and 19 years—strong, industrious, intelligent boys; and for my two oldest daughters. For reference as to character I can refer to Benjamin C. Sweet, Hamilton, R. I., or to the Hamilton Web Co., of the same place, where we hav been known and employed for the past ten years. Address

ABRAHAM FIRTH, SR.,
Hamilton, Washington Co.,
Rhode Island.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

THE

COLLEGE OF THERAPEUTICS,

Boston, Mass.

(Medical Department of the American University),

begins its spring session on the 2d of April, 1883. For information address the president, 3t4 DR. J. R. BUCHANAN, Boston.

THE

BOOK OF THE CHRONICLES

OF

The Pilgrims in the Land of Yahweh.

D. M. Bennett, Scribe.

ALSO

THE EPISTLE OF BENNETT THE APOSTLE TO THE TRUTH SEEKERS.

From Volume II. of "A TRUTH SEEKER AROUND THE WORLD."

Price $1.00 D. M. BENNETT,
21 Clinton Place, New York

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Rubber Elastic Appliance, in 30 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for Circular. (Say in what paper you saw advertisement.)
Address CAPT. W. A. COLLINGS,
Smithville, Jefferson Co., N. Y.
ptf6b

"VICTORIA"

MAGNETIC APPLIANCES

FOR THE TREATMENT OF ACUTE AND CHRONIC DISEASES IS UNEQUALED IN THE HISTORY OF MEDICAL THERAPEUTICS.

We hav repeatedly been asked what the difference is between the VICTORIA MAGNETIC GARMENTS and its other old predecessors. We desire to be brief, and feel that this information is demanded at this time, as it has been asked over and over again,

At this point all comparisons end, and contrast begins.

The old garments were slow in their action. The VICTORIA is quick and sure.

The old garments lacked the power to giv more than temporary relief, while the VICTORIA penetrates the system, and permanently cures the trouble for which it is recommended.

The old appliances DID NOT HOLD THEIR MAGNETIC CURRENTS OVER THIRTY DAYS. The VICTORIA, however, is constructed on scientific principles, being permanent in force by the aid of its "ARMATURES," "VOLTAIC PILES," and "CONDUCTORS."

In brief, the old appliances, like Stephenson's discarded engin, are switched off the track, while the VICTORIA goes on its way, winning golden opinions from a sorts of people.

Those who use these reliable and scientific goods can verify this fact, wherein lies the greatest danger that "HYPOCRISY IS THE TRIBUTE VICE PAYS TO VIRTUE." "IMITATION IS THE CONCESSION FAILURE MAKES TO SUCCESS."

NO INVALIDS NEED DESPAIR.

VICTORIA HAS NO EQUAL.

Send for circulars and price-lists to

Dr. Thayer,
455 Fulton Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Please write us a history of your case and we will giv you full information.

Don't waste time and money with vile patent medicin, which kills more than it cures. 13t2

80 Court st. Brooklyn

THE

"WILSONIA,"

TWO YEARS AGO

WILLIAM WILSON,

THE INVENTOR OF

WILSONIA,

AN ENGLISH SCIENTIST, MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN, LECTURER ON ELECTRICAL THERAPEUTICS, AUTHOR OF THE "TRIAL OF MEDICIN," THE "LANGUAGE OF DISEASE," "MEDICAL FALLACIES," ETC.,

Introduced to the People of the United States His

MAGNETIC GARMENTS

For the cure of Disease without Medicine or Medica Treatment. The Statement made by him at that time that his Magnetic Clothing, if worn for any form of Disease (and as advised), would cure ninety per cent of the so-called Incurables, has been verified, he having Clothed and Cured Thousands of Persons of all Forms of Disease. Positive proof of this has appeared in all the leading Newspapers by Testimony of many of our most Prominent and Wealthy Citizens, who, having been Cured by the

Wilsona Magnetic Garments

After all other Treatment had failed, were pleased to assist the Inventor in giving confidence to the Suffering Invalids of America by allowing him to use their well-known and respected Names as Reference; and it is now admitted by many most highly accomplished Scientists and Physicians that the Success and Cures attending the introduction of "Wilsonia" Magnetic Clothing has been unprecedented in the history of Electrical Therapeutics. In the face of such Positive Proof as given by us no person can doubt the value of this Invention in all cases.

Therefore why continue the Suicidal System of taking Drugs

SEND $1.50 FOR A PAIR OF

"Wilsonia" Magnetic Insoles.

Sure Preventive of Cold Feet—the Forerunner of All Kinds of Disease.

Consultation Free.

Send for Pamphlet and Information to the only Office where the Inventor can be seen.

Address all Communications to

DAVID J. COTTER,

80 COURT STREET, BROOKLYN

DR. FELLOWS,

Vineland, New Jersey,

A regularly educated and legally qualified physician and most successful, as his practice will prove, cures all forms of Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases. Spermatorrhea and Impotency, as the result of self abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an External Application in from 30 to 90 days.

MIDDLE-AGED AND OLD MEN.

There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuation of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen, will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows's External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the organs.

☞ Consultation by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable, and correspondence strictly confidential.

PRIVATE COUNSELOR.

Sent to any address securely sealed for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhea or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuinness. Should be read by all.

☞ Remember no medicin is given. Address DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey. Be sure and state in what paper you saw this.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 6. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY M. W. B NNETT. | New York, Saturday, February 10. 1883. | NO. 21 CLINTON PLACE, NEAR BROADWAY. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

"What's de reason, James, dat I doesn't see yer at de church no moah?" asked Bangdoodle. "Beckase I wasn't dar, I reckon." "But why wasn't you dar?" "De fact is, parson, eber sence I stole dem turkeys outen your hen-coop I has lost all confidence in myself."

If Adam had been out hoeing weeds in the garden, as a good husband ought, on the day of Eve's tete-a-tete with Satan, Madam Eve would hav done the great fall act alone, and mankind would hav gone down through successiv posterity a shining example of monumental virtue.

Church and state are in conflict at Fort Smith, Ark. The mayor forbade all public assemblages, on account of the prevalence of scarlet fever. The Protestant Episcopal and Roman Catholic pastors disobediently opened their churches for the usual services, and were promptly arrested.

The legislature of Arizona is looking on its chaplain as a costly luxury, and is asking what is the use of keeping him. It is probable that the chaplaincy will be abolished, in which case the members of the legislature will lose pretty much all the religious privileges they are in the way of enjoying.

A man in St. Louis became convinced that his soul's salvation depended on abstaining from food for forty days, and he at once began the fast, but after five days of total abstinence from food and water the police carried him to a hospital, where sustenance was forced upon him. He declares that the responsibility is all transferred to his captors, who will be doomed to eternal torment in his stead.

A woman went to a Michigan clergyman for advice as to a business venture, and implicitly followed the directions which he did not hesitate to giv. The result was disastrous. She now sues him for $4,500, that being the amount of the damage which his bad counsel caused. His defense is that, while his profession made him an expert in spiritual affairs, the woman had no excuse for relying upon his judgment in business matters.

It has long been the belief that portions of Greenland are regularly sinking. Some recent observations confirm this belief. Between latitude 60 degrees and 70 degrees buildings hav to be continually moved inland, or they get below the level of the sea. On the other hand there are evidences that the land is rising in Sweden and Norway. Buildings hav to be continually removed so as to bring them down to the level of the sea.

A young woman in Bradford county, Pa., went before a justice of the peace with the man of her choice and several witnesses, and made herself a wife, satisfactorily to herself, by a simple promis of fidelity, claiming nothing from her spouse as a legal right, and insisted upon no ceremony. There were no vows given under the form of the law, and no pledges. The justice took no part in the marriage, but sat in the room only as a witness.

The protestations of innocence made on the scaffold by some of the men recently convicted of murder in Ireland on evidence which no reasonable man could for a moment gainsay, hav excited a good deal of attention in England, as some of the Irish agitators hav treated them as proof of innocence. The controversy has caused the disinterment of a little religious manual, entitled "What Every Christian Must Know and Do," widely sold in Ireland at the price of one cent, and bearing the late Cardinal Cullen's confirmation, which is believed by some to throw some light on the matter. Whether it does or no, it offers Catholic theologians an opportunity of making an explanation of some kind. It says that when absolution is given by the priest "your sins are forgiven, the pains of hell taken away, and your soul made bright and beautiful like an angel of God, and the kingdom of heaven is yours." This, of course, suggests the theory that the murderer on the scaffold may, in good faith, after absolution, declare himself "innocent as the child unborn." The definition of murder in the manual points in the same direction. It describes murder as "unjustly taking away another's life"—not, be it observed, unlawfully—and a foot note on this adds: "It is not a sin to desire some temporal misfortune to another to make him cease to giv scandal, or be converted, or not persecute the good." It is easy to see how readily in the mind of an excited peasant this definition and elucidation might be made to cover obnoxious landlords, agents, bailiffs, and even policemen and judges.

The Methodist Episcopal pastor of Birmingham, Ala., published a card, in which he said: "My church is for white persons exclusivly, and colored people are not invited or expected to attend." Revival meetings were being held, and negroes were attending them in considerable numbers. The excuse for their exclusion was that their presence hindered the work among white sinners. The minister's course has been strongly condemned, but the Atlanta Methodist Advocate defends him, declaring that "the conferences in the South need at least twenty more like him." According to this, heaven is not for negroes, but only for whites. If the former were in the majority they would probably exclude the latter. It is a poor rule that won't work both ways.

Unquestionably the most unutterable donkey who has the honor to represent a constituency in a state legislature is the individual who was elected from Plymouth, Mass., to the lower house in Massachusetts. The English sparrows hav driven away the song birds of the state, and a bill was introduced allowing their destruction. One absurd man thought it would prove detrimental to the morals of the small boys, but the Plymouth Rock man capped his stupidity by declaiming that the legislature might be going "against the Bible. which tells us that not a sparrow falls without our father's notice." If the Sunday Closing League of this city do not forthwith send a brass badge to the solemn Bay state lawmaker, they will be judged by an indignant people to hav failed of the mission for which they were created.

There is now being exhibited at the Royal Aquarium in London a strange, hairy little creature named Krao. Krao is described as a very bright looking, intelligent girl of about seven years of age. She was caught, according to the account given of her, in the forest near Laos, and brought to England by Mr. Carl Bock, a Norwegian, who, since the expedition described by him in "The Head Hunters of Borneo," has been exploring Siam and and the wilder states to the Northeast. Hearing in various quarters of the existence of a race of hairy, tailed men, similar to a family kept at the Court of Mandalay, he offered a reward for the capture of a specimen. A man was caught, and with him the child now exhibited, and a woman of similar appearance then allowed herself to be taken. When the little one attempted to wander, the parents called her back with a plaintiv cry, "Kra-o," and the call has been adopted as her name. The eyes of the child are large, dark, and lustrous; the nose is flattened, the nostrils scarcely showing; the cheeks are fat and pouch-like, the lower lip only rather thicker than is usual in Europeans; but the chief peculiarity is the strong and abundant hair. On the head it is black, thick, and straight, and grows over the forehead down to the heavy eyebrows, and is continued in whisker-like locks down the cheeks. The rest of the face is covered with a fine, dark, downy hair, and the shoulders and arms hav a covering of hairs from an inch to an inch and a half long. There is, it is said, a slight lengthening of the lower vertebræ, suggestiv of a caudal protuberance, and there are points in the muscular conformation otherwise which will provoke discussion. Krao has already picked up a few words of English. She is said to be of a frank, affectionate disposition, and shows truly feminin delight in her clothes, jewelry, and ribbons. The showman exhibits her as "the missing link."

Mr. David Dudley Field opposes any change in the Sunday provisions of the Penal Code, on the ground that no amendment is necessary "if the Code be liberally construed by the courts." But the people hav no assurance that the code will be liberally construed by the courts, or that any two judges will agree in their interpretation of it. One judge may take a sensible and liberal view of what the people of this metropolis should be allowed to do on Sunday, and another may think it ungodly and unlawful for florists to sell flowers to be used in churches or at funerals on that day. Judge Arnoux held selling cigars on Sunday to be unlawful, because he did "not consider cigars a necessity," but the Supreme Court of Indiana recently decided that to smokers cigars are as much of a necessity as tea or coffee is to the drinkers of those articles. Perhaps the Indiana judges smoke and ex-Judge Arnoux does not. Mr. Field properly regards the Sunday barber a necessity, and cites his own experience in support of his views, but a full-bearded orthodox judge may think and hold otherwise. The high-handed attempts to revive Sunday blue laws recently made forcibly illustrate the mischief that may be done by bigoted meddlers in the name of the Code. Mr. Field explains that "the whole cause of the trouble in New York city arose from the stupidity of the police in the construction of the law." But the same trouble may arise at any time from the same cause so long as the Code remains unchanged.—Herald.

The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage's attack upon the theatrical profession is bearing fruit in a way which he probably did not expect. It is well known and generally admitted, even by his admirers, that in personal appearance Mr. Talmage is not prepossessing above the average. His features are large, his legs long and thin, and his head bald. His mouth, especially, has been the subject of criticism. Expansiv even in repose, when extended in a smile it becomes prodigious. As a contortionist he excels most preachers, and utilizes his hands and feet unsparingly for proposes of gesticulation. Actor Howson, of the New York Bijou Opera Company, has turned to account these peculiarities of the Tabernacle preacher. Being something of an artist in the way of making up for the stage, he enlarged his nose with putty, extended his mouth with paint, donned a wig, decorated his face with wrinkles and side-whiskers, and with his clothes patterned after those worn by Talmage, and his speech accompanied with various gesticulatory contortions, the likeness to the preacher was striking. The city was also placarded with posters representing Talmage as the Sorcerer, holding a skull above his head. This worked all right in New York, but when the company went to Brooklyn and embellished the dead walls of that city with caricatures of its favorit pastor, the friends and relativs of Talmage protested. The courts were appealed to, a warrant of arrest for libel was issued, and the objectionable posters were withdrawn. An officer with the warrant in his possession visited the theater ready to arrest Mr. Howson if he should appear in his Talmagian make-up. By the advice of the stage manager; however, the actor concluded to forego his wig, nasal enlargement, and extended mouth, and the play was allowed to proceed. The suppression of Mr. Howson is said to hav been instigated more out of respect to the feelings of Talmage's family, who are very sensitiv on the subject, than from any regard for the preacher himself, who seems rather to enjoy the notoriety, and wrote to the Puck artist who drew the bill-board caricature, complimenting him on having caught the expression of his (Talmage's) face better than the majority of photographers. Mr. Howson does not think that he has offended against the law, but in deference to public opinion in Brooklyn, he has consented to adopt a different make-up.

News of the Week.

The State Treasurer of Alabama is $227,000 short in his accounts.

Emperor William of Germany is sick, and Prince Bismarck is suffering from neuralgia and swollen limbs.

Disastrous floods hav visited portions of Pennsylvania and Ohio, doing damage to the extent of some $3,000,000.

A fire at Oshkosh, Wis., on the 1st, destroyed the office of the Times and other property valued at $10,000.

The pier of the Inman Steamship Company in this city was burnt on the 1st inst. The loss is estimated at $850,000.

John Kenny, who was sentenced to imprisonment during life for murder, shot himself in the jail in Brooklyn last week.

The people of St. Louis, Mo., were treated to a wrestling match last Sunday. Attempts were made to prevent its taking place on that day, but the police refused to interfere.

An alarm of fire in a wool factory in Bombay, India, last week, caused a panic in which twenty-three women were crushed to death while struggling to escape.

The revolutionary or republican party is triumphing in Ecuador. Esmeraldas, the leading port of the country, has been captured, and a new government is to be formed.

Libby Raible, a student at the State Normal School in Edinburgh, Pa., is under arrest for the murder of her illegitimate child, the remains of which were found in a field, partly burnt.

The coining of a new five-cent piece was begun in the Philadelphia mint on the 1st. The new piece is of the same size as the old, and of different design. The coining of the old piece has been stopped.

While superintending preparations for a theatrical entertainment, the Rev. W. S. Thomas, vicar of Hake, Somersetshire, England, was suddenly stricken with heart disease and died in a few minutes.

More than a thousand lives were lost during the month of January by railway accidents, wrecks at sea, fires, and floods. In the way of disasters on land and sea, it was the most remarkable month of which record has been made.

A serious outbreak has occurred among the mountaineers of Rajpootna, India. They are in open revolt against the rajah, who is tributary to Great Britain. The governor of Bombay has been obliged to place renewed military force on the frontier.

The coroner's jury investigating the Newhall House disaster hav found the proprietor guilty of culpable negligence in not employing a sufficient number of watchmen to guard against fire, and to awaken the inmates in time to save all the lives possible.

We regret to hear that previous to leaving the South Mr. Charles Watts was robbed of $1,000. We hope Liberal societies will giv this gentleman plenty of lecturing engagements, so that he may regain some of his great and unfortunate loss before he returns to England.

The Moffat building, at 335 Broadway, formerly containing the office of The Truth Seeker, was the scene of a destructiv fire and many narrow escapes from death on the 30th ult. The damage to the building amounts to $20,000, and individual losses foot up to about the same sum. No lives were lost.

A telegraphic dispatch dated London, Feb. 2d, contains the following information: "Geo. W. Foote, editor; William J. Ramsey, proprietor, and Mr. Kemp, printer, of the Freethinker, appeared at the Mansion House to-day to answer the charge of blasphemous libel. They were remanded preparatory to committal for trial."

PAINE'S NATAL DAY.

Celebrating the Anniversary of the Author-Hero's Birth.

APPROPRIATE CEREMONIES

In New York, Philadelphia, and Other Places.

The 146th anniversary of the birth of Thomas Paine was celebrated generally on the 29th ult. by the Liberals throughout the country. In this city commemorativ services were held at the German Masonic Temple, on Fifteenth street. All the seats in the hall were occupied, and many were compelled to remain standing. Mr. E. W. Chamberlin opened the meeting by nominating to the chair, Mr. Wilson McDonald, the sculptor, whom he referred to as a man more widely know through his chisel than his pen. In the absence, through death, of D. M. Bennett, Mr. Chamberlin knew of no man to whom Liberals could look with more confidence for some one to preside at our Paine celebrations than to Mr. McDonald. Years ago Mr. McDonald was activ in the cause, but of late he had been less known to Liberals. The necessities of the case however seemed to hav called him into renewed life.

On taking the chair amid considerable applause, Mr. McDonald spoke as follows:

We meet to call to mind and to celebrate the 146th anniversary of the birth of Thomas Paine, the patriot, philosopher, and reformer.

Thirty years ago the celebration of this event would hav been fraught with danger to one's business and even life, in those localities where ignorance and fatnaticism prevailed. Nearly all the older Freethinkers can look back to those days when they had to meet, almost single-handed and alone, the fierce assaults of the pulpit and the bitterness and brutality of religious sectarianism. This age owes much to those sturdy old rationalists who a half century ago defended and maintained the platform of Liberal principles and Freethought. The present state of Liberal opinion, therefore, is a source of intense gratification to the old reformers, and they enjoy intensely this reward of their heroic fortitude..

Thomas Paine was entirely great among the great men with whom he was associated during the American conflict. This was acknowledged than by all men. He was the peerless—the illustrious Infidel of them all; but when he expressed his sentiments through the "Age of Reason" the church let loose upon him the furies, malice, hate, and slander. They dragged him from the lofty hight upon which his patriotism, his honesty, and his genius had placed him. His great services were forgotten and the name of Paine became, with the religious forces of the Revolution, synonymous with dishonesty, villainy, and what sectarians call blasphemy. And every year since the publication of the "Age of Reason" the religionists and religious press hav kept up a constant fire upon the fame of the great patroit. In vain hav their own doctrins been cited to them in defense of Paine's life. In vain hav they been referred to that passage in the Testament which says, "Pray for those which despitefully use you and persecute you;" they refused to practice their own doctrin. The falsehoods thundered from the pulpit against Paine hav been answered and refuted over and over and again, and yet every light-brained, pin-feathered graduate of our theological colleges, as soon as he gets rid of the shell of the egg in which he was incubated, trims his spurs and arranges his feathers for a flutter at what he is pleased to call the "life of Tom Paine." These people never hav and never can answer the plain reasoning and just conclusions of Paine. He soared far beyond them. In vain hav the owls and bats of the church tried to pluck a feather from the eagle of his genius.

The church has not and cannot recover from the vigorous blows which Paine inflicted upon it through the "Age of Reason." Their answers and arguments are only personal abuse; their pamphlets, books, and sermons are forgotten.

Paine's life, principles, and service rest upon the inexorable logic of facts. His memory and fame hav withstood the howl and cry of Christian mobs for nearly a hundred years! The curse of Rome has been launched against him and the Protestants hav assigned him to the lowest pit in the fabled hades. But how futil all these volumes of abuse hav been! For from out of the murky clouds and pestilential fogs with which these unfair Christian men hav surrounded the memory of Paine, there rises a great white column of fame. It rests upon the solid rock of truth; the sunlight of justice gilds its head, and millions of freemen who hav denied the divine right of kings and repudiated the religious dogmas of the past look upon it with feelings of gratitude and admiration.

According to Washington and Jefferson, Thomas Paine did more than any one man to establish the independence of America. While there may be honest differences of opinion upon this estimate of Paine's character and services, there can be no doubt that he was the foremost political writer of his day, and that in his "Rights of Man" and "Common Sense" can be found nearly all the great principles which underlie our present form of government; and it is undoubtedly true that Paine and Jefferson furnished the warp and woof out of which the Declaration of Independence was woven.

One hundred years ago England was not the place for such a great, free, outspoken democratic republican as Paine. He was more than a century in advance of his age; his political ideas were not tolerated by the tories and bigots of his time. His struggle in England was a severe one—the fates seemed to be against him.

He had already decided, when in London, during the year 1774 to emigrate to America and participate in the coming conflict. In London he met Dr. Franklin. Franklin urged Paine to proceed to America, and gave him letters to Benjamin Rush and other distinguished men of the day. Paine landed in Philadelphia in the latter part of the year 1774. He took in the situation at once and ardently joined the commencement of that revolution which was to emancipate a hemisphere and establish the independence of the United States of America.

It is claimed that he first wrote the name which our country bears.

During the latter part of the year 1774 and the early part of 1775 the new Parliament was divided upon the policy to be pursued regarding the American colonies. Lord Chatham and his friends were in favor of the American subjects, while Lord Worth and his followers opposed them—the king's speech was unfavorable to the colonies. The British troops were constantly perpetrating acts of tyranny in the colonies, and though the people were goaded to open resistance in many of the states, no one thought of asking for anything more than a redress of grievances. Many states sent humble petitions to the English king, praying for redress—all they desired was the repeal of the stamp act and a few other odious laws.

If they ever dreamed of freedom, they evidently did not think its attainment was possible while the colonies were so evenly divided. The supporters of the crown and the Conservativs were men of influence, power, and wealth, and they were then in the majority.

It is stated upon the authority of a historian of the Quaker City that Washington, Franklin, and Jefferson met on one occasion to discuss the condition of the country; they were devising ways and means to relieve the colonies of their burthens. A fourth party made their number complete. The last man heard with impatience the propositions that were made by Washington and Franklin, and was asked to giv his views. Drawing himself up to his full hight, with a face full of enthusiasm, he exclaimed: "There is but one word to use; it is Independence." That man was Thomas Paine.

That magic word sent thrills of joy into the hearts of his listeners. Jefferson arose, seized Paine by the hand, and there stood those two immortal Radicals—they had crossed the line of Conservatism, and from that moment a formal declaration of independence was assured; it was only a matter of a short time.

Late in the year of 1775, Paine was engaged in writing his "Common Sense."

Even after the affair at Lexington no one yet asked for independence. Some of the great leaders undoubtedly wished for it, but there was not unanimity enough among the people to giv any hope of success. A large army was coming out from the mother country; the terrible Hessians had been hired at sixpence per day; the bishops in the House of Lords were clamoring with Christian ferocity for the punishment and subjection of the colonies, and these embassadors of Christ were the first to recommend force for the Americans—so that we hav the spectacle of these followers of the so-called prince of peace proposing to send soldiers and paid hirelings to enslave a nation, while opposed to them were illustrious Infidels like Paine, Franklin, Jefferson, and others, preparing to defend the sacred rights of man.

About this time, acts of violence by the Royalists followed in quick succession. During this period of excitement, indecision, and fear, Paine published his "Common Sense." It flashed out like the clear sun through a dense sky of clouds. In this pamphlet he boldly proposed independence as the best means of getting out of the difficulties into which the people were plunged. The pamphlet accomplished wonders. It made a great change in public opinion. It showed the colonists their resources. It hinted at foreign help; while the boldness of its language alarmed the timid, who did not think the people were prepared for the extreme measures proposed. Still, its effect on the people was unparalleled. It was read from North to South. Paine's great desire then was to produce a wish in the colonies for a Declaration of Independence. This he accomplished. The following July that immortal document appeared,

"Common Sense" produced the Declaration of Independence, and that instrument brought on the war.

Paine at once joined the army, and began his "Crisis," which was a continuance of his "Common Sense." Each number was ordered by Washington to be read to every company in the army. It aroused the soldiers to a high degree of enthusiasm. Paine did not stop in his work. He wrote with great vigor, and the lovers of liberty, not only of America but of the world, hung with hope upon his burning words. He went to France, and brought back a ship-load of clothing and millions of treasure; and when the army of Washington became wearied, barefooted, ragged, and discouraged, Paine raised the sinews of war. His engergy, honesty, and resources never left him; he was more than equal to any emergency in that great war that ever confronted him. After the war Congress voted him money, and the state of New York, grateful for his services, gave him the farm at New Rochelle.

He went to France in the year 1778 to assist those who had done so much for the Americans in our revolution, and it was in the French Assembly that he showed the characteristics of his lofty soul. He avowed at all times what he knew to be a truthful principle, fearless of the consequences, and in the face of death. Still, Thomas Paine, the hater of kings and tyrants, voted against the decree condemning King Louis XVI. to the scaffold because it was cruel, impolitic, and unnecessary. Jefferson sent a ship to France to bring Paine back to America. His "Age of Reason" had preceded him, and this was deemed by the religionists a sufficient cause to attack him. He landed in America in 1802. But he was not the man who left these shores fourteen years before. His long imprisonment under power of the tyrant Robespierre told heavily upon him. His labors in the cause of liberty in France had undermined his health. He was now sixty-five years old.

It is not necessary here to go into an analysis of the mind of Paine, its power, quality, or his methods of thought, or style of diction or expression. It may be, however, proper to state that as a political writer he had no superior; the purity of his patriotism was never questioned. He was a man of originality, and he stated his sentiments and opinions with clearness and precision.

Mr. Paine was a kind man; he loved the human family, and when he said that the "world was his country and to do good was his religion," he gave expression to the true inwardness of his character. The grasp and comprehensiv powers of his mind were very great, and while he could write upon the ordinary matters of every-day life fairly, he was only in his proper element when dealing with the great questions which affected the whole human family—the birth and destiny of nations, and the establishment of the principles of liberty, fraternity, and equality throughout the civilized world. He was the incomparable champion of human rights.

My sympathies from early boyhood hav been with the memory of Paine. He was the best abused man of the century in which he lived. Every slander that Christian malice could invent, every falsehood religious cruelty could find, was hurled at Paine's defenseless head. Two generations of preachers wasted their pious lives in savage onslaughts upon our great author. Every Jesuit on both sides of the Atlantic (those black wolves of the "delectable mountains" of Christianity) had his teeth in the neck of Paine's reputation. With what fiendish glee these old-fashioned Inquisition members of the Society of Jesus would hav tortured our benevolent old patriot! It is good for the world that these cruel old Christians hav each been "in his narrow cell forever laid." It is well for us that they are under the daisies or moldering in charnel houses or catacombs of Paris and of Rome.

It has always been inexplicable to me why generous Americans do not make pilgrimages to the grave and monument of Paine as they do the tombs of Washington and Jefferson. Why should we withhold our sympathy and affection from one who was the compatriot of, and one of, the fathers of the great Revolution, and who worked so long and well for the liberties we now enjoy? If we ever want an instance of "the rarity of Christian charity" it can be found in the cruel injustice, the persistent injuries which "the children of Christ" hav heaped upon the author-hero of the American Revolution.

Now be it understood that I do not in these remarks refer to the well-paid, eloquent, and clever ministers of to-day—the Collyers, Beechers, Newtons, and others, for they stand now where Thomas Paine stood a hundred years ago. I refer rather to those religious outlaws, the tyrants of the old church, who swallow the whole Christian system without a doubt, the inquisitors and practical torturers of humanity, the John Calvins, the New England witch-burners, the ignorant teachers of doctrins they cannot understand, and the religious frauds like the Mormons, or selfish workers like Moody and Sankey. It is pleasant to know that the terrible sectarians of two hundred years ago, of England, Ireland, and Scotland, hav passed away, and it would be agreeable to think that the history of their murders in the name of Christ could be forgotten, but unfortunately for the honor of human nature the awful story of their lives has been preserved!

It is gratifying to the rationalists of to-day to see the wonderful growth and vigor of Liberal doctrins and the progress that has been made in fifty years. But never let it be forgotten that much of this Liberal thought is due to writings and arguments of Thomas Paine. He helped to make it possible for us to express our opinions; it was by and through such men as Franklin, Jefferson, and Paine that the church and state were kept apart, and the freedom of religious opinion guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States.

Just one hundred years hav rolled away since the curtain descended upon the last act of the great Revolution. The actors hav all disappeared from life's stormy stage; with them "life's fitful fever's o'er." They can now look calmly back upon the merits and demerits of those real actors, and they can see the value of the services of Paine. They grow brighter with the march of intellect and time. He will be appreciated in the coming ages for his labors in the cause of human freedom; and when Catholic and Protestant are gone from the earth forever, when their churches hav become temples of free education, when their myths, traditions, and angels hav passed away, when their saints, relics, crosses, and useless paraphernalia of their idolatry hav sunk to their merited oblivion, the name of Thomas Paine will still remain upon the immortal list of those who spent their lives for the benefit and progress of mankind.

Mr. Courtlandt Palmer spokes as follows:

I hav one idea to throw out, and that is the idea of hero-worship. That idea our irreverential age is lacking in. In the new work on natural religion by Prof. Seeley, the author of "Ecce Homo," I find a definition of Atheism. Atheism, he says, is not so much the denial of a personal God as it is the insubordination of the individual to a higher power—the raising of man's selfish self against the cosmos or against humanity. The denial of this hero-worship is one phase of Atheism. I remember some of the experiences through which I hav passed in my life, in the development or evolution of my hero-worship. As a child, I recollect my elder brother, many years my senior; he seemed to me the "very mold of fashion and the glass of form, a perfect paragon of excellence." As I was older and played in the street, I recall one of my companions who was gifted with wonderful physical powers; I looked up to him as a Hercules. As my world widened I took my heroes from Grecian mythology. Perseus became to me a prince of strength, Apollo the ideal god of beauty. In college I recall to mind, I being handicapped by illness to a great extent, the admiration I entertained for the head of my class, as he stood there an intellectual Agamemnon, a head and shoulders above his fellows. As my nature began to widen out beyond its boundaries of orthodoxy, I found my hero in that sublime, beautiful, self-denying ideal of the Jewish Jesus. And that ideal, I say to all iconoclasts, that ideal, as time goes on, will raise itself more and more with advancing civilization. The theological element we may properly eliminate, but the human side of that divine Christ will become diviner and diviner as man himself grows toward the divine. But a time came when emancipation began to dawn upon my soul, when I saw that the theological interpretation of the universe was not true. And this work, "Ecce Homo," to which I hav referred was one of the instrumentalities that led me into the way of life. A reader of Paine I never was. I am not a student either of the school of Voltaire or of Paine, but no one can be a Liberal without having the name of Voltaire and Paine as household words.

A gentleman, Mr. Remsburg, sent me this book—a compendium of Paine's biography, and I turned to it to see if I could not find some of his stirring, glowing sentences. I found them, and I think the greatness of this author-hero can best be illustrated by a few of these extracts. [Here the speaker introduced a series of quotations from Paine, among which were the following:]

"O ye that love mankind! Ye that dare oppose, not only the tyranny, but the tyrant, stand forth! Every spot of the old world is overrun with oppression. Freedom hath been hunted round the globe. Asia and Africa hav long expelled her. Europe regards her like a stranger, and England hath given her warning to depart. Oh, receive the fugitiv, and prepare in time an asylum for mankind."

"Every religion is good that teaches man to be good."

"When, in countries that are called civilized, we see age going to the workhouse, and youth to the gallows, something must be wrong in the system of government."

"I do not believe in the creed professed by the Jewish church, by the Roman church, by the Greek church, by the Turkish church, by the Protestant church. My own mind is my own church."

"I do not mean by this declaration to condemn those who believe otherwise; they hav the same right to their belief as I hav to mine. But it is necessary to the happiness of man that he be mentally faithful to himself."

Shakspere says:

"To thine own self be true;
And it must follow, as the night the day,
Thou can'st not then be false to any man."

I hav said that Paine was not my master, but he may be said to be the progenitor of my masters. But for men like Voltaire and Paine, and the glorious masters like them, the Gamaliels at whose feet I and others are learning to-day could not hav existed. Without Thomas Paine there would not hav been a Goethe, a Spencer, an Auguste Comte. He opened the path in the fields through which these men hav trod, and it is due to him that they hav been enabled to shed on this century a larger light of liberty. These new author-heroes hav traveled higher upon the mountains of aspiration where Paine was a pioneer; they stand upon those table-lands and beckon to us to come up there with them to drink and breathe the freshness of the morning and see the rising of the new sun of liberty, truth, and emancipation.

Mr. Louis F. Post said:

When William Cobbett had removed the body of Thomas Paine to England a distinguished poet wrote of that event these words:

"In bringing back the bones of Paine,
Will Cobbett, you've done well;
He visits you on earth again,
You'll visit him in hell."

My friends, long after the fame of the brilliant libertin who penned those lines shall hav been sealed in the charnel vaults of oblivion, the name of the great humanitarian whose memory we celebrate to-night will continue to cast over the fields of history a halo of beauty which slander cannot obscure nor time dissolve. When time shall be no more it may be that the soul of Thomas Paine will liv in the tortures of the damned, and that he will dance for Cobbett an endless death-waltz on the incandescent pavement of an orthodox hell. But while time lasts his spirit will march along the centuries, keeping time with the drum-beats of progress, inspiring the lives of generations to come, and guiding their footsteps as a pillar of cloud by day and of fire by night. And if there is a great white throne, when Thomas Paine comes to face his calumniators before it I predict that he will hav a better chance for being invited into the sheep-pen than they. Thomas Paine was the embodiment of unselfishness; to self-interest he never appealed; on self-interest he never relied. His appeals were to duty, his reliance was on devotion. He spoke, and a petty revolt against taxation became a great crusade against kingship; he spoke again, and a discouraged people sprang to the call of duty, when self-interest would hav dictated surrender and submission. In a foreign land he opposed and helped to dethrone the king, and he courted death in one of its ugliest forms to save that king from the guillotin. He fought against wrongs, but he fought for men, whether they had worn velvet or fustian, whether their heads had borne the burden of a crown or a yoke; and when the king had ceased to be a king and became a man, he had the same claim upon the sympathy and service of Thomas Paine that all men had. At last, with honors heaped upon him and the garlands of a splendid fame clustering about his brow, in response to the demands of duty, he cast all other considerations aside and boldly defied the powers of superstition. Never was there such a fall from such an eminence as when Thomas Paine joined issue with the professional guardians of the mythological gods. He saw it, but he hesitated not at the sacrifice. He might hav lived out his days in honor and comfort, but he braved the slanders of narrow theologians and the ghoul-like sneers of libidinous poets. He wrote for man, he worked for man; for man he lived and for man he offered up his fame—a nobler sacrifice than was ever laid on the altar of a god. Whatever faults may be found by pious scavengers in the character of Thomas Paine, his "Common Sense" was without tarnish, and his devotion to his sense of right unyielding. He was of clay, as we are all of clay, but his was as the porcelain clay of the race. He preached the spirit of the Declaration of Independence long before Jefferson had penned it. He tore away the foreign undergrowths of superstition for the Darwins, the Spencers, and the Tyndalls who were to come. He sacrificed life on the altar of humanity, and mankind does him but simple justice in rescuing his sacred fame from the clutch of calumny and the slime of vilification. The world was his country, to do good his religion; humanity was his god, superstition his devil, and reason was his bible. Instinctivly he recognized, long before Herbert Spencer had proved it, that kings, gods, and priests, temples, slavery, and worship, hav a common origin in the ignorant fears of primitiv man. In his "Common Sense" and the "Crisis" he threw the glare of reason on kings, courts, and slavery, and this republic rose among the nations of the earth. In the "Age of Reason" he threw it on gods, temples, and worship, and the philosophy of the nineteenth century grew from the seed of the rationalism of the eighteenth, which he planted. For the searching investigation of modern philosophy, for the free expression of modern theologians, for the elimination of the horrible and the fabulous from the current religions, for the prevailing ascendancy of the bright stars of liberty, culture, and science—for all these we are indebted to Thomas Paine. If we of this generation are browsing freely in the rich pastures of reason's bright domain it is because he threw down the bars; and, my friends, let us from this day forth, without ceasing, endeavor to erect to his memory a living monument in the hearts af mankind.

Mr. Stephen Pearl Andrews was the speaker next called upon. There is much that is new in what he said. His criticism of Denslow's treatis on Paine is apparently just and must so stand until shown to be otherwise. He said:

I shall preface what I hav to say about Thomas Paine by a short treatis about souls. In the last number of the little newspaper called Man there is a remarkably bright and significant article on "Second-hand Souls." The article is without any avowed authorship; but whoever can read between the lines will hav no difficulty in deciphering the name of our worthy fellow-laborer, one of the speakers on the platform this evening, Thaddeus B. Wakeman. Doubtless many of you hav read the article, but it is good enough to bear some re-reading, and I beg you, therefore, to allow me to make the following extracts:

"Reader, did you ever go into the laboratory of the spirit world where souls are made? Swedenborg took me there once. My spiritual eyes were nearly blinded by the swarms or ill-formed creatures, half-human and half-bat, that flitted through the twilight of the illimitable vistas of space.

"'What art they?' said I, as I clung trembling at his side.

"'Second-haud souls,' said the great Seer, 'which hav been compelled by death to drop their own mortal form, and are now flitting about trying to get a chance to enter and work for life some newly-forming human body, as if it were their automaton.'

"'Are there then really two kinds of souls?'

"'Certainly,' said he. 'Some are original or first-hand. The larger part are secoud-hand, aud work out human lives which aro merely reflections of those from which the soul originally came. Hence it is that many of the lives on the earth are mechanical, like the dancing jacks and Punch and Judy shows at country fairs. Their thought and feelings are of no original value. They are the combinations of impulses that hav had their origin long ago, and if you would know their value you must look at their originals only. The amusing thing is that these second-hand fellows uever kuow that they aro second-hand at all, but keep going over their old grimaces as if they were the newest births of the spirit world.'

"'What is the difficulty with these souls practically?' said I.

"'Why, they never hav any real life, or faith, or conviction of their own. Echoes, snobs, and flunkies are all that can possibly become of them. When the earth is chiefly peopled by such souls history has an age of decadence and the times are sorely out of joint. Then the first-hand souls hav to take hold aud bring up affairs to the proper state of pregress. It is that which causes revolutions, religious, social, political.'

"'But has not every person when born some sort of an original soul of his own?'

"'Certainly, else he could not liv, but it is often weak and dependent. Then these fellows overwhelm it, crush it, or suck it out, so that the original man might as well never hav been born. [illegible]er that the life is lived and the body worked by the second-hand soul almost exclusivly.'

"'Hav those poor original souls no possible way of ever getting free from the second-hand incubi and succubi that thus overgrow and stunt them?'

"'Yes, if they can but get hold of the original aliments of spiritnal life, so as to get nourished into sufficient strength, they in turn may become masters, and cast off the second-hand souls, or make them servants and aids in a new life of growth and work. The latter is the use to which old souls should be applied. For such purposes they are invaluable—but more of that anon. With all thy gettings, secure as the chief of all a first-hand soul; without it thy life is but a shadow, and as a shadow will vanish forever.'

"'And where is this spirit world in which these second-hand, old clo', hearsay, vampire souls are swarming?'

"'Open thy eyes. It is thine own actual world! See that they do not master thee!'"

This ingenious and exquisit bit of ideal Spiritualism exactly expresses ideas which I also entertain, and with this difference only, that while holding that this idealistic form of the conception is certainly true, if nothing else is, I go farther and believe that the theory is also well founded scientifically—that these souls, whether first or second-hand in character, are real existences, playing precisely the parts which Mr. Wakeman has assigned to them. I hav, therefore, an advantage, and the additional inspiration, of thinking while I speak, however fanciful the idea may seem to many of you, that not improbably I may be actually having, at this moment, Thomas Paine among my auditors. This is what Mr. Wakeman and myself, in our colloquial conferences, hav concluded to call technically the theory or doctrin of entical as contrasted with his mode of the conception which we then call ideal Spiritualism.

Now exactly this I believe to be the web and woof of the constitution of this universe; that gauzy veils of differentiation shut out from each other seemingly on all hands worlds and domains of being, which are nevertheless most intimately related with and constantly influencing each other. Some men possess their own minds so absolutely as never to be aware of anything working within them which is not strictly themselvs. Other men equally able, it may be, as to results, are perpetually, and others occasionally, distinctly conscious of whole currents of thought, argument, plot, and inspiration flowing in upon them from some source seemingly other than themselvs, possibly very much transcending, or perhaps falling below, what their unaided minds might hav accomplished, but, at all events, so far as they can judge, quite foreign from themselvs as to its source or origin. Having long been in the habit of watching the manifestations of mind from this point of view, I hav in fact long since come to the conclusion that obsession is one of the most wide-spread and potential facts of human existence. It seems to me that it is only a small minority of mankind whose bodies are continuously and consistently occupied by any single and dominant soul whatever. They are to-day one thing, and to-morrow another. Some influence, it is said, has come upon them and changed them. Or may we not conceive that some other soul has seized on the individual body? Many years ago, in illustration of this idea, I used to say that the human body was in many instances, as it seemed to me, a tenement house, and oftentimes without any landlord. You talk at some one through a window or an open door, and you go back afterwards and talk through the same window or door, and you suppose yourself to be talking to the same person, but you find to your surprise that it is some one else. It is no longer the same individual. We say the man has changed his mind. Nothing that he gave us reason to expect of him is now coming true. But perhaps the mind has changed the man. Another occupant of the tenement has got in the way or place of the previous one. The same body, in other words, holds more souls than one, and one of these souls is in no way responsible for the others.

Somewhat later I noticed that Oliver Wendell Holmes hav, ing got hold of this same idea, put it in this way: "It would be funny, wouldn't it," he says, "if it should turn out after all that the human body is an omnibus, and not a private carriage?" And now Mr. Wakeman restates the thought under the simile of second-hand souls, invading, overmastering, and subduing the rightful owners of these individual bodies, and making slaves of them.

Well, you will be inclined to ask, what has all this to do with Thomas Paine and the celebration of his birthday? It has this to do with it: You will perceive more forcibly, perhaps, from these allusions, what I mean when I say that Thomas Paine was no second-hand soul, living on other men's ideas, or working over the common pabulum of thought, and being merely one among other men, a common-place human individual. He was a bright, brand new, first-hand, original soul, "as good as they make 'em." He was a landlord at home, and head of the household, every time, in his own mental residence. He, if any man ever did, rode in his own private carriage and drove his own team. In a word, Thomas Paine was a man of what the Germans call an epoch-making character.

But I propose in what I shall say this evening to depart from the course of mere routine eulogy, and to consider the character and office of Paine, or his place in history, a little critically, both on the good and on what is alleged by some as the bad side of his character. I hav before me a work which you can obtain at THE TRUTH SEEKER office, entitled, "Modern Thinkers," written by VanBuren Denslow, LL.D., a distinguished Liberal and scholar, and a member of the Philosophical Society of our neighboring city, Chicago, with an introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. I know not how well most of you may be acquainted with this remarkable contribution to our recent Liberal literature, but I would recommend you all to read it if you hav not already done so. The purpose and spirit of the work is excellent and the writer of it very able; but with some of his sketches of character I do not find myself contented, especially, I will say now, with his Swedenborg and his Thomas Paine. Perhaps what he has said about either of them is better than what anybody else has said, but I feel that something else and better should be said, and must be said before either of these great characters is rightly represented. To-night it is only with respect to Paine that I propose to criticise the critic, and in order to do so I must consume a little time in reading a few extracts from Denslow.

Let me, however, premise a little recital that will be new to some of you. During several years past Mr. William Henry Burr, of Washington city, who was one of my old associates in the introduction of phonography, who was for many years one of the ablest of congressional reporters, who is a genuin and rare scholar, and the author of a series of critical papers in THE TRUTH SEEKER, signed Antichrist, author also of a pamphlet which has exerted great influence, called, I think, "Self-Contradictions of the Bible"—this Mr. Burr wrote and published, at first anonymously, one or more series of very original and critical papers devoted to the task of proving, first, that Thomas Paine was the author of the Junius letters, and second, that he was also the author of the American Declaration of Independence, heretofore attributed to Jefferson.

Upon both of these points the arguments of Mr. Burr completely convinced and converted Mr. Denslow, able critic as he is, perhaps the equal of any man living upon that style of subject, and so he, Denslow, accepts and adopts as the established historic fact the assumption that Thomas Paine, in addition to known literary achievements, was also the author of those two marvels of literary achievement, the letters of Junius and the Declaration of Independence. This decision of Mr. Denslow as critic was certainly not influenced either by any undue favor for Mr. Burr, who was to him anonymous, and remains unmentioned, or for Paine, whom, on the whole, he utterly condemns and discards, as we shall see, as to his fundamental ideas and claims to greatness. These introductory facts were necessary in order that you should rightly apprehend the force of the extracts I am now about to read. I make my selections partly with a view to enable you to understand something of the grounds for considering Paine as both Junius and the author of the Declaration. Mr. Denslow says:

"He was probably the first radical abolitionist, of the stripe of Garrison and Phillips, that ever appeared in America. In October, 1775, in an article entitled 'Serious Thoughts,' in the Pennsylvania Journal, he predicted both the separatiou of the colonies from Great Britain and the ultimate abolition of negro slavery. He never looked at slavery temporizingly or economically or biblically or patriarchally or historically, but always simply as an inhuman crime. He alone of all persons resident in America in 1776 possessed antislavery convictions sufficiently vigorous and vituperativ to hav given vent to the charge against George III. contained in the original draft of the Declaration of Independence, which averred his responsibility, first, for the existence of negro slavery in America, and, secondly, for making it a source of revolt and danger to the white population. The whole statement was mere rhetorical fustian, but it was a kind of fustian that would uever hav occurred to an American brain. Some of the prose, and all of the poetry, which Paine wrote during this period, is coarse, sophomorical, and mediocre. His liues on the death of Wolf are sufficient to prove that while he could be a rhymester he was no poet. Yet the average poetic taste of the period was so undeveloped that they were thought very clever. The pamphlet 'Common Sense,' however, contains an order of rhetoric equal to any in 'Junius,' very much resembling it, and which will compare favorably with the finest English classics. It advocated separation from Great Britain, and had a wide circulation. It was published anonymously, though no attempt was made to conceal its authorship, and, as iu the case of 'Junius' and the subsequent 'Rights of Man,' no attempt was made by the author to make money out of it, or even to get the slightest return from it. The legislature of Pennsylvania, however, conferred on Paine a gratuity of £500, and the university of Pennsylvania conferred upon him the degree of M. A."

"In the years 1769 to 1772 there shown athwart the political sky of England an intellectual meteor, a prodigy of effulgent sarcasm, who came, none knew whence, dwelt, none knew where, and went, none knew whither. He was gifted as no man ever was before or since, with the fatal and unhappy faculty of suppressing the good, and exaggerating the evil, in the men upon whose conduct he was called to comment, and in the institutions he aimed to overturn. Under his withering touch a Mansfield became ignorant of the law, statesmen shrunk into courtiers, courtiers into pimps; and a compact aristocracy full of learning, courage, and experience, shook like aspen leaves in the winds, a very varietry of mean vices and low aims. Burke spoke of the anonymous writer as the mighty boar of the forest, who not only tossed the king, but the lords and commons on his tusks. Yet Johnson thought Burke himself was the unknowu. And, though he attacked Chatham, volumes were written to prove that Chatham was he. Some hav given to his writings an intent so broad as that of revolutionizing the English government by subverting all faith in those who conducted it. All that the letters of Junius clearly iudicate is that a writer had arisen with all the pride and skepticism of Gibson, without his loyalty and with less than his candor, but following closely his literary style, in which the ideal mentally demanded by the writer formed the climax, and the act done by his subject formed the collapse of a sarcastic antithesis, which no patience could eudure and few reputations could outliv. This genius for sarcastic expression disdained to vent itself on the unpopular or incompetent; it struck always at the most shining marks—the men universally believed to be wise and popularly recognized as successful. The attitude of Junius toward the American contest then impending was peculiar. He at first sustained the doctrin that the taxes for reimbursing to England her cost of military operations in America should be insisted on and collected, and fiercely attacked Chatham. But afterward, in his thirty-ninth letter, he takes the other view, thus:

"'In the repeal of those acts which were most offensiv to America, the Parliament hav done everything but remove the offense. They hav relinquished the revenue but judiciously taken care to preserve the contention. It is not contended that the continuance of the tea duty is to produce any direct benefit whatever to the mother country. What is it, then, but an odious, unprofitable exertion of a speculativ right, and fixing the badge of slavery upon the Americans without service to their masters? But it has pleased God to giv us a ministry and a parliament who are neither to be persuaded by argument nor instructed by experience.'

"His attitude toward the English king is indicated in the thirty-seventh letter, which concludes as follows:

"'His majesty will find, at last, that this is the sense of his people, and that it is not his interest to support either ministry or Parliament, at a hazard of a breach with the collectiv body of his subjects. That he is the king of a free people is, indeed, his greatest glory. That he may long continue the king of a free people is the second wish that animates my heart. The first is THAT THE PEOPLE MAY BE FREE.'"

Mr. Denslow then proceeds to make good the assumption he has made, or rather adopted from Wm. Henry Burr, that the letters of Junius were written by Thomas Paine before he left England; or, in other words, that Thomas Paine and Junius were one and the same person. Want of time forbids me following out that branch of demonstration. I read, however, the following extract, which is founded upon or drawn from that assumption:

"Burke's style is unlike that of Junius, in the fact that Burke is always ponderous and profound, while Junius is always crisp and tart. Burke's sentences are long and involved, Junius's never so; Burke is wise, Junius merely acute; Burke is always reverent toward religion, while Junius's pretended politeness toward it is always thinly sarcastic, as when writing under the second nom de plume of Philo Junius, he certifies in letter 55 that Junius himself is 'a true and hearty Christian in substance, not in ceremony; though probably he may not agree with my reverend lords, the bishops, or with the head of the church (king) that prayers are morality, or that kneeling is religion.' Burke has a lofty appreciation of the sublime and the beautiful, which cannot exist without a capacity for apprehending moral and esthetic significance and value in things mystical and poetic. Junius is a veritable Gradgrind in sticking to what he calls facts, i. e., to a class of unpoetic assertions, which would be facts if they were true. Burke has a profound reverence for the law, and for exalted human dignities and rank. Junius has no reverence for anything except those ultimate ideas which stand in his own mind for truth. Besides, Burke prosecuted Woodfall, the publisher of Junius, for libel, and recovered a penalty of £100, a thing the writer of Junius could never hav done. The only claimant who asserted that he knew Junius was John Horne Tooke, and those who claim Tooke to be Junius think that in the controversy between Tooke and Junius the letters on both sides were written by the same person. The argument for this paradox is founded in the identity of style. But this argument would still stand if we suppose that the writer of both was Paine. That Paine and Tooke were intimate cannot be doubted, since Tooke's name is signed to one political address which appears in Paine's works as written by Paine. Tooke also professes familiarity with Paine, in the remark for which he is often quoted that 'Paine wrote as well as he knew; had he known more he would hav written better.' It is only when Tooke is answering Junius that he writes like Junius. Paine was probably indebted to Tooke, Franklin, and perhaps even indirectly to Burke, Goldsmith, Chatham, and even Francis and Lord George Sackville, for hints, Goldsmith, Tooke, and Franklin he is known to hav been acquainted with. Each of these were capable of supplying Paine with information concerning the chief matters discussed by Junius. The one individual in Great Britain most likely to know Junius personally, because most in sympathy with all his aims and most safely to be trusted with his secret, would hav been Franklin, then acting as agent for the colonies, at the British court. The one use to which Franklin would hav been certain to hav urged Junius to hav devoted his masterly rhetorical powers and his intense revolutionary principles would hav been, if he failed in stirring up a revolution in England, to proceed to America and there prepare the mind of the people for separation. Franklin actually sent over, on this mission, in 1774, Thomas Paine, with letters of commendation to Jefferson, though nothing in the known life of Paine justified the expectation that he had the least capacity for a work of this kind. Franklin had even marked him out as the historian of the impending conflict, aud was actually collecting materials to aid him in presenting the history of the struggle in its true light to the world. Yet all that Paine had written, over his own signature, to excite an expectation that he would prove to be a great rhetorician, was an argument for an increase of the salaries of excisemen. It was written in as excellent a style as either Junius or 'Common Sense,' and in the same style. But it is simply incredible that such a master of rhetoric, having such a genius for politics, should hav lived in so critical an epoch, possessed of the views, the passion, the compass of thought which he develops in his American writings, and should hav been utterly silent, in his nativ country, concerning a state of misgovernment, which so acute a man as Franklin would send him to America on purpose to write up. Paine, therefore, was a great anonymous political writer before coming to America, or he would not hav been selected for this peculiarly first-class work. Two reasons for concealing these facts suffice; first, to reveal them would be to betray his more prominent inspirers and associates; secondly, while aiming at the overthrow of the government he was holding an office under it. It has never been deemed honorable, in a business sense, to accept bread at the hands of an employer whom one is seeking to ruin. Paine, while certainly in many respects conscientious, was so independent in his moral judgments, and so prone to rate highly what was due to himself and to the people, that he might easily hav satisfied his own conscience with the theory that the powers that appointed him did not own the offices, but were the mere agents of the people, and that, so long as he served the people faithfully in the performance of the duties of his office, he was under no obligation either to agree with his employers or to lose his bread if he did not. Yet, while thinking the criticism unsound, he would be likely to prefer that it should not be made. While the public letters of Junius ceased in May, 1772, and his last letter to Woodfall was in January, 1773, Paine remained in the excise until 1774, when he came to America and immediately entered on the editing of the Pennsylvania Magazine, and the writing of the class of revolutionary papers known as 'Common Sense' and 'The Crisis,' which lasted from 1775 to 1783. In the very first sentences of 'Common Sense' all the polished sarcasm, fine rhetorical antithesis, and lofty blending of philosophic calmness with contemptuous disdain for his adversaries; all the tart, crisp, pugnacious simplicity and hard-headed clearness of statement in a word, every element of literary force, political depth and range of thought which distinguished Junius, reappear.

[The additional extracts introduced by Mr. Andrews will be found on page 92 of this paper, to which the reader is referred.—ED. T. S.]

We now arrive at the final summation of Mr. Denslow's remarkable treatis on the great radical. He says:

"We may now fairly estimate Thomas Paine in his two most marked characters, as a master of rhetorical invectiv and as a revolutionist; for, after attributing to him both the authorship of 'Junius' and of the Declaration of Independence, as well as 'Common Sense,' the 'Crisis,' and the 'Rights of Man,' he still subsides into the category of brilliant sensational agitators endowed with a considerable force of prophetic insight, who fell far short of the qualifications essential to a statesman or even of the appreciation of what statesmanship is. There can be no statesmanship without cool-headed candor, judicial calmness, capacity for guarded, just, and moderate statement which will bear the test of time, perfect fairness toward adversaries, gratitude toward supporters, and a capacity for harmonizing adverse or conflicting elements by practicing in non-essentials unity, and in essentials charity. Webster, Clay, Calhoun, Hamilton, Madison, Washington, and Franklin possessed these qualities, but Paine, the scathing and withering accuser, lacked them all. If it be a galling and unbearable tyranny for a conscientious man, with a tongue that has an infinit capacity for accusation and none for pardon, to go about, like a section of the day of judgment, applying to everyone who stands in his way such exacting and ideal tests and standards of virtue that human nature, which seems very tolerable to those who are looking at it without the blasting motiv, is foredoomed by it to certain damnation and infamy, then Paine was a species of moral tyrant, always demanding the impossible of others, notwithstanding his profession and belief that he was an apostle of freedom. Paine's fundamental belief in politics was that the government was always wrong; that it was inherently an evil; that the less there was of it the better, but that however reduced in dimensions, whatever should be left of it would still be bad by reason of its being government. It was as wrong when vested in Washington as in George III., and he had good reason to know that it was as wrong when wielded by Robespierre as when presided over by Louis XVI. On the contrary, Paine imagined that the aggregated ignorance and incapacity of all the vast, unskilled millions who had been pushed out of the work of government by the superior force and cunning of those in power, were the actual repository of political wisdom and purity. The iceberg only needed turning over. He began with the creed, which he retained to his death, that government was not an affair of skill, but merely of honesty; not a problem of difficulty, but merely of good intentions. Holding these views, it followed that if it could in some way be got out of the hands of the skilled and interested few who were educated to it, and had made a profit out of it, into the hands of the unskilled and disinterested masses, who were not educated to it, and who, he assumed, would not seek to make a profit out of it, then good government would be perfectly secured. The inverted iceberg would bloom into an enchanted island melodious with the songs of birds and mellifluous with the scent of flowers. It did not occur to him that the hereditary principle in government might supply permanency, nationality, and non-partisanship to the executiv, who was elected executiv, would always be the mere chief of a party and never the head of a nation; or that the bungling charlatanism of the unskilled democracy might result in misgovernment, waste, despotism, and passionate folly. So little did he comprehend both sides of the question that, in the 'Rights of Man,' he predicted that within ten years the monarchical and aristocratic principles would hav disappeared from all enlightened governments of Europe. The instant his supposed government of the people had got under way in America, Paine immediately saw in it an oligarchy in power, new in personality, but not materially different in meanness and avarice. The iceberg when turned over was still ice all the way up.

John Adams was to Paine a charlatan ignorant of the general principles of government, as superficial a place-hunter and toady as the duke of Grafton. Jay was as corrupt a trickster as Mansfield. Morris was a treacherous fool, and Washington an impostor and hypocrit, without brains or force, indebted, like a dancing-master, to his grace of physical form for his factitious prominence. The weak point, therefore, in Thomas Paine's political philosophy was, that he was not a political philosopher at all, for no man is a philosopher who, like the spider, transforms every food into poison. That power of invectiv which lies as much in the suppression of the whole truth as in the utterance of part, he possessed. But it is not a power on which man rises into his highest greatness. It is, after all, only ornamental slander. It needs to be made kind by charity and just by candor, or it becomes venomous, viperous, diabolic. There is moral force in the philology which derives the name of the devil from the root signifying accusation or invectiv. It was not without necessity that the severest satirist of the last century should be the most conspicuously crucified one of this. This was doubtless due in some degree to his religious writings, justly to estimate the effect of which would involve an article at least as extended as the present. But it was also largely due to that censorious harshness and unscrupulous exaggeration which are the gist of all genius for invectiv, and which in Paine's case became coarser and less literary as he advanced in life. We cannot deem his political views a philosophy of statesmanship, since, in our view, all revolution indicates a failure of statesmanship, while Mr. Paine's theories make all statesmanship consist in successful revolution. Yet, if a set of opinions could be entitled to a place among political philosophers by reason of millions having come to believe in and praise them, then indeed Paine would stand, more than any other, as the founder of the American school of political philosophy, as he certainly is the founder of the creed of American democracy. Millions who abhor his religious opinions constantly assume with Thomas Paine that, in politics, if the 'outs' can only supersede the 'ins' with sufficient rapidity to prevent the building up of any specialized or skilled class, and if the business of government can be continually remanded from those who hav acquired some slight skill to those who hav none, society will be greatly blessed and the work of government will proceed with real wisdom. It may be that this is true, and, if it is, Mr. Paine will prove to hav been one of the profoundest, as well as most popular, of political thinkers, for his opinions in politics are the standard of American orthodoxy. Had Paine been more comprehensiv in his judgments, had he been able to perceive the advantages pertaining to aristocracy as well as those to be anticipated from democracy, the extent to which good government results from skill as well as the extent to which ignorance promotes honesty, he would hav been less applauded, but more just and more instructiv. As it resulted, his life was brilliant but unsuccessful; his character was full of virtues, and yet not attractiv, and his political teachings hav been at once the most famous and most fallacious of their time. The fallacy that all men are equal is a continual incitement to revolution, since it is only during periods of anarchy, when each man is powerless, that it is true. As order returns and powers become unequally distributed, the equality of men disappears, since, in the exercise of all actual power,

"'Order is heaven's first law, and this confessed,
Some are, and must be, greater than the rest.'

"So Paine's doctrin, that the hereditary transmission of power is robbery, applies as logically to the hereditary transmission of property as of power, thus merging democracy into socialism. Paine, therefore, is the apostle of chronic revolution. The opposit of revolution is statesmanship, but before this can prevail a philosophy of statesmanship must supersede in the popular mind that gospel of revolution which Paine did so much to implant."

I hav said that I dissent from this verdict, and I appeal from the critic to the better instructed common sense of the world. It is conceded that Mr. Denslow is very able. It is conceded that he represents a powerful current of philosophical and political sentiment, which is of late setting in and making itself felt in the world, and especially on this western continent, where it is new and inversely revolutionary, that is to say, subversiv of well established American ideas. It is conceded that this new doctrin of order and the influence of antiquity as represented by these men, claims to be scientific and critical, claims, in a word, to be the science of sociology, and that to a certain eminent extent it is scientific and critical and sociological; but it has a suspicious origin and an ominous outlook. It is an importation into America from Europe, from France especially, and more especially in truth from the Catholic church and its dogmas, which are the fundamental and radical antithesis, an opposit pole to Protestantism and the radical American idea. Mr. Denslow writes throughout from the Comtist or Positivistic point of view. It is not meant by what I hav said that Auguste Comte was and remained literally a Roman Catholic, but he was bred in that atmosphere, leaned to those views, and confirmed, by his powerful philosophical reasoning, his natural and educational proclivities. Nor is it meant to be said that the American doctrin does not need to be supplemented by and reconciled with the opposit doctrin; but it must never be surrendered, forgotten, or abandoned. The higher socialistic philosophy must be that which shall save both, but it is the special function of Mr. Denslow to giv emphasis to the old, which for us in America is the new doctrin, and it is my especial function to see to it that due emphasis, that a renewed and more powerful emphasis, even, shall be constantly thrown upon the other side, and that individuality shall be universally known and confessed to be the fundamental doctrin of all social science really worthy of the name. Any system of so-called social science, with this fundamental element left aside, is social science with the bottom dropped out. It is a fabric with no foundation—a house built upon the sand.

Mr. Denslow's book is entitled "Modern Thinkers, Principally upon Social Science: What They Think and Why." He has selected and treated in succession under this head some eight great representativ men. They are Emanuel Swedenborg, Adam Smith, Jeremy Bentham, Thomas Paine, Charles Fourier, Herbert Spencer, Ernst Haeckel, and Auguste Comte. Comte is made to culminate all the rest, and his heavy, dull, monkish face is placed at the beginning as frontispiece of the work. To show that I am not doing injustice either to Mr. Denslow or to M. Comte, I quote from the latter the following handful of characteristic expressions: "Equality is a degrading lie." "Popular sovereignty is a mob of the living against the dead; it is pushing the west of Europe into the way of making the most backward-tending and brutal influences prevail, from which we can only escape by replacing ourselvs honorably under the yoke of the past." "The principal force of woman consists in [should be devoted to] overcoming the difficulty of obedience." "Nobody has any rights but the right to do his duty." Such is the feast of ideas for which the American stomach is suddenly requested to make up its appetite. Such is precisely the body of doctrin against which Thomas Paine, and in a great sense the whole modern world, and pre-eminently the American world, nauseated and revolted. Just the opposit of all these constitute another and opposit body of doctrin for which there is no one term so adequate as the single word Americanism, and Thomas Paine is the one single name of all the world which most distinctivly represents it.

From VanBuren Denslow as the exponent of Auguste Comte we ought not to expect, and we hav not received, any very sympathetic appreciation for the head saint of this American gospel of universal human emancipation. Still Mr. Denslow is among the good men and the great men of the day. He has intended to giv a fair and honest estimate of Paine, and he has actually said of him many great and good things—everything, indeed, just short of the true understanding of his thought, character, mission, and purpose in the world. His attack on Paine is not an attack on Paine. It is an attack on the fundamental principle of the greatest discovery ever made in social science itself. His failure to appreciate Paine is not a failure to appreciate him as a man, but a failure to appreciate Protestantism and Americanism, the two greatest factors in the modern progress of the world. Comte hated Protestantism, ignored Americanism, and understood neither, and his American promulgators seem bent on rivaling their master in those sublime achievements of scientific prejudice and ignorance. Denslow is wholly right in tracing the social genesis of Garrison and Phillips back to Paine; and the doctrin in which political freedom, the hatred of slavery, Protestantism, and Americanism all convegre, and in which they find their common solvent, is Individualism. The common blunder of all the opponents of all those phases of doctrin is their utter failure to understand this ultimate doctrin as the fundamental doctrin of social science. In this failure to appreciate this great German, English, and American discovery in socialism and social development as counterparting the imperialism and papalism of the Latin races Mr. Denslow seemingly participates.

How comes this failure to happen? Let us investigate this question a little closely. As a first statement it happens because it is so easy to make mistakes. A little error at the foundation, a little lack of fundamental discrimination, carries one all wrong in the end. In the twilight of origins things seem so much alike which are in fact so very different. These Positivistic thinkers make their first deviation from the right track in the understanding of this subject when they suppose the doctrin of Independent Rights to be only good for revolutionary crises, and fail to apprehend it as one of the two fundamental, inexpugnable, ever-present and powerfully efficient factors of every truly-ordered social condition, peaceful or bellicose. It is true that as contrasted with unity, Individualism is the phase of doctrin to which outraged humanity must appeal to justify revolution when revolution must come. But it is just as true—and this is the all-important point that is overlooked—that the very condition of inaugurating and preserving peace and harmony is the preliminary concession of all the just claims of all individuals. Liberty, in other words, is the basis of all true order, or still otherwise expressed, order is the legitimate son and not the mother of freedom. It would be absurd to suppose that Garrison's antislavery doctrin is only fit and good to upset a tremendous organization of instituted slavery, and that it has no part to play in guarding the world against tyranny and the stealthy encroachments of the inverse tendency in all the stages and manifestations of social life in every age and realm. The great cry of the human soul is for freedom, and when that indispensable condition is secured it may in safety bow with as much of veneration as anything has the power to inspire in the free mind. To demand the performance of duties from those from whom we are withholding the concession of rights is to add insult to injury and to provoke revolution under the false pretense of favoring evolution and order.

Was it Washington who says that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty?" It sounds more like Paine, and was most likely picked up from his table-talk. That single statement means that the alert sentiment of Individual Rights is no mere accidental demand of a revolutionary epoch, but that it must be the "leaven which leaveneth the whole lump" of any right government or social arrangement, no matter how peaceful the times or how seemingly secure the conditions.

Again, Paine uttered and was the first to utter the immortal aphorism that "all just government derives its powers from the consent of the governed." As reply and counter-statement to this profound truth Denslow cites the historical fact that all past and present governments hav arisen out of selfishness, and the power of military leaders—as if that were any answer to the other and grander statement. That simply amounts to the confession, from Paine's point of view, that the world has not yet evoluted into the comprehension and the institution of a just government. His aphorism is an indictment of all past and present governments. And the question is, Are they not justly arraigned and accused of being unjust? This derivation of all governmental authority from the people is not then some new and recent political invention, as Mr. Denslow would hav us believe, but the discovery and announcement of an eternal verity which has been struggling forward from the beginning of all time—as true in the beginning, in the essential nature of things, as when it found utterance through the mouth of Paine. And it is so true now, and so destined to remain forever true, that no superficial criticism can ever obliterate or tarnish it. Americanism is the new gospel, and not arbitrary authority; and order and authority must hereafter find the means of adjusting themselvs to this new fact without overthrowing it. The doctrin of social compact, so easily whistled down the wind by the critic, is essentially and eternally true. It does not mean the childish idea that all mankind hav met upon some given occasion, upon some great plain, and overtly agreed upon a mode of life. It means, on the contrary, that the very facts of social life, its possibilities and its demands, involve an implied social contract, by which all men agree in their deepest natures, or taken at their best, to respect the rights and well-being of all other men. Half the contracts enforced in the law-courts are implied contracts, or such as necessarily arise out of the nature of the case, which need no written documents, no sealing wax, and no verbally expressed consent.

Mr. Denslow has arrayed a list of American names of those whom he calls statesmen, and whom he parades before us as his ideals of great men as contrasted with Paine, whose life, he informs us, was a failure. When Lincoln was told as against Grant that Grant was drunk on occasions, Lincoln said, "Tell me what brand of Bourbon Grant gets drunk on, and I will get some of it for my other generals." If any life ever failed to be a failure, it was Paine's. The man who has revealed a new gospel of truth can bide his time for appreciation. If Denslow's list of eminent respectabilities were all rolled into one big man, his existence would be forgotten, while the name and fame of Thomas Paine as a social discoverer and prophet will be growing brighter and brighter on the escutcheon of human destiny. Rightly has Denslow said that the lineal descent of Paine in the evolution of Americanism is through Garrison and Phillips, who struck down American slavery.

The next point at which Denslow, in common with the new school of mistaken critics assailing Americanism, makes his attack, is the statement in the American Declaration of Independence, which he now attributes, and I think rightly, to Paine, that all men are born free and equal. This for him is a glittering generality, a flower of rhetoric, a piece of absurd rodomontade. For me, and those that think with me, it is the very bed-rock of political wisdom. Of course it is perfectly easy to see and to say that no two men and no two things are ever equal. This is indeed the very doctrin of individuality; but it is alike true, on the other hand, that there are fundamental unities and equations pervading everything, that there is a sense—an all-important sense—in which all men are equal, as well as a sense in which they are unequal. The subject is too great to be fairly stated, and far more so to be fairly argued, here and now; but I will affirm dogmatically that equality will always be as true as inequality, and any student of philosophy who would ignore it would blot out the even numbers from arithmetic and banish all parallel lines from the universe. If it is a lie to affirm equality, it is also a lie to affirm inequality. All men are equal in the fact of their common humanity; they are equal in the presence of death, destitution, and suffering; they are equal in their right to be treated rightly; they should be equal, and under the American Constitution they are equal before the law; and it will take more than the reactionary influence of any imported new-fangled European philosophical ideas to rend the seal off that bond. The man who does not see and feel the common unity with his fellow, upon the same level, as a basis of their common humanity, is unfit to govern, and unfit to hav an opinion upon the question of the true social order. The truth is a superficial inequality upon a ground of radical equality; and above that level it is not the strong who should claim exemption and privileges, but the weak. True chivalry is closely allied with genuin democracy.

But, in conclusion, it must be conceded that the critic has got in a strong point on the reformer Paine. He affirms that the author of the Declaration of Independence—in other words, Thomas Paine—charged upon George III. acts which he never performed and atrocities of which he never was guilty. On this arraignment it must be confessed that he has on the face of things made out an astonishingly strong case; in a word, he says, in plain terms, he lies out-and-out; and the whole thing now, as exhibited to our inspection, looks like it. What, then, should he said before this honorable court by the advocate in behalf of his culprit client so caught in the very act?

First, permit me to call your attention to the fact that those words were written, and those charges made against the British king, in the white-heat of a tremendous political crisis, when men ordinarily think less of telling the truth than of injuring the enemy. Consider, in the next place, that the batch of enormous denunciations had in it somehow so much seeming of truth that it carried with it the convictions of a whole people, and that it has taken one hundred years for anybody to wake up to the fact that the whole thing was a mere string of vituperation. Mr. Denslow's plain common sense in the matter now brings us to our senses, and we must face the issue of fact. All that I hav said so far explains but it does not excuse the false accusation, if, indeed, it were as it seems wholly false. But let us look more deeply into the possible and, I believe, the real meaning of this eloquent and terrific denunciation. Paine was a seer and a prophet. There are some men endowed with a profound insight into the ideal spirit of things, and who, in the burning intensity of their nature, conceive and treat the spirit as if it were the overt manifestation. As somebody has said, "You lie, if you think so;" and this style of deep seers would not hesitate to charge upon another a falsehood which he never uttered, or never even conceived the intention of uttering. And yet the seer would be right, and the other man false in denying. It is in this sense that Jesus said, "Whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath committed adultery in his heart;" and also at the judgment to the poor wretches who had never dreamed of having done anything like it, "Inasmuch as ye hav done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye hav done it unto me." The Dutchman having whipped his boy for some offense, the boy sulked and looked dissatisfied. The Dutchman said: "Hans, what did you say?" The boy said: "I didn't say nothing." "Well," said the father, "what do you think?". "I don't think nothing," said the boy. "Yes you do," said the old man; "you think damn! Come up and let me whip you again for that." The old Dutchman had spiritual insight; he struck at the true inwardness of things, and he treated it as if it were the overt act,

For Thomas Paine, George III. was not George III. at all as the man. He was the culminating point or the central embodiment of the spirit of that age and all its institutions. It was that type of social life; it was society itself as it existed around him; it was the world full of people in their organized injustice, manifested everywhere, but most especially in their treatment of the negro, which Paine was objurgating with his sublime and caustic eloquence. It mattered not to him what the particular fact might be. He knew what they would do, what they were doing every hour, without knowing it, intending it, or thinking it. He charged as the overt act what he knew was in their spirit, and he charged on the British king what he knew was in the whole people. It was the arraignment of one generation before the tribunal of a later and a wiser generation, and with a higher standard of right. Paine was, therefore, as every such man and every such woman is, a veritable "section of the day of judgment." The very lies of those sublime and inspired natures are the supremest truths, though it may need another seer to interpret them. Paradoxes and seeming falsehood of great and inspired natures are a thousand times more true to the inmost truth of things than the common-place platitudes of so-called statesmanship and current propriety.

Mr. S. P. Putnam was then introduced and said:

I shall only endeavor to present from one point of view this marvelous hero of the American Revolution. I think the words which hav been spoken by the Rev. Heber Newton, and those written and spoken by the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher and others, help us of to-day to understand the grandeur of the work of Thomas Paine. I do not think that we Liberals of to-day altogether appreciate the noble spirit by which he was animated. Not only was Thomas Paine a great political reformer, but he was also a great religious reformer, and I affirm that in writing the "Age of Reason" he was performing a profoundly religious work, he was joining all those great prophets of the race who hav labored for religious emancipation. It is popularly supposed that Paine was only an Infidel who wished to abolish the Bible in order that unbelief might prevail; but he was animated by no such motiv. He believed in religion, for he has himself declared, "The world is my country; to do good, my religion." He believed in religion as a natural sentiment of humanity, and he was as religious a man as any of the Newtons and Beechers who to-day occupy his intellectual position. Religion as a sentiment is universal in humanity, it does not depend on theology and does not hav its source in any conception whatsoever of an infinit being; it is an affair of humanity only; it is that profound sentiment which dwells in every human being, by which he recognizes that he is something more than an individual, that he does not stand alone in this universe, but is bound together with millions of others like himself; that there is an identity between the life that beats within his bosom and the life that beats within the bosom of universal humanity throughout the world, through all the ages of the past and all the ages which are to come. It is that which givs us our feeling of the infinit. Paine had within him this religious sentiment in a large degree, and in this sense he was a most profoundly religious man. Why, then, did he write the "Age of Reason?" Simply to overthrow the Bible? Not at all, but because he felt that this religious sentiment of mankind must be preserved by changing its basis of belief; he felt that this religious sentiment could no longer rely upon faith, and that the minds of men must be enlightened in order to still preserve it. Therefore I say that no man, in all the history of the world, not Buddha, not Christ, accomplished more for the religious development of mankind than did Thomas Paine. Paine was convinced that there is no possible way by which the vast wealth of the world's sentiment, affection, and hope can be preserved except by unloosing it from the theologies and bibles and churches of the past, and bringing it, as Mr. Wakeman wisely says, into harmony with the new solution of the universe, with the new thoughts and new insights which we hav.

It is our work, as Liberals, not simply to overthrow and prove false the intellectual and theological systems of the past or the present, but to take up this religious sentiment of humanity and preserve it in and through all that science may giv us. When we adopt this scientific method we do not by any means reject this past glory of the human race, its sacrifices, its hopes, its beauty and art; these influences we as Liberals wish to preserve; but we know that they cannot be longer preserved by the ancient beliefs, and that if we are to hav in the future a larger hope and a grander illumination it must come in and through the scientific method. Paine began this work and gave it its great impulse; it was necessary that somebody should do it and suffer for it. The history of the race, as Reade says, is the martyrdom of man. Every one who believes in human progress must be ready to surrender himself in order that others may advance. No man was ever actuated by a more overwhelming sense of duty than was Thomas Paine. He knew that in attacking the prevailing ideas he was staking his life and his reputation; he knew that he must meet the tiger against which Franklin warned him; that his fame would be torn in pieces by priestly sycophants, but he did not shrink from the task before him; he went into it with a martyr's spirit, ready to sacrifice his life, and everything that was dear to him, in order that he might strike a blow for human liberty. He was the Prometheus of the American Revolution. He has suffered greatly: few men in history hav suffered so much as Thomas Paine. What obloquy has been heaped upon his name for years and years! But he shall receive his ample reward. His is one of the few names that are not born to die; many of those who are illustrious to-day will be forgotten, but among the names in human history which will be preserved from age to age, will be the name of Thomas Paine. He never can be forgotten; but as the years and the centuries roll by, more and more will the sun of his glory shine out; and we can say of him, as the great poet Shelley sung of the great poet Keats:

"This soul, like a star,
Beacons from the abode where the eternal are."

Mr. T. B. Wakeman being introduced, said that when a boy he met an old Quaker gentleman, in an upper room in the city of New York, who had there some of the original editions of Paine's works, in which he became interested, and that upon his inquiring about their author, the old gentleman said to the boy (Mr. Wakeman) that he personally knew Thomas Paine well, knew others who had known him well, and that Thomas Paine was an earnest, good man who had more true religion in his little finger than his detractors had in their whole bodies. Mr. Wakeman also related an incident in his family of his little daughter reading to him from a school history a paragraph regarding the services of Paine in the Revolutionary war and closing with these words: "The unhonored name of Thomas Paine, the Infidel."

Mr. Wakeman, with much feeling, continued:

I said I would at once begin to reverse that verdict within my own house and with my own child; and I asked her to read such sentences as these from the works of this man:

"I believe in the equality of man, and I believe that religious duties consist in doing justice, loving mercy, and endeavoring to make our fellow-creatures happy."

"Any system of religion that shocks the mind of a child cannot be a true system."

"The word of God is the creation which we behold."

"It is with a pious fraud as with a bad action—it begets a calamitous necessity of going on."

"To read the Bible without horror, we must undo everything that is tender, sympathizing, and benevolent in the heart of man."

"That man does not exist who can say I hav persecuted him, or that I hav in any case returned evil for evil."

"The belief in a cruel god makes a cruel man."

"My own opinion is that those whose lives hav been spent in doing good and endeavoring to make their fellow-mortals happy, will be happy hereafter."

"The intellectual part of religion is a private affair between every man and his maker, and in which no third party has any right to interfere. The practical part consists in our doing good to each other."

"One good school-master is of more use than a hundred priests."

"Let us propagate morality unfettered by superstition."

"I believe in one God, and no more, and I hope for happiness beyond this life."

"The key of heaven is not in the keeping of any sect nor ought the road to it to be obstructed by any."

"I hav yet, I believe, some years in store, for I hav a good state of health and a happy mind. I take care of both, by nourishing the first with temperance and the latter with abundance."

No man of that generation has left works from which a richer anthology may be collected; no man deserves the immortal wreath of honor and respect more than the man who has uttered such words. What I began in my own household —the reversal of this verdict of such history upon the life of this man—it is our duty to do before the whole world. We must lift up Thomas Paine as one of the saviors not only of his generation but of American liberty and of republicanism at large, if they ever are to be saved. The words spoken by Mr. Andrews here to-night are the best estimate of the value of his political character and services I hav ever heard; and the words spoken in regard to his individual sincerity and devotion to great human aims by Mr. Post are the best estimate of his characteristics that I hav ever heard. I hope they will be recorded for the benefit of those who may be willing hereafter to do justice to this great man.

There is one thing wanted, and that is a pedestal on which this character should stand. That must be found by taking a view of the times in which he lived—by contrasting him with his age and with those by whom he was surrounded. It was an ingenious idea of old Plutarch to write the lives of men in parallels; by contrasting them he put in a better light the great qualities and services of his heroes. The character of Paine has suffered from the fact that we hav always considered him alone, and not in contrast with the men of his own country. To weigh him rightly you must place him in the line of the great men who were the spiritual leaders of his age, those who embodied the great impulses from which mankind hav been moving since. In England, when he came upon the stage, there were three great leaders of mankind—the souls of their century. The first, the eldest, the one that represented the static thought of his day most solidly, was Dr. Samuel Johnson, the immortal lexicographer, the immortal Tory, the last and purest of the men who fought for the king, the aristocracy, and the limited Commons of England.

Consorted with Johnson was a younger and, in many respects, a more brilliant and subtle man, Edmund Burke. He represented not the old Tories but the younger; came from the Whigs, and he represented the terror and sentimentalism which turned Whigism into Toryism before the excesses of the French Revolution. The culminating point of Johnson's theory of life and politics was when he wrote "Taxation no Tyranny." The culminating point of Burke's career was when he delivered his beautiful apostrophe to Maria Antoinette, the butterfly Queen of France: "I thought ten thousand swords would leap from their scabbards to avenge a look that threatened her with insult." Those two men hav gone; not only they, but their influence, too, is now of the past. The political institutions and policy they defended are plainly seen to be decayed and disappearing.

But with them, born in the humblest station, appeared a young Quaker, Thomas Paine, who, in his spirit and capacity, became the mouthpiece of the common people, and of the institutions, policy, and thought that are the life of our day and which claim the future as their own, obscure it as your shallow historians and philosphers may. He was of the people; brought up and educated with the people; he learned their mechanical arts, dressed in their ways, and became a part of their life; and when the old regime could no longer be sustained by Johnson and Burke, that young, enthusiastic devotee, advocate of the "Rights of Man," came to the surface; he spoke for the masses, he represented the dawn of their hopes, and prophesied their future. Whether he was really that great and remarkable meteor of his age, Junius, I am not able to determin, but certainly he did appear as a remarkable writer in English politics, and received recognition as such by an introduction to Franklin, Rush, and our American leaders when he reached our shores. He threw his whole heart and soul into the service of this country. He organized liberty for us. His "Common Sense" and "Crisis" made liberty and independence possible for us. You hav heard his record in America too often for me to repeat. After the successful termination of our revolution, which was largely due to his untiring energy and splendid talents as a writer and diplomatist, Paine had no further mission as the knight errant of liberty here, and he went to Europe to repeat there, if he could, the revolutionary services he had rendered to us. He began in England by publishing, in answer to Burke, his immortal work, "The Rights of Man." Every one of his works is a victory in the title alone; his "Common Sense," "Crisis," "Rights of Man," and "Age of Reason," every one of them, marks a step upward in human progress; they lifted in succession the whole mass of English-speaking people up to see a new light of life.

In England he devoted himself with utmost devotion to this work. He did not succeed in making a revolution there then, but he planted the seeds of evolution, which are still working out among the common people the great problem in a more quiet way, and therefore with more sure and glorious results.

Paine next went to France, was received with the greatest honor, was placed in the Assembly, and appointed on the committee to draft their constitution. He was one of the leading men of the world in politics and thought, and was so recognized everywhere. You know how he escaped by a special providence in that reign of terror, how he was thrown into prison and escaped death by the mere accident of a chalk-mark being placed on the inside of his door, as it stood open, instead of the outside, while some poor wretch suffered in his place. But in those hours, which would hav conquered the souls of most men, he was thinking only of one thing—that all the tyranny of the world was based upon the tyranny of a cruel God in heaven, and his supposed book or Bible—and he determined, as the last effort of his life, to strike tyranny there—that he would speak his last word for the emancipation of the spiritual nature of men, as he had already spoken for their political and social emancipation. He wrote in his prison, without book, Bible, or commentary, the first part of his "Age of Reason." Never was a work composed under more heroic circumstances, or with a higher motiv; never was a more devoted soul brought to bear upon the great questions of his age. You know the results of it—the tyranny of the whole world became his enemy. The reign of terror ended; he was set free, but his health was broken. It was thought by the patriots in America and in Europe that he ought to hav a refuge in the former country. He had reached the age when further activ service in the field was not to be hoped or expected. He was brought back to our country in a vessel specially commissioned for that purpose by Thomas Jefferson, to the latter's immortal honor. As he approached these shores, where his "Age of Reason" had preceded him, the clouds of calumny and detraction began to gather. In his journey from Washington to New York the Federalists, Tories, and priests could hardly be kept from violence against him. But we must remember that all this obloquy with which he was assailed was the direct result of the bitter political and religious animosities of that day. They were no more merited or worthy of our consideration than the vituperation which arises from such hot-beds of corruption and slander in our day. But his enemies had the press and the pen, and it was that which broke down the fame of Thomas Paine in the American mind, and obscured the brilliancy of his splendid services in the cause of American and human liberty.

Thomas Paine was the sincerest of men. The beauty of all his writings is that they are devoted to general objects and purposes. Their motiv is the betterment of mankind as a whole. He spoke not for his own benefit nor for his own age. And they are remarkably religious in the highest and truest sense; that motiv makes them religious. In estimating his character it should be the first thing to be recorded, that he was always affirmativ and positiv. That is accounted for when we remember that in the origin, tone, and temper of the man, and in the purposes of his life, he was built upon the Quaker character and sincerity. He was never an antagonistic man. He would dethrone kings, but never execute them. He was hardly even a revolutionary man. The conception that prevails of Thomas Paine in that regard is a total misapprehension. He should be looked upon at bottom as a Quaker of the Hicksite school. They are constructiv, and possess the loveliest forms of practical and social life to be found in the world. That phase of Quakerism represented Thomas Paine better than any other phase of belief. But he was a Quaker enlarged to the size of mankind. And in that enlargement he is one of the most unselfish, sincere, and glorious characters in human history. He lived for humanity, and served without thought of reward. When he made five thousand dollars by his "Rights of Man," he gave it all away immediately for patriotic purposes. When he had a salary during the American revolution he gave it away for the benefit of the army. He went to France, and begged for the army, and got clothing and money for them, and enabled Washington to stand before the British army at Yorktown. Such utter disregard of self, and his utter neglect to do anything to protect his name and fame hav worked to his detriment. But it is all the more a shame to the American people that this neglect has not worked to his advantage. If he had had ordinary self-love he would hav spent the last seven years of his life in this country in writing his autobiography. And what an autobiography that would hav been! He had become acquainted with the great men of his age, from Washington to Bonaparte. He was for a time a friend of Bonaparte. How much better for him and the world if he had taken the advice of this Quaker Liberal! What chapters Paine could hav given in Revolutionary history! But Paine was too great to attempt a biography, too disinterested, and too careless; his work had been done. Three great nations of the world had received the impulses of liberty because of the strength of his soul, of his pure heart, and his powerful pen, which, as he says, he dipped in his own blood as he wrote.

He died in neglect shameful to his contemporaries. His last efforts were not to vindicate himself, but to obtain his political rights. The Federalists had determined that he should not vote, claiming that he was a foreigner and an alien. Think of the malignity of the wretches! Trying to prevent from voting at an election the man who had done so much to establish the freedom and the right to vote which they enjoyed! He took a great deal of trouble to establish his rights in this matter, and his last letters were to the officials at Washington for the purpose of procuring evidence that he was enrolled in the American army, and therefore had been naturalized by law. Of course the proof was plain enough. But the meanness that would compel such a man, with such a history in service of the country and of mankind being compelled to appeal to public officials in order to obtain the ordinary rights of a citizen reverses the motiv which gave him the character they wished.

What I did in my own family in regard to this man's fame must be done before the world. We must reverse this judgment and lift this man up for the healing of the people and nations. Why? As Mr. Andrews has very properly said, the constructiv elements in the social progress of the present age are coming to us from Roman Catholic influences, and largely through the influence, I fear, of Auguste Comte. The English and American Liberals hav to reverse the later works of that man in sociology or practically to giv up Republicanism.

The reason why Liberals and Comtists cannot consort together is this: I am an American, a Republican, and a patriot, while every Comtist, every one who belongs to the schools of papacy or Cæsarism, is a traitor in theory and at heart. I believe that the American Constitution contains more political wisdom than the speculations of any philosophers whatsoever, whether Comte or Carlyle or even Carl Maix, or any one who has ever lived. True constructiv Liberalism is founded upon confidence in the people and in human nature. It is Republican and Democratic to the backbone. We hav really to go back and take the lessons of the past as a foundation, but not from them will come our model for the future. The truth is that Thomas Paine and Thomas Jefferson, who was intellectually his counterpart, were positing what was not true in their day, that mankind were created free and equal, possessed of certain inalienable rights, and that governments obtained their just powers from the consent of the governed. In this they declared to be true and self-evident what was a most transparent falsehood in the world, what never had been true, was not true then, is not true yet; but there was and is the hope that in the future it will be true, and in the building up of humanity in strength and power and glory, as the real god of this world, consists the condition for realization of those words which were a prophecy. They were not true, but we must liv to make them true.

Johnson was a real, solid, sincere, and substantial hero, first-hand soul of his kind, and it was a kind not very safe to meet in a rough, hand-to-hand fight of brain or muscle. People hav thrown a great deal of obloquy upon him for receiving a pension, but he did more to merit that pension than all the bishops and archbishops of England. He saved the English church and polity by the vigor of his brain and the greatness of his heart. I love that old hero as I love a hearty, first-hand soul, whether I meet him as friend or foe.

We must deepen the philosophy Paine professed by all there is of science and history. Then from it will come a spirit which will realize his hopes and glorify him in the realization not only as a revolutionist, but as a prophet. When that state of mind comes to prevail, when the republic of the world, the federation of mankind, comes to view, then will be the time when Thomas Paine will be raised aloft, vindicated, observed of all men, not simply as a revolutionist and a philosopher, but as a savior and a prophet. Time shall realize it, that glorious federal republic of the world of which he dreamed, when mankind, emancipated, educated, purified, shall take charge of this planet as its home and heaven.

What he wrote for America and Europe we must read for the world. Such thoughts at once redeem this man's character—if it needs any redemption—make his impulses and his high prophecies understood; but to that end, we must meet one day on his farm at New Rochelle, we must put that monument to his memory on the hill where it will speak to the world, where it can be seen by all men as the fleets of the great city pass up and down the sound; we must go to England and collect the remains, scattered however they may be, and bring them back and place them under that monument, and the world for whom he sacrificed himself shall honor him. Then no little compiler of a school history shall dare to put into an American book such words as "the unhonored name of Thomas Paine," for the name shall be honored as long as republics liv. As President Monroe said, "O that my country never shall be stained by the crime of ingratitude!" It has been stained, and we must wash off that stain. We must make the American people ashamed of the disgraceful treatment to which the memory of Thomas Paine has been subjected in the country and among the people he saved. It is part of our sacred duty as patriots, as republicans, and as Americans. The world must know that republics are not ungrateful, that the soul of Thomas Paine has begotten children who dare to defend his name, and who are capable of perpetuating the liberty for which he lived and died, until the whole race shall rejoice in its benefits and victory.

Mr. Wakeman was followed by the venerable and enthusiastic Capt. George Loyd, of New Rochelle, N. Y., in a short speech, after which the chairman announced the adjournment of the meeting, which had been one of the most successful ever held in this city.

THE DAY IN PITTSBURG.

From the Dispatch.

The anniversary of the birth of Thomas Paine was observed with appropriate exercises yesterday, afternoon and evening, by the Liberal League, in Lafayette Hall. The decorations were tastefully arranged, and were confined to the stage and its vicinity. At the front of the stage stood a row of potted plants; in the rear the American flag was draped against the wall; and above, ropes of evergreen hung in graceful festoons. At the center of the arch above the stage in the midst of the green was the motto, "Paine, the Man Who Would Go Where the Cause of Liberty Called Him." At the right of the arch was the legend, "The World is My Country; to do Good My Religion." At the left, "Thomas Paine, the Author and Hero of the Revolution."

The most conspicuous feature in the hall, perhaps, was a large easel at the front of the stage, upon which rested three portraits. The one in the center was the likeness of Gambetta, and its frame was heavily draped in mourning. The one at the top was Franklin; the one below the author of "The Age of Reason." Portraits of Paine, Washington, Shakspere, Burns, Darwin, Colonel Bob Ingersoll, Herbert Spencer, Garfield, and Lincoln adorned the walls and galleries. The audience was comparativly light, but included several ladies and gentlemen from abroad. The exercises were opened at 2:45 o'clock with a cornet solo, "Scenes that are Brightest," by Mr. Louis F. Falck. This was followed with a song entitled, "Sweet Days Gone By," by Professor Peck, of Chicago. Mrs. H. S. Lake was then introduced, and recited Professor Felix Adler's poem, "The City of Life," prefacing her recitation with a commendatory tribute to the author for his outspoken advocacy of Freethought.

The audience was then addressed by the Hon. A. B. Bradford, of Enon Valley, upon "The Mission of the Liberal League." The speaker at the outset called attention to the recent sermons of the Rev. Heber Newton, of New York, upon "The Wrong and the Right Uses of The Bible." The radicals, or "Infidels," as we are sometimes called, he said, are not farther away from the thirty-nine articles than Dr. Newton is. The reverend doctor places the Bible in the same plane as other books—to be read and judged by the human conscience upon its merits. This is all the radicals claim; it is the position that was taken by Thomas Paine when he wrote "The Age of Reason." Bishop Potter and the other clergymen, whatever they may say officially, secretly know that Dr. Newton is right and occupies unassailable ground. The speaker criticised and ridiculed the critics of Rev. Dr. Newton, closing his review of this matter with the remark that he did not see any further weapons for Dr. Newton's enemies to employ than they had used against him, unless they could get Anthony Comstock to trump up a charge against him for circulating obscene literature through the mails.

In continuing, he said that it was a shame and an outrage that the the word of an honest skeptic should not be taken in a court of justice. The fault, he said, was not with the Constitution of the United States, but with the laws of the different states. The Constitution of the United States did not embody the principle of God in the government, and a treaty entered into with Tripoli in the early days of the republic expressly declared that the United States was not founded on the Christian religion. If the radicals were to accomplish anything in this controversy upon "God in the Constitution," they should organize. The strength of the church lay in its organization, and it would long ago hav been swept away by the forces of science and philosophy had it not been an organized, corporate, and fortified body. So reasonable were the demands of Liberalism, that if the advocates of them, numbering 200,000, should organize and register their names as voters they might expect that the Baptist sect would vote with them—that is to say, if the Baptists had not repudiated the principles of their great apostle Roger Williams, who was the first minister who taught that the true relation between church and state was one of complete and eternal separation.

The speaker said that the radicals had no reason for finding fault with Governor Butler for not condemning, in his message, the unjust practice of exempting church property from taxation. They were themselvs to blame for not making themselvs so felt as to compel the government of Massachusetts to call attention to this matter. Butler was not at fault. He was a politician, and a politician, like a vane upon a steeple, must go as the wind blows. It was a mistaken idea, the speaker said, to suppose that the radicals did not value moral character, for they did value morality above all price. They only had two things to ask of those seeking membership to the League—first, that they shall contend for the national Constitution as the fathers of government made it and left it, a purely secular instrument; and secondly, that they shall assist in the hard and thankless task of delivering the minds of people everywhere from the degrading bondage of superstition. The speaker predicted "a good time coming," when press and people will be in accord and sympathy with the radicals, and closed with allusions to the case of Bennett and a word of commendation for Col. Ingersoll. The speaker was frequently interrupted with applause.

The address was followed with enlivening selections by Staley's band, a trombone solo by Mr. J. Thomas, a zithern solo by Mr. E. Eyth, and a recitation of the "Midianite Maiden," by Mr. G. Dovey.

Brief informal addresses, extolling Thomas Paine and the principles which he advocated, were made by Mr. Thomas Grundy, Mr. Shattuck, of Beaver Falls, Dr. Nye, and other gentlemen in the audience.

Additional music and the recitation of "Peter Maguire; or, Nature and Grace," by Mrs. Lake, brought the exercises of the afternoon to a close.

EVENING SESSION AND BANQUET.

The evening session of the anniversary, which in addition to a literary program embraced a banquet, attracted a large audience. After a lively selection by the band, the ex-Rev. J. H. Burnham came forward and delivered a striking address. There was a vast difference, he said, in the character and the results of a comparison of men. In the study of gods we were limited by our own imagination. We could not get beyond our highest thoughts. The result was that the gods could never be revealed. They stood afar off, and remained always the same. But in the comparison of man with man we had something within our grasp, and our thought was progressiv. In this comparison we would be led to recognize and apply the principles of evolution, and in that application we would come to see that man to-day is not the being of yesterday. Man had been struggling up through the ages, and evolution was continually carrying him onward.

After these introductory remarks, Mr. Burnham spoke of the position which Thomas Paine had come to occupy in the progress of human thought. Although ecclesiastics had endeavored to bury his memory out of sight beneath mountains of superstition, yet those mountains had rolled away, and the angel of light had bidden Thomas Paine to arise after one hundred years of sleep. This simple fact that Paine had arisen in might after his long sleep had indicated his character and entitled him to the respect of every American citizen, because bad men never arose again after being buried. Even the defenders of the strongholds of ecclesiastical despotism were opening their eyes, and some of them had even dared to speak of Thomas Paine. The opinions of Paine, the speaker claimed, had a value as a political quantity in deciding the revolutionary struggle, and in the formation of the government of this country. The character of the author of "The Age of Reason," he said, would compare favorably with that of the average clergyman of to-day. The only charges ever brought against Thomas Paine were of immoralities that were not looked upon in the light that they are to-day. The reason why he had been hated was because he wrote the "Age of Reason," which none of his enemies had been able to answer. At this day there were not half a dozen books that were read more eagerly in this country than that precious volume. The influence of the writings of Paine had made it possible for Robert Ingersoll in this day to occupy the position which he was occupying. The speaker predicted the coming of a time when Paine would hav his apostles everywhere. His only fear, the speaker said, is that the ecclesiastics would try to canonize him as a saint. They had tried to steal the good names of John Stuart Mill, Emerson, and Darwin and place them in the calendars, and there was reason for this fear that they might take up Paine also.

Having said this much, Mr. Burnham withdrew the American flag, which had veiled a large easel in the rear of the stage, exposing to view a fine, full-length portrait of the man whose birthday was being commemorated in the exercises of the evening. The great apostle of the Liberals was represented as standing upon a scroll bearing the words "Superstitions," "Creeds," "Priestcraft," and pointing upward to the rays of "Truth" and "Liberty." The portrait was heavily framed with black walnut. When it was unveiled the audience applauded loudly, and the band played "The Star-Spangled Banner." When the music had ceased, three cheers were given for Thomas Paine. Mr. Burnham, in appropriate terms, presented the portrait to the Liberal League on behalf of Mr. James E. Emerson, of Beaver Falls, whose gift to the organization it was. Mr. Burnham pronounced the picture a fine one, and quaintly remarked that "the genius of the artist's brain must hav burnt the ends of his fingers."

Mrs. Lake, of California, responded to the speech of presentation. She also gave a spirited sketch of the life of Paine, and eulogized him at some length in glowing terms. He was a man of large heart and of immense influence, she said, and his great work he accomplished "without the help of Jesus or the theologic God." The influence of Paine, she claimed, was like an inspiraiion to the Revolutionary fathers, and was a powerful factor in the determination of the result of that glorious struggle. His humanity, she said, was his chief characteristic, and even this noble trait brought him to a dungeon and nearly to the guillotin. If the accident which saved his neck from the guillotin had occurred in the experience of a Christian, added the speaker, it would hav been attributed to the providence of God; but as it occurred in the life of an Infidel, I suppose we can venture to say it happened by the providence of the devil. The speaker went on at great length, incidentally alluding to the Bible as "a conglomeration of falsehood and foolishness," and denouncing the "ecclesiastical fiends, who pursued Paine to the grave and even beyond," while "the bigoted Bible worshipers" also came in for a share of the lady's vigorous irony. The address was warmly applauded.

The Hon. A. B. Bradford stepped forward at its close and read a telegram received from the Cumberland (Maryland) Liberals, conveying to the Pittsburg Liberals fraternal greeting, and expressing sentiments appropriate for the Paine anniversary. He also read a reply which it was proposed to telegraph to the Cumberland Liberals, and a message of greeting to be sent to the Liberals who were celebrating Paine's birthday at Linesville.

Mr. Emerson, of Beaver Falls, upon invitation came to the stage and addressed the audience, extolling the life and character of the great Liberal of the eighteenth century. He said that he believed that Paine was the first man who indicated the possibility of establishing a free government on this continent. Mr. Bott, the artist who painted the portrait which Mr. Emerson had given to the Liberal League, was also invited to appear before the audience, and did so. He did not hav anything to say, however, and when he had retired the band played a selection, bringing the exercises in the hall to a close.

Nearly the entire audience attended the banquet which followed in the large room below the hall, and every seat at the four long tables spread for the occasion was taken. The menu included a great variety of delicacies. Among the toasts which were proposed and responded to were the following: "Thomas Paine," response by R. M. Sayle, of Franklin; "Woman," James E. Emerson, of Beaver Falls; "The Lords of Creation," Mrs. Lake; "The Liberal League," W. S. Douthett; "Pioneers of Freethought," Hon. A. B. Bradford; "The Press," H. Hoover. The speaking was continued until a late hour, and the birthday of Thomas Paine had ceased to be before his friends had completed their celebration of it.

THE PHILADELPHIA CELEBRATION.

The Freethinkers of Philadelphia held two celebrations of two sessions each on the anniversary of Thomas Paine, Sunday, the 28th inst., at 259 North Broad street, and 814 Girard avenue, with good attendance at both and excellent speaking by Mme. DeLouie, Messrs. Burrow, Riley, Cooper, Seymour, Osgood, Fish, Buckle, Pearsall, and others. We wish to refer particularly to the eloquent address given by Mme. DeLouie, the most able and fluent speaker, next to Robert G. Ingersoll, whom we hav ever listened to. This lady has been before the public as a Liberal worker scarcely two years, but she cuts left and right, with her clear, rich voice and finest of rhetoric, with the strength and power of a veteran. Both meetings claimed her services in honoring the memory of Thomas Paine. Mme. DeLouie referred most eloquently to "the late D. M. Bennett, whose death," this lady said, "was hastened by church persecution, in the form of Comstockism;" adding "that humanity had lost one of its ablest, if not the ablest, worker in the field of Freethought," calling "Mr. D. M. Bennett our Paine of the nineteenth century, whose memory should be as sacred to us as that of the hero whose birth anniversary we had met to celebrate." Regarding the falsehoods told of Thomas Paine, she referred particularly to the publication of Zell's Encyclopedia and Dictionary, Vol. II., page 447, which contains an original fabrication of Thomas Paine.

In reference "to the decline of Protestantism and the advanced thought of its preachers," this lady said "the Liberals had nothing to fear from that source; it was but a matter of time, and the development of evolution, when all the churches would become liberal in religious beliefs. But it was Romanism that was fast gaining in power and strength, and comprised the largest body of religionists in the world. In numerical strength they already aggregated more than twice the number of all the Protestant religions of the civilized world. Taking into consideration that the Catholics are united in purpose, while the Protestants are divided and subdivided, their power and force is more than trebled."

The address was full of sterling merit and should be published. W.

THE DAY IN ERIE.

The First Society of Spiritualists in Erie generally go in for principles and not men. To them the question, What is truth? is much more important than the question, Were Jesus, Paul, or Paine good or bad men? But as last Sunday was so near the anniversary of Paine's birth, and as the ministers hav spent three-quarters of a century in slandering the man who gave them a free country, it was thought best to discourse Sunday night on the life, character, and writings of Thomas Paine.

The hall was crowded, even several members of the Y. M. C. A. attending. All listened with apparent eagerness, and many were heard to say: "Well! my prejudices against Paine hav been entirely removed."

One remarked: "Hereafter I shall think very much more of Paine and his work, and very much less of his traducers, the ministers, and their work."

I think Mackay was right when he said:

"Ever the right comes uppermost,
And ever is justice done."

But sometimes the right is very slow in coming to the top, and tardy justice lags a century or two behind the time when she is most needed.

So far as Paine is concerned, I think within the next thousand years the right will get so near on a level with the wrong that the name of Thomas Paine may be found in some of the histories of the early days of the United States.

Though I took my pen only to note the fact that we had an anniversary discourse on Paine which was richly enjoyed by a large and intelligent audience, I do not feel willing to close this article without saying the Spiritualists are to hav a convention in Erie on the 24th and 25th of February. The object is to "build each other up," and organize for systematic and thorough work in this vicinity. All Liberals are invited to come and work with us. MOSES HULL.

Two Immortals—Bruno and Bennett.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: There is melody in linking the very names of Bruno and Bennett, the first and last noble martyrs of the highest type who hav fallen in the cause of Freethought. On the 16th of February, "A. D." Giordano Bruno was burnt at the stake in Rome, for proclaiming scientific truths; the Christian priests, no doubt, gloated over their infamy. On the 6th of December, A. D. 1883, D. M. Bennett breathed his last in New York, and it is certain that his death was hurried on by the seeds of disease planted in his system during the infamous imprisonment at the Bastile in Albany. The Christian priests we well know gloried in that infamy. Bruno and Bennett hav passed away; the mortal is no more; but the immortal deeds of their heroic lives will never pass away. Their deeds and works are imperishable. The banner of universal mental liberty is blazoned with their names, and future generations will glory in keeping green their memories.

I wish to link the immortal names together in this way. On the 16th of February, the coming month, it will be 283 years since the martyrdom of Bruno. On this date of the year 283 the new Universal Freethought Calendar (founded in memory of the great Italian Freethinker, his works and the works of other heroic men) will be celebrated at least in spirit by thousands of Freethinkers throughout the United States and many in Canada. The manner in which I would link the names of Bruno and Bennett on the coming 16th of February would be by having THE TRUTH SEEKER adopt the New Calendar in its head lines as it is now adopted by Man, The Liberal Age of Milwaukee, and The Universe of San Francisco. That would be a grand and touching tribute to the memory of two as brave and noble men as ever hurled defiance at the church. Link their illustrious names in this simple manner, and thousands will applaud, thousands will adopt the Calendar, who now through mere habit are using the old calendar of "Our Lord," thus perpetuating a superstition that has deluged the world with innocent blood!

We who stood by D. M. Bennett in the hour of peril when the enemy used the most infamous weapons to dishonor him, will eagerly look for THE TRUTH SEEKER flying at its mast-head the imperishable numerals 283. BYRON ADONIS.

San Francisco, Cal., Jan. 24, 282.

Is it Our Bennett?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav just read a message in the Banner of Light of Dec. 16th, purporting to come from D. M. Bennett. I hav been expecting that the spiritists would not let slip the opportunity offered them of claiming our hero, and indeed he himself gave them sufficient reason for so doing by professing a belief in intelligences unseen and apparently of those gone from us. But, without prejudice, I must decide against this article of "Observer" as being from the great and loving mind and heart of him we all mourn. I hav read him continuously ever since the first issue of his paper, and in private letters innumerable, and not a line of this article is like him. I will not take time in criticising it as a whole, but merely mention a few strong points against its being him: "The first 'spirit' I met." He would never hav said that; and "Our beloved sister, Fannie Conant," sounds altogether too Banner-ish for him; and to advise the whole world to maintain "the glorious old Banner of Light" is another lapsus linguæ that belongs to Banner-isms and not Bennett. He would advise us all to maintain his beloved TRUTH SEEKER, and promis to giv us such proofs of continued existence that we should be compelled to believe. He would work on to build up THE TRUTH SEEKER as the one best Spiritual paper in the world, as it is now the best Materialistic one. He would know he could do this, too, as only Bennett himself could. There must be better proof than this article contains ere Elmina accepts it as evidence that her beloved and lamented friend still livs. Not that she would not rejoice with joy unspeakable could it be made clear to her that he is still living and working, and that consequently there is a hope that those who so admired, revered, and idolized him might some day meet him face to face and share with him the joys of sweet companionship—for this would be indeed a hope worth having. But alas! on what foundation can we build it? I see none.

I just now picked up one of the cordial, friendly letters Bennett wrote me, and will giv you a few lines from it treating upon his ideas of a future life: "Yes, Elmina, if there is not a happy future life for you and others to realize the good you hav done in this, and to enjoy for continuous years the satisfaction of doing more good, I shall somehow feel that the economy of the universe is not quite full and perfect in its provisions. I do entertain a hope that in the infinit possibilities of grand and glorious nature there is a possibility and a probability that in the fourth condition of matter Elmina and Bennett, and the countless millions of others who hav lived, and toiled, and struggled on the earth, may hav a prolonged lease of individual existence, in a far less transitory and momentary stage of existence; when, perhaps, in a thoroughly and perfectly organized and fine physical and material condition, we may in the ultimate continue the existence which here is only rudimentary and short. I am fond of regarding that possible future stage as bearing the same relation to this stage of existence that this state bears to the fœtal or prenatal condition. I can hardly yield my consent that this is the last of our individuality; and I fondly think that grand, great, and glorious old father and mother, nature, are able to make it all possible. They hav done so much that is wonderful, beautiful, great, and magnificent, that I am buoyed up with the hope that they will and do also accomplish this best, greatest, and most desirable of all problems—a continued individual existence. But I am borrowing no trouble about it. If we are blown out like a candle, and that is the last of our identity, we shall at least be no worse off than before our candle was lighted, and we will hav no occasion to fret or mourn about it. I hope to meet you in the flesh before we go over the river. Am I not, with all my little annoyances and trials, the most fortunate and happy man that ever lived? I hav so many good friends, and I do so prize and appreciate good friends!"

Now, that is Bennett all over. Warm, earnest, enthusiastic, and true-hearted; appreciativ of the good and the beautiful; trusting in nature, and hoping for more and better things—yet content to accept the inevitable. It is hard indeed to feel we shall nevermore read his fresh, heartfelt, and instructiv utterances, as he tells us each day of his gleanings and experiences.

"Oh, the joy of manly selfhood!
To be servil to none, to defer to none—not to any tyrant known or unknown;
To walk with erect carriage, a step springy and elastic;
To look with calm gaze or with a flashing eye;
To speak with a full and sonorous voice out of a broad chest;
To confront with your personality all the other personalities of the earth"—

This was Bennett-like.

Yours truly, ELMINA.

Jan. 19, 283.

We would say that there hav been other messages printed purporting to come from Mr. Bennett, and quite a number hav been sent us by mediums; but as yet none carry evidence of their genuinness to his intimate friends. One of these had the date of his death—or new birth—wrong, and all had discrepancies which make it impossible that they should emanate from Mr. Bennett. We had thought, and it would appear not unreasonable, that if he still has a conscious identity as D. M. Bennett, he would come back to his personal intimate friends whom he loved and who loved him, rather than to strangers whom he had not known in this life. He can come to New York as easily as to Philadelphia or Boston. But there is as yet no sign, and these communications seem to us only a species of sacrilegious toying with an honored name. Some critical Spiritualists hav taken an even less charitable view of them. Be that as it may, we shall never pen one word in controversy on the subject, and trust that those who do not see things as we do will be as forbearing. Mr. Bennett's belief in a future life, if not fully shared, is sincerely respected, and the wish that it might be true is excessivly strong. We can but watch and wait. Let others be not too hasty to rush into print with fancied wrongs. It is said that even angels fear to tread in certain places.—ED. T. S.

D. M. Bennett.

From the Mountain Sentinel, Union, Oregon.

The death of D. M. Bennett, editor and proprietor of the New York TRUTH SEEKER, which occurred on the 6th ult, at his residence in that city, will be mourned by the lovers of truth and advocates of Freethought everywhere. The nineteenth century has produced but few more remarkable men than Mr. Bennett, and few more determined and devoted to the cause of combating error and upholding right regardless of cost or consequences. Entertaining the broadest views on all scientific subjects, and with a heart that throbbed for the great cause of humanity, his earnestness and powerful mental resources placed him at once in the front; and with his pen and the columns of his TRUTH SEEKER he spread consternation broadcast throughout the land by vanquishing the sophistries of the champions of the church, and putting to route the most valiant advocates of Christianity. Being unable to cope with the searching powers of his logic, the same spirit that pressed to the lips of Socrates the poison hemlock, destroyed the eyes of Galileo, and heaped fagots on the fire that consumed Giordano Bruno and Michael Servetus, determined to smite him with the strong arm of ecclesiastical power. At the instance of Anthony Comstock, scavenger of the Young Men's Christian Association, Mr. Bennett was tried, convicted, and sentenced to serve thirteen months in the Albany penitentiary for selling a little pamphlet, written by E. H. Heywood, on the social relation. Mr. Bennett served out the full term of his sentence; and his unjust, malicious, and heartless persecution has done more to break down the influence of the church than all other causes combined, and to lay the foundation for the truthfulness of Rev. R. R. Meredith's remarks, who recently said before the Boston Congregational Club that "the churches of to-day do not get the best and sharpest young men. They get the goody-good ones easily enough, but those who do the thinking are not brought into the church in great numbers. You can not reach them by the Bible. How many did Moody touch in this city during his revival days? You can count them on your fingers. The man who wants them cannot get them with the Bible under his arm. He must be like them—sharp. They cannot be gathered by sentimentality. If you say to them, 'Come to Jesus,' very likely they will reply, 'Go to thunder.'"

Fraudulent Hayes, at the solicitation of prominent ministers, ignored the petition of two hundred thousand names for Mr. Bennett's pardon, and this, it is to be hoped, the last of the church's imprisonment for opinion's sake, caused the Liberals of the United States to send Mr. Bennett around the world and enabled him to write his very interesting and instructiv work entitled "A Truth-Seeker Around the World." He has gone ahead to test the great problem. His life was spent in breaking the shackles that enslave the human mind and he has left works that will liv as long as man inhabits this planet.

THE TRUTH SEEKER will be sent three months to new subscribers for half a dollar. Those interested in the spread of Freethought should exert themselvs to get up clubs of trial subscribers.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - - - - Editor.
M. W. BENNETT, - - - - - - Publisher.
21 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing seven hundred square inches more reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

All Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders should be made payable to MARY W. BENNETT.

SATURDAY, - - - FEBRUARY 10, 1883.

THERE are many patrons on our list a long way in arrears. To such we would remark with urgency that it will be a fitting and graceful thing for them to square up the accounts. We feel sure that no one wants to defraud THE TRUTH SEEKER out of its just dues, but many appear to hav forgotten about the matter.

Christ as a Critic.

The Independent of last week has some very curious articles on whether Jesus asserted that Moses was the author of the Pentateuch, and whether, if he did, his assertion was worth anything. Howard Crosby says Christ "quoted the Pentateuch as of Moses," and that although "he did not know some things," he must hav known this or else his command to "offer the gift which Moses commanded," was "the grossest connivance at the grossest error," inasmuch as he by this virtually certified that Moses wrote the Pentateuch. Dr. Crosby asks, "Is Jesus good authority?" and "Did he know?" and answers by saying that it must be so, for "an error of a hair's breadth in his teachings destroys his messiahship. . . To quote anything as said by Moses which he did not say or any book as written by Moses which he did not write, was to deceive the people in one of the strongest points of their faith."

This brings the case down to a fine point. Either Jesus did not know the truth about the books, or he knowingly taught a gross error. And Crosby's position is that "if it should finally be shown that Moses did not write the Pentateuch, then Christianity is a hollow sham!" Now it seems to us that this is an inconvenient thing for Dr. Crosby to say, for it is admitted by the best biblical scholars not only that Moses did not write the first five books composing the Hebrew canon, but that they are made up of fragments and traditions from other peoples. Prof. Draper thinks them Assyrian, while Jacolliot discovers in them strong likeness to Egyptian stories. But, wherever the material for these romances came from, it is pretty definitly settled that Ezra began the task of putting them into shape, and that Nehemiah finished it, but a few hundred years before Christ. Dr. Davidson, a Christian biblical authority, says that neither they nor their assistants had much critical sagacity. If they wished to leave out a part of a manuscript, they did so; and if they believed that they could improve a work by taking out a portion of the author's composition and inserting some of their own they did so, and nobody thought it wrong! If they had thought them inspired by God they would hardly hav taken such liberties. Probably the best evidence that the Pentateuch was not written by Moses is found in the Bible itself. Thomas Paine's arguments upon this hav never been refuted by the Christians. Indeed, modern scholarship has confirmed them. Prof. Hermann Strack, a Christian whom the Independent styles the Tischendorf of the Old Testament, says, regarding this collection of books, that "the external evidences are not convincing. The passages of the Pentateuch in which it is said of Moses that he has written something refer either only to particular things (Ex. xvii, 14; xxiv, 4, 7; xxxiv, 27; Num. xxxiii, 2), as the victory over Amalek, the book of the covenant; or only to Deuteronomy, especially the kernel of this book (Deut. xxxi, 9–11, 22, 24–26). The evidences of the more ancient writings of the Old Testament hav underlying them manifold doubts respecting their object, as well as their subject. The views of the post-exilic writers are no longer to be regarded as convincing external evidence for the Mosaic authorship on account of their great distance in time from the Mosaic period. . . . We regard ourselvs, therefore, as not bound by external evidences with reference to the whole Pentateuch and regard it as possible, first of all, that the name 'Five Books of Moses,' 'Thora Moses,' is to be understood in the same sense as the 'Book Joshua,' namely, that by it Moses is designated as the chief person, not as the author. How, then, is it with internal evidences? Very many reasons hav been brought forward against the Mosaic authorship. . . . One ground is, however, according to my conviction, decisiv, if one looks closely at it. By it the correct appreciation of the other evidences is rendered possible or made easier. Not only that part of the Pentateuch treating of the pre-Mosaic time, but the whole Pentateuch is composed of different writings, still plainly to be recognized in numerous sections, parts of which may be shown also in the book of Joshua (whether all may be need not be considered here). The supposition that the whole Pentateuch was composed by Moses is plainly irreconcilable with this fact."

Mr. Crosby has impaled himself on the sharp horn of a very unpleasant dilemma. The Independent sees it and repudiates his premises with considerable warmth. It says that it is "clearer than the noonday sunlight that it is little worse than suicide and treason for the church to insist that the truth of Christianity and the mesiahship of Jesus depend on such a subordinate matter as who wrote Genesis or Deuteronomy."

Perhaps the whole Bible is a subordinate matter anyway. If Moses did not write the Pentateuch (and he did not), if Jesus did not know what he was talking about (and the Independent and Prof. Strack are fully convinced he did not), if the Old Testament is not inspired and Genesis is a legend, as Beecher says it is, and the "fall of man" an elevation as everybody can see it is, then of what use was Jesus's sacrifice of himself? Of what use are all the churches and ministers? The whole salvation scheme hinges on the supposed fall of man, and if Genesis is not true, and man did not fall, then there is no need of Christ, and the Christian world has all these centuries been frightened at nothing. Take the first five books of the Bible away and all the rest are superfluous. Christians must make their Bible hang together or they are lost. Either it is the word of God or a common book full of errors. There can be no halfway work about it. The evidence that it is the latter is overwhelming and conclusiv.

Both Sides of the Question.

While such letters as the following are unpleasant, they are useful in showing the need of pushing on the work of enlightenment. For if Liberals are so illiberal, what must the rest of mankind be!

AURORA, OHIO, Jan. 27, E.M. 283.
MRS. BENNETT: It is with serious admoration [sic] I write you this letter. D. Higbie, M.D., of Burton, Shiawassee Co., Mich., prepared and sent to your office a poem entitled "Lines on the Life and Death of D. M. Bennett." Mr. Macdonald refused to publish it, and returned the same to Mr. Higbie. He sent it to me for my consideration. Now I hav this to say: If the THE TRUTH SEEKER has got to that independent pitch since Mr. Bennett has departed, I fear its future days will be short, and in the near future go where the Index has, viz., to ruin and decay. Mr. Higbie thinks the reason it was not published was because it alluded to Mr. Bennett's brooding over THE TRUTH SEEKER hereafter. Now I am one of Mr. Bennett's warmest friends, and I know many who take THE TRUTH SEEKER, and all are Spiritualists except one. If we must be denied our say in the grand old paper founded by your husband, just to please a portion, and only a portion, of its supporters that are Materialists, which by the way Mr. Bennett was not, I am certain there will be a great falling off. What made the Index go to ruin? Bigotry! D. M. Bennett was a Liberal-minded and fair and square man. He generally published all sent him, willing to giv even the orthodox space.
Ah, Mrs. Bennett, look into this. I am a poor man but no bigot. Hoping these lines will be of a moment's consideration, I subscribe myself D. M. Bennett's admirer, and THE TRUTH SEEKER's friend,
B. O. FENTON.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.
SIR: Wanted to know, if THE TRUTH SEEKER is an anti-Materialistic paper. If so, why so? Please reply in next copy, and greatly oblige, T. WINTER.

BRISTOL, WIS., Jan. 29, 1883.
MARY W. BENNETT: The time for which I hav paid for THE TRUTH SEEKER expires February, 11, 1883. Please send me no more TRUTH SEEKERS after that date. I am heartily sick of so much senseless twaddle from Spiritualists.
J. F. CHASE.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is, first and foremost, a Freethought journal. It is devoted to the dissemination of Liberalism by all practicable and honorable means. Holding that all bibles and religions are man-made, and seeing the immense injury they hav done and are doing to humanity, it proposes that the world shall regard the Bible as it does any other ancient and erroneous book, and substitute for a superstitious religion the higher form of rationalism. Christianity being the most cruel and tyrannical form that religion has assumed; its devotees having brutally killed men and women for not believing in it, or for having differed in some degree from the opinions entertained by the rulers of the church; having upheld human slavery; having incited wars and plundered nations in the name of God; having forced a theology upon the world which is false and outrageously cruel; having degraded woman, and prostituted her to the base uses of convents and nunneries; having opposed every step man has made forward in civilization, and having done her best to overthrow and thwart every science, and being still a tyrannous and exacting task-master, lacking but the power, not the will, to rekindle the fires of persecution; being still the opponent of progress; and still drawing millions a year from the people to uphold and spread error, THE TRUTH SEEKER has felt that the first thing to do to make the world better is to sweep this superstition from the country. The world makes progress just so fast as it overcomes the obstacles the church puts in the way, and no faster. The rubbish of theology must be cleared away before the humanitarian builder can begin. Ecclesiastical authority must be destroyed, else man is but a slave in religious matters. The specific objects of the paper, and which it is endeavoring to accomplish, are: The total separation of the church [even of Humanity] and state, which it seeks to accomplish by showing the church up in her true light; the discontinuance of religious instruction in the public schools; the repeal of all laws enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath; the cessation of all appropriations of public funds for religious institutions of any kind; the abolition of state-paid chaplaincies; the substitution of simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury for the judicial oath; the non-appointment of religious fasts, festivals, and holidays by public authority; the practical establishment of simple morality and intelligence as the basis of purely secular government, and the adequate guarantee of public order, prosperity, and righteousness; and whatever other measures or principles may be necessary to the total separation of church and state.

Engaged in this work, which is no child's play, nor one to be done in a day, there are about as many Spiritualists as Materialists. As THE TRUTH SEEKER seeks for truth in all directions of human thought and hope, it cannot deny any one a hearing without stultifying its principles, and it does not propose to. So long as the paper is published it will be open to all who express themselvs in presentable language. The Materialist or Spiritualist who would stop his paper because his opponent was allowed a hearing in its columns must hav a narrow mind; and we cannot help fancying that his desertion from the ranks is a small matter. It seems to us that the Freethought platform is broad enough and grand enough to hold all opinions that may cluster around its standard. The question of a future life is an open one. That it is not proven satisfactorily is reason enough why the Spiritualist should bear with the Materialist, and the fact that the hope is so strong in the human heart, and that some phenomena are yet unexplained, is certainly ample reason why the Materialist should be patient with the Spiritualist. At any rate, that is the way we look at the matter. Liberals, whether they believe in a future life or not, hav no cause to wage war upon one another, and certainly not upon the paper which affords them the opportunity to hear all sides. We think that all those who believe in freedom, who believe in granting to others the same rights they claim for themselvs, can work harmoniously side by side to bring about a reformation in matters of opinion and liberty of the great mass of people of this country. There is not such a very wide chasm between the two branches of Freethinkers as some would hav us believe. Both are opposed to tyranny and in favor of liberty. Both religions, if they may be called by that name, are creedless, if not godless; and dogmas are unknown in either. Both believe in making the world better. Both are in favor of education, intelligence, and the diffusion of knowledge. Both are opposed to the maintenance of a non-producing and crime-committing priesthood that builds itself up by keeping the people ignorant. Both are truth seekers, and if one sees a heaven full of flowers, while the other knows only the dissolution of the grave, they can be easily reconciled. Both can journey together till they reach the tomb—the rest is in the future, and let that future take care of itself. Nature is amply able to do it. Both are opposed to the burning and imprisoning of men for their opinions, knowing that we are not masters of our thoughts. If there is another life, the best preparation for it is a life well spent here. In our humble opinion, works are of vastly more importance than faith, even though that faith be well grounded. Faith in the true, the right, in the human race, is good, and should be cultivated; but faith in some mythological deity or heaven, is not essential to happiness here or hereafter. We don't want any heaven in which faith is counted and good works are not. The Materialist can go along with the Spiritualist till the end of earthly things is reached. If the one rises the other is pretty sure to. There is no use in worrying over what at the best must remain an unsolved problem to many if not all of us. We do not pretend to settle the question for anybody, as too many on both sides do; we cannot settle it even for ourselvs. But one thing may be regarded as settled, and that is that THE TRUTH SEEKER will continue to giv all sides a hearing upon any question of interest to our readers and importance to the world. We believe in freedom, we believe in fairness, and we also believe that "truth endureth and is always strong; it liveth and conquereth for evermore." Whoever has the truth will win, and that thought cheers us onward when we get discouraging letters like the foregoing.

To Liberal Organizations.

We ask the various Liberal associations throughout the United States to lose no time in making arrangements with Mr. Charles Watts, of London, England, for a course of lectures in their respectiv districts.

Mr. Watts has already spoken in several cities in America, and in each place he has visited he has given unqualified satisfaction. Most glowing accounts hav reached us of his abilities as a lecturer. The Daily Picayune (New Orleans) says, "Mr. Watts is a fervid speaker, and handles his subject with a spirit that commands by its earnestness." The daily City Item writes, "Mr. Watts was richly argumentativ and eloquent." The Dallas Daily Times remarks, "Mr. Watts is a good reasoner and an eloquent man, and his lectures are highly entertaining. He believes what he says, and he says it in an interesting manner." In the opinion of the Dallas Herald, Mr. Watts as a lecturer is graceful, yet logical and forcible. Last Sunday evening we attended Mr. Watts's lecture in this city on "The Spirit of the Age," and will say that we do not think we hav in our ranks today an orator who excels him in keen reasoning, and but one more eloquent. Keep him busy.

It is Mr. Watts's present intention to remain with us till next May, and to devote the whole of his time to platform work. He is particularly desirous of meeting some representativ minister or layman in a four or six nights set debate upon the two following propositions: "Which is the better calculated to meet the needs of Mankind, Secularism or Christianity?" and, "The New Testament uncertain in its History and defectiv in its Teachings."

All communications for Mr. Watts should be addressed to him at our office.

Mr. Watts will lecture next Sunday evening at German Masonic Temple, 220 E. 15th st., on "The Fallacies of Theological Notions." Those who heard him last Sunday will want to hear him again, and those who did not will miss a treat unless they attend.

A VERY large share of our space this week is devoted to the Paine celebrations held in this city and elsewhere. It is a credit and an honor to the Liberals that the meetings were so fully attended and so much love and respect shown for the memory of the man to whom this country is so deeply indebted. We hope that every year will see these gatherings increase in numbers until the 29th of January shall become a national holiday. We would call attention to the character of the addresses delivered on this occasion. Every one is of marked ability. And we would also acknowledge with thanks the courtesy of our old friend Mendum in furnishing us with advance sheets of Mr Parton's lecture delivered at Paine Hall. Truly this issue contains a vast amount of common sense and sturdy thought.

THE Liberals of Pittsburgh hav issued a little monthly paper called Truth. Being either shut out of the local press or caricatured by it, they are determined to hav an organ of their own in which to defend themselvs. It is supported by the League, which in that place is very strong in numbers and enthusiastic in action.

In Sydney, Australia, the Liberal Association also feels strong enough to maintain a journal, and it has established one called the Liberal, an eight-page weekly, under the editorship of George Lacy, who is guided by the constitution of the association. It is an ably-written, well-printed sheet, and will do our cause much good in that part of the world.

New Books.

GOLDEN THRONE. A Romance. By Samuel P. Putnam, author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus." Large 8vo, pp. 153; finely bound in cloth; price, $1. For sale at this office.

In real life two-thirds of the villains are religious men, but there are very few novels whose authors hav had the courage to truthfully hold the mirror up to nature as Mr. Putnam has done. Such books as this and Wm. McDonnell's "Exeter Hall," "Heathens of the Heath," and "Family Creeds," and Frederika Macdonald's "Nathaniel Vaughan," should hav a wider reading than has been given them. Indolent and indifferent people who say, if asked to read a polemical work, no matter how interestingly written, "Oh, I don't care about it; it's dry," will often gladly read a novel, and while absorbed in the fate of the hero or heroin, insensibly be awakened to an interest in these matters by some philosophical remark put into the mouth of one of the people about whom they are reading. The "Golden Throne" is full of good philosophy, splendid imagery, and descriptiv beauty. As a novel, fault can be found with it if imperfections be the object sought in reading, but we will let Mr. Putnam's enemies, if he has any, point them out. The book, as he tells us in the preface, is written with a purpose, which is to express the poetry and romance that lie in the scientific conception of the universe. And he has certainly expressed a good deal of them. He is a natural poet, and though he write in prose, he cannot help being poetical. Liberalism has more grand poetry in it than all the fabled stories of Christianity. The sublimest music is the song of freedom; and the "Golden Throne" is among the first attempts to giv the Freethinkers prose music unsteeped in superstition.

The story is Western, and has enough exciting situations to hold the professional novel reader, while those who do not care for such things will be repaid for its perusal by the new ideas of life and its loves and duties obtained. It can be said of it as was said of his "Prometheus," that it is a careful, well-considered, and deliberate performance, with a strong, distinct, and clearly understood meaning; and that meaning is that science and love of humanity shall take the place of theology and the love of self, which cannot but be engendered by that religion which regards the welfare of an unknown god as above man's. We hope Mr. Putnam's attempt to further supply the Liberal public with a novel that teaches truth at the same time it amuses will be rewarded by a ready sale of the book.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE AND CHARACTER OF CHARLES WATTS. By Saladin. Price, 10 cents. For sale at this office.

While Mr. Watts is among us, giving us splendid logical lectures, the interest in his life and services will be great. This little pamphlet supplies the information desired, and in importing it we feel that a good work has been done in making the Freethinkers of this country acquainted with our English guest. He was born Feburary, 27, 1836, like Spinoza and Paine, of very religious parents, but he early showed a strong inclination to intellectual pursuits, beginning to lecture at fourteen. He was for many years an editor on the National Reformer, from which he separated on account of difference of opinion between himself and Mr. Bradlaugh. He purchased the Secular Review from G. J. Holyoake. He has held many debates with ministers, always with the greatest satisfaction to his friends. When republican clubs were in existence in England he was chosen vice-president of the leading one. His political views include a compulsory education law, disestablishment of the English church, reform in the land laws, and a less grasping foreign policy for England. He comes to this country as the accredited representativ of the British Secular Union.

WITCHCRAFT IN CHRISTIAN COUNTRIES. By Saladin. Price, 10 cents. For sale at this office.

"Saladin" is the well-known writer on the Secular Review, W. Stewart Ross, and is one of the sharpest and boldest of the English secularists. This is an address delivered at the inauguration of the Secular Society at Stockport, and reviews the terrible persecutions, and tortures endured by alleged witches at the hands of Christians, who find their justification for them in Exodus, xxii, 18. It is a scathing arraignment of the cruel church, and should be handed to every one who talks about the beautiful love and mercy of God and Christ.

HEALTH HINTS TO WOMEN. Important Information for all, and the Danish Cure explained. By Wilhelmine D. Schott. With portrait. Edited by F. J. Newkirk. Price, $1.50. For sale at this office.

The design of the author of this book is to place within the reach of all women a general outline of the laws of health, and also such knowledge as shall qualify them to guard against sickness, and to enable nurses to know just what to do for those who are sick. There is no attempt made to put out a system of medicin or an infallible cure for everything, but to show people how to keep well rather than to get well. For this purpose it is an exceedingly sensible work, and if its directions were carefully followed there would undoubtedly be less sickness among women. While not entirely discarding medicin, it yet relies more upon hygiene and sanitary conditions than is usually done, and fully explains the Danish cure, which in cases of chronic diseases is universally acknowledged of great efficacy.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE AND CHARACTER OF SALADIN. By Gordon G. Flaws. Price, 10 cents. For sale at this office.

The title, as with the others, denotes the character of the tract, and in giving the sketch it also deals some effectiv blows at the church. In England Saladin is as well known as Mr. Watts or Charles Bradlaugh. and if he could be induced to write for the American Freethought press he would soon be a great favorit. This sketch of his life is very interesting reading and we are obliged to our English friends for sending us a supply, for we hav been interested in reading his trenchant articles in the Secular Review to know what manner of man he is.

Charles Watts's Lectures.

On Friday evening the 2d, before the Liberal Club, Charles Watts, of England, gave a very interesting lecture on the "Martyrdom of Man," showing the true spirit of martyrdom, and contrasting it with the spirit of persecution. The spirit of martyrdom is in every man who is true to his convictions, a whatever cost, and this spirit has been as illustrious in those who hav been called Infidel as in those who hav borne the name of Christian.

Another phase of this subject was presented by Mr. Watts, on Sunday evening, taking for his theme "The Spirit of the Age—Is It Christian or Secular?" He defined what the spirit of Christianity was as exhibited in the scriptures, and showed how utterly opposit it is to that spirit which is so prevalent in the nineteenth century and makes it what it is—the spirit which pervades commerce, the arts of living, the pursuit of knowledge, the acquirement of wealth, and which is found in almost every book and newspaper. It is the spirit which makes this life the supreme thing, which does not look forward to a heaven on the other side of the grave, but to wealth and happiness now, and the development and exercise of every faculty which man possesses.

These ideas Mr. Watts presented with incisiv language and eloquent delivery. He speaks in an offhand, dashing manner, with great enthusiasm and power. He holds the attention of the audience from beginning to end. At the same time he is very thoughtful and profound. He does not deal with stale repetitions and mere appeals to sentiment. His lectures are evidently the result of years of study. He has traversed the whole field of history and logic. He is a scholar and a thinker, thoroughly up with the latests results of science and its most advanced outlook. He is eminently constructiv; he speaks to the heart and the hope of man; he sees that something is to be done, and he is animated by the sublime vision of those prophetic souls who ever look onward. He has been an earnest and consistent laborer, and for years has upheld the banner of our cause against many odds. It is a rare pleasure and privilege to listen to him, with his wealth of experience and thought, which is not an abstraction but a practical force.

Every Liberal League should make an effort to hear this powerful orator. Not only will he stimulate those who are already Liberal, but he will giv to every mind food for thought, presented in such a legitimate and persuasiv manner that even the Christian must admit the integrity of the man, though he may deny the logic of his conclusions.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

"I HEARD a voice from heaven," sang the choir at the funeral of a notorious man, and the Christian at Work, commenting upon the fact, says the question naturally arises as to whether choral ears do not sometimes hear heavenly voices which are not only never heard elsewhere, but which will never strike the ear of the deceased in his new body, supposing him to hav a tympanum.

A Lecture.

The Immorality of Religious Capitals.

DELIVERED IN PAINE HALL, BOSTON, SUNDAY EVENING, JAN. 28, 1883, BY JAMES PARTON.

It is the great happiness of this new and forming land of ours to be admonished by the errors of the Old World across the sea.

Yonder lies Europe, distant but in plain sight, to warn and to instruct us, as well as to cheer and recreate. For nearly two centuries, America had no other source of mental nourishment; and to this hour, in all that relates to the taste, to art, to literature, what are we but colonies—thirty-eight instead of thirteen? The mere fact that we refuse international protection to the sacred rights of artists and poets, dramatists and composers, stamps us colonial. The Seaside Library alone proves it.

But there is another Europe beyond the sea—a Europe to warn and terrify us, the prey of the soldier and the priest, the despot and the pontiff; a Europe where untaxed estates are annexed indissolubly to obsolete beliefs, and usages that hav become ridiculous; a Europe so unstable in its fundamental politics that a foolish woman, misled by priests, has in our own time hurled the paper armies of France against the solid legions of Germany, and almost brought the fairest region of the earth to ruin; a Europe which, to-day, has not one government strong enough to stand an unshackled penny paper, or a perfectly free meeting; a Europe where five millions of robust men are in garrisons and barracks, five millions of women doing their work at the plough and the manure-heap; one stout fellow in every ten maintained in the highest bodily efficiency to keep the other men in order.

How not to be—how never to be—like that Europe, is the problem of America!

But let us not boast. Equally fortunate for Europe is it to hav ever in view this pioneer nation, this experimental America. Our Tweeds and Goulds admonish Europe, as well as ourselvs. The men who are at the head of the Liberal movement in Russia and Germany may well pause and study the exploits of the Standard Oil Company. Thus we admonish Europe, while Europe alarms us.

One woeful error of the Old World it has been the intention of the American people to avoid. For fifteen centuries, in Europe, opinions hav been endowed. Masses of property, untaxed, but sedulously protected, hav been attached to ideas. Modes of thinking and of education hav been richly endowed; modes of dressing and of eating hav been endowed. The boys of the Blue Coat School in London wear to-day the blue petticoat and yellow breeches of Edward VI.'s time; and extremely strange they look when they tuck their petticoats up to play ball. They wear no hats or caps. Even their food was endowed, and it required an act of Parliament and vehement agitation to get cabbage added to their bacon, and potatoes to their boiled beef, those vegetables having come up since the death of the founder.

The first five years of my existence were spent in an ancient English cathedral city, and having revisited it when I came of age, I hav had the opportunity of seeing the results of this system. It is one of the most interesting towns in Europe—an assemblage of all the antiquities. From a lofty place within its walls of flint you may see structures built by the Romans, by the ancient Britons, by the Danes, by the Normans, by every power which has governed England during the historic period. In the midst of it rises a vast, and, I may almost say, sublime cathedral, the beauty and fascination of which no passing traveler or visitor of a week can realize. During four months that I lived in its shadow, years ago, I never could let a day pass without going to hav a long and loving look at it. I hav visited it at sunrise, at sunset, at noon, at midnight, in rain, in snow, in storm; in the clear brightness of a summer's day, in autumnal fog and wintry storm, and I never saw it without being overcome by its beauty and grandeur.

Connected with this huge church there are about thirty clergymen, fourteen of whom are so liberally compensated that a man who gets one of their places is "made," since he enjoys an income of something like a thousand pounds a year, upon which a family there can be handsomely maintained. The other clergymen are also liberally paid; and there are a great number of secular persons employed in various capacities, at salaries upon which they subsist. The service is chanted twice every day in the year by an exquisit choir of twenty-four voices—the pick of all the region, trained from boyhood, and maintained to old age. The annual expense of keeping up this magnificent establishment was then about $150,000 a year, divided among about eighty persons; from the dean, with his thousands per annum, to the vergers who showed the tombs of Henry IV. and the Black Prince, in the crypt of the church, at forty pounds a year, and whatever shillings and half-crowns romantic American visitors chose to giv them.

The city contained at that time about sixteen thousand inhabitants, all of whom, I suppose, could hav found standing-room within the walls of this stupendous edifice. Besides the cathedral, there were, if I recollect aright, sixteen parish churches belonging to the establishment—museums of antiquity, all of them. These also were amply sufficient for the accommodation of the whole population, and much more than sufficient to contain that fraction of the people who belonged to the church of England. For observe: besides that immense cathedral, with its retinue of dean, vice-dean, prebends, minor-canons, preachers, singing men, singing boys, sextons, vergers, surveyors, and others; besides the sixteen parish churches, each with its beneficed clergyman, a curate to help him, a clerk to say Amen, a sexton to open the pews, and a woman to dust the cushions; besides this complicated, costly, and redundant religious system which the people were compelled by law to maintain, whether they approved it or not; whether they went to church twice a day or never in their lives; besides all this, there existed in the town a complete apparatus of dissent. There was a Methodist church, a Presbyterian, a Congregational, a Hard-Shell Baptist, a Soft-Shell Baptist, a Unitarian, a Roman Catholic, and another which passed by the name of the Ranters.

Sixteen thousand inhabitants, remember!

Let us not forget, also, that the money expended in maintaining religion comes out of the most sacred part of the scanty earnings of man—that precious little surplus which is left after the necessaries of life are paid for; two or three cents a day per individual, in the more prosperous communities—that blessed fund which alone can be used to cheer, decorate, civilize, exalt, and advance mankind. It never can be large in amount; three cents, even in this thriving state, in thriving times, are supposed to be about all that remains to each person at the close of the day, when he has paid for his three meals, his clothes, his bed, his doctor, and his undertaker.

I say, at home, and so say we all, "Let us wear out old clothes, let us eat up all our cold meat and stale bread; for the less we consume of such stuff as meat, bread, coal, and cloth, the more we shall hav left for things of real importance, such as flowers, pictures, music, rides, gifts, books, drama, Christmas, and hospitality." We may truly say that the happiness, the dignity, and the beauty of our lives depend upon the use we make of our surplus—that sixpence which Mr. Micawber ought to hav left out of his twenty pounds a year; that sixpence which the father of Ginx's baby spent every Sunday afternoon for beer. If he had saved his sixpences for five years, they would hav transported him and his numerous family to the fertil plains west of the Mississippi. To him, as to everyone of us, to cities, communities, and nations also, that superfluous sixpence (of money, time, and force) is our opportunity and our fate. Use it wisely, and our lives are free, high, and safe. Use it foolishly, and we pass our lives in bondage, as most of us do.

And now, what does all that huge church expenditure, that mountain of untaxed property, in the ancient cathedral town, do for the people of the place? And do not forget either that exemption from taxation is the secret of its accumulation. That vast estate, which has been increasing for ten centuries, would never hav been gathered if it had contributed its portion every year to the expenses of the kingdom; and under the wearing, correcting influence of a just taxation, it would at once begin to shrink. But what does it do for the people?

According to the theory, the inhabitants of that ancient city ought to be, not merely the most moral, but the most exquisitly spiritualized population in the whole Protestant world; for there ecclesiastical religion comes to a focus. There has been a concentration of the most expensiv religious influence upon this lovely valley ever since St. Augustine preached there, as Archbishop of Canterbury, in the year 596. Since then one hundred and three archbishops hav expended themselvs, more or less, upon the spot, receiving for their valuable services large revenues—at present more than the salary of the President of the United States. When I was there the archbishop was named John Bird Sumner; and I only learned the other day, from the Athenæum, how that dignitary came to be appointed. King George IV. had a mistress called Lady Conyngham, of whom you may hav read in the Greville Memoirs lately published. This lady, as she was called, had a son, of whom John Bird Sumner was the tutor, and she pushed her son's tutor on from one preferment to another until he became Archbishop of Canterbury, and his brother bishop of another diocese. So one result of this largest item of expense was to reward the protégé of a king's mistress, and to notify the people and clergy of England that the word of such a woman was more influential in the bestowal of the highest dignities of the church, even than editing a Greek play, or writing a treatis on the Evidences.

The archbishop, however, did not trouble the people much. He did not so much as come on Quarter day to receive his salary, and only appeared about once in three or four years to perform the rite of confirmation. He let the children accumulate until there was a good batch. That ancient palace where Saint Thomas à Becket and Cranmer lived is now a ruin, in one corner of which there was then a tin-shop. But now, as to the moral and spiritual effect of this stupendous and costly apparatus of religion upon the inhabitants: What do they get back for the £23,000 a year they pay? For, observe again: no matter when or by whom an estate was given to the church, it is living men and women who earn all the revenue. It is not dead Girard that supports those orphans in Philadelphia, but living Pennsylvania; not dead Astor that maintains his library, but living New York. Astor left empty houses, but it is the people living in them that pay the rent.

A few days after my arrival in that venerable city I saw placarded upon the walls the announcement of a public meeting that promised to be of the highest interest. The object was to promote secular education in Ireland, under the direction of the National church—an object in which, we should suppose, the people of the churchiest town in Great Britain would take particular interest. An ex-cabinet minister was to attend. The mayor was to preside. One of the county members of Parliament was to speak, and his fellow-member, I think, was to be present. The society was under the patronage of Lady Conynham's protégé, the archbishop; and, in short, there was everything in the announcement calculated to excite interest in the minds of intelligent and public-spirited citizens. Imagin such a meeting announced in Boston—nay, in the smallest town of New England! Where could you get a tent large enough to hold the people who would desire to attend? Special trains would be run. Special policemen would hav to be detailed to moderate the fury of the rush.

Happy in this unexpected opportunity to see and hear something of the public men of England, interested also in the object, I went to the hall twenty minutes, perhaps, before the time appointed for the meeting. I was the first to arrive. At the appointed hour the whole number of persons present was seven! A few more straggled in; and when the meeting began, there were nearly as many persons seated on the benches as there were on the platform—perhaps forty in all. I hav seldom been more astonished or more puzzled. I thought there must be some mistake, that something had happened, and that the meeting of course would be postponed. On the contrary, this state of things appeared to be accepted as natural and usual. The speeches were delivered as announced; the program was fully carried out; and a more interesting occasion of the kind could hardly be imagined. About ten o'clock I left the hall with a mixed feeling of delight at what I had heard, and sorrow that so few had heard it. These feelings were so strong that the next day I wrote an account of the meeting for one of the papers, and, with the modesty of twenty years, berated the people of the place for not attending.

Upon leaving the hall at the close of the exercises, I had to make my way through several of those crooked narrow streets common to all the old walled towns of Europe, and at every step I could see the glare and hear the hum and roar and clink of the tap-room. It seemed to be the custom of the place for the men to spend every evening at a tavern, and you could not, after nine o'clock, anywhere in that town, get beyond the noise of tap-room revelry—the comic song, the chorus, the pounding of the table, the loud laughter, the Babel of beery talk—and you could occasionally peep through the shutters, and see a crowd of revelers seated at tables, in a cloud of tobacco-smoke, with long clay pipes in their mouths, and pewter pots of beer before them. The melodious voices of those Cathedral singing men were in request for these evening revels. The best comic singing I ever heard in my life I heard afterward at some of the numberless festiv clubs of that ancient city. It formed an important part of the income of some of those men to sing at clubs and "free-and-easys," their regular charge for such service being five shillings for an evening.

Never did I see such a beery place. It was a common thing there for respectable men, fathers of families, in good circumstances, to belong to six different evening clubs, and even seven, each meeting once a week, so that they might never hav to undergo the calamity of spending an evening at home! Nothing had conspicuously succeeded in that town but beer! Its true archbishop, the fountain of what spiritual life it had, was the head brewer; for it was the system there for the brewers to own the beer-houses, and rent them to men bound to take the owner's beer. Judging by the conduct of the people, it was his property which should hav been favored by the tax-gatherer. The beer-houses, well frequented during the day, were crowded every night of the year; while that vast and splendid cathedral, on week days, presented such a scene as that which called forth from Dean Swift his well-known, "Dearly beloved Roger, the scripture moveth you and me." Seldom were there as many auditors as performers, for it required about thirty-five persons in all to perform the service.

One-third of the inhabitants of this city, it was computed by dissenting clergymen, had never been inside the building; regarding it with utter indifference, or with disapproval and contempt, as an imposition, or a relic of popery. Its magnificence, its vastness, the splendors of the interior, the grandeur of the exterior, had no more effect upon the mass of the people who saw it every day than Niagara has upon the clerks of the Cataract House, or the Alps upon the Swiss who hurry away to Paris to be hired as footmen. There was, as it chanced, one religious establishment then in the city which answered the end of its existence, exerting on its crowded auditory a spiritualizing and moralizing power. A dissenting minister having offended his rich patron by preaching too well, got together all his money, eight hundred pounds, and bought an old hall which had been for some time unoccupied. He and his wife, with some little assistance, made it presentable, and opened it entirely on their own account, as a private business, letting the pews, taking up a collection, paying their taxes like honest and independent citizens, and subsisting frugally upon what was left. He was one of the most eloquent men I ever heard speak, and in any place less churched and less debauched than a cathedral city he would hav had a splendid career. As it was, he attracted an overflowing congregation, and exerted constantly that kind of influence which will in time discontinue the cathedral, suppress the archbishop, and shut up the tap-room.

I afterward visited several other cathedral towns, and observed in them all the same redundancy of beer, and a similar crowd of fifty or sixty clergymen living in almost total idleness upon the labors of their fellow-citizens. You may read much about them in Anthony Trollope's novels, particularly the one called "Barchester Towers." Those clergymen are not bad people. They find themselvs in the possession of safety and abundance with little effort or merit of their own, and they hav inherited a theory of religion and politics which justifies the situation.

People attribute the dissoluteness of cathedral towns to the presence of so many singers and musicians; but, in truth, it is the fundamental immorality of the state of things which vitiates all the life of those towns. The money which should educate, cheer, and elevate the people is squandered upon maintaining in elegant ease fifty or sixty families, most of whom render absolutely no service at all to the people whose labor supports them. Many of them are only required to preach four sermons a year, and those they can buy, in manuscript, of any shade of doctrin desired, at the very small charge of one shilling each, postage paid.

It is strange what an intimate connection there is between bishops and brewers, and how naturally the cathedral runs to drink. The fact has been lately ascertained that the largest owners of gin-shops and beer-houses in London are its two cathedrals, St. Paul's and Westminster Abbey. The bishop of London, it is said, in riding from his abode in St. James's Square to his official palace at Fulham, passes more than a hundred gin-shops built upon land belonging to the church. A writer in the Examiner said the other day: "Some years ago, after residing three or four months in Scotland, I had occasion to visit several cathedral towns, Norwich, Peterborough, and others. In the north I hardly found a person who could not read and write. In the cathedral towns I found very few who could."

Of course not. You can't hav your cake and eat it too. If you spend your superflous sixpence upon cathedrals and beer, and exempt from taxation the richest corporations in the town, you cannot find money to educate the people. As a race, we are and must always be very poor. We are almost as poor as the father of Ginx's baby, aforesaid, who had but sixpence a week for a lever to pry himself and his twelve children out of the quagmire.

Let no one attribute these dissolute habits to the prevalence of a sect. The most drunken city in Scotland is Presbyterian Glasgow; the most drunken city in Europe, according to a late writer in the London Times, is Geneva, the city of Calvin; and this, in spite of the efforts of Voltaire to reform it. Mecca, another name for pollution. Jerusalem, the metropolis of filthy imposture. Constantinople, all squalor and grumbling meanness, except the palace and the mosque. And, as to the religious capitals of India, if any one were to transmit through the mails the most modest description of them, we know who would be after him, and where he would spend the next thirteen months.

Rome is the chief religious capital of the world. What an amazing waste and imposture it is! A horde of priests living in unequaled pomp and luxury upon the hard-earned savings of servant girls!

All the royal palaces of Europe would not make the Vatican; never, since man first began to prey upon man, was a creature so sumptuously lodged and munificently provided as the pope. His mere head-servant, the late Antonelli, was able to indulge a taste so expensiv that no emperor of the modern world would dare to compete with him in it—the taste for collecting gems. He kept a special secretary to arrange, catalog, and show his collection, which could not be properly reviewed in a whole day. Black diamonds—rose diamonds—white diamonds—rubies—emeralds—no monarch ever gathered such in one lifetime, for no monarch ever had so many fat things to giv away. A black diamond was a small price to giv for an archbishopric.

And it was not merely that the money drawn from the people was wasted, but much of the best brain was also wasted. The church, as Macaulay remarked, before the recent happy change in Italian affairs, was filled with men who were led into it from a mere desire to rise in the world—"men who would hav been useful and honest as laymen, are hypocritical and immoral as churchmen." And we need not go as far as Rome to see how the system works of luring able men into the church through the attraction of an easy income.

I spent a summer a few years ago on the shores of Missisquoi Bay, the most northern bay of Lake Champlain, in the last town of Vermont before you come to Canada, and within three miles of the Canada line. We were in and out of Canada almost every day; and, during the whole summer, I was trying to arrive at some rational explanation of the difference between that northern region of Vermont and the Canada towns separated from it only by an imaginary line and an occasional iron post.

In the Vermont village nearest the border there was a planing-mill, a furniture manufactory, a creditable depot, a nicely kept village green, with a handsome soldier's monument upon it, several important business firms, commodious school-houses, and a general appearance of enterprise, intelligence, and prosperity. The visitor said to himself: These brave Vermonters are victorious over the adverse circumstances of their lot—their seven or eight months' winter, their not too productiv soul, their short summers, and their remote situation. People pack hay in that county for the New York market, three hundred miles off; they send cranberries to Boston; cheese to Europe. Not far off they make their heavy potatoes into light starch, which, as I was told, was in request at Calcutta and Hong Kong. A few miles away was the town where six hundred men were employed in making Fairbanks's scales, a very bulky product, which, nevertheless, were sent all over the country when they had to be carried sixty miles by wagon to the nearest lake port. The greatest butter market of the world is at St. Albans, about fifteen miles from the Canada line. Two million dollars' worth of butter sold there every year. And in spite of all this varied industry those northern towns had been able to spare many a tall fellow for the army, when the unity of their country was menaced.

Now cross the Canada line, and tie your horse to a post, if you can find one, in the first village you come to. Not a factory; not a store where you can be sure of finding a paper of pins, or a piece of tape. The assessed value of the entire place, thirty thousand dollars. All that summer, from the middle of June to the middle of August, there was a procession on the high road, from Canada into Vermont, of the most forlorn and dilapidated French Canadians coming into New England for the harvest work. They came in cow-carts, and every kind of antiquated vehicle. Sometimes a family party would go by, the old man or woman riding on a cart drawn by a cow or a wretched semblance of a horse, and the rest of the family trudging along on foot, a spectacle of the fag end of human nature. These people considered themselvs fortunate if, at the end of the summer, they had forty or fifty dollars to carry back with them to liv on during the long Canadian winter.

Now, why was this? Take a ride up into the French parts of Canada, lingering a few days at Montreal and Quebec. The country, the cars, the ferry-boats, swarm with round and jovial priests, maintained upon those estates which hav descended to them from a remote generation, a large part of which was until within a very few years exempt from all the public burdens. The church, in fact, until recently, claimed to own the city of Montreal, and still possesses enough property there to giv the church an exaggerated and pernicious development. Those serene and comfortable priests are, many of them, the natural leaders of the people. On the Vermont side, they would be running factories, inventing improvements, teaching high schools, editing newspapers, directing railroads; captains of industry, providing the people with work, and making a market at home for a harvest which would employ all the laboring men of Canada.

French Canada lures many of its best minds into the church, and buries them alive in convents and cathedrals. Vermont sets them at work serving the people. And, as you know, the advance of a community depends absolutely upon the use it makes of its superior minds. In Canada, Italy, Spain, southern Germany, Mexico, Peru, the policy of exemption and privilege has given to the church such excessiv proportions that the human mind has no chance at all. As with the policy of entail and primogeniture in England, the very tendency to accumulation which needs to be held in some restraint, is stimulated. Entail and primogeniture in England, by which property is exempted from the natural waste of dissolute heirs, by which the natural flow of property is obstructed, by law, has assigned the great body of British land to a few hundred individuals, and has given to an obsolete aristocracy an injurious prolongation of life.

In this New World, therefore, let all property, as well as all men, stand equal before the law. Let the state recognize no character in lawful property, but protect all equally, and tax all equally. Let us not clog the wheels of progress with exempt estates. Let the march of opinion, always slow and difficult, be not hindered here by dead weight.

Christianity was three centuries in gaining a foothold in the Roman Empire chiefly because there was so much property invested in the old paganism. "Great is Diana of the Ephesians." When the younger Pliny writes to Trajan about the efforts he has made to put down the new religion in his province, he tells the emperor that, as a result of his exertions, the abandoned temples were beginning to be frequented once more, and, says he, "there is also a general demand for victims for sacrifice, which till lately found very few purchasers."

Nothing has more hindered the development of man than the alliance between property and opinions. America has produced few wiser or purer public men than James Madison, and he has left on record his deliberate opinion that if the church of England had been established in the Northern Colonies, as it was in Virginia, America would hav submitted to the exactions of the mother country and remained dependent.

It has been the happiness of America hitherto that thought has been less hampered in this way than in the old countries. But we seem not the less eager to put shackles upon posterity. Many of us distrust posterity's willingness to take care of the orphan, assist the widow, and educate the young. And we feel it a duty to help posterity do these things. What has posterity done that we should distrust it so? This endowment question is not yet ripe even for consideration in the New World; and when a rich man dies and presumes to say in his will what after generations shall do with his millions and his acres, we all rejoice, as though a benevolent and high action had been performed.

This we do who see the Old World groaning under ill-judged endowments, and who even suffer ourselvs from the attempts of dead men to impose their opinions and preferences upon us. For my part, I feel a sense of relief when a Stewart or a Vanderbilt dies and leaves nothing to the public; and I do not doubt that when the Girards, the Peabodys, and the Edwin Forrests hav locked up another thousand millions or so of property, under the management of boards, we shall awake to the absurdity of permitting such men to govern us from their graves, and to dispose of revenues all earned by the living.

A deacon of an orthodox church in Massachusetts told me that several societies in New Enland are obsolete, do no work, hav no work to do, but keep up a show of life for the sole purpose of receiving and enjoying the legacies coming in, and the funds resulting from former legacies. There is nothing of these societies except, perhaps, a president, a secretary, a treasurer, and an office-boy to bring in the ice-water and newspapers. Before the world is fifty years older, the power of public bequest will, probably, in some just and safe way, be limited, and the existing generation will expend its earnings and do its benevolence directly, and not in the roundabout way of trustee and endowments. Meanwhile we can at least apply the slow but ceaseless correctiv of equal taxation, exempting no man, no institution, no edifice, no acre. Nothing has true life in it unless it pays its way, or, like a boy or a colt, is to pay its way soon.

You educate your theological students for nothing, and what is the result? Rev. Dr. John Hall, of New York, answered the question the other day. The standard of ministerial power and worth is so lowered that the churches cannot endure it. Thousands of pulpits empty, and thousands of clergymen unemployed. The people cannot endure the product of their own privileged and exempt institutions.

You pay your judges less than private clients pay their lawyers; you pay your cabinet less than grocers earn on a city corner; a powerful and wealthy nation stoops to accept semi-gratuitous service from its own servants. We all know the result. No tub stands well except upon its own bottom.

The press of this country was injured by the government carrying newspapers at less than cost, and some local newspapers for nothing. We now make every periodical pay full postage in advance, and this has already done much to giv tone and vigor to the American press. We must be in accord with Nature's self, all whose arrangements tend to strengthen the strong and kill the weak. A thousand periodicals perished in a year or two, but the rest are the stronger and the better for it; for to make a good paper two things are indispensable—a good editor and a great income.

Cemeteries should be exempt, they tell us. When I see the ill-kept and disused graveyards which disfigure so many country towns, when I read of such scenes as took place in Montreal, and observe the inclination of one important denomination to hav exclusiv cemeteries as a source of revenue maintained by appeals to the lowest superstition, and when I reflect also upon the weighty arguments of the cremationists, I am inclined to think that, of all the forms of property, burial-places hav the least claim to be exempt. There is only one thing sacred; it is the welfare of the living.

I spent some pleasant hours lately in the grounds and buildings of Harvard University, an institution which, young as it is, begins to hav something of that antique and peaceful beauty which makes the English city of Oxford the loveliest spot on the face of the earth. Harvard, as far as a stranger can judge, is an institution full of noblest promis, and I do not wonder that the generous people of Massachusetts cherish it with so much pride. It is an honor to the state, to the country, and to mankind. Nevertheless, I believe that, just as far as it is stimulated, protected, exempted, privileged, it is weakened. I cannot think it good to lure by low prices of tuition poor young men into college, who ought to be at work lightening, instead of increasing, their parents' burdens, and, at the same time, underpay the professors who teach them. I cannot help thinking that the college would be strengthened by its sharing the common lot, charging for tuition what it costs, and bearing its share of the general burden. Tax all the colleges of this country, and the gradual effect would be to destroy the weak and strengthen the strong. Tax all the churches, and the effect would be to compel weak churches to combine, and to be strong in unity.

Europe, I repeat, has been, and is, the prey of the soldier and the priest. Here, as we fondly hoped, we limit the soldier by the Federal system, which givs us thirty-eight states without a custom house or a fort between them, dependent and independent, sovereign and subject, weak to commit injury, strong to repel it, indissoluble ties binding the farthest settlement in Oregon to the most remote timber camp in Maine. This is our main dependence against excessiv soldiery, and our chief hope of his final disappearance.

To guard against an exaggerated and unspiritual church, a torpid college system, and huge estates locked up and perverted by the authority of dead men's wills, our best chance appears to be to adopt it as a fundamental principle, that the state shall know no character in property, but tax equally everything that it protects, without one exception of any kind. It required many ages of heroic effort to get the principle recognized, even in theory, in the most advanced countries, that all men shall be equal before the law; and even now who can say that in any community the fact is in accordance with the theory? We must not be surprised, therefore, to find opposition, general and strong, to a kindred spirit scarcely less necessary.

Just and equal taxation resembles the slow and safe operations of nature, which wear away obstructions, and change the aspect of continents so gradually that the process can scarcely be discerned, and cannot be recorded. The ocean will one day flow over us again, but no one need fear getting wet. There will be no sudden irruption or revolution, because there is in nature no such thing as exemption; every atom in the universe being equally subject both to the local and the general tax.

It is not wealth that corrupts; wealth is a boon and a blessing; and let men earn as much as they may, man must forever remain poor. It is a bad distribution of wealth that corrupts. There is a tendency in property to get into heaps, which laws in every age and land hav aggravated. Here, for the first time in human history, let the law leave it equally free to get into heaps, and to scatter itself abroad. No privilege. No entail. No exemption. All men and all property equal before the law.

Paine, Junius, and the Declaration.

Extracts from Denslow's "Modern Thinkers," read by Stephen Pearl Andrews at the Paine Celebration in New York.

"We hav had no writer in America to this day so practiced in the handling of pure and elegant English, or that could hav written either of the chapters of 'Common Sense.' The style of Bancroft, when he had completed his numerous volumes of American history, was sophomorical, 'spread-eagleish,' and inexpert compared with 'Common Sense,' regarded simply as a literary composition. The style of Jefferson was turgid, halting, hesitating, politic and 'hitchety-hitch' compared with the rhythmic musical cadence of this flowing rhetorician and apparent philosopher, whose sentences dart down to the rock bed of radical principles, and contain in their very structure a logical form and sequence that makes them authoritativ, wholly irrespectiv of their source. 'Common Sense,' which, though possessing but the authority of one mind, was read by order at the head of the armies and around the camp-fires until it became authoritativ by universal assent, opens thus: 'Some writers hav so confounded society with government as to leave little or no distinction between them, whereas they are not only different, but hav different origins. Society is produced by our wants and governments by our wickedness; the former promotes our happiness positivly by uniting our affections, the latter negativly by restraining our vices. The one encourages intercourse, the other creates distinctions. The first is a patron, the last is a punisher.

"'Society in every state is a blessing, but government, even in its best estate, is but a necessary evil; in its worst estate an intolerable one; for when we suffer or are exposed to the same miseries by a government which we might expect in a country without, our calamity is hightened by reflecting that we furnish the means by which we suffer. Government, like dress, is the badge of lost innocence; the palaces of kings are built upon the ruins of the bowers of paradise. For were the impulses of conscience clear, uniform and irresistibly obeyed, man would need no other law-giver; but that not being the case, he finds it necessary to surrender up a part of his property to furnish means for the protection of the rest; and this he is induced to do by the same prudence which in every other case advises him, out of two evils, to choose the least. Wherefore, security being the true design and end of government, it unanswerably follows that whatever form thereof appears most likely to insure it to us with the least expense and greatest benefit is preferable to all others."

"We regard most of the above sentences, except the last, as fallacious and misleading, and especially the historical assumption that government is founded on compact. But as a class of half-truths they are admirably calculated to promote revolution, and they hav been impressed, through their subsequent utterance in the Declaration of Independence, upon the American people, so that now they are the current creed. Very few in America seem to suspect that all governments hav been founded by and on force, notwithstanding history teaches no other lesson. The eloquent fallacies of Paine hav superseded history, and such is the universality of our assent to the glittering sophistry that "all just government derives its power from the consent of the governed," that our entire people assume without hesitation that in forming our own government the loyalists were driven out of the country and their property confiscated at their own request; that in administering it both the women and the negroes were ignored on their motion; that, in forming its constitution, capital, as an element in government, was denied representation by its own desire, and that in the execution of the laws each particular criminal has been punished to promote his own happiness. The assumption that there ever was or could be society without a government, or government without society, or that one originated any more in our wants, or in our wickedness, than the other, or that they hav any different origin, is mere rhetoric. Society opens with government already in existence, always established by the strong and bold, by force, over the weak and cowardly, for the promotion, by the former, of their own interests; the consent of the governed is not at first asked, and the ability of the governed to express their assent only arises in the later stages of society by concession of the governors, and it is a boon so easily overgranted that civilization has, at least in one notable instance, that of Rome, been ruined by its premature concession. Instead of being a natural inalienable right it is the latest patented improvement in political mechanics, and one which should be of the most doubtful and cautious application.

"Thomas Paine, as a chronic satirist and revolutionist, and the only writer of any distinguished merit as a rhetorician then in America, found ample scope and worked with singular address in the American cause. He passed from one detail to another of the contest with great address and with the same ready capacity to investigate the facts or law required for each article which had been so notable a quality in Junius; especially in the letter to Lord Mansfield. He seemed argus-eyed, and touched with his fingers every spring of information, whether it related to the causes of failure in the recent campaign, or to proper means of obtaining aid from France, or of building up a navy."

Mr. Denslow also adopts and proceeds on the theory of Mr. Burr that Thomas Paine was the real author of the Declaration of Independence. The following extract will show his manner of dealing with this subject:

"An anonymous work was published in Washington, D.C., in 1872 attributing the authorship, both of the letters of Junius and of the Declaration of Independence, to Thomas Paine. The latter work is hastily written, but its argument, derived from unity of literary style, mental characteristics, identical beliefs, and other internal evidences, is conclusiv. It is to be regretted that it has not dealt with the question of handwriting, for while the handwriting of Sir Philip Francis is singularly like that of Thomas Paine, the disguised hand of Junius occasionally falls into single words which more clearly resemble Paine's hand than that of either Sackville or Francis. As to the round, undisguised hand in which the original draft of the Declaration of Independence is written, it is not claimed to be Jefferson's, and it seems to be very clearly that of Thomas Paine, who, as the most masterly rhetorician of the period, would naturally be called on to write it. The internal evidence, however, that Jefferson could not hav written the Declaration and that Paine did, is overwhelming. Had Jefferson written it, he could hav quoted its language correctly; whereas, in Vol. VIII., p. 500, of his works, in attempting to explain certain 'unlucky expressions in it which gave offense to some members,' he says 'the words "Scotch and other foreign auxiliaries" excited the ire of a gentleman or two of that country.' Now Jefferson, as an American, could hav no hatred toward Scotchmen, and had he written the document, there was no mental idiosyncrasy in his mind which would hav caused any allusion to Scotchmen to get into it. But the true words were not 'Scotch and other foreign auxiliaries,' but 'Scotch and foreign mercenaries,' which involve two quite different ideas; Paine, as an Englishman, would look upon Scotch mecenaries as not foreign, and therefore omitted the word 'other.' To Jefferson, as an American, auxiliaries coming from Scotland would be foreign, as well as those coming from Germany, or, indeed, England itself. Therefore he inserts the word 'other.' Again, Jefferson, not having any hatred of Scotchmen (on the contrary, he had successivly three Scotch tutors, to all of whom he was devotedly attached), and knowing the presence of Scotchmen in the Congress, would not hav sought to cast any opprobrium on them. He therefore calls them in polite phrase, 'auxiliaries.' But the Declaration had called them mercenaries. Why! Junius, in letter 38, sneers at the destructiv loyalty of 'Tories, Jacobites, and Scotchmen.' In letter 41 he pays what he calls 'a just tribute to Scotch sincerity,' by saying that 'when gentleman of that country smile he feels an involuntary emotion to guard against mischief.' Again, in the same, he sneers at 'the little prudential policy of a Scotchman.' In letter 44 he declares he will speak tenderly of Wedderburn, 'for when treachery is in question we should make allowances for a Scotchman.' Junius hated prudence and a Scotchman equally. Paine, in his letter to Washington, sneers at prudence as 'a sort of non-describable, chameleon-colored thing,' which is, 'in many cases, a substitute for principle, and so nearly allied to hypocrisy that it easily slides into it.' None but an English Junius writing the Declaration would hav lugged in an irrelevant and un-American thrust at the Scotch.

"Again, Junius, Paine, and the writer of the Declaration, all retain one arbitrary date in their minds as that from which English and American troubles begin, viz., 1763. Junius says, 1769: 'Outraged and oppressed as we are, this nation will not bear, after a six years' peace,' etc.; and in 1770 he says: 'At the end of seven years we are loaded,' etc. Paine, in 1779, writes to the English people, 'a period of sixteen years of misconduct and misfortune,' and the Declaration of 1776 says, 'within the short compass of twelve years only.' Thus the three writers date the entire trouble of English misgovernment to the same date, 1763–4. This is a mental idiosyncrasy in which Jefferson did not share, but Paine, Junius, and the Declaration only.

"Moreover, Jefferson, though he became theoretically a mild form of antislavery man, yet, being brought up in the midst of slavery, could never hav composed that peculiar clause in the original draft of the Declaration, in which the slave-trade is denounced as an 'execrable commerce,' an 'assemblage of horrors,' etc. Thomas Paine hated negro slavery with the hatred of one who has never lived in its midst, and no sooner landed on our shores than he began to work for its extinction. Jefferson simply foresaw its political and some of its social evils. Moreover, it is significant to note that Thomas Paine, in his letter to Washington, by captalizing the words APOSTATE and IMPOSTOR, shows the same chirographic habit of putting important words in large capitals, which forms so conspicuous a feature in this clause of the Declaration, and which is but an expansion for capital occasions, of a habit of capitalizing and underlining which is frequent, both in the published writings and in the manuscript fragments of Junius. Nothing in Junius's own writings is so fierce an embodiment of his vast and profound genius for carrying vituperation far beyond the limits of libel, as the climateric clause of the Declaration, which Bancroft is dull enough to attribute to the plain matter-of-fact writer and politic thinker, Thomas Jefferson. It is as follows:

"'He has waged cruel war against human nature itself, violating its most sacred rights of life and liberty in the person of a distant people who never offended him, captivating and carrying them into slavery in another hemisphere, or to incur miserable death in their transportation thither. This piratical warfare, the opprobrium of INFIDEL powers, is the warfare of the CHRISTIAN king of Great Britain. Determined to keep open a market where MEN should be bought and sold, he has prostituted his negativ for suppressing every legislativ attempt to prohibit or restrain this execrable commerce.

"'And that this assemblage of horrors might want no fact of distinguished die, he is now exciting those very people to rise in arms among us, and to purchase that liberty of which he has deprived them, by murdering the people on whom he has obtruded them; thus paying off former crimes, committed against the liberties of one people, with crimes which he urges them to commit against the lives of another.'

"The English language possesses no clause more elaborate in its rhetoric, and few so false in fact. George III. had neither prosecuted the slave trade nor negatived any attempt to restrain it. Indeed, no act of Parliament whatever had been negatived since the reign of Ann, and we hav yet to learn that any colonial act aimed to stop the slave trade. Jefferson states in his autobiography that his incipient attempts at anti-slavery legislation in Virginia met with no favor. So far from it, America, when free from George III., continued the foreign slave trade by constitutional guards until 1808, and the internal slave trade until 1865. Nothing could be more false than to charge upon George III. any responsibility for slavery or the slave trade. While wholly omitting to mention the fact that the king and Parliament had legislated against the erection of furnaces and other manufactures, and the introduction of machinery, it contains such false counts as 'abolishing the free system of English laws in Canada,' when even Bancroft shows clearly that the permission to the French to be relieved from English laws was granted to them as a boon to secure their loyalty; also, with 'withdrawing his governor,' when the only governors withdrawn were those who, like Gov. William Franklin, of New Jersey, were waited upon by mobs, and ordered by them to leave the country. It is also noticeable how small a figure the question of taxation cuts in the Declaration, and it will be remembered that Junius at first advocated the justice of taxing America, as Paine, being an exciseman, would naturally hav done, for an exciseman naturally adheres to a tax. Moreover, Paine, out of his contempt for money, would hav looked upon rebellion against a tax as mean. That Thomas Paine should not hav sought to identify himself with the authorship of either Junius or the Declaration is sufficiently accounted for by his pride; for, while Junius involved him in the question of doubtful honor, whether one deriving his bread from an office under a government can consistently labor for its overthrow, the Declaration was authoritativly reported by a committee including Jefferson, Adams, and Franklin, who were its responsible and official authors, and it would hav been a breach of confidence and honor for him to penetrate behind the doors of that committee room and assert the individual authorship of that of which they were the official authors. Jefferson, in his autobiography, only shows that as between him and his fellow-members of the committee, he stood responsible for its authorship. He says: 'The committee requested that I should prepare the Declaration; it was accordingly done.' He still avoids saying that he himself wrote it. The act of others in inscribing upon Jefferson's tombstone the legend 'Author of the Declaration of Independence,' is of a piece with the like acts of numerous parties in England in causing their relatives to be painted as 'Authors of Junius.'

"Enough! The Declaration of Indepence must hereafter be construed as a fabric whose warp and woof were Thomas Paine's. It was admirably adapted as a revolutionary pronunciamento to fire the colonial heart to a war for separation, which, though placed on utterly inadequate and untenable grounds by that Declaration, yet had good grounds which are not mentioned in it. Those were, simply, that not having any of the materials for an aristocracy in this country, we could not coalesce into one government with Great Britain whose government was aristocratic. If we had been permitted to elect members to her House of Commons, what should we hav sent to her House of Lords? The alleged grievance of taxation, to reimburse the British treasury for expenses incurred in our defense, was in no sense a money grievance. The money having been expended for our benefit, it was our duty to pay it. There could surely be no duty resting on Londoners or Yorkshiremen to pay the expenses of Montgomery's march to Quebec, or Braddock's to Pittsburgh. The real difficulty was that we needed a sovereign government, and could not be admitted into the British one, because that was aristocratic and we had no aristocracy. This was not a grievance, but it was a good cause for national separation. The Declaration, like many popular documents, substituted sentiment for sense, passion for wisdom, fiction and rhetoric for history and fact, concealed the double merits of the case, and helped on the war, in the same way that the stupidity of George III. did. The writer whose views of the case loom up before the present generation as the most wise was Adam Smith, who, in 'The Wealth of Nations,' labored to bring about a representation of the colonies in the British Parliament, an idea which, had it been properly tried, could hardly be regarded as impracticable in an age which professes to sympathize with Tennyson's 'parliament of nations—a federation of the world.'"

A Bruno Festival.

The proposition of Byron Adonis in a recent number of THE TRUTH SEEKER in regard to a suitable observance of the 16th of February, the anniversary of the burning of Giordano Bruno at the stake, by Christians, for propagating scientific truths, is deserving of attention.

If it is proposed to change the date of the beginning of the year, the 16th of February may be as good a starting point as the present one, though to begin from the sacrifice of a human being is not pleasant to contemplate; and, if the proposed new calendar is to supplant the old one, the sooner the work is commenced the better, but in the first place all (i.e., all Liberals) should be agreed as to its feasibility.

The celebration of the 16th of February will announce the respect in which the memory of Bruno is held by the scientific and thinking world, and that is no small thing in itself.

And, if considered advisable to date the year from the 16th, it can certainly be accomplished, and would show a spirit of independence, very commendable in Freethinkers, in renouncing Anno Domini for Anno Homo.

"Why," said an old fogyish friend, "my dear child, you Liberal folks undertake too much—Janerary one is the New Year's beginning, all over the lot, and 'tisn't possible to change it!"

"To wisdom all things are possible, i. e., all that are of worth or use," was my reply.

My old fogyish friend shook his head sadly as he muttered, "I'm afraid she's rather jiggery!"

But to change the beginning of the year is not so much of an event or effort, when several thousands set about it. It was the ancients who had obstacles, many and perverse, to encounter, and I wonder how they managed so well, with their lack of scientific knowledge, with no suitable apparatus for measuring and apportioning time and distance.

With what profound amazement, what reverent joy, would they look upon the perfected telescope, and all the astronomical and other mechaninsm so necessary to the modern scientist, all evolved by genius without prohibition or hindrance!

How would the heart of Bruno beat with delight were he living in our day, and with what avidity would he grasp the problems of science!

Once it was supposed time could only be reckoned from the Olympiads, and any innovation of the custom would be considered heterodox.

The Babylonian era of Nabonassar commenced on the 26th of February, at high noon, and is of special interest from the fact that it is exact in astronomical determination. The history of calendars and chronology is interesting and curious.

The Mohammedans hav no fixed time for the beginning of the year; neither hav the Chinese, but date from the beginning of the accession of the reigning emperor. The calendar of the Jews is like that of the ancient Greeks and they date from the time of the supposed creation of the world, beginning the year at the vernal equinox; and so also do the Russians. Among the Peruvians the year began at the winter solstice, and among the Mexicans at the vernal equinox. The ancient Egyptians, Chaldeans, Persians, and contemporary nations, began their new year at the vernal equinox, March 22d. The Roman year began at the winter solstice, but among the Latin nations there were, at one time, seven different dates for the commencement of the year. In France the year began under the Merovingians, March 1st. When the Christian religion became recognized, writers began dating from various epochs in the history of Jesus.

The first day of January began the New Year in Europe three hundred years ago. In 1852, Pope Gregory XIII. ordained it so to be, but it was not fully adopted in England till 1751, when the famous Lord Chesterfield secured the passage of a measure in the English Parliament which made the New Year the first of January; previous to that time, from the 14th century, the New Year began March 25th,

Thus it may be seen by a study of the chronology of the past, which I hav briefly sketched, that a change of the beginning of the New Year may be accomplished in the future, as has been done in the past.

It would certainly be an improvement on the old Christian calendar, with its myths and fables, to institute a new and better era dating from the time when science could no longer be suppressed; but whether the anniversary of the martyrdom of that great-hearted and brave hero Bruno, who was willing to suffer imprisonment and be burnt at the stake, rather than relinquish his cherished facts, should be made a day of festivity and joy, is debatable It would be wise, however, to remember the event with appropriate speeches, poems, and sketches of his life and character, and, in this manner, we think it should be observed by all friends of truth and science. SUSAN H. WIXON.

Fall River, Mass., Jan. 31, 283.

Letters from Friends.

LYNN, MASS., Jan. 13, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I here inclose $2 50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER for another year, and $1 for the Monument Fund. I hope the brave old TRUTH SEEKER will continue the good fight against bigotry and superstition, which was so gallantly commenced by its heroic founder, D. M. Bennett, and that that hard-headed and thick-skulled bigot, the Rev. Joseph Cook, with all his presumption and conceit, shall yet learn a little common sense from the followers of Thomas Paine and D. M. Bennett through the New York TRUTH SEEKER. Yours truly, J. S. V.

FARLINVILLE, Jan. 17, 1883.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: I hav been a subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER for several years, and cannot very well do without it, but hav been behind since November, 1882. I hav always felt it to be my duty to humanity to extend the circulation of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The news of the death of Mr. Bennett fell like a thunderbolt on me, which seemed to pierce me through and through. But a greater sorrow was awaiting me, for since that time my own loved companion has been taken away by death. She, too, was a truth seeker, battling against the popular superstitions of the day, never allowing an opportunity to pass without lifting her voice in favor of truth and liberty. Her belief with regard to the future was like that of Mr. Bennett—that it was no more unreasonable to believe that we shall liv hereafter than that we liv now; and claimed that she had strong proofs in her past experience in support of the fact of a continued conscious existence.

She passed away quietly and calmly on the 4th of this month. She was fully conscious to the last, having no fear of death, and having no regrets except to leave her children; thus giving the lie to the oft-repeated statement from the pulpit, that an unbeliever in the Christian religion cannot die peacefully.

"High hopes that glowed like stars sublime
Go down in the heavens of freedom,
And brave hearts perish in the time
We bitterliest need them.
Yet never sit we down and say,
There's nothing left but sorrow;
We walk the wilderness to-day,
The promised land to-morrow."

Yours in sympathy, HENRY E. DEWEY.

PORTSMOUTH, ENGLAND, Jan. 10, 1883.

MY DEAR MRS. BENNEET: It is with regret that I am compelled to address this epistle to you, and not to your late and beloved partner. Please pardon my freedom in style; it is from my heart. I feel that it is my duty, and in which my wife joins, in endeavoring to console you in your sad bereavement. It must be a comfort to you to know the esteem and regard in which he was held wherever he traveled, as is shown in the beautiful letters in THE TRUTH SEEKER, chiefly from residents in your own country. I, who am a foreigner by birth but not foreign in sympathy with my late friend, Mr. Bennett, also join with friends in America in consoling you, and hope that you may hav health and strength to allow the name to go forth to the world for many years, The portrait of himself, which Mr. Bennett caused to be sent to me after visiting Portsmouth, was immediately framed, and is suspended in my room with those of Colonel Ingersoll, Charles Bradlaugh, W. E. Gladstone, John Bright, myself and family. As long as I can look on his manly brow I shall not forget the day he spent with me. He could not stay longer, being wanted by Mr. Bradlaugh on the Sunday.

At the last meeting of the Portsmouth branch of the National Secular Society a resolution was heartily and unanimously passed that I should write to Mrs. Bennett to express the sorrow felt by its members at the loss sustained by her and the world, especially that of America, and that she will please accept of their love and esteem. It must hav been a comfort to her to hav had him at home instead of his being in a foreign land at time of death.

I hav inclosed a postal order for nineteen shillings to Mary W. Bennett, for the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World," and a year's subscription for THE TRUTH SEEKER, which Mrs. Brumage and I hav looked for weekly, as much as our own country's papers, watching Mr. Bennett's movements and gaining knowledge by his writings. We shall still anxiously look out for them, wishing the papers all success. Mrs. Brumage joins me in forwarding to you our kindest regards, and that you may long enjoy good health is the sincere desire of Yours fraternally, JOHN E. BRUMAGE.

CHENEY, Jan. 5, 283.

MR. EDITOR; Liberal hearts all over the country are grieving at the untimely death of D. M. Bennett. I say untimely, because we were expecting soon to meet him with his wife, lecturing and visiting through the United States. We would hav been more reconciled to spare him had we been enabled to shake the hand and look into the eye of the noble self-sacrificer to the eternal principle of justice—the one who had suffered persecution and imprisonment for righteousness sake. But it was not to be. We must submit to the inevitable. Like Horace Greeley, his spirit must hav been broken partially by the malignant abuse heaped continually upon him by his enemies, of whom no one had more bitter ones, and at the same time none had warmer and truer friends than D. M. Bennett.

From the letter of a friend, just received, I quote: ". . . . Yes, our brother is dead. Another intellectual, fearless, outspoken hero has fallen. The stormy waters of Jordan could not claim him for a victim, though its turbulent waves passed over him. By energy he was victor. He was spared to complete his task, to send forth a power that will be felt by generations to come. He has left a name that will be written on the tablets of human intellect, that has no bounds like the veteran's journey. He has gone, but his works will liv; and, while sorrowing, we should feel that we hav been highly favored to realize that he had the privilege to arrive home welcomed by hosts of warm friends. . . . . Though our brother has taken his long farewell, ... all must die. . . . . We hav his invaluable works."

I inclose my dollar for the Bennett Monument Fund. Peace to the ashes of the loved and honored D. M. Bennett. ANNIE EVEREST.

PARISH, ILL., Jan. 9, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Seeing the letter of C. R. Leonhaeuser in your issue of Dec. 16, 1882, I desire to say a few words in regard to the Inquisition being exercised over Masons for an unbelief in the God of the Bible. Masonry at one time was considered Infidelity by the Christian church, and it is yet by the largest Christian denomination in Christendom—the Catholic church. But the ministers of some of these other Christian denominations, seeing that they are getting but very few of the best and most intelligent men of our country into their folds, and finding that many of these men are members of secret societies such as the Masons, Odd Fellows, etc., hav made up their minds, like the mouse in the fable, that if the mountain will not come, they must go to the mountain. And there among the Masons—an order which is more widely spread over the world than any other order, an order ante-dating Christianity hundreds of years—they find men of thought and intellect—progressiv men—men who when they joined the order were Deists, many of them conscientious Christians. But through the investigation of scientific thought they hav been led to look upon many things which at one time they had accepted as settled facts as only the machinations of priestcraft. And as a consequence they hav become Agnostics, or perhaps Atheists. Then comes the opportunity for the minister or some of his bigoted tools to put in their work—to put a gag in the mouth of a brother by telling him that he must quit advocating Freethought or take the chances of being expelled from the order. And thus it is that ministers are trying to capture Masonry and other secret societies that are using the Christian Bible in the work of their orders—that they may turn them and use them for their own priestly purposes. And in this way are they putting padlocks on the lips of many good, honest Freethinkers, who love the order to which they belong, out who utterly despise the assumptions of priestcraft. Many such are subscribers for and readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER and other Liberal papers, and many more would be were it not for the fear of these ministers knowing it. The only safe way for Masonry and all others that use any form of ceremony that in any way or manner binds its membership to the acceptance of the dogmas of Christianity to the extent of expulsion of good, honest, upright, moral men, is to so change and eliminate from their rituals all religious tests of membership whatever, or these orders themselvs will be inevitably compelled to suffer the waning fortunes of the declining Christian church. From one who knows whereof he speaks.

Yours, J. W. PUCKETT.

LAKE MILLS, IOWA, Jan. 6, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $4 00, to pay for my paper for 1883, and the fourth volume of Mr. Bennett's travels. I hav received three volumes all correct, and now I want the fourth in order that I may hav the set complete. I must say that thus far the work is a wonderful production of observation. The descriptions given are so detailed and minute that it does not require the aid of the powers of imagination to see things as they were seen by the writer. The plain and naked truth is written in such language that the common reader can understand. Has there been any man who has traveled six months in the heathen lands who has made any report that he saw less crime and fewer criminals, and less intoxication by ardent spirits than all the Christian lands traversed by Mr. Bennett? I hav not yet learned the fact, if so. Yes, it is a fact that as parents teach, so is the child. The parents of the Christian religion were lovers and drinkers of intoxicating drinks, and the child is not to be altogether blamed for the transmission of that cursed evil. In all the good teachings of the Nazarene there was not a word of warning given of the evils of intemperance; but on the contrary Christ seemed to inculcate the opposit course by such acts as turning water into wine, when the pure juice was not at hand.

In common with the many thousand that mourn the departure of Mr. Bennett I greatly deplore his loss, for he was a great commander, but such is the fate of man. Many a general has been cut down while in the front of battle, and yet victory was won. So let it be with your paper. Go on with the battle—soldiers are enlisting every day. Mythical gods and devils must be driven to the wall, and truth, liberty, and justice must and will reign supreme. I hav been receiving your paper four years or more, and it seems better to me every year. It brings messages that educate me, it bears testimony of many a good soul I feel like shouting amen to. And this is not all; it gives one of the best receipts in the world for washing and cleansing and making white as snow the souls of men. I hav analyzed the receipt, and not one drop of the precious blood of Jesus does it contain. Any one can get the receipt by becoming a subscriber to the paper for the year 1883, on application to the editor, or to T. B. Wakeman, or perhaps H. W. Beecher, or Brother Thomas of Chicago has by this time the same receipt. Yours always for the right,

S. D. WADSWORTH.

P. S.—You can put me down for one dollar for the Bennett monument, and more for the continuance of the life of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Let the spirit of D. M. Bennett yet reign supreme, till all mythical gods and devils shall be trodden under the foot of truth and liberty.

A LETTER TO ABBIE KNAPP.

BOZEMAN, MONTANA, Dec. 28, 282.

DEAR SISTER ABBIE: In reply to your card on the death of our standard-bearer, unyielding champion, untiring worker, and martyr hero—D. M. Bennett—the lover of truth, the hater of lies, the friend of humanity, the foe of priests, the bane of Christianity, the balm for the oppressed, the scorner of superstition, the savior of the world—let me say, never before has my sorrow been so intense at the voice of death. Inwardly, every first thought, when it springs upon my mind, brings the presentment that our loss is irreparable. Then again I look out upon the world and see Freethought wearing her crown of brains, and Reason reposing serenely upon her throne; then I say, We hav nothing to fear. I only see a momentary ripple on the onward tide of human thought. Beyond that, in the background, I plainly see priestcraft, that arch-enemy of humanity and liberty, in the last throes of ignominious death; and Freethought, Morality, and Love springing pure and grand from her decayed and dying carcass. Yes, when out of the death and chaos of superstition I see the beautiful garlands of mental liberty twine round the feet of Freedom's science, and hang about in golden wreaths; when I see unrestrained freedom of thought, and no longer see that savage and merciless priest with outstretched arm and fleshless hand, trying with eager zeal and fiendish hate to clutch with brutal grasp every onward move; when I no longer see infuriated fiends, abiding in pandemonium realms, leap upon Progression's restless spirit; then again I say, We hav nothing to fear—all is well.

Yet I must say I do not think anyone of this age has contributed so much to the downfall of the priests as D. M. Bennett. He was a constant "thorn in their side." I think we hav men intellectually as capable, yet it may be a long time before we hav another who will throw his whole soul into the cause as he did. To my mind there is no question that his death, just at this time, is a serious loss. We will miss him in our work; we will miss him as a friend. To me he had become as a companion. Although I had never met him, his spirit that went went out to all humanity seemed omnipresent. It was borne on the wings of THE TRUTH SEEKER—that "angel of light with healing on its wings." It was "Jack the Giant-Killer"—the Jehovah iconoclast—lowering itself in a pillar of fire on the Sinai of superstition, scattering its "golden calf" to the four winds of the heavens. But our Bennett never "put his sword by his side, going in and out from gate to gate, murdering every man his brother, every man his neighbor, and every man his companion" THE TRUTH SEEKER must not die; it cannot die; it will not die. Its brave pilot, the renowned Bennett, guided it through its darkest days. It is now a permanent institution. Some Eugene will stand at the helm, and if Bennett could not liv to see his work completed, THE TRUTH SEEKER will. It is for us, and all Liberals, to keep it up. Then let us all go forth to the battle, "powerful as an army with banners."

Respectfully, TOM BURK.

Wicked Proclamation!!

TO HIS FELLOW-BEINGS OF THE EARTH AND NONE OTHER, FROM THE SINFUL MAN IN CHARGE OF

THE AGE.

[Late Seymour Times]

ALLEGED WICKED PAPER—Wicked for the reason, that it has but few principles and nary politic to its name; and for the further reason that it is the only great paper in the Great West that is able to run without a god or devil or ghost. In fact, it attempts to teach:

Goodness without a god,
Happiness without a heaven,
Salvation without a savior,
And redemption without a redeemer.

The Age is a little down on middle men, either in matters earthly or ethereal. It fails to see the necessity of a vast host of able-bodied, well-dressed managers of matters between men and the powers in the clouds. If a man's soul is to be saved by man's work, the man that has the soul has got to do the work.

The Age loves the women, and if a man treats even a fallen woman rudely and brutally it gets out a shot-gun and shoots the man and wounds him. It then rolls him over and steps on him and mashes him. It then marches him off and makes him join the church; or he may take two copies of The Age till he develops into a man.

The Age is the paper for pious women to read, because it defends their beloved pastors when accused of carryings-on after the manner of the wicked worldlian who knows not God.

The Age has pity for the victims of misplaced confidence—the little boys that fish in rain-barrels, and the feeble-minded ministers and priests that, rolling their eyes upward, implore vacuity and nothingness to feed and clothe them and to confound their enemies.

The Age will giv five dollars a head for ghosts, and fifteen hundred dollars a head for virgins who are mothers, and it wants all it can get. It will giv fifteen million dollars, or half it is worth (in advertising and job work—terms cash) for some man who will say he really believes there was ever a father who was the son of himself, or a son who was the father of himself, or a ghost who was both of 'em, or either of 'em, or all of 'em

The Age will enter its 28th year March 31st, 1883, no preventing providence, so you see it has age as well as beauty and piety to commend it to the good; still it is neither the biggest nor the best paper going, but it fills several long-felt wants, and you want it.

In writing for The Age, inclose money and state your age and sex. Say if you hav any religion to lean upon when you cheat your neighbor or starve your horse or cow. If married, state if your wife is jealous without a cause, for the chances are about 50 in 49 that she has a cause. But if she has no cause, and is yet jealous, we will giv you the paper for a year. If you hav an immortal soul say so like a man, and state if it has ever been of use to you and the creatures about you. If you havn't an immortal soul (and the chances are that you havn't), the Age will teach you how to get along and be useful and good without one.

We want to hear from you, handle your money, and help you to heaven by the cheap route that costs no quarterage and is sustained by no quackery.

The intrinsic value of The Age (to humanity) is $52 a year for every 52 copies; but for you whose eye is upon this, seeing that you are a liberal fellow and honest, the paper will go at the ruinous rates (to the proprietor and your soul) of—

One year, - - - - - - $2.50.
Six months, - - - - - $1.40.
Three months, - - - - - 75 cts,

—and may man hav mercy upon all of us.

Revised at Indianapolis, Ind., Dec. 23d in the year of American independence 107—in Christian computation, 1882, which computation, by the way, is based upon an alleged event that never happened, or if did, it is uncertain when, and in any event it was of no sort of consequence, and therefore, being a starting-point for superstition only, ought now to be discarded. Address.

J. R. MONROE, Indianapolis, Ind.

WANTED.

To hire a small house near New York in the country. Must be comfortable to live in the year around and rent low. On high ground, a little way out in a small village, on Long Island or in New Jersey. Main object a healthy location free from malaria, where weaklings can recuperate. Address COUNTRY,
Care of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

HEALTH HINTS TO WOMEN.

By W. D. SCHOTT,

It tells you: What Physicians should tell their Patients, but do not! How to Avoid Contracting "Doctors' Bills!" How to Have Good Health without taking Medicines! Hints on every subject pertaining to the Health of Women and Children.

Heavy, toned paper, good margins; extra cloth. 12mo, 319 pp. $1.50.

PURPOSE OF THE WORK.

The author's design is to give a general outline of the laws and conditions of health, with directions for the prevention of sickness and care of the sick.

The delicate subjects necessarily included in this work are treated with utmost propriety.

Although written primarily for women, this work will be found almost equally useful to all. Most persons cannot be too frequently reminded of the truth of the old proverb, "An ounce of prevention is worth more than a pound of cure." The first step in the cure of disease is to remove the cause; then, in nearly all cases, nature will remove the difficulty without other aid

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
21 Clinton Place, New York.

MUCH FOR LITTLE

We hav on hand a goodly number

—OF—

VOLUMES I. AND II.

—OF—

The Truth Seeker,

published in 1874 and 1875,

the same securely bound in good paper covers. The first volume is a monthly, and the second a semi-monthly. Vol. I. contains 160 pp, and Vol. II. 256 pp. We are disposed to send these out to friends who wish them at a trifle above the postage. We will send

VOLUME I. FOR 25 CENTS,

—AND—

VOLUME II. FOR 50 CENTS.

THEY CONTAIN

a large amount of reading matter, and are worth nearly ten times the amount asked for them. They also are worth not a little to show what THE TRUTH SEEKER was in the first and second years of its existence. Let those who wish to secure these volumes not fail to make their wants known.

Address this office.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.

Being 3,000 questions propounded to his Jewish Godship upon a great variety of subjects.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

THE FIRST EPISTLE

OF

Bennett the Apostle.

TO

THE TRUTH SEEKERS.

From the Borders of the LAND OF YAHWEH.

Being ten chapters of Excellent Moral Maxims and Instructions, somewhat after the style of Paul.

Price Ten Cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, N. Y. city.

WHAT OBJECTIONS TO CHRISTIANITY.

THE

Bennett-Mair Discussion.

BETWEEN

D. M. BENNETT and G. M. MAIR.

(CONTAINING 969 PAGES.)

The fullest Discussion yet Published, giving the Dogmas and Claims of Christianity a thorough Examination pro and con.

Price, - - - - - - - - $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place New York.

Alamontada, the Galley-Slave.

A narrativ by

Johann Heinrich Daniel Zschokke.

Translated from the German by
IRA G. MOSHER, LL.B.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, N.Y.

Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

CENTENARY OF VOLTAIRE.

VOLTAIRE IN EXILE:

His Life and Works in France and Abroad.

England, Holland, Belgium, Prussia, Switzerland), and unpublished letters of Voltaire and Mme. Du Chatelet.

BY BENJAMIN GASTINEAU.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

ECCE DIABOLUS,

In which the worship of Yahweh, or Jehovah is shown to be devil-worship, with some observations upon the horrible and cruel ordinance of bloody sacrifice and burnt-offerings.

By the very Rev EVAN DAVIES, D.D., LL.D.
Arch-Druid of Great Britain Price, 25 cents.

"ANTICHRIST."

Proving conclusivly that

THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST

His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth.

TRUTH SEEKER Office.
Price, $2 00 21 Clinton Place, New York

THE RADICAL PULPIT.

Comprising discourses of advanced thought by

O. B. FROTHINGHAM and FELIX ADLER

two of America's clearest thinkers.

Price [illegible]

FROM BEHIND THE BARS.

A series of letters written in prison

By D. M. BENNETT.

Over 700 pages Price $1 50

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Me.

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.

A TRUTH SEEKER

Around the World.

FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last word penned by the great author were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter. The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place,
New York city.

THE BIBLE OF THE RELIGION of SCIENCE.

By H. S. Brown, M. D.,

Author of "A Permanent Republic cannot be established by Despotic Family Laws," "Scientific Spiritualism is the Basis of a Scientific Religion and Government," and other works.

"This volume is most respectfully dedicated to those persons who will cordially unite with others to establish the religion of truth and a just government, by the scientific methods of reason, experience, experiments and observations. For this is the way to wisdom, and to the material, mental, moral, social and spiritual sciences, that make peace on earth and good will among men."

The work is divided into five books, containing twenty-five chapters, is printed on clear white paper, in large type and embraces over four hundred pages.
Cloth. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

BIBLE MYTHS

AND THEIR PARALLELS IN OTHER RELIGIONS.

BEING A COMPARISON OF THE

Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles,

With those of Heathen Nations of Antiquity.

CONSIDERING ALSO

THEIR ORIGIN AND MEANING.

WITH NUMEROUS ILLUSTRATIONS.

Cloth, $4.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

The object of this work is to point out the myths with which the Old and New Testaments abound: to show what they were held in common with other nations; and then to trace them to their evident origin and explain their meaning.

It contains quotations from nearly all the sacred books of heathen nations, and from other rare and valuable works which are not accessible to people in general The chapters are so arranged that it is a perfect cyclopædia of reference. Years of research would be necessary to discover all the information it contains. It is a most searching investigation into the origin of Christianity. Every fact is verified by copious notes and authorities, so that it may be trusted as a thoroughly reliable work. It contains information which will be startling to many.

SOCIALISM

—AND—

UTILITARIANISM.

By John Stuart Mill.

PRICE 1.50. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE.

THE IMAGE BREAKER.

A Series or Radical Pamphlets.

BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

No. 1. The Decline of Faith.
No. 2. Protestant Intolerance.
No. 3. Washington an Unbeliever.
No. 4. Jefferson an Unbeliever.
No. 5. Paine and Wesley.
No. 6. The Christian Sabbath.

No 1 proves by the concurrent testimony of more than a score of eminent scholars and divines that the dissolution of the Christian system of religion is near at hand.

No. 2 portrays the bloody and intolerant career of Protestantism.

Nos. 3 and 4 present an overwhelming array of evidence in support of the fact that Washington and Jefferson were Infidels.

No 5 compares and contrasts the labors of Paine and Wesley, particularly in the American Revolution, where the latter violently opposed the cause of independence as attested by numerous passages cited from his writings of this period.

No. 6 gives a brief history of the Christian Sabbath refutes the false claims of theologians respecting it, and makes an earnest plea for the abrogation of Sabbatarian laws.

Price, single copies, 5 cents. Per dozen, 40 cents. Per hundred, $2.50, Per thousand, $20.00. Postpaid. Sold at this office.

TO TRIAL SUBSCRIBERS

The Truth Seeker,

With sixteen large pages, will be sent for THREE MONTHS, postage paid,

FOR FIFTY CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

The Busts of PAINE and VOLTAIRE.

By the celebrated sculptor

CLARK MILLS

Price, . . $1.50 each.

Address D. M. BENNETT,
21 Clinton Place, New York

FOR GIRLS.

A

SPECIAL PHYSIOLOGY,

OR,

Supplement to the Study of General Physiology.

ILLUSTRATED.

BY MRS. E. R. SHEPHERD.

12mo. EXTRA CLOTH. PRICE $1.00.

We hav here a work, the need of which has long been felt by all intelligent women, and especially by mothers and teachers, conveying to girls that special knowledge so important to them, but which, for proper reasons, must be omitted altogether from the general and school physiologies. Written in a careful and entirely unobjectionable manner, it is so plain and practical as to be easily understood, and its perusal is sure to leave an impression of the importance of the subject on the minds of the readers. It discusses the physiology of woman; the proper relation of dress to comfor and health: the age of puberty; menstruation; some of the diseases of women, their causes and prevention; something about marriage and motherhood, and many other topics of importance

The special attention of mothers and teachers is called to this book, with the hope that they will read it, and convey to their daughters or girls in their charge the information given; or, better still, after reading, place it in the hands of the girls for whom it was written. Sold at this office.

SING, BROTHERS, SING.

USE THE

Liberal Hymn-Book

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. The LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets adapted to well known tunes. It is highly commended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and indeed by all who hav examined it. Second edition. Price, half-bound, 25 cents. In cloth, 40 cents. Sold at this office.

THE NEW VERSION.

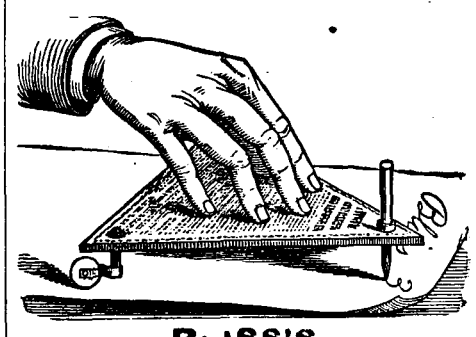
Lectures by George Chainey.

IN EXPLANATION OF THE BIBLE, FROM GENESIS TO REVELATIONS.

CONTENTS:

The New Version.	Extraordinary Saints.
Nothing.	Priestcraft.
Utopias.	The Heart of Yahweh.
The Descent of Man.	The Folly of Solomon.
The Wandering Jew.	Self-Respect.
Fair Play.	Priest and Prophet.
A Biblical Romance.	The Hope of the World.
Bricks Without Straw.	Iconoclasm.
Celestial Barbarism.	The Man Jesus.
Divine Brigandage.	The New Religion.

Printed on a fine quality of paper, handsomely bound in cloth and uniform in size with first bound volume Price $1.00. For sale at this office.



THE YOUTH'S

LIBERAL GUIDE

FOR THEIR MORAL CULTURE AND RELIGIOUS ENLIGHTENMENT.

By Prof. H. M. Kottinger A.M.

Translated from the revised German edition. Price, cloth, $1. For sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

BLISS'S Electro-Magnetic Planchette,

A wonderful and mysteriouslittle instrument that combines electricity and animal magnetism in assisting Spirit intelligence to communicate through it with mortals. It has been in the market a little over two years, and during that time thousands of skeptical persons, yes, downright Materialists, hav been convinced that this Planchette has been MOVED BY A POWER independent of themselvs while their hands hav been placed passivly upon it.

THE ADVANTAGES CLAIMED OVER OTHER PLANCHETTES.

First. A paste-board top in place of oiled, stained, or varnished wood.

Second. Five miniature batteries upon the top of each Planchette, upon which the fingers rest.

Third Each Planchette is separately magnetized and a signed a band of developing spirits.

Price, Fifty Cents Each.

Sent post-paid, securely packed in a neat box to any part of the United States upon receipt of price. For sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

ENGLISH PUBLICATIONS.

Strauss and Renan; an essay by E. Zeller. Translated from the German. $1.25.

The Apocryphal New Testament; being all the gospels, epistles, and other pieces now extant, attributed in the first four centuries to Jesus Christ, his apostles, and their companions, and not included in the New Testament by its compilers. $2 25.

The Coming Era. By Alexander Calder, 8vo., 425 pp. $3.50.

History of Rationalism; embracing a survey of the present state of Protestant theology, with an appendix of literature. By John F. Hurst, D.D. $2 50.

The English Life of Jesus. By Thomas Scott. $2.50

Idols and Ideals; with an essay on Christianity. By Moncure D. Conway, M.A. $3.

Brief History of the Indian People, containing a map of the Indian Empire. By W. W. Hunter. Price $1.75

Legends of the Old Testament traced to their apparent primitive sources. By Thomas Lumisden Strange. $2 25.

Life and Struggles of Wm. Lovett, in his pursuit of bread, knowledge, and freedom. $3.

The Sources and Development of Christianity. By Thomas Lumisden Strange. $2.25.

Essence of Christianity. Translated from the German of Ludwig Feuerbach. By Marian Evans. $3.75.

The Life of Jesus, for the People, with an introduction of 28 pages. By David Friedrich Strauss; 2 vols. 8vo. $10

A Commentary on the Text of the Bhagavad-Gita; or, the Discourse between Krishna and Arjuna of Divine Matters. Cloth, $1.75

A Forecast of the Religion of the Future. Being short essays on some important questions in religious philosophy. By W. W Clark. $1.50.

The Language and Literature of China. Two lectures. By Robert K. Douglas. $2.25.

The Development of Creation on the Earth. By T. L. Strange. Cloth, $1.25.

The African Sketch Book, with maps and 11 illustrations. By Winwood Reade; 2 vols. $4.

New Religious Thoughts. By Douglas Campbell. Second edition. $2.

Letters of William Von Humboldt to a Female Friend. Translated from the German by Catharine M. A. Cooper. 2 vols. Cloth, $2.75.

The Life of Jenghiz Khan. Translated from the Chinese by R. K. Douglas. Cloth, $1.50.

The Jade Chaplet. A collection of songs from the Chinese. By G. C. Stent. Cloth, $1 50.

The Sphere and Duties of Government. Translated from the German of Baron Wilhelm Von Humboldt by Joseph Coultnard Jr. Cloth, $1.50.

Nagananda; or, the Joy of the Snake World. A Buddhist drama in five acts. Translated from the Sanskrit by Palmer Boyd, B.A. Cloth, $1.50.

Reverberations. By W. M. W. Call. Cloth, $1.50.

Heroes and Martyrs of Freethought. By Charles Watts and G. W. Foote. $1

Review of the work of Mr. John Stuart Mill entitled "Examination of Sir William Hamilton's Philosophy." By George Grote. Cloth, $1.

Sermons Never Preached. By Philip Phosphor. $1.

The Folk-Songs of Southern India. By C. E Gover. Cloth, $3.

Truth vs. Edification. By W. R. Greg. Cloth, 50 cents.

The Unity of Creation. By F. H. Kingston. Cloth, 85 cents.

Theism, Doctrinal and Practical. By F. W. Newman. Cloth, $2.25.

Hebrew Theism. By F. W. Newman. $2.

Morning Prayers in the household of a believer in God. Limp cloth, 50 cents.

Scenes from the Ramayana, Meghaduta, etc. Translated by Ralph T. H. Griffith, M.A., Principal of the Benares College. Cloth $1.7 .

The Value of this Earthly Life. A reply to W. H. Mallock's "Is Life Worth Living?" 40 cents.

Life and Mind, on the basis of modern medicin. By R. Lewins, M.D. 75 cents.

The Book of Job. By J. A. Froude, M. A. 50 cents.

Secularists' Manual of Songs and Ceremonies. 40 cents.

The Dathavansa; or, the History of the Tooth Relic of Gautama Buddha, in Pali verse. Edited, with an English translation, by Mutu Coomara Swamy. Cloth, $1.75.

What is Vital Force? Treating of Vital Physics, Animal Morphology, and Epidemics, with an Appendix on Geology. By Richard Fawcett Battye. Cloth, $2.25.

Retrospect of the Religious Life of England; or, the Church Puritanism and Free Inquiry. By John J. Tayler, B. A, $2,50.

Ancient Mysteries Described; Especially the English miracle plays, founded on Apocryphal New Testament story, including notices of Ecclesiastical shows, etc. By Wm. Hone. Illustrated. $2.25.

Sutta Nipata; or, Dialogues and Discourses of Gautama Buddha (2,500 years old). By Mutu Coomara Swamy. $1.75.

Monuments of Upper Egypt. By Mariette-Bey. $2.00.

Wit, Wisdom, and Pathos. From the prose of Heinrich Heine. Selected and translated by J. Snodgrass. Cloth, $3.75.

The Speaker's Commentary. Reviewed by T. L. Strange. Cloth, $1.25.

Biography of Charles Bradlaugh. By Adolphus Headingley. 332 pp., crown 8vo. $2. 0.

Civilized Christianity. A Reply to "Modern Christianity a Civilized Heathenism." Being some reflections on orthodoxy. Cloth, 50 cents.

Edda Sæmundar Hinns Froda. The Edda of Sæmund the Learned, translated from the Old Norse by Benjamin Thorpe. Cloth, $2 25.

Extracts from the Koran. Compiled by Sir Wm. Muir, K.C.S.I., LL.D. Cloth, $1.

The Church under the Tudors. By Durham Dunlap, M R.I A. 75 cents.

Republican Superstitions as illustrated in the Political History of America. By Moncure D. Conway, M A. $1.25.

In Search of Truth. Conversations on the Bible and Popular Theology. By A.M.Y. Cloth, 75 cents.

The Saint's Travel to the Land of Canaan. By R. Wilkinson, Cloth, 75 cents.

History of the Great French Revolution; A course of six lectures. By Annie Besant. Cloth, 50 cents.

Freethinkers' Text-Book. The history of Freethought, its rise, progress, and triumph. In cloth, $1.25.

Theological Essays and Debates. By Annie Besant. $1.25.

The Founders of Christianity; or, Discourses upon the Origin of the Christian Religion. By Rev. James Crambrook. Cloth, $3.00.

The Trial of Theism. Handsomely bound. 260 pages. $2 00.

Credibilia; or. Discourses on Questions of Christian Faith. By Rev. James Cranbrook. Cloth, $1.00.

Rig-Veda-Sanhita. The Sacred Hymns of the Brahmans Translated and explained by F. Max Muller, M.A., L.L.D. Vol. I. $3 75.

Mind in Animals. By Prof. Ludwig Buchner. Translated from the German by Annie Besant. $3.50.

ENGLISH PAMPHLETS.

Auguste Comte; Biography of the great French thinker, with sketches of his philosophy, his religion, and his sociology; being a short and convenient resume of Positivism for the general reader. By Annie Besant. 25 cents.

Christianity. By Moncure D. Conway, M. A. 50 cents.

Christianity in Relation to Freethought Skepticism, and Faith. Replies to three discourses by the Bishop of Peterborough. By Chas. Bradlaugh. 20 cents.

Clericalism in France; Speech of Prince Napoleon Bonaparte to the Chamber of Deputies, Nov. 24, 1876. 25 cents.

Disestablishment and Disendowment of the English Church. Verbatim reports of two night's between Chas. Bradlaugh and W. Simpson. 25 cts.

Essays, chiefly Theological. By Melapus. 25 cents.

Four Nights' Discussion; Between Rev. Alexander Stewart and Chas Watts. 25 cents

Human Sacrifices in England: Four discourses by Moncure D. Conway, M. A 50 cents.

Is it Reasonable to Worship God? A two-nights' debate by Chas. Bradlaugh and Rev. R. A. Armstrong, 40 cents.

Impeachment of the House of Brunswick. By Chas. Bradlaugh. 40 cents.

The Meaning of History; Two lectures by Frederick Harrison, M. A. 50 cents.

Merits and Demerits of Secularism; A discussion between the Rev. Thomas Crow and Charles Watts. 25 cents.

Natural Reason vs. Divine Revelation; An appeal for Freethought. By "Julian." 25 cents.

On the Philosophical Classification of National Institutions; A lecture by F. W. Newman 25 cents.

Reasoning from Facts; A method of everyday logic. By G. J. Holyoake. 75 cents.

Secularism in Its Various Relations. By Chas. Watts. 25 cents.

Secularism the True Philosophy of Life; An exposition and a defense. By G. W. Foote. 20 cents.

Taxation; How it Originated, Who Bears it and Who ought to Bear it. By Chas. Bradlaugh. 25 cents.

The Bible and Xianity. By Chas. Watts. 20 cents.

Thoughts on Theism; With suggestions toward a public religious service in harmony with modern science and philosophy. Revised and enlarged. 50 cents.

Wealthy and Wise; A lecture introductory to the study of political economy, By Joseph Hiam Levy. 25 cents.

What does Xian Theism Teach? A two nights' discussion between the Rev. A. J. Harrison and Chas, Bradlaugh. 25 cents.

When Were Our Gospels Written? Reply to Dr. Tischendorf. 25 cents.

FARADAY PAMPHLETS.

No. 1.—The Relation of the Spiritual to the Material Universe; the Law of control: Two papers given in the interest of Spiritual Science, by Spirit FARADAY, of England. Price, 10 cents

No. 2.—Origin of Life; or, Where Man Comes From. The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter through Organic Processes; or, How the Spirit Body Grows. By Spirit FARADAY. Price, 10 cents.

No. 3.—The Development of the Spirit After Transition.—The Origin of Religion. By Spirit FARADAY Price, 10 cents

No. 4.—The Process of Mental Action; or, How We Think. By Spirit FARADAY. Price, 15 cents.

Achsa W. Sprague's and Mary Clark's Experiences in the First Ten Spheres of Spirit Life. Medium, ATHALDINE SMITH, Oswego, N. Y. Price, 2 cents.

No. 1.—Experiences of Samuel Bowles (late editor of the Springfield Mass., Republican) in Spirit-Life; or, Life as He Now Sees It from a Spiritual Standpoint. Written through the Mediumship of CARRIE E. S TWING, of Westfield, N. Y. Price 20 cents.

No. 2.—Contrasts in Spirit Life: and Recent Experiences of SAMUEL BOWLES, late editor of the Springfield (Mass.) Republican. In the first five spheres. Also a thrilling account of the late President Garfield's reception in the spirit world. Written through the hand of CARRIE E. S TWING, Westfield, N. Y. Price, 50 cents.

LIFE-SIZE

LITHOGRAPH

OF

D. M. BENNETT.

Heavy Plate Paper,

SUITABLE FOR FRAME OR WITHOUT FRAME.

Sent by Mail for Fifty cents.

ADDRESS THIS OFFICE.

The Figures of Hell; or, The Temples of Bacchus.

Dedicated to Licensers of Beer and Whisky.

By MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.

Published by the Author.

A neat little volume of between two and three hundred pages.

Price, $1.00.

THE

BIBLE—WHENCE AND WHAT?

BY

Richard B. Westbrook, D.D., LL.B.,

The questions, Where did the books of the Bible come from? What is their authority? and, What is the real source of dogmatic theology? are treated fearlessly in the light of history, philosophy, and comparative religions. It is impossible to give even a condensed statement of what is itself a marvelous condensation.

WHOLE LIBRARIES ARE HERE CONCENTRATED INTO ONE LITTLE BOOK.

The author's conclusions are, of course, against the supernatural origin and infallibility of the Bible, while the dogmas of the dominant theology are shown to be priestly perversions of the ancient mythologies.

Printed in good type and bound in cloth. Price, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 21 Clinton Pl., New York.

THE SEMITIC GODS AND THE BIBLE.

Treating upon the gods of the Semitic nations, including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, the Virgin Mary, and the Bible. To the latter 250 pages are devoted, showing that book to be a very inferior production for a first-class God. By D. M. Bennett. 339 large pages. Paper covers 50 cents; cloth, $1.

STANDARD BOOKS.

Sold at The Truth Seeker Office.

MEDICAL and HYGIENIC WORKS

Sent on Receipt of Price.

Trall's Sexual Physiology. A Scientific and Popular Exposition of the Fundamental Problems in Sociology. Price $1.

What Our Girls Ought to Know. By Dr. Mary J. Studley. Price $1.

Hygiene of the Brain and the cure of Nervousness. By M. L. Holbrook. Price $1.50.

Parturition Without Pain. A Code of Directions for Avoiding most of the Pains and Dangers of Child-bearing. Edited by M. L. Holbrook, M.D. Price $1.

The Relations of the Sexes. By Mrs. E. B. Duffey. Price $1.

Fruit and Bread. A Natural and Scientific Diet. By Gustav Schlickeysen. Price $1.

The Better Way. An appeal to men in behalf of Human Culture through a Wiser Parentage. By A. E. Newton. Price, paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

New Hygienic Cook Book. Containing Receipts for Preparing a Hygienic Food. By Mrs. M. M. Jones, M. D. Price 30 cents.

Talks to my Patients. Hints on Getting Well and Keeping Well. By Mrs. R. B. Gleason, M.D. Price $1.50.

Chastity; or, Our Secret Sins. By Dio Lewis, M.D. Treating of the Sexual Relations in their Higher Aspects. Price $2.

Prenatal Culture. Being Suggestions to Parents. By A. E. Newton. Price 25 cents.

Aids to Family Government; or, From the Cradle to the School. By Bertha Meyer. Price, cloth, $1; paper, 50 cents.

The Diet Cure. The Relations of Food and Drink to Health, Disease, and Cure. By T. L. Nichols, M.D. Price 50 cents.

Youth: Its Care and Culture. By J. Mortimer Granville. Price $1.

Eating for Strength. Including the Science of Eating; Five hundred Receipts for Wholesome Cookery; One Hundred Receipts for Delicious Drinks; One Hundred Ever-Recurring Questions Answered. By M. L. Holbrook, M.D. Price $1.

Muscle-Beating; Or, Active and Passive Home Gymnastics. By C. Klem. Ten Illustrations. Price 30 cents.

Marriage and Parentage. In their Sanitary and Physiological Relations and in their Bearing on the Producing of Children of Finer Health and Greater Ability. By M. L. Holbrook, M.D. Price $1.

Our Girls, and Some of the Things they Ought to Know. By Dio Lewis, M.D. Price $1.50.

Dr. Foote's Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. By E. B. Foote, M.D. Price $1.50.

Vegetarianism the Radical Cure for Intemperance. By Harriet P. Fowler. Price 30 cents.

SUPERSTITION IN ALL AGES.

By JOHN MESLIER,

A Roman Catholic Priest, who, after a pastorate of thirty years at Etrepigny and But in Champagne, France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and left as his last will and testament to his parishioners, and to the world, the work entitled, "Common Sense."

Meslier's book is a death-knell to all religions, also to all imaginary nonentities. It is only a commendable act of justice to say that his work is unanswerable. It is lucid in style, and undoubtedly one of the most powerful appeals in behalf of reason, common sense, and justice that ever was produced in any age or country.

Cloth, . . $1.50. Paper . . $1.00.

Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

PRICE REDUCED TO $1.00.

The BRAIN and the BIBLE.

OR,

The Conflict between Mental Science and Theology.

By Edgar C. Beall,

With a preface by

Robert G. Ingersoll.

"This book, written by a brave and honest man, is filled with brave and honest thoughts. The arguments it presents cannot be answered by all the theologians in the world!"—R. G. Ingersoll.

Price $1 00. For sale at this office.

DEITY ANALYZED AND THE DEVIL'S DEFENSE.

By Col. John R. Kelso, A.M.

Not since Hudibras has there been such damaging blows given to these old myths and fables. The colonel has made the sacredness of the scriptures appear as absurd as Cervantes made that of the knights of the age of chivalry. The singular audacity with which he attack, the foundations of Christianity shows the earnestness of his own convictions in regard to its fabulous origin.—I. Hutchison.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
Price, $1.50. 21 Clinton Place, New York.

Liberty and Morality.

A capital full lecture on these important subjects.

BY W. S. BELL.

A pamphlet of thirty-six well-printed pages mailed for 15 cents. Sold at this office.

SEND FOR

The Crimes of Preachers

From May, 1876 to May, 1882.

TRANSLATED OUT OF THE ORIGINAL NEWSPAPERS,

And with previous Translations diligently compared and revised.

By Col. M. E. BILLINGS.

SECOND EDITION.

Price Twenty-five Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 21 Clinton Place, N. Y. city.

THE BOSTON INVESTIGATOR,

The oldest reform journal in the United States,

Is published every Wednesday at the Paine Memorial Building, Boston, Mass.,

By JOSIAH P. MENDUM.

Edited by HORACE SEAVER.

PRICE, $3.00 per annum; single copies, seven cents. Specimen copies sent on receipt of a two-cent stamp to pay postage.

The Investigator is devoted to the Liberal cause in religion; or in other words, to universal mental liberty. Independent in all its discussions, discarding superstitious theories of what never can be known, it devotes its columns to things of this world alone, and leaves the next, if there be one, to those who have entered its unknown shores. Believing that it is the duty of mortals to work for the interests of this world, it confines itself to the things of this life entirely. It has arrived at the age of fifty-one years, and asks for a support from those who are fond of sound reasoning, good reading, reliable news, anecdotes, science, art, and a useful family journal. Reader, please send your subscription for six months or one year, and if you are not satisfied with the way the Investigator is conducted we won't ask you to continue with us any longer 3m59

MAN.

A Semi-Monthly Journal, eight pages, $1.00 per annum.

T. B. WAKEMAN and T. C. LELAND, Editors.

Man is the exponent of the principles of the National Liberal League, which is an organization made up of local societies, or associations of Liberals, known as Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, and there are now 245 of them. The objects of the N. L. L. are in brief: "The total separation of Church and state, including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abolition of Sunday laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end."

Charter Fee for an Auxiliary.....$5 00
Annual Membership..... 1 00
Life Membership..... 25.00

Address T. C. LELAND, Secretary.
744 Broadway, New York.

THE UNIVERSE.

BYRON ADONIS, Editor and Proprietor.

A Journal of Practical, Useful Knowledge, Literature, Romance, and General News.

Advocates all that is tolerant, just, and noble in human life and conduct; opposes all that is evil and unjust, sumptuary laws, sectarian sunday laws, and all attempts of the church to interfere with the state in any way, shape, or manner.

It is unalterably opposed to the attempt to amend the Constitution of the United States so as to recognize a sectarian "God" as the creator of the world and "Our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," the ruler of nations As Jefferson says: "Our fathers retired with the gods from politics."

This journal is published weekly at the modest rate of 25 cents per month, payable as follows:

Yearly subscription $3 00
Six months 1 50

Address THE UNIVERSE,
615 Kearney street,
San Francisco, Cal.

THIS WORLD.

A WEEKLY LIBERAL MAGAZINE, PUBLISHED BY

George Chainey.

51 Fort Ave. (Roxbury), Boston, Mass.

Terms $2.00 per annum.

Each number contains a lecture in full by Geo. Chainey and during 1883 a portrait and biographical sketch of some distinguished Freethinker or Liberal.

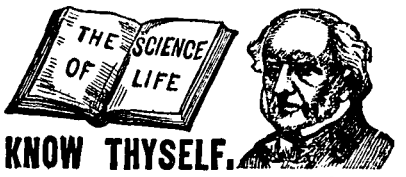
A sample copy, containing portrait of the lecturer prospectus for 1883, sent free to any address.

The Kansas Liberal.

A FORNIGHTLY

FREETHOUGHT JOURNAL.

Devoted to the Fearless Discussion of all Human Interests; believing that the greatest obstacle to Progress is Authority, and that the most essential aid to Morality is LIBERTY.



TERMS:

Per Year, ... $1.00
Six Months, ...50
Three Months 25

Specimen Copies Free.

W. HARMAN, } Editors and Publishers.
E. C. WALKER, }

MANHOOD!

KNOW THYSELF.

A Book for Every Man!

Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man, Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2 50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now.

Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. 1y38

PRICE REDUCED.

Self-Contradictions of the Bible.

Price reduced to 15 cents, from 25 cents

A perfectly reliable, accurate pamphlet of 56 pages. Compiled by one of our ablest correspondents; should be on the table of every scholar For sale at this office.

Gems of Thought.

WHAT is called revelation is a snare, a delusion, a falsehood. It is pretended to be information given from the gods, but it really comes from no farther than the channel which conveys it.—D. M. Bennett.

To him who is compelled to pace to and fro within the high walls and in the narrow court-yard of a prison, all objects may appear clear and distinct. It is the traveler journeying onward, full of heart and hope, with an ever-varying horizon on the boundless plain, who is liable to mistake clouds for mountains and the mirage of drouth for an expanse of refreshing waters.—Coleridge. [It is impossible to translate this passage without thinking of the martyr who spent thirteen months at Albany, and who is now careering over land and sea in search of knowledge which you are distributing so widely. I know not what others feel, but for my single self, I would rather be in Mr. Bennett's shoes than in those of Comstock, Benedict, or even of President Hayes. The memory of these will soon perish. The name of the founder of THE TRUTH SEEKER is likely to last. Hylax.]

WE would feel a great awe in our hearts as we think we are all brothers in a vast world; that we, too, are parts of the boundless creation, that we are struggling in the waves of the ocean of time, taking our little gleam of sunshine and our drop of dew among our fellows; if our lot is small and weak, that there is that within us capable of using every opportunity, of enjoying every privilege, of making the most of every occasion. We would, in these hours, deplore the imperfections of mankind, the sluggishness of our wish, the feebleness of our thought and desire. How shadowy our vision of good! How halting our purpose and determination! And yet the world goes on, and life grows richer, and man has more and more power over his circumstances. We would rejoice, not only in our hours of meditation and aspiring hope, but in hours of darkness and loneliness and weakness and pain, that we hav that within us that struggles and strives and perseveres; that seeks and finds, that will not be crushed, that will not be bowed down, that will hope on and hope ever.—Frothingham's Radical Pulpit.

LIFE.

It is not growing, like a tree,
In bulk, doth make man better be;
Or standing long, an oak, three hundred year;
To fall a log at last—dry, bald, and sere!

A lily of a day
Is fairer far in May,
Although it fade and die that night—
It was the plant and flower of light.
In small proportions we just beauties see;
And in short measures life may perfect be.
—Ben Jonson (1574–1637).

THE dogmatic saying of Jesus, recorded in Matt. v, 22, "Whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell-fire," was, I think, an extremely foolish one, and shows his lack of breadth of character. No wise man could ever be so silly as to threaten a man with hell-fire simply for calling another man a fool. Some men and women are fools, and in so designating them the truth is spoken. I hav often called people fools, and I intend doing so whenever occasion calls for it, without paying any regard to Jesus's threat about hell-fire. Jesus's belief in Gehenna was as absurd as his entailing so severe a penalty for so slight an offense. Moreover, Jesus never hesitated to call people fools when he thought them foolish (Matt. xxiii, 17; Luke, xi, 40; xii, 25; xxiv, 25, etc.). And Paul, and the other New Testament writers, also, scrupled not to call them fools (Romans, i, 22; 1 Corinthians, xiv, 36, etc). Though excellent in many respects, Christ's precepts, as handed down to us, are wildly extravagant and impracticable. Jesus himself did not obey his own injunction; even he was not, so far as this goes, a Christian.—W. Emmette Coleman (Iconoclast, March 11, 1882).

A PHILOSOPHER'S ordinary, and admissions in general, conversation, or writings ad populum (addressed te the general public) are as his watch, compared with his astronomical time-piece. He sets the former by the town-clock, not because he believes it right, but because his neighbors and his cook go by it.—Coleridge. [Here, as through a chink in the wall, we get a glimpse of the high moral theory that this eminent Christian philosopher worked on. Is there an Infidel or Agnostic of the present day that does not despise it? "Get thee behind me, Satan!" —Hylax.]

I NEVER found cause to think that the tenth part of learning stood or fell with the clergy.—Milton. [If this was true in Milton's day, so is it now. The clergy of all denominations are, at the present time, eminent for their ignorance and for their tyranny.—Hylax.]

ALL true greatness of mind depends upon the culture of the affections—their nurture, their exercise, and their development.—Self-Formation.

No man is so obstinate an admirer of the old times as to deny that medicin, surgery, botany, chemistry, engineering, navigation, are better understood now than in any former age. We conceive that it is the same with political science. Like these physical sciences which we hav mentioned, it has always been working itself clearer and clearer, and depositing impurity after impurity. There was a time when the most powerful of human intellects were deluded by the gibberish of the astrologer and the alchemist; and just so there was a time when the most enlightened and virtuous statesmen thought it the first duty of a government to persecute heretics, to found monasteries, to make war on Saracens. But time advances; facts accumulate; doubts arise. Faint glimpses of truth begin to appear and shine more and more unto the perfect day.—Macaulay's Essays.

Per contra.—Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways and ask for the old paths, where is the good way and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, We will not walk therein. Also I set watchmen over you, saying, Hearken to the sound of the trumpet. But they said, We will not hearken.—Jeremiah vi, 16, 17.

Odds and Ends.

A COUNTRY debating society is nerving itself up to wrestle with the question, "When a woman and a mouse meet which is the most frightened?"

"THAT fellow had a monstrous foot, the biggest I ever saw." "How large?" asked the general "Giv us some idea of its size?" "I don't know that I can, but I tell you what was a fact. His foot was so big that—well, you hav heard the old story of the fellow who used the forks of the road for a bootjack? Yes; well, Nick tried it and split the road so far that the geography of the neighborhood was changed."

A GREAT philosopher, once upon a time, while walking along in profound thought, fell into a well, and it shook him up so that he didn't know exactly whether he had gone through a threshing machine or had been let into the house at 3 A.M. by his waiting wife. When he had been pulled out he was asked by his rescuers if he were much hurt. "Well, my friends," he remarked as he took his grappling-hooks from the suburbs of his trousers, "I hav found that it is better for the memory to hav a distinct idea of one fact of a great subject than to hav confused ideas of the hole." He was pronounced safe.

BURGUNDY isn't a very good thing to drink;
Young man, I beseech you, consider and think,
Or else in your nose, and likewise in your toes,
You'll discover the color of Burgundy rose.
Burgundy rose, Burgundy rose,
A dangerous symptom is Burgundy rose.

'Tis very nice wine, and as mellow as milk;
'Tis very nice color, in satin and silk;
But you'll change your opinion as soon as it shows
In a halo around the extreme of your nose.
Burgundy rose, Burgundy rose,
'Tis a very bad thing at the end of your toes.

A LUCKLESS SOPHOMORE.

I held her hand—'twas years ago;
She loved me then, and told me so,
As, lingering by the lattice gate,
She pressed my arm, and bade me wait,
She can't forget it all, I know.

We spoke in whispers, sweet and low;
I begged a kiss, and then, although
She sighed, and seemed to hesitate,
I held her hand.

'Tis strange that love so cold can grow,
That time can deal so keen a blow.
Her love, alas, is turned to hate.
Perhaps I held the hand of Fate.
Ah well! I can't forget—heigh ho!
I held her hand.

"GOT a Bible on this train?" shouted a long-hair chap with a face like a flaxseed poultice, as the conductor came along.

"Am sorry to say we're just out," replied the lantern swinger. The last one lost its grip in a smash-up."

"This is a deuce of a road. Hav you got any Miltons?" inquired the literature seeker.

"Nothing in the 'Paradise Lost' line."

"Any Byrons, Burnses, or 'Beautiful's Nose?'"

"Not to-day."

"Well, what in thunder hav you got in the way of religious literatoor?"

"A pack of cards."

"Ah! That's just what I wanted. Why couldn't you take a hint in the first place? Bring on your railroad Bible, and get me a congregation of three before you take up the collection."

The literary chap was accommodated, and the services began.

HOW FRELINGHUYSEN WON HIS BRIDE.

"Cecile!"

"Yes, papa."

She arose—a brown-eyed, brown-haired girl, with a rare grace and sweetness in her manner—and approached. Pierceval Deadwood pushed aside the mass of papers that lay on the desk before him and gazed steadily, almost fiercely, at his daughter. She returned the gaze with a timid, hesitating, May-corn look, while the rosy blushes of maiden modesty chased each other rapidly across her fair young features and leaped outward into the great beyond.

"What brings young Frelinghuysen here so often?" asked the old man.

"His feet, I suppose," was the answer, in low, shrinking tones. "I noticed that he had them with him the last time he called"—and the girl shrank instinctivly against her bustle.

"I want no nonsense," replied the father. "I hav called you here to talk about your future. You must make a wealthy marriage."

"Papa!"

"Do not interrupt me," he continued. "I hav spoken my piece, and hav only to add that I am a Hard Man from Wayback."

Sobbing as if her heart would break Cecile went slowly to the sofa and sat down with a dull, sickening thud.

She had broken her bustle.

Suddenly she arose. "I love Harold Frelinghuysen," she said, "and I will marry no other man."

Two minutes later she was doing up her back hair.

. . . . . .

"You are sure you love me?"

"Can you doubt me?" asked Harold.

"Yes," replied the girl, "I can, but I hav decided not to" and, kissing him warmly, she went away.

. . . . . .

Spring in Coshocton.

Pierceval Deadwood is again seated at his desk.

"You expect young Frelinghuysen to-day?" he says to Cecile.

"Yes, papa."

Even while they are speaking the door opens and Harold enters.

"Hav you come to redeem your promis?" asks the old man scornfully.

"I hav," is the reply, and Harold places $50,000 in bonds on the desk.

"How did you get this money, and where hav you been all winter?"

Drawing himself up proudly, Harold answered; "I hav been doorkeeper in a New York walking match."—Chicago Tribune.

WARNING

Some months ago we were compelled to inform the readers of this paper that the genuin Wilsonia Magnetic Appliances were made only by us. We own the patent, and hav the sole right to make Wilsonia Appliances. We hav but one office in BROOKLYN, at 465 FULTON STREET.

Everyone knows that there are dishonest persons who will not hesitate to tell deliberate falsehoods for the purpose of gain. The man who deceives the sick and afflicted is a scoundrel. Do not be deceived. We never had an office in Court street. If you wish to get genuin Wilsonia Appliances write to us. "Wilsonia" has cured thousands, and is to-day doing a noble work for invalids. NOTE THIS. The INVENTOR of "Wilsonia" sold his patent and good-will to us, and he dare not make Wilsonia Appliances (except Ladies' Corsets) or any other magnetic garments.

For prices, etc., write to

Wilsonia Magnetic Clothing Co.,
25 E. 14 st. (near Br'dway), N. Y.

ANSWERS TO

Christian Questions

AND

Arguments.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Price, Twenty-five Cents.

Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER
28 Clinton Place, New York.

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

Correspondence Solicited.

A young man of 29 wishes to correspond with a young lady, with a view to matrimony; one willing to come to a new country and help him build up a home.

Address JNO. SIMONS,
Utica, Meagher Co.,
Montana.

4 3

WANTED

A situation in a grocery store, as clerk or manager, by a man who is thoroughly familiar with the business, and competent to take charge, if necessary. Must be in some healthy town; inland in the Western States preferred. Would like to locate in some growing place where employment could be obtained for my two sons, aged respectivly 22 and 19 years—strong, industrious, intelligent boys; and for my two oldest daughters. For reference as to character I can refer to Benjamin C. Sweet, Hamilton, R.I., or to the Hamilton Web Co., of the same place, where we hav been known and employed for the past ten years. Address

ABRAHAM FIRTH, SR.,
Hamilton, Washington Co.,
Rhode Island.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

THE

COLLEGE OF THERAPEUTICS,

Boston, Mass.

(Medical Department of the American University),

begins its spring session on the 2d of April, 1883. For information address the president,

3t4 DR. J. R. BUCHANAN, Boston.

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Rubber Elastic Appliance, in 30 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for Circular. (Say in what paper you saw advertisement.)

Address CAPT. W. A. COLLINGS,
Smithville, Jefferson Co., N. Y.
ptfeb

"VICTORIA"

MAGNETIC APPLIANCES

FOR THE TREATMENT OF ACUTE AND CHRONIC DISEASES IS UNEQUALED IN THE HISTORY OF MEDICAL THERAPEUTICS.

We hav repeatedly been asked what the difference is between the VICTORIA MAGNETIC GARMENTS and its old predecessors. We desire to be brief, and feel that this information is demanded at this time, as it has been asked over and over again.

At this point all comparisons end, and contrast begins. The old garments were slow in their action. The VICTORIA is quick and sure.

The old Garments lacked the power to giv more than temporary relief, while the VICTORIA penetrates the system, and permanently cures the trouble for which it is recommended

The old appliances DID NOT HOLD THEIR MAGNETIC CURRENTS OVER THIRTY DAYS The VICTORIA, however, is constructed on scientific principles, being permanent in force by the aid of its "ARMATURES," "VOLTAIC PILES," and "CONDUCTORS."

In brief the old appliances, like Stephenson's discarded engine, are switched off the track, while the VICTORIA goes on its way, winning golden opinions from all sorts of people.

Those who use these reliable and scientific goods can verify this fact, which is the greatest caterer that "HYPOCRISY IS THE TRIBUTE VICE PAYS TO VIRTUE." "IMITATION IS THE CONCESSION FAILURE MAKES TO SUCCESS."

NO INVALIDS NEED DESPAIR.

VICTORIA HAS NO EQUAL.

Send for circulars and price-lists to

Dr. Thayer,
455 Fulton Street, Brooklyn N. Y.

Please write us a history of your case and we will giv you full information.

Don't waste time and money with vile patent medicin, which kills more than it cures. 13t2

80 Court st. Brooklyn

THE

"WILSONIA,"

TWO YEARS AGO

WILLIAM WILSON,

THE INVENTOR OF

WILSONIA,

AN ENGLISH SCIENTIST, MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN, LECTURER ON ELECTRICAL THERAPEUTICS, AUTHOR OF THE "TRIAL OF MEDICIN," THE "LANGUAGE OF DISEASE," "MEDICAL FALLACIES," ETC.,

Introduced to the People of the United States His

MAGNETIC GARMENTS

For the cure of Disease without Medicine or Medical Treatment. The Statement made by him at that time that his Magnetic Clothing, if worn for any form of Disease (and as advised), would cure ninety per cent of the so-called Incurables, has been verified, he having Clothed and Cured Thousands of Persons of all Forms of Disease Positive proof of this has appeared in all the leading Newspapers by Testimony of many of our most Prominent and Wealthy Citizens, who, having been Cured by the

Wilsona Magnetic Garments

After all other Treatment had failed, were pleased to assist the Inventor in giving confidence to the Suffering Invalids of America by allowing him to use their well-known and respected Names as Reference; and it is now admitted by many most highly accomplished Scientists and Physicians that the Success and Cures attending the introduction of "Wilsonia" Magnetic Clothing has been unprecedented in the history of Electrical Therapeutics. In the face of such Positive Proof as given by us no person can doubt the value of this Invention in all cases.

Therefore why continue the Suicidal System of taking Drugs

SEND $1.50 FOR A PAIR OF

"Wilsonia" Magnetic Insoles.

Sure Preventive of Cold Feet—the Forerunner of All Kinds of Disease.

Consultation Free.

Send for Pamphlet and Information to the only Office where the Inventor can be seen.

Address all Communications to

DAVID J. COTTER,
80 COURT STREET, BROOKLYN

DR. FELLOWS,
Vineland New Jersey.

A regularly educated and legally qualified physician and most successful, as his practice will prove, cures all forms of Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases. Spermatorrhœa and Impotency, as the result of self abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas Loss of Sexual Power etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an External Application in from 30 to 90 days.

MIDDLE-AGED AND OLD MEN.

There are many of the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuation of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen, will appear or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause Dr. Fellows's External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the organs.

☞ Consultation by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable, and correspondence strictly confidential.

PRIVATE COUNSELOR.

Sent to any address securely sealed for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving the causes, symptoms, horrible effects and cure fully wed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuinness Should be read by all.

☞ Remember no medicin is given. Address DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey. Be sure and state in what paper you saw this.

THE TRUTHSEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 7. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY M. W. BENNETT. | New York, Saturday, February 17, 1883. | NO. 21 CLINTON PLACE, NEAR BROADWAY. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

A TRANSLATION of Longfellow's poem, "Hiawatha," into Greek verse has recently been published at Leipzig.

A MINNESOTA farmer advertised that if the man who had run off with his wife, two children, and $500 would return the young ones, he might keep the money and the wife.

A HUMAN curiosity exists in Mt. Nebo, Lebanon county, Pa., named Peter Wendling. He is 48 years of age, never had any hair or teeth, and is almost destitute of the sense of smell or taste. His skin has no pores or perspiratory glands. When at work his body gets intensely hot, and the only means of assuaging the heat is to throw water over him. He has never been sick in any sense.

A REJECTED lover was very melancholy at Zanesville, Ohio, and his friends frustrated him in an attempt to kill himself. Then he was taken to revival meetings, in the hope that religion would comfort him. He encouraged them by becoming a demonstrativ convert; but, having assured his soul of salvation, as he thought, he got into a haystack, ignited it, and was burnt to death.

IT is related of Rev. Talmage that he was engaged to lecture one evening in a Western church. A large sounding-board occupied a space back of the pulpit, and it is said that after he had warmed up to his subject people began to fall out of the pews and the front door was blown from its hinges clear into the middle of the street. The sounding-board was removed, and with the exception of a part of the steeple falling on the roof, no further trouble occurred.

MANY of the wealthiest men in New York began poor. Jay Gould was a cowboy, James R. Keene came from England with $20 in his pocket, Rufus Hatch began by dealing in "garden sass," D. Appleton kept a grocery store, James Watson Webb was a country clerk, Henry Villard was a reporter, Leonard W. Jerome was a printer, H. B. Claflin was a Vermont school teacher, Charles O'Conor was born of the poorest of Irish parents, and Peter Cooper was a hatter's apprentice.

ONE of the most popular conductors that ever ran a train out of Boston has the credit of the following bon mot: Not long since a special minister's ticket was handed to him, to which he gave careful inspection, as his duty required. The passenger quite tartly remarked that it was unnecessary to be so very particular about his ticket. The conductor quickly replied in his quiet and ever courteous manner: "I am only looking to see where you are going, sir; I don't care to see in the morning papers, 'Another minister gone wrong!'"—Traveler.

CONTRARY to the usual custom, the Rev. Andrew Faulkner did not get into trouble through paying personal attention to Mrs. Smith at Custer, Mich., but because he neglected her. She was pious, but retiring, and he overlooked her for months, while asking all the other members of his church in turn to lead the weekly prayer-meeting. Her husband complained, and, as that did not gain her the desired opportunity, he gave the pastor a whipping—or tried to, though the vigor of the defense made it uncertain whether Mr. Smith did not get as much as he gave.

THE Grand Jury of St. Louis hav taken some pains to estimate the amount of crime and pauperism caused in that city by intemperance, and they put it at eighty per cent. In their opinion, however, any attempt to prohibit the rum traffic would fail, and the best thing to be done is to lessen the number of groggeries by greatly increasing the price of licenses. They argue that an immense fund for charitable purposes would thus be collected, and that the character of such places as could afford to pay $1,000 a year for the privilege of continuing business would be much better than the average. Their plan is being discussed by the newspapers, and finds so much favor that it will probably be tried.

THE Stanton Vindicator relates that on a recent evening, while the prayer-meeting at the First Presbyterian church in that town was in progress, the congregation was startled at hearing an alarm clock in the possession of one of the ladies present go off at a furious rate. It appeared that the owner had had a watchmaker repair it, and was very particular in telling him to set it for half-past 5 o'clock. The lady was thinking of A. M. and the watchmaker of P. M. It was set for 5:30 P. M., and went off on time in the prayer-meeting, where the owner stopped on her way home.

THE Rev. Dr. Marquis, of the Lafayette Park Presbyterian church, St. Louis, had a silk robe made in this city, and took it home to preach in. It was what is called the Geneva pattern, and is the same as worn by Drs. Hall, Taylor, Crosby, and Cuyler; but Dr. Marquis's congregation objected to a gown of any sort, and were offended that he should put one on without consulting the officers of the church. He has laid it aside temporarily, in deference to the rather violent opposition, but hopes that the objectors will eventually come round to his view, because if they do not he will resign the pastorate.

MR. CHARLES WATTS, of London, lectured at Library Hall, Newark, N. J., on Feb. 4th, his subject being "Secularism—Its Aims and Objects." He was favored with a large audience. A. J. Taylor, secretary of the Newark Liberal League, writes thus enthusiastically concerning the lecture: "It was listened to with rapt attention, interspersed with frequent applause, and concluded with a grand peroration that brought down the house. After an interval of music, discussion was invited, after which the lecturer pleasantly and wittily replied. The service then concluded with a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Watts, which he replied to, stating that he would again lecture on the following Sunday, Feb. 11th."

A VISITOR to the Zuni Indians of Mexico says that some of the consequences of the visit by the leading men of the tribe to the East, last summer, hav been unpleasant. Pedro Pino, the oldest of the tourists, has been telling such stories of his adventures, and of the marvels of the white man's ways, that he has gained the reputation of being the biggest liar in the nation. The principal mischief, however, is caused by his report that the plainest white woman he saw in Washington was handsomer than the prettiest Zuni girl. A young chief who had been presented with a number of trinkets by the Washington women, and who wore them home with pride, was obliged to giv them up to his jealous wife, who destroyed them.

THE Mahdi, or False Prophet of the Soudan, is described as one Mohamed Ahmed, a Dongolian. He is illiterate, but has studied religion, has been ordained a sheik, and has gained a reputation for sanctity by playing the hermit. He has increased his influence by marrying numerous wives among the wealthy families, keeping within the prescribed number of four by a resort, when necessary, to divorce. In May, 1881, he openly proclaimed himself to be the prophet foretold by Mohammed, preaching universal equality of law and religion, with community of goods to all believers, and death to all who rejected him. Like most prophets, he was denounced by his own townsmen, who proclaimed him mad. In appearance he is tall and slim, and wears a black beard. He reads and writes with difficulty, is head of a local order of dervishes, and has shown much tact in uniting the discordant tribes. The number of tribesmen who follow him is estimated at about 338,000 souls.

IT has been apparent for some time that the Rev. R. Heber Newton, of All Souls' (Anthon Memorial) church, was the likeliest candidate for ecclesiastical martyrdom now within the pale of the Episcopal church. Charges of violating his ordination vows are soon to be preferred against him, based on his recent sermons on the Bible. They are only delayed until these discourses are more accessible through publication. It will be interesting to see how strong a case of heresy can be made out against Mr. Newton. Most of the accusations which, judging from the sermons, must be made against him hav already been preferred against supposed offenders in the church of England, and were not sustained. A persecution will only be likely to add to this pastor's popularity. Mr. Newton may be a heretic so far as his views go, but still perhaps he might be tolerated in the Episcopal church so long as the Rev. Edward Cowley, of the Shepherd's Fold notoriety, is allowed to remain in its ministry. Mr. Newton has not yet passed a year in the penitentiary for cruelty to children.

IN his lecture the other evening on "The Growth of the Locomotiv Engin," before the Engineering Society of the School of Mines at Columbia College, Prof. F. R. Hutton told the story of a race between Peter Cooper's engin and an old gray car horse, more than half a century ago. He said that one of the chief obstacles to the attainment of high speed in those days was the lack of a sufficient draft through the fire-box. In the stack of Peter Cooper's small experimental engin, the flues of which were made of gun barrels, was a fan-wheel run by a belt, to increase the draft. With this device it was thought that the locomotiv would outrun the car horse, and a race was arranged, the engin and the horse-car to run on parallel tracks. The start was even, the lecturer said, but the engin soon began to draw away from the nag. The distance was increased, and the prospect of a brilliant victory for the locomotiv was all that could hav been desired, when the belt slipped off from the fan-wheel. Peter Cooper lacerated his hands in an attempt to readjust the belt, but it proved fruitless, and instead of distancing the old gray horse, his locomotiv and the experienced nag came in neck and neck.

CONNELLSVILLE, a town of 6,000 inhabitants, near Pittsburgh, Pa., is all agog over a ministerial scandal. The parties are the Rev. R. C. Morgan, of the Baptist church of that place, one of the largest and wealthiest congregations of southwestern Pennsylvania, and R. E. Booth and wife. On a recent night the dead walls and fences of the town were covered with handbills signed by R. E. Booth, and reading as follows: "The following is an exact copy of a letter mailed at Greensburg, Westmoreland county, Pa., dated July 1, 1879, and addressed to a young lady then living in Connellsville, Fayette county, Pa.: 'En route for Europe. My Dear, Dear Girl: A sad goodbye for a short time. You will be with me everywhere, on land and on sea, awake or asleep. God bless you and keep you and me safe. Will you write to me? It will be safe. Do in a few days. You will see my address in the next issue of the Baptist Messenger. Ever yours, On the Train.' In explanation of the letter above inserted, the senior editor of the Messenger received the following from the junior editor, R. C. Morgan, as appears below, in a short space of time after he (R. C. Morgan) had arrived in Europe, said Morgan urging the senior editor to insert, without failure, in the July number of 1879, which number was yet to be issued after his departure, which communication was promptly inserted as he (Morgan) had ordered, in said July number of 1879 Messenger, and reads as follows: 'Communication.—Friends in the United States desiring to, can address him (Morgan) at No. 1 Lower George street, New Port, Monmouthshire, England.' R. E. Booth." Mr. Booth is in the employ of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company. Several years ago his wife united with the Baptist church, and scandal began when the Rev. Mr. Morgan visited the Booth residence. A servant who spread the reports made an affidavit that the reports were lies, but she afterward said they were true, and that she was compelled by threats to swear falsely. Booth has been very bitter against the Rev. Mr. Morgan, and took the above method of publishing him, as he (Morgan) intended leaving Connellsville in the spring. Mr. Morgan is married and has a large family. He denies the reports, and says that they are false in every particular.

News of the Week.

THE profits of the Garfield Monument Fair were $7,593.

ARCHBISHOP MCCABE, of Dublin, is reported to be dying.

A SON of Jem Mace, the pugilist, is an English clergyman.

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH, the last surviving son of the poet, is dead.

ON Sunday last the Ohio river was nearly sixty feet higher than usual.

EMPEROR WILLIAM of Germany is better, and was able to ride out on Sunday.

THE German Reichstag has voted 100,000 marks (about $32,000) for exploring central Africa.

THE sixty-third birthday of Gen. W. T. Sherman was celebrated in Washington on the evening of the 8th.

THE steamer Alaska, of the Guion line, crossed the Atlantic last week in 6 days, 20 hours, and 33 minutes.

THE czar of Russia has issued his manifesto giving notice that his coronation will take place at Moscow on the 27th of May.

CHARLES R. THORNE, the actor, died on Saturday last. At his own request there was no religious ceremony over the remains.

THE House committee on military affairs hav agreed upon a bill to place Gen. Grant on the retired list of the army with the rank of general.

IT is asserted that one hundred and fifty bodies hav been stolen from graveyards in the vicinity of Montreal during this winter, one-half of which were sent to medical schools in the United States.

HENRY STUDIFORD is a new recruit in the Salvation Army, but when some boys annoyed him on the street he drew a pistol like a veteran. He was locked up.

THE King of Belgium's suit to recover $700,000 of securities stolen by Canon Bernard of Belgium was in court in this city last Saturday. Decision was reserved.

ON the night of Feb. 6th, while officiating at a marriage service at La Salle, Ill., the Rev. George F. Bronson fell dead at the feet of a couple whom he was marrying just as he pronounced them man and wife.

THE Jeypore, India, authorities hav just punished a case of widow-burning by sentencing the principal offenders to imprisonment for seven years, while minor accomplices received sentences of three years.

ARCHBISHOP CROKE, of Cashel, writes a letter confirming the wide-spread distress prevailing in some counties in Ireland. He attributes the suffering to the presence in the country of a "bloated and ruthless oligarchy."

FEBRUARY 7th was the Chinese New Year. It was a great day for the Mongolians of this city, who celebrated the occasion enthusiastically and uproariously. One very commendable feature of their observance is the paying of all their debts on New Year's morning.

THE Woman Suffrage Committee of the Massachusetts legislature hav determined on a bill to giv women a right to vote on municipal affairs, but insisting on the poll tax qualifications. Friends of the measure hav full confidence that it will pass the House, and that it stands a good chance for passage in the Senate.

WILLIAM H. COOPER became so affected at a religious meeting held in Salem township, Pa., recently, that he has since gone out of his mind, and on the 9th became so violent that his friends resolved to remove him to a lunatic asylum. On Thursday he became so frantic that he set fire to an outbuilding on his premises and destroyed all the household furniture at night. He drove his family from the house. He was taken to the Danville Insane Asylum.

Translation.

The Tomb of Fanaticism.

[An examination of Lord Bolingbroke's doctrines. Written by Voltaire in 1767 and translated from the French by Avery Meriwether.]

CHAPTER XXVI.—CONTINUED.

THE MARTYRS.

Nilus, an ocular witness of the truth, being unknown (the more the pity), assures us that his friend Saint Theodotus, a pot-house keeper, could perform all the miracles he wished; that he changed water into wine, and that he loved to cure the sick by touching them with the end of his fingers. Theodotus met a curé in the city of Ancyrus in the midst of a meadow; they found there all the materials for building a retreat for times of persecution. "All this is very good," said the priest, "but there are no relics.

"That does not matter," said the saint, "it will be all right, and I give you my ring as a pledge." He was quite sure of his powers, as we will see.

Seven Christian virgins of Ancyrus some seventy years old were condemned to be delivered over to the brutal passions of the young men of the town. The "legend" did not fail to say that the women were very wrinkled, and what is most astonishing is that the young men did not make the slightest advance, with the exception of one who was a reckless dare-devil, and wished to try for an adventure; but this one was very soon disgusted. The governor, very much irritated because the seven old women had not submitted to their punishment, made them priestesses of Diana. The Christian virgins accepted this without hesitation. They were appointed to wash the statue of Diana in a neighboring lake; they were naked, because, without a doubt, the custom was that only naked girls should serve the chaste Diana. Two choirs of singers and Bacchants armed with thyrses preceded the car, according to the description of the author. He must have had confused ideas about the mysteries of Diana, and probably was mixed in his mind about Bacchus and Diana; but he was an eye-witness, and of course I have nothing more to say.

Saint Theodotus trembled in fear that the seven virgins might yield to their temptations. He was in prayer when his wife told him that the people had come to throw the old women into the lake, and he thanked God for having saved their virtue. The governor placed a guard exactly around the lake in order to restrain the Christians from throwing themselves in the water as they were accustomed. The sacred bar keeper was in despair. He went from church to church, for there were many churches during the frightful persecutions, but the cunning pagans had closed all the doors. The wine-pourer then went to sleep. One of the old women appeared to him in his first dream, who was the sainted Thécuse. She spoke thus: "My dear Theodotus, will you suffer our bodies to be eaten by the fishes?"

Theodotus awoke; he resolved to fish the saints out from the bottom of the lake at the peril of his life. He worked so hard that in three days (though the fishes had time to eat them) he succeeded during one dark night in taking out two brave Christians.

A celestial angel coming down from above carried a torch before him in order to prevent the guards from seeing his person. The angel took a lance, fell upon the guards, and put them to flight; this was saint Soziandrus, the old friend of Theodotus who had suffered martyrdom a short time before this. This is not all: a violent storm, mingled with thunder and lightning and an immense amount of rain, made the lake dry (!). The seven old women are fished out and properly buried.

You may well believe that this illegal enterprise of Theodotus was soon discovered; the celestial angel could not help him from being scourged and soundly beaten. When Theodotus was well thrashed he cried out to the Christians and the idolaters: "See, my friends, how our master, Jesus Christ, loads his servants with favors; he has them thrashed in order to thicken their skin, and thus gives them the power to support all these blows." He was finally hung.

Having such a friend as Frouton, the curé makes it appear very probable that the saint was a pot-house keeper; for having received at one time a few flasks of excellent wine, he intoxicated the guards, carried off the body of the hung saint, which spoke to him at the time: "Monsieur Curé, I promised you some relics; I have kept my word."

This admirable story is one that is considered to be the best proven. Who could doubt it after the testimony of the Jesuit Bollandus and the benedict Ruinart?

These old tales disgust me; I shall not speak any further about it. I only know that there were a few Christians punished during divers times, as seditious, who had the insolence to show their intolerance and to insult the government. They had the crown of a martyr, which they well deserved. I only pity those poor imbecile women who were seduced by those nonconformers. They were very wrong in taking advantage of those weak-minded creatures and putting the devil in them. The judges who condemned them to death were called barbarians.

Thanks be to God, there were few such executions. The pagans were very far from treating those possessed with devils, with the cruelty with which we have for so long a time exercised against each other. It is probable that the Papists forged a list of imaginary martyrs during the first century in order to justify the massacres with which their church is soiled.

One very strong proof that there had never been any very great persecutions carried on against the Christians is that Alexandria, which was the center, the fountain-head, of the sect, was always openly and publicly a school of Christianity, as the Lyceum, the Portico, and the Academy of Athens. There had been a succession of Christian professors. Pantena publicly succeeded Mark, who has erroneously been called Mark the apostle. After Pantena comes Clement of Alexandria whose pulpit was at length occupied by Origen, who in turn led a crowd of disciples. So long as they limited themselves to disputing they were left at peace, but when they instructed their pupils to break the laws and the public policy, they were punished. They were repressed everywhere under the emperor Decius; Origen himself was thrown in prison. Cyprius, the bishop of Carthage, did not deny that the Christians brought that persecution upon themselves. "Each one of them," he says in his book of the tombs, "ran after riches and honors with an insatiable greed. The bishops were without religion, the women without modesty; cheating prevailed; they swore and perjured themselves; animosity divided the Christians; bishops left their pulpits to enter in the markets and enrich themselves by barter; finally, we who please ourselves alone will displease the whole world."

It is not at all astonishing that the Christians had violent quarrels with the religious partisans of the empire, and that self-interest entered into their dissensions, which often caused great trouble, and at last brought upon the Christians persecution. The famous jurist Ulpian regarded this sect as a very dangerous faction, which would at some time bring the state to destruction. In this he was not deceived.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

"Two Burning Questions."

I wish to place before the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, a few reflections on one of the questions as stated in your issue of January 13th, over the signature of E. C. Walker, and under the above heading.

I cannot ask space in THE TRUTH SEEKER to reply to the article at length, as I certainly would like to do. I belong to the rank and file of the Liberal army, and hav not, nor hav I aspired to, a commanding position.

I shall confine myself to Mr. Walker's first affirmation, which covers quite as much "sin" as charity, and, in my opinion, takes in the entire ground of the two affirmations immediately following, and upon which the remaining four, in part, rest.

My object is not to force my opinions upon others, but rather to induce thought upon the "burning question" that is now assuming so large a place in hearts and minds of the people, that our position on the question may be taken not rashly but with careful consideration:

"That each individual naturally possesses the right to control his or her own person."

Which "right" do you imply; the sacred right to control in elevating us, or the vulgar right to control in degrading abuse?

Right, you are aware, is a word in common use and possessed of great flexibility. I mean not to giv the property of flexibility to right in the abstract, but to right as it is flung from the lips of many theologians, and from the lips of some who claim to be Freethinkers.

Mr. Walker, I think, from the tone of closing paragraphs of his article, is a man—a Liberalist; and in reply to his affirmation, I wish not to use, nor shall I use any expression foreign to a friendly and gentlemanly consideration of the question.

Man has the "natural right" to so "control his person" as to fulfil the useful, ennobling, and elevating conditions of life. But he has no right, either natural or unnatural, to the "control" of his person in an abuse of the conditions of life which prostitutes all the nobler elements of his nature.

This, friend Walker, is my idea of right. And it is the idea of right that I, as a Freethinker, hav been proud to defend against both religious and secular opposition, as the conception of the leading Freethinkers of the present and the past.

This is with all due—and the greatest—respect to the names mentioned in the article under consideration. I hav met several Freethinkers who disapproved prohibitory law, but who did it on grounds other than those of friend Walker's affirmation. Yet, if I am in error as to my position relativ to the conception of right entertained by leading Freethinkers, will Mr. Walker, or some other Liberal informed as to the subect, correct me?

I shall accept the correction as kindly as I desire it earnestly.

I hav boasted that the Liberals of this country defended this high standard of right, and took pride in calling myself a Liberal. Now, if in the wind here, I clearly am mistaken in my own identity.

Nor do I think I can be a Liberal, if to be a Liberal I must defend the right of an individual to make such use of his "person" as will brutalize every natural or acquired virtue of the human character.

Yet to defend another's "right" to do this, and abhor it myself, is friend Walker's "real position." Am I right, Mr. Walker?

You would defend A's right to participate in the associations and orgies of the tippling-shops, yet would feel degraded by an exercise of the "personal right" yourself.

You would defend B's "right" to meet his friends in some foul cess-pool, where drinks are mixed to order, and after loading up, indulge in all that is most loathing and disgusting to true manhood; but you would be shocked at the very thought of an exercise of the "right" in your own "person."

You would "defend" C's "right" to make an "honest"(?) living by "exchange." A glass, the contents of which make the recipient a fool or a demon; a glass of the most potent agent in the destruction of all the finer elements in the character of man; a glass of "secondary effects, that is another question entirely" (the italics belong to me). You would defend C's "right" to "exchange" such a glass—of physical, mental, and moral destruction—for ten cents; but you would blush to make such nefarious "exchange" yourself.

Is this your "real position," friend Walker; or hav I by following a "shrewd suspicion" done you an injustice?

I should like very much to review friend Walker's comments on his quotation from Mr. Lake, but, for fear of taking up space that would be occupied by abler pens, I desist.

"Yes, man is a free moral agent in the sense," etc. "Do you deny it? If so, where do you get your assumed right to arrest a thief or murderer," or to arrest the hand of a suicide?

W. H. GANTZ.

Mr. Rowley in Elkhart.

I hav been spending considerable time recently in Elkhart, Ind. Elkhart is an enterprising and prosperous town of about ten thousand inhabitants. It is an ambitious and formidable competitor with South Bend. Elkhart is said to hav the best and the most extensiv water-power of any place in the state of Indiana, or perhaps in the great western country. The city is situated at the confluence of the Elkhart River from the south, and Christian Creek from the north, with the St. Joseph River running parallel with the state line from east to west. There are seven paper mills in Elkhart, and two starch mills, one knitting institution of large dimensions, and a band-instrument manufactory said to be the largest and the most complete of any similar manufactory in the world. There are between two and three thousand people under constant employ in these various departments of industry, and both sexes are well represented in these departments.

The scenery in and about Elkhart is remarkably picturesque and beautiful. Strong iron bridges span the various rivers at several points within the limits of the city.

Since I came to Elkhart, about three months ago, and obtained a half hundred subscribers for THE TRUTH SEEKER, there has been a forcible illustration of the fact that one march of reform work always overleaps and interblends with many others. H. L. Green once made the remark that he found little difficulty in making arrangements to lecture in any place where there was a liberal list of subscribers for Liberal papers. Before I went to Elkhart the latter part of October in the interest of THE TRUTH SEEKER, there had not been a Liberal lecturer in the city for a year or more, and but very few Liberal meetings in many years. But recently the Opera House has been occupied every Sunday, and a Liberal League is under the order of activ progressiv movements in the place, in connection with which there is talk of a children's progressiv lyceum. A fair list of names will go on the books as permanent subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and the old traditions of the darker ages will be superseded by the light of science, philosophy, and a larger measure of humanitarian activity.

Mrs. H. S. Lake, of California, and Mr. Kinyon, of Jackson, Mich., are among the lecturers who hav occupied the rostrum in Elkhart within a few weeks past. It is earnestly hoped that the intelligent and Liberal minds of Elkhart will go cheerfully and earnestly forward in the line of practical work until the superstitions of the past shall be superseded by the intelligence of the present, and all the possibilities of a happier and a more hopeful future shall bear a prophecy of better times for the masses upon every breeze of the approaching spring and summer days.

C. S. ROWLEY.

Ligonier, Ind., Jan. 28, 1883.

Legal Information Desired.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I desire to ascertain the name of some out-spoken Freethought lawyer in every state and territory in the union, also in Canada. Will some reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER in each of the states giv me the information required?

H. L. GREEN.

Salamanca, N. Y.

Civil and Military Morality.

The great difference between civil and military moral principles has not been sufficiently considered. When Napoleon announced the statement that "a blunder was worse than a crime," it was not generally thought that he announced a military moral truth. But if any one will read his history and that of any great warrior they will see that it is the highest expression of military morality that exists.

But when we turn from military to civil morality the reverse of that statement is the true one, "that a crime is worse than a blunder." When this difference in the moral principles of statesmen and military chieftains is fully comprehended, it becomes plain why there is so little of agreement and sympathy between them. A great military commander will not allow a great statesman who disagrees with him to liv in his dominions if he can help it. So we see none existed in Cromwell's time or Bonaparte's except their tools; no independent parliament or senate could exist while they reigned, and it is also true to almost the same extent in Germany now under the military rule of the Emperor William and Prince Bismarck. They hav established a military morality the same as Jackson tried to in this country in his day, and Gen. Grant has attempted since the Rebellion. And all these military heroes were sticklers for the church militant, with all its unreasonable creeds, that cannot be maintained by facts and reasons, but depend on military force and morality to sustain them in their last resort. That is, when creedal morality and social science morality are to be adopted they always decide in favor of the Christian creed morality, because that is consistent with military morality; while statesmen like Jefferson and Sumner adopted the principle that a crime is worse than a mistake and called for moral laws consistent with such opinions, and our humane institutions hav grown to be great blessings to the people by such laws.

Near the time when Jesus Christ was suffering from fear, the extreme agony that produced the bloody sweat on his body, he gave orders for his followers to arm themselvs, because war was coming to decide the fate of nations; and they took the arms they had and went forth to battle. And although he rebuked Peter for using his sword, and healed the wound he inflicted and told him "he that livs by the sword shall die by the sword," he did not tell his followers to disarm, or sell their swords; and here was the order that made the church militant of the Christian and places them exactly where they belong morally; that is, that a mistaken belief is worse before their God and themselvs than the worst of crimes that the most lawless inhuman Christians hav ever done. The morality of man is that the enemy or friend that disobeys orders must be killed or disgraced. And the Christian God has no mercy for unbelievers.

This subject is discussed at considerable length in the last chapter of the "Bible of the Religion of Science." The questions to be settled are: Which morality will you choose, the warrior's or the statesman's? the Christian's or the scientist's? Shall we follow Christian priests and military heroes like unreasoning beasts, or reason together like scientists and statesmen, and establish a system of moral laws that will guide people to a higher and better civilization than we hav any account of in this world? ***

How to be a Preacher.

If you want a receipt for a popular minister
  Skilled in expounding the doctrins of sects,
Arrange a collection of expletivs sinister
  Mingled with fragments of various texts;
Take the last wailing of Christ in his agony,
  Latin and Hebrew, original Greek—
Eloi, Eloi! lama sabachthani—
  Howl it and chatter it, mumble and shriek;
Of Moses and Joshua study astronomy,
  Copy the morals of David and Lot,
Practice each day in Ezekiel's gastronomy,
  Drink with old Noah, the bibulous sot;
Gather some scraps of New England theology,
Weak metaphysics, and Cook's eschatology;
Fill your discourses with all that's fanatical,
Rattle them off in a manner theatrical;
Doubt every fact and believe every mystery,
Meet modern learning with biblical history,
Praise all the actions of pious rascality,
Damn every heretic as a finality.
These qualities constitute, blended in unity,
The joy of the modern religious community.

GEORGE MACDONALD.

A Good Book to Hav About.

From Man.

We hav received from THE TRUTH SEEKER office a pamphlet entitled, "Answers to Christian Questions and Arguments," 150 pages, price 25 cents. This is the last one of the smaller class of books that Mr. Bennett wrote and published. It is a good specimen of those short and sharp discussions with adventuresome, theologic antagonists which Mr. Bennett used so much to delight in. Some Christian correspondent sails in with a load of unanswerable questions, perfectly confident that Mr. Bennett had never seen or thought of them up to that hour, and would just wince and wail before he would attempt to answer them. Yet, Mr. Bennett would take them up in his honest, easy way, and reply to them with the readiness of an expert, and show the poor, benighted Christian inquirer just what the facts are and what the situation is. This little book is a handy one for any Liberal to hav about him if he is liable to be plied with a similar class of questions.

One of Thomas Paine's Last Letters.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I am sure that your readers will take interest in the perusal of the following letter written by Thomas Paine, and which has been published but two or three times since it was written:

I saw in the Aurora of January 30th a piece addressed to you and signed Isaac Hall. It contains a statement of your malevolent conduct in refusing to let him hav Vine street wharf after he had bid $50 more rent for it than another person had offered, and had been unanimously approved of by the commissioners appointed by law for that purpose. Among the reasons given by you for this refusal one was that Mr. Hall was one of Paine's disciples. If those whom you may choose to call my disciples follow my example in doing good to mankind, they will pass the confines of this world with a happy mind, while the hope of the hypocrit shall perish and delusion sink into despair.

I do not know who Mr. Inskeep is, for I do not remember the name of Inskeep at Philadelphia in the time that tried men's souls. He must be some mushroom of modern growth that has started upon the soil which the generous services of Thomas Paine contributed to bless with freedom; neither do I know what profession of religion he is of, nor do I care, for if he is a man malevolent and unjust, it signifies not to what class or sectary he may hypocritically belong.

As I set too much value on my time to waste it on a man of so little consequence as yourself, I will close this short address with a declaration that puts hypocrisy and malevolence at defiance. Here it is:

My motiv and object in all my political works, beginning with "Common Sense," the first work I ever published, hav been to rescue man from tyranny and false systems and false principles of government, and enable him to be free and establish government for himself. And I hav borne my share of danger in Europe and in America in every attempt I hav made for this purpose. And my motiv and object in all my publications on religious subjects, beginning with the first part of the "Age of Reason," hav been to bring man to a right reason that God has given him; to impress on him the great principles of divine morality, justice, mercy, and a benevolent disposition to all men and to all creatures; and to excite in him a spirit of trust, confidence, and consolation in his creator, unshackled by the fable and fiction of books, by whatever invented name they may be called.

I am happy in the continual contemplation of what I hav done, and I thank God that he gave me talents for the purpose and fortitude to do it. It will make the continual consolation of my departing hours whenever they may finally arrive. THOMAS PAINE.

This letter was written to John Inskeep, mayor of Philadelphia, and was first published in the Philadelphia Aurora of February 10, 1806. Mr. Paine was living at New Rochelle. About three years later, as your readers probably know, Mr. Paine removed to Columbia street, New York, and shortly after died.

PHILIP G. PEABODY.

New York, Jan. 30, 1883.

California Letter

IN MEMORIAM OF THOMAS PAINE AND D. M. BENNETT.

About fourteen hundred Liberals and Spiritualists of San Jose held a meeting last evening (Jan. 29th) to celebrate the natal day of the author-hero, Thomas Paine. Dr. E. A. Clark presided, and opened the meeting with appropriate remarks, followed by music from Mr. and Mrs. Schwarts, and with recitations, songs, and music by Messrs. Cridge, Jacobs, Cosgrove, and Lenzen, also by Mrs. R. T. Olmstead, Miss French, and Theo. Lenzen. L. Magenheimer, and other members of the Turners Glee Club, furnished most excellent vocal music, as a close to the entertainment.

The memorial address was made by Dr. J. L. York, in a brief review of the character and life-work of Thomas Paine, and the cause and principles of Infidelity, advocated by Paine, and other noble workers of Freethought, who hav had the moral courage to step aside from the usual current of religious thought and speak their honest convictions to the world, and to whom we are indebted to-day for the civil and religious liberty we enjoy, at the close of the discourse referring to D. M. Bennett in most fitting and well-deserved terms. He said:

"This picture which you see draped in mourning is the picture of the late D. M. Bennett. Some of you will remember the editor of the New York TRUTH SEEKER, to whom we gave a reception in this theater last summer, and who has recently laid down his pen and passed to higher life.

"And knowing, as some of us do, how deeply his loss is felt in the Liberal ranks everywhere, and what valuable service he has rendered in the cause of truth, and how hard he has labored in the cause of mental freedom, and knowing, also, that he suffered persecution at the hands of religious bigotry and superstition; and having entertained him at our homes, some of us know how genial, generous, good, and unassuming he was, and though possessed of a great mind, he put on no outward show of pomp or learning, but was simple in his habits, and had a kind word for all, and if he lacked somewhat of the polish and pretense of some less-favored men, he made it all up in the sterling qualities of head and heart. We therefore offer the following resolutions as a tribute to his memory."

The resolutions were read and adopted, as follows:

Resolved, That in the death of our friend and brother, D. M. Bennett, editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and author of many liberal publications, the last of which is a history of his travels around the world, in four volumes, we most sincerely regret the sad loss which removed from our midst an honest man, an able exponent and champion of Freethought, a lover and seeker of truth and an inveterate foe to every form of false religion.

Resolved, That in the life of D. M. Bennett we recognize the elements of a well-rounded manhood and true greatness, manifested in that degree of moral courage which placed him in a prison cell, as the result of resisting and testing an unjust and cruel law against the liberty of the people. And that in his death at this time we can but regard it, not so much the result of worn-out powers and ripe old age as from the shock and injuries to mind and body received at the hands of hypocrisy, bigotry, and religious superstition.

Resolved, That these expressions of regard for our friend, D. M. Bennett, who has passed to higher life, shall not perish with the cast-off garment of his soul, in the grave of forgetfulness. But that we will ever retain a grateful remembrance of his fidelity and untiring zeal in defense of our common cause of mental freedom; and that we can prove our high esteem for him by doing what we can to keep THE TRUTH SEEKER alive and effectiv in spreading the gospel of nature, and as a most imperishable monument of a self-sacrificing life spent in the cause of truth and humanity.

Resolved, That Mary W. Bennett, wife of our departed brother, has our sympathy and kindest regards in her bereavement and great affliction. And though our poor words cannot heal the wounded heart, yet it may afford some consolation in her sorrow to know and feel that other eyes weep and other hearts ache; and that his death is most deeply felt and sincerely regretted by Liberals everywhere who hav come to know him in his true light and to appreciate the great service he has rendered to the cause of human enfranchisment, and that his good name and service, like those of Thomas Paine, will be kept green and sacred in the memory of faithful hearts.

The grave, the realm of matter gross,
Is not the home of mind,
Only the wardrobe dark of garments left
For vestments more refined.

So let us think of our old friend
As if he still were here,
And though he's hidden from our sight,
We feel his presence near.

Resolved, That the above resolutions be sent to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Boston Investigator.

J. L. YORK, Sec. pro tem.

Paine, the Patriot and Philosopher.

From Dr. Farlin's Speech at the Paine Anniversary in Rochester N. Y.

One hundred and forty-six years ago to-morrow, there was born in Thetford, county of Norfolk, England, the man whose life and loyal services to humanity we hav met to commemorate; a person who, in a life of seventy-two years, made for himself the truest friends and bitterest enemies man ever had. I do not believe in the language of fulsome eulogy, therefore I shall not indulge my imagination or seek to delight your fancy with it. But if I speak in the language of soberness and truth, of Thomas Paine, I cannot be accused of flattery. History records little of the life of our subject prior to the age of thirty-seven years. We only glean that he was trained to the business of his father, who was a maker of ship-stays, but, disliking it, was appointed to a situation in the customs, and became manager of a tobacco manufactory. Here, his income being small, he became involved in debt, and was dismissed the service in 1774, after which he came to America. Had Thomas Paine remained in England, being a member of the middle class, he could never hav risen to a position above respectable mediocrity. Here all was changed, and the transcendent genius of the man found ample scope. The representativs of thirteen feeble colonies were kneeling at the feet of that royal figurehead of stupidity and inanition, George III., and pleading for a restoration of the privileges enjoyed prior to 1763; they did not dream that they had rights independent of the mother country. Then it was that Thomas Paine, fresh from English soil and smarting from the effects of English oppression of labor, said to our fathers: "Fidelity to yourselvs, your homes, and happiness alike demand that you should assume a different attitude toward the infamous and oppressiv government of Great Britain. You should not whine about grievances, but tell Great Britain that you are no longer bound to yield obedience to her government, that you hav a right to affirm your own sovereignty and your own independence." This was said in "Common Sense," the first political hand-book published in America, issued on the 17th of January, 1776; it was the keynote of the American Revolution, and a prophecy of the Declaration of Independence, which succeeded it on the next Fourth of July. Of "Common Sense," two months after its publication, George Washington said: "It is working a powerful change in public opinion." General Lee said of it: "I own myself convinced by its arguments of the necessity of a separation." Lossing's "Field Book of the Revolution" says: "'Common Sense' was the earliest and most powerful appeal in behalf of Independence, and probably did more to fix that idea in the public mind than any other instrumentality." Morse's "Annals of the Revolution" says: "The change in the public mind in consequence of 'Common Sense' is unparalleled." Samuel Adams said: "'Common Sense' awakened the public mind and caused the people to call loudly for independence." "Common Sense" achieved a circulation of over one hundred thousand copies, when our population was only three millions. "The sun never shone on a cause of greater worth," said Paine speaking of the American independence. "'Tis not the affair of a city, a county, a province, or a kingdom, but of a continent—of at least one-eight of the habitable globe. 'Tis not the concern of a day, a year or an age; posterity are virtually involved in the contest, and will be more or less affected, even to the end of time, by the proceedings now." "Let the names of Whig and Tory be extinct; and let none other than those of a good citizen; an open and resolute friend, and virtuous supporter of the rights of mankind and of the free and independent states of America, be heard among us." "Of more worth is one honest man to society than all the crowned ruffians that ever lived." I submit that these quotations breathe the language of pure patriotism and inflexible integrity. During the Revolutionary war Paine accepted the lot of a common soldier, and with a small hand printing press issued occasionally "The Crisis," which became to the weary and often disheartened soldiers a pillar of patriotic cloud by day and an altar of self-sacrificing fire by night. In the first number, issued just after Washington's defeat on Long Island, when he was compelled to evacuate Forts Washington and Lee, and when the snow over which the men retreated was reddened by their bare and bleeding feet, Paine said: "These are the times that try men's souls. The summer soldier and the sunshine patriot will in the crisis shrink from the service of his country; but he that stands it now deserves the love and thanks of man and woman. Tyranny, like hell, is not easily overcome; yet we hav this consolation with us, that the harder the conflict the more glorious the triumph." Again: "O ye that love mankind! That dare oppose not only the tyranny but the tyrant, stand forth! Every spot of the Old World is overrun with oppression. Freedom hath been hunted round the globe. Asia and Africa hav long since expelled her. Europe regards her like a stranger, and England has given her warning to depart. Oh, receive the fugitiv, and prepare in time an asylum for mankind."

In 1788 Paine went to England, and in 1791 published the "Rights of Man," a reply to Burke's "Reflections Upon the French Revolution." One brief quotation will serve to show that Thomas Paine was the first great anticipator of abolition; it is this: "Man has no property in man."

His assaults on the British constitution exposed him to government prosecution, and in 1792 he fled to France, then in the incipient stages of that ferment which preceded the French Revolution. France received him with open arms, and the department of Pas-de-Calais elected him a deputy to the National Convention, where he voted with the Girondists. During the trial of Louis XVI. he proposed an asylum for the deposed king in America; for this he was in 1793, at Robespierre's direction, ejected from the convention, and thrown into prison; here he wrote his famous "Age of Reason," an attack upon Atheism and Christianity alike, and in favor of Deism—for Paine was a Deist of the school of Lord Herbert, of Cherburg, John Toland, Lord Shaftesbury, Matthew Tindal, and Lord Bolingbroke. Of his theology two or three quotations will show the character: "Any system of religion that shocks the mind of a child cannot be a true system." "I believe in one God, and no more, and I hope for happiness beyond this life." "The world is my country; to do good, my religion." This was Paine's theology, and may fairly challenge comparison with the popular system of today, and fear nothing from the result. After fourteen months' imprisonment Paine was released at the intercession of the American government, and restored to his seat in the convention, from which he retired to private life and occupied himself with the study of finance. In 1802 he returned to the United States, and in 1809, on the eighth day of June, he entered into final rest without a fear, and with no shadow of regret to cloud the sunset of his noble life, no mist of superstition to veil the glory of his eternal day.

Among the world's inventors Paine has an honored place. The iron truss bridge which he invented now spans our thousand streams, a graceful monument of his mechanical genius. He was the inventor of the planing machine, which relieves the weary mechanic from much of the severity of his olden toil; and he was the first to suggest steam navigation, although not to practically carry out the idea. Because of Paine's theology his patriotism has been forgotten, his motivs misconstrued, his character maligned, and his monument desecrated. The wind strikes the cascade, and for a moment interrupts the flow of its waters, dashing it into spray and tossing it into foam, but below the continuity is regained, and it flows on and on, a thing of beauty and splendor. So the blasts of envy and slander may for a moment interrupt the current of his fame, but eventually the stream of reputation will flow on, sparkling in the brilliancy of his goodness, and unstemmed by the malice of his enemies. And in that day all who are loyal to liberty and truth will reverently uncover at the mention of the author-hero, Thomas Paine.

Paine's Birthday in San Francisco.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Last night our celebration of Thomas Paine's birthday took place at Dashaway Hall, according to program we sent you. I am happy to say that we hav ample reasons to congratulate ourselvs on the result of our efforts. Notwithstanding a "Grand Ladies' Fair in aid of the German Hospital" was opened on the same night, we had a large and appreciativ audience. Let the hypocrits and policy-followers say what they please. The stage was nicely decorated with the Stars and Stripes, and small flags of the different nationalities that took part with us.

Back of the speakers, between two American flags, was hung a large and splendid portrait of Thomas Paine, which could be seen from all parts of the hall, and which attracted much deserved attention. This fine portrait is the work and property of Addie L. Ballou. It spoke many times louder than words could of her rare talent as an artist and of her exalted patriotism and appreciation of Paine's works. Paine has said, "The world is my country," so on this anniversary national lines and differences are laid aside, and we listened with pleasure to eloquent words of love and respect for his memory, spoken from the same rostrum in French, German, Italian, and English languages. I cannot giv many details. With one exception the addresses were short, and all were good and well received.

"The Sword of Bunker Hill" and "The Star Spangled Banner" were sung by Mrs. J. E. Feathers, with a voice so sweet and entrancing that even Tennyson's Brook had almost stopped to listen. Mrs. Feathers is also a stanch Liberal, and her vocal powers are highly appreciated by all.

For want of time the numerous letters from prominent Liberals all over the country were not read, but their names were read and received with great applause. A telegram from the Auxiliary Liberal League, No. 29, of New York city, stating they "were also celebrating," was received with hearty cheers.

The Auxiliary Liberal League of this city, under whose auspices this celebration took place, is satisfied with the result, financially and otherwise. In regard to D. M. Bennett's death, I will only say that so many of your correspondents hav expressed my sentiments fully that I would not take the pen. I wish you the best of success in your efforts.

Paul Gariepy.

San Francisco, Cal., Jan. 30, B. M. 283.

A Tribute and a Proposal.

At the Paine anniversary in Pittsburgh, an account of which we gave last week, A. B. Bradford read an address on the "The Mission of the Liberal League," closing with the following:

I hav only one or two thoughts more to suggest, and I will close. Mr. Bennett, whose portrait is now before you among the rest of the heroes of Freethought, has fallen in the midst of his years and usefulness. After girding the world round in a voyage which exposed him to all manner of sickness and accident, such had been and was his careful observance of the laws of health, that he passed along unscathed. He came home to die by the bite of a tarantula. Or, as the poet expresses it:

> "A falcon, towering in her pride of place,
> Was, by a mousing owl, hawked at and killed."

No; it was not disease that caused Mr. Bennett's unnatural and premature death, and deprived our cause of his invaluable services; it was only the occasion of that sad loss. The men, who, when he was unjustly suffering imprisonment in the Albany penitentiary—an imprisonment which was demanded by the Methodist clergy in defiance of Hayes's solemn promis, and of the judgment of his cabinet that Mr. Bennett had not violated the law—entered into a conspiracy at Boston to blacken his good name, and break up his business. I hav no language strong enough to express the indignation which every just and honorable man must feel at this cowardly proceeding. Under a hypocritical pretense of zeal against obscenity these men were obscene enough to scatter publications all over the country which were private in their character, and never designed for the public eye. They got possession of the material by bribery and by the ruin of a woman's reputation. On Mr. Bennett's triumphal return home by the way of California, these relentless personal enemies met him at the sea-shore with their defamatory documents, and followed him across the continent to New York, dogging him as if he had been a thief. It was this treatment by those who called themselvs Liberals, and whom he had never injured, that broke his heart, and made him an easy prey to death. He could stand the opposition of the church. He expected it when he declared war, and opened his batteries of logic against her superstitions. But he did not expect to meet the bitter persecution of men who professed to be advocates of the same cause to which he was devoted. When I met him for the first time at the Watkins Convention last summer, and looked into his eyes, I saw that with all his leonine spirit as a man and an editor, he had a woman's heart, full of gentleness and sympathy. I saw also that notwithstanding his excellent physical constitution, in his vitals the barbed arrows of ingratitude and hate were rankling, and would surely bring him down to a premature grave. It is the wonder of wonders to me how a man like Mr. Bennett, who was so able, so gentle, and so true to the cause of Freethought, and who never was charged with committing an act in all his life worthy of stripes or of bonds, should hav had such unscrupulous personal enemies. But he had such enemies, and I hold them responsible for his death.

Now I think that the Radicals owe it to his memory to erect a Publishing House, in our metropolitan city, which shall be devoted to the cause in which he died. Under the same roof should be a commodious Hall, to be called "Bennett Hall," which, under the trusteeship of the Board of Directors of the National Liberal League, should be open at cost to the free discussion of all subjects of interest to the cause of humanity. And besides the sale of Mr. Bennett's works, and the publishing of The Truth Seeker, and being the headquarters of the Liberal League, one of the first things to do would be to republish in pamphlet form, and with the authors' consent and superintendence, Ingersoll's discussion with Judge Black, as it was published in the North American Review. The crowning merit of Ingersoll's style is that while compact and sententious, like the style of Thomas Paine, it is comprehensible, even to the mind of intelligent childhood. And no human intellect was ever evolved out of the cosmos which could read the theological works of Robert Ingersoll, or Thomas Paine, without being convinced that they were unanswerable; and that the church whose theology they oppose was a fraud and imposition upon the credulity of mankind. Such a hand-book, sent by thousands to all the Leagues of the country, and to be sold at cost, and scattered among the people, would serve as a corps of sappers and miners in undermining the citadel of superstition. I countenance no waste of precious money when we are so poor, in building a monument over the remains of Mr. Bennett. If his enemies wish to go there, and weep bitter tears of repentance for the way they maltreated him, they can find the spot where they lie without the aid of a monument. But let each Radical in the country contribute five dollars annually for three years in succession, to erect in New York city such a Publishing House as I hav suggested, which shall be the headquarters of the army of American Freethinkers, and devoted to the furtherance of the cause which Mr. Bennett loved. Such a memorial would fall in with the utilitarian spirit of the age, and be useful in its nature and purpose, as well as beautiful; and would be more worthy of Mr. Bennett, and in keeping with his spirit, than any monument his friends might erect in a graveyard.

A Deserved Tribute.

From Pomeroy's Democrat.

M. M. Pomeroy, Esq., Dear Sir: I see a notice in your paper of the 16th inst. of the death of my old employer, D. M. Bennett. Let me add my mite in his praise. I worked for him four years, 1861 to 1865 inclusiv, and found him the best, most cheerful and honest man I ever met. He never seemed to know what fatigue was; would spend entire weeks without even lying down, much less going to bed, working hard all day and writing hard all night, taking "naps," as he called them, in his old armchair at his desk. He was at that time in the drug business in Cincinnati, O., where he became quite wealthy, but lost it all in cotton and oil speculations. I do not indorse his ideas, but he was one of "Nature's noblemen," and gave to every one his just dues. Charitable, honest, and temperate, I regret his death deeply, and wish the world had more like him.

St. Louis. H. C. Robinson.

Lake Shore Spiritualist Conference.

There will be a Conference of the workers in Spiritualism of northeastern Ohio, northern Pennsylvania, and northern New York, at Grand Army Hall, Erie, Pa., on Saturday and Sunday, February 24 and 25, 1883. All Spiritualists and other Liberals who are interested in the advancement of the cause, and are willing to go into some kind of concerted action to get the truth before the people, are invited to attend.

Several good speakers and mediums are engaged to be at the convention, among whom are Rev. A. A. McMaster, formerly a Universalist minister; Judge R. S. McCormick, Moses Hull, Mattie E. Hull, W. F. McCormick, Mrs. M. J. Clark, Madam M. J. Phillips, Henry B. Allen, E. E. Keenan, the Spiritual artist, and others.

Board has been engaged at all the leading hotels at reduced rates. Though this is called the Lake Shore Spiritualist Conference, Spiritualists and Liberalists from any part of the world will be welcome to attend and co-operate.

Obituary.

Died. In Farlinville, Linn co., Kansas, on Thursday, Jan. 4th, 1883, Sarah A. Dewey, aged 46 years.

Mrs. Dewey had been confined to her bed about three months, with dysentery. She bore her sufferings with that patience and bravery characteristic of the woman. She was a believer in the philosophy of Spiritualism, and a Liberal in every sense of the word. She was perfectly conscious to the last. She told her family that she could not liv, that she did not want to but for their sakes, that death had no terrors for her—it was only passing to the scenes of spiritua life. She called her children one by one, kissed them, urged them to liv good and true lives, and bade them good-bye. She passed away as peacefully and calmly as a babe going to sleep. She was a woman of strong, steadfast character, an exemplary citizen, neighbor, wife, and mother, and a true friend. She leaves a widower and six children, who deeply mourn her loss.

A. E. E.

Alliance, Ohio, Jan. 29, 283.

"Answers to Christian Questions." By D. M. Bennett. Price, 25 cents.

Scientific.

Liberty, Science, and Humanity.

The Harmony and Meaning of the Scientific Gospels.

TWO LECTURES DELIVERED BEFORE THE N Y. LIBERAL CLUB BY T. B. WAKEMAN —CONTINUED.

FALLACIES CONCERNING THE COSMOS AND THE INFINITE.

3. Revelation, miracles, prayer, and inspiration have fallen because of the deanthropomorphization of God.

Science banishes miracles. The day of miracles is past, say the Protestants, and with that admission the only basis of their phase of theology falls. For the appeal to miracles, and the evidence by which they were supposed to be sustained, was the cornerstone of their faith after the authority of the Romish church and its traditions had been rejected. Next to the argument from design which we have just considered, it occupied the most prominent place in their fundamental "evidences." But how are the mighty fallen! As the law of evolution, with its adaptation, natural selection, and survival of the fittest, has banished the illusion of designs from nature, so the law of correlation and equivalence of forces, together with the law of deanthropomorphism of God, has banished the idea of miracles, prayer-answer, and inspiration. Scientists have no longer patience with those who insist upon the discussion of these pseudo-notions. The reason is that Science has confirmed the laws referred to by such evidence that to doubt them, after being acquainted with the evidence, would simply be evidence of insanity. See Herbert Spencer's "First Principles," chaps. 1–9.

There can be no miracles, prayer-answer, or inspiration without a personal anthropomorphic deity to work them. This conception of God we have shown to be not only utterly devoid of proof, but incapable of proof, and inconceivable. See Fiske's "Cosmic Philosophy," chap. "Anthropomorphic Theism." The Protestants, however, insist that although miracles have ceased in modern times they were wrought at the time of Christ and his apostles as evidences of his divine mission. But this position will not stand a moment's inquiry. Were the laws of Nature and correlation less valid eighteen hundred years ago than now, or was God, "without a shadow of turning," more like a man then than now? Was there ever a time when the Christian advocates needed the attesting power of miracles more than now? Was it not expressly promised that this power should continue?

"And these signs shall follow them that believe. In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues," etc.

Such words were spoken when a state of things and beliefs existed the reverse of those which prevail to-day. Then the world was explained by imagination and will; now it is explained by science and law. Under this latter, the scientific solution of the world, Hume's law in regard to miracles and revelations of all kinds applies with a force many times stronger than it did when he uttered it. Science has made it irrefragable. It is not only now probable, but it is even certain, that men hav been deceived or mistaken, or willing to deceive, and that no violation or variation of the scientific laws of nature hav ever occurred.

With this conclusion the authority of the Bible as a revelation falls, for it makes no pretense of proof of inspiration aside from the "wonderful works" by which the revelator and his interpreters were attested. Nor does the authority and tradition of the Romish church, which the Protestants deny, remedy the difficulty; for these, too, rest only upon the miraculous history of Christ and his disciples and apostles, and these again upon the miraculous and mythical history of the creation of the world, and of the Jewish people. These and all so-called religions or theologies resting upon miracles, revelations, and personal gods, have no scientific support whatever, and with all intelligent people pass over into the realm of myth, fable, poetry, or symbolization. Excepting as such, let no more time be wasted upon them.

Nor do personal revelations and inspirations in modern times fare any better under these inexorable laws of science. These are nothing, or they are all instances of miracles worked within the consciousness of the individual, so as to be manifest only to him, and not to the rest of the world. That such miracles can occur within the brain, or mind, or consciousness, is now known to be just as impossible as that miracles should occur in the outer physical world. The laws of psychology are themselves but instances of the great and all-embracing law of correlation, by which the remotest star systems and the highest fancies that ever flit through the human consciousness are seen to be illustrations of an inevitable and invariable order.

Here let us pause and send a glance backward before we take the next step. We have reviewed the scientific conceptions that prevail as to the Infinite and Cosmos, to discover in them, if possible, the basis of a practical life or "religion" which may become the basis of a social power and of morality to mankind. We have found amid a great variety that there is a general harmony as to these conceptions:

THE INFINITE can no longer be a person, and in ceasing to be such it becomes the unknowable, which must be the fundamental conception of the knowable Cosmos and of all science. The Infinite becomes conceivable as the foundation of the world, and before it the wisest stand in silence and awe; the foolish, with grimaces of fear and terror, see in it the reflection of themselves.

As to the Cosmos: We have shown also a general harmony of scientific conceptions which give us a new solution of the world, or universe, entirely contrary to, and therefore entirely replacing, the old theological and religious solution. Although this modern solution is as yet but partly understood and adopted, we have seen that its consequences cannot be escaped, and that it is the part of prudence to regard them with prevision and provision, and to make them the basis of human life, individual and collective, as soon as possible.

But one and the main thing, a morality, is yet to be found. It is manifest that the Cosmos possesses no moral or human quality whatsoever. The power that maketh for righteousness is not there. But does not the law of evolution make for righteousness? Is not the right, the good; and the wrong, the bad; one enhancing and the other retarding human progress? Is not therefore this moral distinction fundamental in the world itself? Let us not be again the victims of fancies from which we have just received our emancipation. The admirers of Herbert Spencer are particularly liable to illusions of this kind, which may in time, as in similar cases, become delusions to their less thoughtful followers. This illusion is the old one of the design notion or teleology in a new and more subtle form. Look at it a moment.

Because the survival of the fittest leaves only the fittest to survive in the end, and we now subjectively regard the facts, acts, or qualities that determined who were the fittest, as moral because they result beneficially to us, it in no wise follows that they have any moral quality objectively, that is, independently of our human feelings and uses. The moral quality of the survival of the fittest, or the fightiest, applies to the tiger or the rattlesnake, just as well as to man. "The eternal power that lives in every event of the universe is" not "thus seen to be in the deepest possible sense the author of the moral law which should guide our lives;" but just as truly of the most immoral law, which should not guide anyone but a savage, or a Spencerian philosopher in his abandonment of the rest of mankind to the tender mercies of objective evolution.

In a word, the moral quality of evolution as a whole is no stronger than the moral quality of each and every one of its steps, because each step is entirely independent of the other. It is our reading which makes a whole of these steps. That whole is made up of these steps, each being the resultant only of antecedents, as a natural, inevitable change, and not as the teleological steps of a great design. Therefore, evolution as a whole makes for righteousness only as each and every instance of natural selection does—that is, not at all. Evolution knows no difference between the rattlesnake, a tiger, and a man. The whole human race may yet become the victims of some parasite, or cell growth, which shall make the human brain its food, and which may become possible, i.e., be brought into existence under evolution only, because of the fact that the whole world has been as it has been. What a grand moral result of evolution, and of the moral power that lives in every event, the triumph of this parasite over the human race would be! It would even then not equal what according to Spencer and the Nebular Hypothesis is sure to occur when the Solar System winds up and sends the earth and the whole human race in a burning sun. That will be a triumph of the moral power of evolution, with a vengeance!

The trouble is that when philosophers, who have done grandly for science, make the slip of ascribing the potency of life to inorganic matter, or sexes to chemical affinities, or morality to evolution, they not only discredit themselves, but furnish a basis for endless delusions. If fancy or poetry or a quasi theology is needed, let us keep them distinct from physical and material science, and remember the words of Goethe: "The imagination is indeed a beautiful faculty, but I like it not when it plays with facts."

And again hear how, in his poem "The Godlike" (Das Goettliche), he gives the true source of moral conception and power, as not in nature, but IN MAN, where we shall next look for it and find it.

Under eternal brazen
Mighty laws
Must we all
Our being's
Circle complete.

MAN, and he alone,
Can dare the impossible;
He distinguishes,
Chooses, and judges;
He to the moment can
Continuance lead.

For unfeeling
Nature is to all
Alike; the sun shines
O'er the evil and the good;
And to the evil-doer,
As to the best, gleam
The moon and the stars.

He alone can
Reward the good,
Punish the bad,
Heal and save;
All the erring, straying,
Usefully combine.

The noble man, then,
Must be helpful and good,
Unweariedly must weave.

The useful and right
Shall to us an emblem be
Of our imagined ideal ones.

A League Anniversary.

The Newark Liberal League celebrated its fifth anniversary by a literary and musical entertainment of a most pleasant character on the 6th inst. Between three and four hundred people crowded Upper Library Hall, on Market street, to its utmost capacity on the occasion, and when the floor was cleared it was well that not more than half took advantage of the invitation to dance.

The exercises were opened by an overture by Mr. D. B. Dana and orchestra, followed by a few introductory remarks by Mr. Avery, the president of the League, who said:

"The cause which we represent is rapidly growing. Throughout the country Leagues are multiplying, and now there are nearly two hundred and fifty. The work which we propose to do is entirely humanitarian; we take no stock in theology. That is a theory of the past. Our rallying cry is the brotherhood of man. Much is yet to be accomplished. The churches are still strong; but even with them the Liberal feeling is apparent, and if they survive they will be changed into organizations whose main purpose will be the improvement of the affairs of this world. The signs of the times are auspicious. We need not be discouraged—the work already done so successfully points to a happy to-morrow."

The address of the evening was by Mr. Putnam, who has always been a favorit lecturer before the League. He said:

"I speak to-night of the relations of Liberalism to the past, the present, and the future. The orthodox think they hav far more love and reverence for the past than we, but it is not so. They respect only the shell, while we would penetrate to the deeper life within. The orthodox venerate the Bible as a divine book, while we venerate not the Bible as a record, but those mighty and prophetic souls that made the Bible. It is the spirit that we regard, and through all the past, whenever the spirit of man has manifested itself in any sincere way, there do we find something worthy of our persistent study. We claim all the past for our heritage; all its hope and aspiration. All the bibles of the past are ours; all its literature and art. The soul of the past is a continuous inspiration. It livs within our heart and brain.

"We sympathize also with the universal present; not with one part of the race, but with the whole. We realize our kinship with every nationality, with every tribe, with every man. Wherever there is any struggle for liberty, for advancement—in India, in Russia, in Ireland, as well as in America—there do we feel the thrill of brotherhood. We recognize the oneness of man. There is no separation, there are no select few. The world must move together. The fibers of our life are intertwined with the remotest lands. Beneath every sky we see the nobleness of human endeavor. And from the past and present thus bound together in one living destiny we look forward into the expanding future. While dwelling in profoundest love and reverence for the past, most pre-eminently do we look onward to the better times. Within the future of humanity is the glowing heaven of our hopes, the kingdom of man—not where kings and princes reign, but the people, in the full possession of all their rights, and where every man is a sovereign in intellectual and moral capacity. The orthodox look up to a stationary heaven, where after death they expect to remain forever; but we look, as Goethe says, into the beyond—the ever-progressiv future of the race. There is our immortality, not stationary, but dynamic—a constant energy and a constant growth.

"The past and the present are but stepping-stones to a more heroic and splendid future."

Mr. Dana, who seems to hav been intended by nature to be a cornetist, then gave an "Arbuckleian" solo upon his favorit instrument, which was heartily encored, after which Mr. Oscar F. Gifford recited "The Tramp" in as effectiv a manner as possible without costume. Being recalled, he rendered the "Man with Many Names" in an equally acceptable manner, and was succeeded by Miss Dora Hopper, who sang "I'm Alone" with so much earnestness that there seemed to be a general inclination on the part of the young men present to ascend the platform and relieve her unfortunate predicament. Like the others, with the exception of the speakers, she was obliged to repeat, and then Mr. A. T. Van Winkle performed twice very skilfully upon the xylophone, getting as much music out of that rather wooden instrument as any one could.

The platform entertainment concluded with a comedietta, called "Carried by Assault," in which Messrs. J. W. and G. A. Frankel and Miss Fannie Frankel, who are amateurs of no inconsiderable talent, kept the audience amused for half an hour or more, when the impatient dancers took possession of the hall, and, motioning the band to proceed, swung their partners through the waltz and quadril with vim and courage. An old gentleman of over seventy was noticed among the most vigorous dancers. Those not conversant with the dance congregated in corners and held friendly converse.

We are glad to learn that the entertainment was a success financially as well as esthetically. It would be well if other Leagues followed the example of this one, for the social part of our natures is all too little cultivated and catered to by our present organizations. It was said once by a preacher that "the devil had stolen all the good tunes," and perhaps he was right, for at present the churches monopolize the social elements of the communities. The church recognizes that the fiddle attracts better than the preacher, and the violin may now be reckoned among the activ missionary forces. Let the Liberals devote more time to social matters, and our ranks will be increased by energetic young people, whose services are of inestimable value.

Communications.

The Conversion of Paul.

We now take up the narrativ of Acts immediately after the death of Stephen:

And there was in that day a great persecution against the church that was in Jerusalem; and they were all dispersed, except the legates, among the villages of Judea, and likewise among the Samaritans. And believing men gathered up and buried Stephen. And they lamented over him greatly. And Saul persecuted the church of God, entering houses and dragging forth men and women and committing them to prison (viii, 1-3).

It must hav been a fearful persecution which drove out of Jerusalem all of the 5,000 recent converts (iv, 4). And what a singular persecutor was Saul, whose victims were obscure men and women, while he allowed the chief agitators to giv Deacon Stephen a formal funeral!

But we pass on to the next chapter, where the persecutor reappears in a grand tableau vivant.

And Saul was still full of threats and deadly hatred against the disciples of our Lord. And he requested that a letter from the high priest might be given him unto Damascus, to the synagogs; that if he should find persons pursuing this course, men or women, he might bind and bring them to Jerusalem. And as he was going and began to approach Damascus, suddenly there poured upon him a light from heaven. And he fell to the ground; and he heard a voice which said to him: Saul! Saul! why persecutest thou me? It will be hard for thee to kick against the goads. He replied, and said: Who art thou, my Lord? And our Lord said: I am Jesus, the Nazarene, whom thou persecutest. But arise and go into the city, and there it will be told thee what thou oughtest to do. And the men who traveled with him in the way stood amazed; for they heard merely the voice, and no one was visible to them. And Saul arose from the ground, and nothing was visible to him, with his eyes opened. And they took him by the hand and led him into Damascus. And he had no sight for three days, and he neither ate nor drank. And there was in Damascus a certain disciple whose name was Ananias. And the Lord said unto him in a vision: Ananias! And he said: Lo, I am here, my Lord. And our Lord said to him: Arise, go to the street which is called Straight, and inquire in the house of Judas for Saul, who is from the city of Tarsus; for, lo, while he prayed, he saw in a vision a man named Ananias, who came and laid his hand upon him that his eyes might be opened. And Ananias said: My Lord, I hav heard of this man from many, how much evil he hath perpetrated toward thy saints at Jerusalem. And lo, here also he hath authority from the chief priests to bind all them that call on thy name. The Lord said to him: Arise and go; for he is to me a chosen vessel to carry my name to the gentiles [nations], and to kings, and among the sons of Israel. For I will show him how much he is to suffer on account of my name. Then Ananias went to the house to him; and he laid his hand upon him and said to him: Saul, my brother, our Lord Jesus, he who appeared to thee as thou camest, hath sent me that thy eyes might be opened. And he arose and was baptized. And he took food and was invigorated. And he was some days with the disciples of Damascus. And forthwith he announced Jesus in the synagogs of the Jews, that he is the son of God. And all they that heard him were amazed; and they said: Is not this he who persecuted all them that called on this name in Jerusalem? And lo, for this very thing also was he sent hither that he might bind and carry them to the chief priests (ix, 1-21).

On the question of the ecclesiastical authority of Jerusalem over Damascus, A.D. 30 to 40, Rabbi Wise says:

"How can anyone imagin that the high priest and Sanhedrim of Jerusalem, whose power [after A.D. 30] was reduced at home to zero almost, could exercise jurisdiction in a foreign country over the persons of king's [emperor's] subjects?" (Orig. of Chris., 427).

And Smith's Bible Dictionary, article Sanhedrim, says:

"According to the Jerusalem Gemara, the power of inflicting capital punishment was taken away from this tribunal forty years before the destruction of Jerusalem."

This fact is fatal to the power said to hav been exercised by the Jewish authorities in the arraignment and condemnation of Jesus Christ, if it took place after A.D. 30, and equally fatal to the account of the stoning of Stephen after that date.

The Sanhedrim was established in the time of the Maccabees—probably under the high-priesthood of Hyrcanus I., 135-107 B.C. (Chamb. En.). Its power was curtailed by the Romans, so that after A.D. 30 it was, as Rabbi Wise says, reduced almost to zero. And yet the book of Acts assumes its existence with full power not only to arraign and punish disciples of Jesus in Judea, but in a foreign city, governed by a Roman propretor.

This question of jurisdiction which has so sorely perplexed biblical scholars who hav sought to maintain the integrity of the narrativs of Acts, does not trouble us at all. The supreme tribunal of the Jews certainly maintained its authority up to 63 B.C., when Aristobulus II. was king of Judea, and his brother Hyrcanus II. was high priest. And the instability of the government of Damascus prior to 63 B.C., when Aretas, at the request of its citizens, put a military governor in the city, renders it quite possible that Paul went there with authority from the Sanhedrim to arrest heretics and bring them to Jerusalem for trial.

The story of Paul's conversion, therefore, may be a truthful one, excepting the miraculous part of it, and so much as is contradictory to the parallel accounts in Acts of the same event, or inconsistent with Paul's own writings. With these eliminations, we accept it as confirmatory of our discovery of Paul 63 B.C.

ANTICHRIST.

Infidel Philosophy.

There is something so supremely ridiculous in portions of the scriptures, and in some of the religious beliefs, that although the Freethinker endeavors to hold a steady rein over his expressions, they often seem impious and heaven-daring to the Christian. It is safe to say, however, that the Infidel treats Christianity with as much respect and consideration as Christians do Infidelity. The Infidel never persecutes for opinion's sake—never keeps a big devil to set on those who disagree with him, nor thinks his cause so holy as to justify lying and deceit to sustain it.

In former times the churches derived their support mainly from two sources, viz.: camp-meetings in summer and protracted meetings in winter. The recruits enlisted at these efforts were made to "come down" handsomely. The hope of heaven on the one hand, and the fear of hell on the other, extorted sufficient sums from this heavenly spawn to keep the priests fat and all the churches in running order.

The people hav become too intelligent to be caught in gull-traps set in open daylight, and the decoy is now the sociables, lotteries, church fairs, etc. Thus those who would not giv a cent directly thoughtlessly contribute to support the church; even professed Liberals often attend those fairs and sociables, not realizing that they are treasonably giving the enemy aid and comfort. If Liberals are consistent they will be careful how they gather with one hand and scatter with the other.

The cluster of stars to which our sun belongs has been surveyed. Its boundaries are better understood than the boundaries of some countries on the globe on which we liv. Its shape may be aptly illustrated by placing two very flat watch crystals together so that their concave surfaces will face each other. Our position is near the center of the cluster. Although the stars are untold millions of miles apart, when we look from our position toward that region in the heavens which would correspond to the edges of the watch crystals the stars appear to be compacted and wedged together, while in that quarter of the heavens answering to the sides of the crystals comparativly few stars are seen. The appearance of the heavens in a clear night, even to a careless observer, will satisfy him of the correctness of the illustration. The light of millions of these stars mingling and blending together forms a bright belt around the heavens which we call the milky way. In this zone the stars are so numerous that they hav been aptly called star-dust. Light, which travels at the rate of nearly 200,000 miles per second, would require about three years to travel from one of these stars to another, or from the nearest fixed star to the earth; while those situated in the more remote parts of the cluster would require more than 2,000 years. Yet these stars are comparativly our near neighbors. So crowded do the stars appear to be in some parts of the milky way that by counting them in a single field of view Herschel was led to conclude that 50,000 passed under his review, in a zone two degrees wide, in a single hour's observation.

Our cluster is but one of many millions scattered over the heavens in every conceivable variety, and at inconceivable distances—some so near to us that the stars comprising them can be separated with telescopes of inferior power; others so far distant as to defy the most powerful instruments to separate them, and are only seen by the best telescopes as light, filmy patches on the deep blue of the heavens. These star clusters can never be numbered; their distances are so great that light from them would be thousands and even millions of years in reaching us.

Think of this infinitude of worlds. Let the imagination span these immeasurable distances, and then fold its wing and drop from these starry hights down to the Mosaic account of creation, in which these congeries of shining worlds came near being overlooked entirely, and were only alluded to as an afterthought in the the all-comprehensiv expression: "He made the stars also." In view of these myriads of shining suns, each probably accompanied by its retinue of revolving worlds, is not the declaration "In six days God created the heavens and the earth" about as silly a sentence as ever was written down on paper?

Herschel computed that in the densest part of the milky way 500 stars were ranged one behind the other, each separated from the other by a distance equal to that which separates us from the nearest fixed star. Still his forty-foot reflector would shoot clear through this stratum of stars into the blue ether beyond With this powerful instrument he could clearly see a cluster of stars so far removed that light would only reach us after a journey of 350,000 years. Professor Mitchell affirms that if such a cluster were moved back into space to ten times its present distance, it could still be pursued and brought to view by the telescope of Lord Ross.

Light from a cluster thus situated would require no less than 3,500,000 years to reach the earth. From every civilized country, and from many islands of the sea, these observations hav been made. Astronomers with their powerful space-penetrating instruments hav swept around the entire heavens. So accurately hav these observations been conducted that the position of each star is as exactly mapped out as the cities and villages on the earth. In view of these facts, I ask the Christian to explain how it has happened that the New Jerusalem, with its gemmed walls, and pearly gates, and golden pavements, has been overlooked by these close observers. And please tell us where the place in which the wicked are to be punished—"where the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever"—is located. Of one thing we may be certain: they are not located within a radius which light can travel in 3,500,000 years, or their exact position would hav been carefully noted by these accurate observers.

Now, fellow-sinners, let us take a rest and breathe easy, for I hav demonstrated scientifically that hell is too far distant to get up much of a scare, and that heaven is so far away that it will dissolve into the thinnest kind of a cloud before we can reach it. Then let us go right forward and strive to do good, not because we are selfish enough to try to win heaven, nor because we are cowardly enough to fear hell, but out of a pure desire to make the world better and happier.

I traveled in a far-off and strange country, where the musketoes were as big as bull-dogs, their wings as large as boat-sails, their bills as long as marlin-spikes, their eyes as large as watch-crystals, and their buzz like the roaring of many waters. In another country I found a peculiar kind of people living under water. Their beasts of burden were the monsters of the deep, and they lived in the stomachs of big fishes. In still another country the inhabitants were like salamanders; no fire could burn them, and everything they touched turned to ashes. They were twenty feet high, and their shoes were as large as canoes, and their children were hatched from eggs the shells of which would hold a bushel of corn each. They multiplied greatly; some of them had as many as a thousand wives; the more wives they had the more they pleased the gods they pretended to worship, and when a wife died she turned to a pillar of salt. They lived exclusivly on apples, and spoke a language which snakes could understand. No matter what crime they committed, the blood of a certain individual who died many centuries before would wash away the last trace of it. To all who hav faith, these statements will appear as clear and as true as holy writ. If any are inclined to doubt, they should remember that those who doubt will be damned. Call in the priest, and, after prayers, he will tell you that the greater the mystery and the bigger the lie, the more faith will be required to believe; the more faith you exercise the surer you will be of heaven.

God moves in a mysterious way,
His blunders to perform,
His word shines forth with glorious ray;
'Twill save you—in a horn.

JOHN PECK.

"Doubter" Relieved of Doubt.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of Jan. 20th is an "Open Letter to Chas. E. Townsend," signed "Doubter," which, as an anonymous letter, does not deserve notice, but I will respond briefly, thus: As there can be no possible self-acquired coherency inherent in unconscious matter, as coherency is an exclusiv attribute of mind, that fully answers the doubts of that "Doubter." Again, as the gist of the acts of unconscious matter, in nature, is their coherent adaptation to useful results, evincing a purpose, it becomes an axiom that intelligent co-operation is the only potential force, or first cause, in the universe, capable of giving such coherent acts to incoherent matter, which is further proved by finite mind co-operation being the only potential force in all art performances with unconscious matter; as the sole cause of a purpose in their coherent acts, or forced accomplishments.

These conclusiv facts of nature and art do not admit of "further demonstration in time," as "Doubter" seems illogically waiting for. Such discovered adequacy completes the circuit of research.

CHAS. E. TOWNSEND.

Locust Valley, N. Y., Feb. 4, 1883.

"The Truth Seeker" Still Livs.

From the Universe.

Mary W. Bennett, widow of the late D. M. Bennett, is now the publisher of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and Eugene M. Macdonald is the editor. This sterling and widely-circulated Freethought journal has won its way so deep into the hearts of readers that there can be no fear for its existence. To desert it now would be to strike a blow at the memory of its famous founder, who in life made it a defiant foe of the church; it would be to strike at the widow who so nobly and faithfully stood by her late husband in all his perils, and it would, too, be ingratitude toward Mr. Macdonald, who so ably conducted the paper in the many trying emergencies of the past. THE TRUTH SEEKER is a great paper and deserves the most generous support of the Liberal public. The recent numbers received are splendid in every respect.

Freethought in Ireland.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Will you kindly allow me through the medium of your widely circulated journal to appeal to the Freethinkers of the United States for assistance in our efforts to form a library in connection with the Freethought society which has recently been formed in this town? Keady is a rapidly rising town, six miles distant from the old historic city of Armagh, the ecclesiastical capital of Ireland, and the district in which it is situated—one of the most prosperous and peaceful in Ireland—being the center of the linen manufacture for which the north has long been celebrated, presents a favorable field for the propagation of Freethought principles. The number of Liberal thinkers, members of the society, is as yet small; but we hope by a judicious propaganda to add considerably to our strength. I say judicious propaganda because the forces of orthodoxy are so powerful that we are obliged to be very guarded in our assaults upon the popular theology lest the blind bigotry and intolerance of our opponents be aroused to crush us.

Freethought has as yet made but little progress in this country. Here and there in the northern, eastern, and southern districts a few isolated Freethinkers may be found, but separated as they are from each other, without any organization, and surrounded on all sides by professing Christians, they are rendered almost powerless. The deplorable outrages which hav occurred in this country, and which by their daring and ferocity hav appalled the civilized world, were in almost every instance perpetrated by men ignorant and illiterate, whom centuries of mental serfdom had brutalized and degraded. Happily education is spreading, and education leads to thinking, and thinking to knowledge. The people are every year growing more self-reliant—there is undoubted evidence that the church of Rome, which has always been strong in the affections of Irishmen, has come at last upon evil days. The spread of knowledge, of American ideas, and, though to a very limited extent, of Freethought, has weakened the influence of the authority of the church, but there is no trace as yet of a general intellectual revolt against Romanism. There is a significant tendency on the part of the people to attenuate the authority of the clergy over them in more than merely political questions. The president of a Catholic workingmen's club lately insisted in his inaugural address upon the right of men to think freely on all questions subject to no external restraint of any kind. But it is essentially in politics that the people hav of late taken up an attitude toward their religious teachers which is full of grave embarrassment to the church. It is impossible to say at present how far this attitude may affect the religious future of the masses. The present anxiety of clergy would seem to favor the idea that they are in danger of losing the people. Both bishops and priests, called to choose between their obedience to Rome and the cause of their country, hav divided their ranks, and shown the remarkable spectacle of the pope obliged to make terms with his representativs in Ireland in order to save his purely religious authority. Archbishop McCabe, in Dublin, steadily maintains the authority of the law; Archbishop Croke, of Castrel, identifies himself with the extreme party. Individual bishops, again, dread the moral disintegration of the new doctrins, while bishops like Dr. Nulty issue pamphlets almost Socialistic in their boldness of assertion; and the priests who are entirely sprung from the people—"consecrated peasants," they may be well called—are, for the most part, identified with their flocks in political opinion. The effect of this divided attitude is strange. The pope finds himself paralyzed by his bishops; the bishops of moderate views never had so little authority over the priests; and the priests who are moderate never had so little authority over the people, while the bishops and priests who sympathize with the political excesses of the people hav hardly any purely religious authority at all, because the people know very well that their conduct has been in many respects unjustificable on every ground, both of religion and morality. In short, there is a general impression that the church of Rome has begun to lose ground in Ireland, as it has lost ground everywhere on the continent of Europe. A Frenchman traveling in Ireland has declared the power of the church to be already gone. Surely this state of things is calculated to awaken bright hopes for the future of Freethought in this country. Our society aims at preparing the way in this and surrounding districts for that intellectual revolt which must come in time, as it has come to every other Roman Catholic nation in the world. A large and well-stocked library would be the chief instrument in effecting our object, and as all the various sects of Protestantism hold aloof from us, we hav resolved to appeal to our American brethren to assist us in our efforts to overthrow the vast fabric of superstition which casts so baleful a shadow over our land. We earnestly appeal to every individual reader of this journal for contributions of books, essays, pamphlets, reviews, or magazines. I should add that it is a matter of no consequence whether these be new or not. Second-hand volumes or magazines will be equally as acceptable as new. Let me urge upon every reader the importance of this appeal, and how very materially he or she would be assisting us in our work by such contributions. Let no one be deterred from contributing to our library by the thought that perhaps some one else had sent the same volume or essay or magazine. We propose establishing a similar society as our own in Armagh, and any such extra copies will then be utilized and prove very acceptable. In conclusion, we venture to remind you of the zeal which Christians show in propagating their "gospel" in every quarter of the globe, and we trust that our American brethren will not be wanting in a like zeal in sending the "good tidings" of Freethought across the ocean to this priest-ridden land.

Yours in the cause of mental freedom,

Thomas G. Wallace.

2 Hill st., Keady, Co. Armagh, Ireland.

Our London Letter.

The church is struggling hard to gain its former hold on the people of this country, who are surely, though perhaps slowly, emancipating themselvs from the deadly influence of its power through so many long centuries. As the lay members of society will not go to the priests, the priests must go to the laity and sally forth into the highways and byways, endeavoring to compel them to come in. The clergy could not, or would not, see that power over the minds of the masses was slipping away from them, and they hav at last, though too late for themselvs, awakened to the fact that such is the case.

The Salvation Army hav made a great noise and boasting over the numerous converts made, or supposed to hav been made, and now that corporation known by an ingenious piece of pleasantry as the national church, throwing aside that dignity on which it formerly so prided itself, has started an opposition army. A few clergymen, supported by sundry sisters—"brides of Christ"—and a varied assortment of devotees, parade the streets with banners flying and trumpets blowing. After succeeding in getting a large crowd of rough characters together, and getting well mobbed and pelted with street refuse, they make a hasty stampede to their sanctuary, where there is a general riot, the police are called in, and the business concludes for that night. Of course a report is made that so many "souls hav been brought to Jesus," the officers plaster up their wounds and pose sweetly as martyrs, the mob has thoroughly enjoyed itself, and everyone is well satisfied with the performance. It certainly seems very strange that magistrates allow these disturbances to continue, but as it is eminently respectable to appear to be religious they are afraid to denounce the inciters of the riots for fear they should be looked upon as Infidels and lose caste. If, on the other hand, a body of Freethinkers paraded the streets in the same manner, and with equal results, we should hear quite another tale. It would be found that there were plenty of laws in existence to put down anything of that sort.

As matters stand, however, we hav no need to attempt the work of proselyting in that mode. By a calm appeal to the better part of man, his intellect and reasoning faculties, we make our way, and shall continue to do so without any danger of our work being interrupted by the spasmodic efforts of the priests to countermine us. We do not require to hav our ranks re-enforced by those who are only to be influenced through their passions; we are much better off without such recruits. We require quality more than quantity.

The class of people who are redeemed by the priests would only be a drag on us and bring scandal to the cause. We only want such as are sincere and deliberate seekers after truth, wherever it may be found; not hysterical, excitable, shallow-minded individuals who are "all things by turns and nothing long"—Christians to-day, Infidels to-morrow, and Christians again the day after; they are but traitors in the camp, and too much care cannot be taken in admitting applicants as members of Freethought societies. There is doubtless a great temptation in local branches to make a good show of numbers, but it must be remembered that some of the greatest battles hav been gained by the smaller armies. A compact body of well-trained and seasoned troops can often do more than a large mass of undisciplined soldiers.

These remarks of mine may be considered mere well-worn truisms, but as they are often lost sight of, and should be well kept in view, this must be my excuse for again bringing them forward.

There has been quite a large crop of instances just lately of the "unco' guid" falling from grace. A "converted clown" and prominent member of the "blue ribbon army" got drunk and attempted to commit suicide; his valueless life was unfortunately spared, and while in hospital he has had hundreds of presents and letters of congratulation showered upon him by the godly One of his admirers informed him that God and the devil hav had a terrible battle over him, the former, by a very near shave (as usual), gaining the victory. I am inclined to think that this clown, finding business slack—other converts pushing him into the background—just tried this little dodge to come to the front again; and he has found the scheme to work admirably.

A vicar named Timins is likely to get into trouble for administering poison with fatal effects to a girl aged 16, one of his parishioners.

A doctor near London has conspired with a female patient to charge his partner, whom he had swindled, with an indecent assault, which drives the latter to commit suicide. The swindler is a member of the Salvation Army.

A curate was charged last week with collecting alms under false pretenses and getting drunk with the proceeds. He was fined £5 and costs, or one month's imprisonment.

There are also other instances of little failings on the part of the "friends of God;" the above are but samples. It is scarcely possible to look through a daily paper without meeting with some such cases. And these are the individuals we are to look up to and revere, and by following their teachings gain access to heaven. What a delightful place it must be!

London, Jan. 17, 1883. J. D.

A New Process for Manufacturing Christiasn.

At the closing scenes of a series of theological farces termed "religious revivals," recently played in a popular church of Norwich, Conn., that clerical clown, the Kentucky Mountaineer, having roused the ire of the chief priests and elders of the church by too much liberality in preaching, was constrained to take the back track and let fly from the pulpit a ministerial boomerang at the heads of Infidels and sinners, in order to conciliate the saints of the synagog and placate the presiding pulpiteer. "Brethren," said he, "I am no Universalist, for I do not believe all will be saved. I am talking to men and women in this congregation who will go to hell so sure as there is a God." This "blessed assurance" of woe for somebody seemed to soothe the anxious souls of the sanctified and restored confidence in the orthodoxy of the evangelist.

Then followed an ecclesiastical exhortation, and a tragi-comic caricature of the "carpenter's son." Said he to sinners, "It is not necessary for you to come forward and humble yourselvs before this altar, nor even to call the name of Jesus; all that is required is to rise or hold up the hand to show that you accept the savior, and he will graciously receive you." But not a soul indicated a desire to be "taken in," even on such easy terms. At last veteran "sinners" were given over to hardness of heart, and his pious prattle turned to the infantil subjects of "total depravity" in the following strain: "Now, little ones, Jesus loves little children; the Bible tells you so. He is here to-night and wants you to stand up to show that you love him. Only think how much he has done for you. Now won't you stand up just to please him?"

Presently a mere child—a girl-baby of perhaps three summers—was held up in the lap of a lady. The eagle eye of the great evangelist caught the movement, and peering over the pulpit with outstretched arm and pointed finger, he eagerly exclaimed, "Is that little girl standing up for Jesus?" The baby head was nodded, whereupon the poor child was pampered by priestly palaver to the disgust of sensible "sinners." "My little girl, it don't matter whether I know your name or not; Jesus knows it and loves you. And now, little girl," said he, rolling his eyes upward, and pointing to the bell-loft, "your name is written up there in the Lamb's Great Book of Life. You may now sit down, little girl, but remember that Jesus knows you and will love you so long as you liv. Now is there not another little girl—some playmate of yours—that will stand up for Jesus?"

By dint of coaxing and clerical cant three other childish heads were put up, and thus brought into the fold of Christian credulity. These little lambkins of the flock evidently were "taken in" by the Mother Goose tales of the parson, and tickled by his theological twaddle; and yet upon the platform were full-grown men (?) smiling their approbation, instead of denouncing such a pious imposition on the credulity of the cradle.

The next morning was announced, "Four more souls saved by grace at the gospel meetings!" But, thanks to the increase of infantine intelligence, not a boy baby was "converted." Byron Boardman.

Norwich, Conn., Feb. 4, 1883.

Resolutions of Sorrow.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: The following resolutions were passed by the Northwestern Kansas Freethinkers' Association, and by it I was requested to giv you a copy.

Resolved, That in the death of D. M. Bennett we recognize the loss to the Liberal cause of one of its greatest teachers, a man devoted to truth and humanity, and as such we honor his memory, and extend to his companion our sympathy in her afflictions, and shall with pleasure lend her our support in maintaining The Truth Seeker.

Resolved, That the secretary be, and he is hereby, instructed to forward a copy of this resolution to Mrs. Bennett, and also to publish the same in the Kansas Blade.

J. W. Hagaman, Sec. N. W. K. F. A.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - - - - Editor.
M. W. BENNETT, - - - - - - Publisher.

21 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing seven hundred square inches more reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

All Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders should be made payable to MARY W. BENNETT.

SATURDAY, - - - - FEBRUARY 17, 1883.

The Mormon Problem.

We print below the argument delivered by Judge Black before the House Judiciary Committee last week on the attempt to deprive the Mormons of the right of holding office, or even voting in the territory they hav settled. It is not often Mr. Black says anything THE TRUTH SEEKER can commend, but in this he has voiced the sentiments of the constitutional party of the League and all Liberals with a force and directness that must convince. This summary and abstract of his argument is from the World:

"In this argument he took the ground that the matters to which these laws related, marriage, divorce, legitimacy of children, and succession to property, were in their nature more purely domestic, private, and local than any others to which legislation applies. If they hav no right to make their own laws on these subjects then they hav no right to self-government at all. But they had that right. The right belonged by nature and as a great principle of law to every separate community settled upon public lands with the consent of the Federal government. When these people colonized themselvs beyond the limits of the states they did not leave their liberties behind them. The freedom of the community results necessarily from the freedom of the individuals that compose it. This was the very principle that triumphed in the success of our Revolution. No one can deny it now except for reasons which would hav made him a tory in 1776. The right of local self-government is reserved by the Constitution to the people of the territories, as distinctly and clearly as to the people of the states. A subject upon which Congress cannot legislate in a state is manifestly beyond its power in a territory.

"Judge Black asserted that what is called the Edmunds bill —but which the senator of that name certainly did not draw up—expressly puts its constitutionality on the exclusiv jurisdiction of the United States in the territories. He denounced this as simply false. No such jurisdiction is given, nor any jurisdiction at all, over local affairs in the territories more than in the states. Powers not given are withheld. This is a mere usurpation; a gross violation of the Constitution, which, if wilfully committed, is a hideous crime.

"Judge Black contended that these acts as passed and proposed were not only unconstitutional but anti-constitutional. The Edmunds bill carefully provides a mode of packing juries, and not satisfied with that it inflicts the punishment of total disfranchisment without any trial or conviction at all. What is worse, if worse be possible, it operates ex post facto. Besides, the enemies of free government think themselvs justified by the Hoar amendment in seizing all the local offices and their public money—another provision is now proposed which will infallibly destroy the existence of the legislature. Still another disfranchised all female voters, though their rights are as clearly vested as those of male citizens, and though they are admitted to be innocent of every offense except that of casting their ballots in favor of honest and free government. It is a bill of pains and penalties, not to punish polygamy but to strike the whole of the people of a territory with the blasting curse of political slavery. The constitutionality of the act to regulate marriage and divorce has been much questioned as an invasion of religious freedom. But Judge Black said that was not his point. He protested against all this legislation as a perfidious outrage upon the civil liberty of a people who are and of right ought to be free.

"Judge Black was particularly strong and bitter in his exposition of the causes which make an attack on the Mormons popular with the average demagog of the period:

"'I think that under the circumstances it would be an infinit pity to strike the territory of Utah with the curse of political slavery, to deprive the people of their local government, and deliver them up naked and defenseless to be sacked and pillaged by their enemies. But let it be understood that I am not asking for mercy. If you hav the constitutional power you must exercise it as you please.

"'There are many reasons which naturally incline an American statesman to do all the harm he possibly can to the people of Utah. They are powerless to resist it. They hav not a single vote in the national legislature, and cannot exercise the slightest influence on a presidential election. They are excluded from all political rings; they cannot be anybody's competitor for the spoils of office; they can make or mar no scheme to save or squander the public money. On the other hand, the whole country outside of their own territory is populous with their enemies, whom you must conciliate and gratify if you can do so with a safe conscience, for they hav votes and power and influence which will not be opposed without danger.

"'The religion which the people of Utah adhere to with so much tenacity is regarded in other parts of the country with extreme dislike, as the mere superstition of an upstart sect. No man, however, who has the faintest perception of Christian principles, thinks it right to kill or plunder or outlaw them for holding an erroneous faith. From real Christianity there comes no howl for the blood and property of the Mormons. But in other quarters the most rancorous hatred breaks out. By some famous preachers the policy of killing the Mormons by wholesale unless they leave their property, abandon their homes, and flee beyond the Union, is openly advocated and apparently concurred in with great warmth by congregations supposed to be respectable; and this is accompanied with curses loud and deep upon all who would interpose a constitutional objection to that method of dealing with them. When we read of such things in history we are apt to think them diabolical. But approved as they are now and here by popular judgment, and unrebuked even by senatorial wisdom, we must concede, I suppose, that it is very good taste and refined humanity disguised in a new dress. As a general rule political piety, wherever it has turned up the whites of its eyes in this country or in Europe, is a sham and a false pretense; but in this exceptional case it would be speaking evil of dignities to call it hypocrisy. The soundness of the religion which slanders a Mormon is not to be questioned. Equally pure is the act of a returning officer who fraudulently certifies the election of an anti-Mormon candidate known to be defeated by a majority of more than 15 to 1, nor will we attribute any sordid motiv to those residents of Utah, official and private, who busy themselvs here and at home to break down the territorial government, seize its offices, and grab its money. Their righteous souls are vexed from day to day by the mere fact that sinful men are allowed to liv peaceful and prosperous lives. They are animated solely by disinterested zeal for the advancement of the Lord's kingdom, which in their judgment would be much obstructed by the further continuance of free government in Utah.

"'But the case does not depend upon the merits or demerits of the parties. It is not a question what measure of punishment the people of Utah deserve for their wickedness, but what Congress has a right to inflict. Whatever may be the superior sanctity of the holy men who promote this legislation, they cannot be gratified at the expense of a breach in the Constitution. If you shall be satisfied that you hav no power in the premises you will not usurp it, for that would be a hideous crime of which you are wholly incapable. Before I go further, let me vindicate the justice of this censure, not because you doubt it (for that is impossible), but merely to stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance.

"'Mr. Grote, the most learned and thoughtful of modern historians, has shown by divers examples that fidelity to the fundamental law—which he terms "constitutional morality" —is the one indispensable condition upon which the safety and success of every free government must depend.

"'These enactments, made and proposed, are in the main a comprehensiv bill of pains and penalties, not against persons guilty or supposed to be guilty of polygamy or any other hurtful crime, but against people known and acknowledged to be innocent. They are intended to disfranchise whole masses of free persons, reduce them to the condition of slaves, and deprive a community of its natural and constitutional right to an honest government of its own. For such a bill there is not only no warrant in the Constitution, but it is expressly interdicted. Nor is there any precedent for it, except the reconstruction laws of 1867, and they were admitted to be unconstitutional by their author and by the counsel who undertook to defend them, and to my certain knowledge they would hav been declared void by the Supreme Court in the case of McArdle, if we had not been circumvented by an act of Congress taking away the jurisdiction. It is true that they were made effectual, but it was done by the Fourteenth Amendment. The opponents of free government in the South, knowing that Congress had no such power, forcibly injected their bill of pains and penalties into the Constitution itself, and there it lies now, side by side with the provision which forbids it. But the injection served only for that occasion; it did not abrogate the prohibition. Bills of pains and penalties are as odious as ever. It is the duty of every public man and every private citizen to hate such things with all his mind and heart and strength, as I hope you do.

"'Coming back to the original and fundamental proposition that you hav no authority to legislate about marriage in a territory, you will ask: "What, then, are we to do with polygamy?" It is a bad thing and a false religion that allows it; but the people of Utah hav as good a right to their false religion as you hav to your true one. Then you add that it is not a religious error merely, but a crime which ought to be extirpated by the sword of the civil magistrate. That is also conceded. But those people hav a civil government of their own, which is as wrong-headed as their church. Both are free to do evil on this and kindred subjects if they please, and they are neither of them answerable to you. That brings you to the end of your string. You are compelled to treat this offense as you treat others in the states and in the territories—that is, leave it to be dealt with by the powers that are ordained of God, or by God himself, who will in due time become the minister of his own justice.'"

Mr. Black is entirely mistaken in saying this raid upon the rights of a people is not truly Christian, for it is pre-eminently so. Although the Mormons draw their strongest argument for polygamy from the Bible, yet the Christians, with an inconsistency entirely consistent with their record, desire to persecute them and drive them from our land. But the question to be considered is not what the Mormons believe or practice. Religious belief is a matter which Congress is strictly forbidden by the Constitution to interfere with, and the acts of the Mormons must be judged by their territorial courts. The power to legislate on marriage is not given to the United States any more than the power to regulate the moral tone of mailable matter is conferred by the brief section authorizing Congress to "establish post-offices and post-roads." Polygamy is a loathsome and unnatural institution, and the Mormons are not by any means saints; but granting that they are as bad as their enemies, the Christians (who should logically be their friends), claim, it does not by any means follow that Congress has the right to outlaw them any more than it had to legislate upon the Oneida Community, whose morals were fully as degrading as polygamy can possibly be. This legislature, even more than Judge Black admits, is inspired by Christian influence, and is of the same kind that procured the passage of the postal legislation under which Mr. Bennett was imprisoned for no crime whatever. The influence which pushes it on is the same that recently passed a code in this state so utterly infamous that many of its clauses cannot be enforced. It is a most insidious union of church and state, and all the more dangerous as directed against a people who cannot get popular sympathy because of the predjuice existing against their practices. The blood of the martyrs may be the seed of the church, but persecution is certainly the spirit which has in the past and does in the present animate Christian theology. Judge Black, a most violent Christian, at last sees it and virtually admits it, although reluctantly. There is no pretense that these laws are aimed at anything but the religion of the Mormons, and it is solely because of this that we protest. If the Christians succeed in this persecution by working upon popular prejudice against polygamy, it makes them stronger to go on against others. In the Eastern states the church uses the cries of "obscenity" and "Sabbath desecration" to cover its objects; in Utah "polygamy" is the word. Obscenity and polygamy both are bad, and no one objects to their suppression by constitutional and moral means; but it is an exceedingly dangerous step for the general government to so transcend its powers as to suppress it. It belongs to the state and territorial governments to regulate their own domestic affairs and to punish crime. The first amendment to our Constitution is that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." These laws are expressly designed to prevent Mormons from freely exercising their religion, and so are in direct violation of this amendment. Judge Story, one of the ablest expounders of American law, says in his work on the Constitution: "It was under the solemn consciousness of the dangers from ecclesiastical ambition, the bigotry of spiritual pride, and the intolerance of sects, exemplified in our domestic as well as in foreign annals, that it was deemed advisable to exclude from the national government all power to act upon the subject." However the states may legislate upon the subject of religion, the national government can make no distinction in matters of faith. There are no possible constitutional means by which Mormons can be disfranchised or debarred from holding office. Every citizen is eligible to office and entitled to vote. The fourteenth amendment is peremptory on this point. The Constitution permits no scrutiny of a man's religious opinions to the prejudice of his civil rights.

But the Christian church at present fairly aches to persecute somebody. It has been a long time since a religious crusade stirred the pulses of her hosts, and on the principle of selecting for an antagonist him who has no friends, she has pitched upon the Mormons. It is a case of dog eat dog, but our sympathies are always with the under dog. We are not of those who believe that the end justifies the means. There are thousands of Mormons who do not practice polygamy, and, so far as outward seeming goes, are model citizens. Shall they be disfranchised and their civil rights taken from them at the instance of religious bigots, by laws by Congressmen who, after they hav recorded their virtuous vote, will go to the arms of their mistresses, while their wives are hundreds of miles away at home? There is a good deal of hypocrisy in Washington, and on no subject is there more than on this. There is hardly a Mormon elder in Utah who will not discuss the subject of polygamy with the Christian clergy, and prove by the Bible that it is a divine institution. Brigham Young would compare favorably with Solomon and David, and certainly the Mormon church for craft and cunning is inferior to the Jesuits. Eliminate from Mormonism its bestial polygamy, and it is the peer of Christianity. But whatever the demerits of the system, it is time to call a halt when our government lends itself to persecution for opinion's sake.

THE Liberals of Montana celebrated Paine's birthday in an appropriate manner. Mr. Loshbough of that place writes that nearly all the people of the territory are Freethinkers, but taking little activ interest in propagating their ideas, and thinks that if some Liberal lecturer would visit the place much interest could be awakened. As the Northern Pacific railroad will run into Helena in a few months, we see no reason why a Liberal lecturer should not sow the seed in this new ground.

The Monument and Hall.

On another page will be found an extract from the address of Hon. A. B. Bradford before the Pittsburgh League, which was sent with the request that we publish. His arraignment of the men who sought to ruin Mr. Bennett's reputation is just. The English language fails in words to fitly characterize the efforts of the degraded brutes engaged in that low infamy, and who, even with him lying in his grave, are resuming their vile occupation. And yet these villains pretend to teach morality to the people, while engaged in the most immoral work it is possible to conceive. Every one of them is a hypocrit, and if they are not scoundrels we do not know the meaning of the word. Mr. Bradford's objections to a monument to mark the resting-place of this victim of churchly hate are not shared by us, and we think not by the Liberals generally. It is customary, fitting, and respectful for friends to erect a monument over the grave of loved ones gone, and all the great characters who hav worked in the past are remembered by statues and monuments, which serve to keep their memories fresh. Paine, Voltaire, Franklin, Jefferson, Lincoln, all hav appropriate shafts in their honor. It will always be a source of pride to Mr. Bennett's friends to see one erected to him also. A Bennett Hall is a splendid idea, as is also the publishing house to issue millions of cheap tracts and pamphlets, but such an undertaking is so expensiv as to be practically out of reach for a few years, while the monument will cost but a few hundred dollars, and can be erected next summer. The best way to make the Hall a success is to double up THE TRUTH SEEKER subscription list, for then there would be twice as many friends interested, and, judging from the hard work necessary to get Paine Hall free from debt, it will require that many. There are hundreds of friends of Mr. Bennett who would gladly pay from fifty to one hundred dollars, but it will tax the generosity of thousands to erect such a building. Only those who are activ in the Liberal field know what hard work is necessary to meet the financial obligations of such Liberal enterprises as are already under way. We know how many dark days THE TRUTH SEEKER experiences. The League as yet does not pay its expenses. We presume Mr. Mendum and the publishers of other Liberal papers often see times that try not only their souls, but their business tact, to meet their bills. But we do not despair of the hall being built yet. And we will make this proposition: We will keep a list of pledges, and if it should grow to a sufficient sum to warrant the undertaking by a board of duly incorporated managers, to be held in perpetual trust for the benefit of Liberalism and a free home for THE TRUTH SEEKER and the League, then we will undertake to find competent, responsible men to erect and supervise it. Meanwhile let the monument be built, as an earnest of what can be done, and let it not be forgotten that the surest way to build the hall will be to increase the number of TRUTH SEEKER readers and strengthen the League.

"THE views of Mr. Newton," said the Rev. Mr. Seward, pastor of the New Jerusalem church, "are dangerous." Within the last hundred years the criticism of the Bible had been in a different spirit than ever before. Never prior to that time was the inspiration doubted, however different the interpretations placed upon passages might be. Now it had become a question, not of what the Bible meant, but what the Bible was. He thought it was time to take the question up when the authorized expounders of the word were doubting its inspiration. Either the Bible was inspired or it was not. If not it had no more authority than any other book; if inspired it must be so all through. There is no compromise possible between Atheism and what Henry James calls 'abject Christianity.' The accusations against the Bible are against its history, its science, and its literal statements.

This minister at least seems to hav some clearly defined thoughts, and recognizes what ought to be as clear as the noonday sun to all men, and that is that half-way work in regard to the Bible is impossible. The church has made many claims regarding it, and set forth many dogmas, which it requires all to believe on the penalty of being damned. Either they are true or false. Science has completely shown that they are the latter. Mr. Newton throws away one portion, but clings to other portions for which there is no more evidence than for what he has rejected. The New Testament is as fallacious as the Old. The miraculous birth of Christ has no better evidence to support it than the story of Jonah and the whale. The claims that he was the Messiah are untenable; his crucifixion was but the punishment of a law-breaker, and his resurrection is a myth. Why does some preacher not come out and expose the New Testament? It would not bring him popularity, perhaps, but he would hav the satisfaction of preaching truth and giving the world light, which at present illumins only the paths of the Freethinkers.

FROM a Salt Lake paper we learn that the celebration of the 146th anniversary of the birthday of Thomas Paine, at Farmington, under the auspices of the local Liberal League, on Monday evening, was in every way, excepting weather, a great success. Had the skies proved propitious, a large number of friends and sympathizers from outlying districts would hav been present; as it was, three or four visitors from Bountiful put in an appearance, and one or two from the city. The proceedings consisted of a lecture on the hero of the night, given at the Social Hall, by Mr. Charles Bright, and a supper at the rooms of the Liberal League. The platform of the Social Hall was decorated with an excellent picture of Thomas Paine, supported on either side by likenesses of Col. Ingersoll and D. M. Bennett, the late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER. The lecture commenced at 7:30 and terminated at 9, and it is hardly necessary to say, was greatly enjoyed by the audience. Mr. Bright was introduced by Mr. Haight, the president of the League, with whom on the platform were Mr. Walter Walker, of Farmington, and Mr. Ashman, of Salt Lake City. At the termination of the lecture some fifty of the audience accepted the invitation of the members of the League and adjourned to their rooms, where an excellent supper was served and done ample justice to. The festivity came to an end about midnight.

THE following additional sums hav been subscribed and paid toward erecting a suitable monument over the remains of D. M. Bennett.

Julius Chantler,	$1 00	John Ray,	$1 00
Thomas Ray,	1 00	Orias Rounds,	1 00
James Foster,	50	George Andrews,	1 00
Jane Foster,	50	Laura Polhamus,	1 00
J. G. Kendall,	5 00	S. H. Sanford,	1 50
Samos Parsons,	1 00	James P. Cool,	1 00
Byron Adonis,	1 00	V. J. Borrette,	6 00
Peter Spang,	1 00	R. A. Bridges,	1 00
E. D. Mecalf,	1 00	Charles C. Moore,	1 00
Joseph H. Lydiard,	1 00	J. A. Evans,	1 00
A. McAre,	1 00	William Polhamus,	1 00
Fred. Smith,	5 00	H. S. Wright,	1 00
W. A. Hathaway,	1 00	H. B. Smith,	1 00
G. W. Ramsay,	1 00	J. W. Kruschke,	1 00
Paine Memorial Meetings, San Jose, Cal.,	1 00	Dr. Wm. M. McLaury,	5 00
		George Paddington,	5 00
Charles V. Warren,	1 00	Ward Witham,	5 00
C. A. Benser,	1 00	John Turner,	1 00
Philip Cowen,	1 00	Zaven Lanning,	2 00
H. Van Pelt,	1 00	E. L. Bibbins,	50
William Tanner,	1 00	Wm. H. H. Stebbins,	1 00
F. C. Scharnhorst,	1 00	T. W. Lemmax,	1 00
Samuel L. Jones,	1 00	Wm. Sisson,	1 00
S. V. Appleby,	5 00	Mary E. Fisher,	1 00
William Walker,	1 00	William M. Bruce,	1 00
Robt. & Asenath Seaver,	5 00	Wm. Reynold,	1 00
W. C. Clow,	5 00	A Friend,	1 00
H. B. Werner,	1 00	Robt. Manson,	1 00
W. R. Cameron,	1 50	Peter Hope,	1 00
A. C. C. Tamsen,	1 00	Alex. Risk,	1 00
R. B. Ewing,	1 00	B. Redfield,	1 00
J. Duff McDonald,	1 00	John A. Webber,	1 00
C. B. Tuttle,	1 00	Wm. F. Schule,	1 00
Mrs. M. A. Tuttle,	1 00	Jas. L. Parshall,	1 00
James Beveridge,	1 00	E. B. Rounds,	1 00
Euphemia Muir Beveridge,	1 00	J. M. Rounds,	1 00
		Smith Miles,	1 00
Andrew Beveridge,	1 00	Richard Morris,	5 00
Isabella B. Beveridge,	1 00	F. F. Roe,	1 00
J. R. Monroe,	1 00	F. Bloodgood,	1 00
F. A. Day,	1 00	A Sister,	1 00
T. R. Carret,	1 00	Annie E. De Friese,	5 00
Geo. Gray,	1 00	B. Sturdivant,	1 00
A Brother,	1 00	Tavis Phillips,	2 50
Mrs. L. Miller,	1 00	Almond Owen,	1 00
J. R. Booth,	1 00	L. W. Lighty,	1 00
R. B. Hewitt,	2 50	Mrs. Emma Tausig,	1 00
E. E. Curtis,	1 00	Mary Hansford,	1 00
W. O. Jacobi,	1 00	A. H. Norris,	1 00
Mrs. Mary Stevenson,	1 00	James Bridges,	1 00
Sarah Van Sickle,	1 00	Elwood Chantler,	1 00
T. C. Page,	1 00	Wm. Parker.	50

CHARLES WATTS gave another of his brilliant discourses on Sunday evening. In spite of the stormy weather an enthusiastic audience greeted him. His subject was "The Fallacies of Popular Theology." He handled it with consistency of thought, with wit and argument, and philosophical acumen. His hearers burst forth into frequent applause and laughter, as he pointed out with keen analysis the absurdities of the ancient creed, showing how opposed it was to all the teachings of enlightened sense. He closed with a thrilling appeal for more organization and better work, so that Liberalism may reach its true consummation, a happier and nobler human development in this world.

The audience unanimously voted for a benefit lecture to be given by Mr. Watts, after his return from Boston. It is hoped that every Liberal will be ready to giv this eloquent exponent of our thought a most cordial welcome, in order to show our appreciation of his long and faithful services. There ought to be five hundred Liberals present on this occasion. Arrangements will be made at once by the committee, and a suitable hall procured, etc. The tickets will be twenty-five cents each; let every Liberal purchase at least two, and sell as many as possible, that some worthy remuneration may be made to one of the leaders of our cause.

SENATOR INGALLS thinks there ought to be a hell for such men as the editor of the Baptist Weekly, who has misrepresented him. Mr. Ingalls is not at present an Infidel, but if the church employs such missionaries as this editor to convert him, it is only a question of time when he will be. The Washington Post of the 11th prints the following:

"The New York Baptist Weekly printed an editorial last week entitled, 'Heathen Talk in Congress,' quoting a few sentences from the remarks made by Mr. Ingalls on the occasion of the Hill memorial services. The editor concludes as follows: 'Mr. Ingalls, we believe, is an Infidel, and these gloomy, hopeless utterances fitly embody his sentiments in relation to a future life. If he had chosen another occasion for their expression we would not question his right to announce them, but to do so in connection with the solemn commemorativ services of a Christian senator was a piece of pure impertinence. Mr. Ingall's views are simply heathenish. Instead of accepting the doctrin of a future life, so distinctly taught by Christ, he harbors the conflicting conjectures of the old heathen philosophers, whose minds alternated between hope and fear, and is content to imitate them in their lamentable hesitation and doubt.'

"To which Mr. Ingalls replied:

"'UNITED STATES SENATE CHAMBER,
"'WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 10, 1883.

"'A. S. PATTON, D.D., New York city, Sir: I hav received the marked copy of the Baptist Weekly of February 8th, which you were good enough to send me.

"'In my brief tribute to the memory of Senator Hill, whom I honored as a man and loved as a friend, I presented those reflections which rise in all thoughtful minds when meditating upon the impenetrable mystery which veils the future state of man from all except the editor of the Baptist Weekly.

"'I suggested the argument for immortality based upon the imperfection and incompleteness of all earthly careers, even the longest and most fortunate, unless supplemented and rounded out hereafter, and affirmed that from this standpoint I knew of no one whose life was so rich in the prophecy of a future existence as that of Senator Hill.

"'I said further that, though his sun went down at noon, it sank amid the prophetic splendors of an eternal dawn.

"'Upon this you publish detached paragraphs of my speech and tell your readers, if you hav any, that I am a heathen and an Infidel. If you are a Christian I prefer to be a heathen—that is, if your religion prompts or permits you, without provocation, to libel those with whose views upon the great problems of human destiny you do not agree, I prefer to be an Infidel. But I am neither the one nor the other. I hav had some doubts hitherto whether eternal punishment was consistent with infinit love, but I am quite sure that if there is no hell for such bigoted slanderers and malignant liars as you there ought to be.

"'With great respect, your obedient servant,

"'JOHN J. INGALLS.'"

WE hav received a photograph of the painting of Thomas Paine, presented to the Pittsburgh Liberal League on the 146th anniversary of his birthday, and judging from this it must be a magnificent work of art. It has been described at length by Mr. Hoover in a previous paper, and we need only say that the photographs are well executed. They are for sale for 50 cents each by the Pittsburgh League, or can be ordered through this office.

The Liberals of Albany are having a course of lectures on Sunday evenings. The first was delivered February 4th. They are specially addressed to fathers and mothers. The subject is Liberalism clearly defined. Lectures illustrated with charts. Admission free.

Remsburg's Lectures.

J. E. Remsburg lectured at Linesville, Pa., Jan. 27th, 28th, 29th, and 30th. His appointments for February are as follows: Sturgis, Mich., 3d, 4th, 5th, and 6th; Coloma, Mich., 7th, 8th, and 9th; Etna Green, Ind., 10th, 11th, and 12th; Bourbon, Ind., 13th; Creston, Ill., 14th, 15th, and 16th; Gilman, Ill., 17th, and 18th; Carbon, Ind., 19th, 20th, and 21st; Centralia, Ill., 22d, 23d, and 24th; Duquoin, Ill., 25th, 26th, and 27th. Dates for engagements west of the Mississippi will be announced soon. Mr. Remsburg has received calls from Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York and Canada, which he will answer as soon as his Western engagements are filled. He has received invitations to speak in Boston, Washington and Chicago, and has also been invited to speak in Legislativ Hall, Topeka, during the present session of the Kansas legislature.

Selections.

Thaddeus Burr Wakeman.

From This World.

This World will hav to take such a sketch of Mr. Wakeman's life as I hav been able to gather from a long acquaintance with him and his family.

The photograph from which your picture is made was exchanged with Mr. Chainey last year for one of his own, as an act of friendship, and with no idea that it would be used to giv him away to the world.

Thaddeus Burr Wakeman is one of the leading Liberals and Positivists of America. He was born Dec. 23, 1834, at Greenfield Hill, Fairfield County, Conn. His parents were of old and honored New England stock. His father was a well-to-do farmer of good education. His mother was his helpmeet, noted for her strength of mind and practical piety.

His childhood was passed amid the surroundings of farm life, and the village school kept in the academy founded by the venerated President Dwight of Yale College. But all of this life and its traditions soon became a dream to him; for in his seventh year the family moved, under stress of calamity, to the lower part of the John Brown tract, called the North Woods, in Herkimer county, near the center of New York. There, lumbering and a saw-mill promised much better support than they gave. Here, for five or six years, during which time his father died, he had the great advantage of meeting life in its wildest forms and hardest conditions. He became, for his age, an expert in trapping, fishing, and woodcraft. But this life, too, passed into another dream, when his elder sister had him caught and sent to New York, where she was then at the head of a large school, to be educated. This was done with tears and expostulations and with promises of summer returns to his beloved woods and streams. He soon settled down to city life. His brother, shortly after, gave up the mill, and with the mother found his way to the city. In the new family thus composed, Thaddeus Burr was useful, and passed as a good boy with country eccentricities and vivacities that made him interesting. The elder brother, Abram, had taken to the study of law before leaving the lumber-mill, and, on coming to New York, entered the office of Horace Holden, then a well-known lawyer. The little Thaddeus Burr was put through the usual schooling, and off and on served as office boy in Mr. Holden's office.

All the influences that then surrounded him in New York were deeply religious; and his mother, who died in 1851, had the hope that he might one day be called to speak the "glad tidings" to his fellow-men. To this his studious disposition seemed to point. He became a favorit with his pastor, the Rev. Dr. James W. Alexander, of the Duane Street Presbyterian church, and stood well in his Sunday-school and in the church, which he joined in his sixteenth year.

By his own exertion and by the aid of kind friends, he was soon fitted for college, but, in doing so, spent some time at work and at school in Delaware county, N. Y., and at New Utrecht, L. I. He entered the Sophomore class at Princeton College, and was graduated with honor in 1854, in his twentieth year. In college, he was known as a hard student and a reader of nearly everything he could lay his hands on in the college libraries. His class was large, but in the branches that were thought to bear upon his future life as a minister he was at its head. The "Evidences of Christianity" was one of the departments in which he was No. 1. When the trustees or some distinguished visitors would look in to see that the class was duly exercised in this solid branch of knowledge, the venerable president, Dr. Carnahan, would call upon Mr. Wakeman to "refute the sophistry of David Hume," which would be done in the most approved polemical style. The president would then conclude with a hearty smack and the commendation, "Very well indeed, young man." But sometimes the dreadful thought crept through the young man's mind, Does this answer really answer Hume?

Then came the natural sciences, and a splendid course of lectures in chemistry and botany by the then justly famous Dr. John Torrey. The doubts thickened. Is this Calvinistic explanation of the world the true explanation, or is it that explanation presented by Prof. Torrey and the physical and social sciences? Could they be reconciled? With agony unspeakable, such doubts were suppressed and the question adjourned, as in duty bound, until the twenty-first year should come, the year of manly independence.

But in the mean time, as the room-mate of a theological student in the seminary, he had largely the benefit of the courses delivered by the professors there, and especially by Drs. Hodge and Alexander. He frequently attended their lectures, and read them from notes. He did this from intense desire to know what he could in regard to the theological world he was purposing to enter. Besides this, he was in activ contact with clerical friends at New Hamburgh, Yorkville, and Astoria, at which places he spent his vacations. When graduation day came, the "Ethical Oration" was awarded to him for proficiency in Logic, Metaphysics, and those inevitable "Evidences." His subject was "The Necessity of a Faith;" and his treatment of it attracted attention from the professors, who expected he would soon be in the Theological Seminary.

To the surprise and grief of his family and friends, he declared that he could no longer believe as his fathers had done, and could not therefore consistently enter the ministry. He had set his heart upon a course of general study, with the hope of obtaining a professorship as a result. To this end, a few years in Europe and some time at a German university were desired by him above all things. But the means were wanting. To obtain them, he labored at the compilation and digest of a huge law-book, under his brother's supervision, for which a publisher had contracted. Unfortunately, after a year's faithful toil, a similar work appeared from another hand, and made his undertaking useless. This unfortunate event was a severe disappointment, and changed the course of his life. Under the stress of dire necessity, he drifted behind the bar, where he has ever since remained. For this profession, in theoretical knowledge he was quite well prepared. Office work as managing clerk for his brother's firm (Wakeman & Latting) soon made him familiar with practice. He was admitted to the bar in 1856. The distinguished lawyer, William Curtis Noyes, passed him with compliment. After some five years, he became a member of his firm, and has since so remained.

But a domestic event must be noticed. Among his college mates was a black-eyed and, in body and mind, lithe sort of a youth from Oyster Bay, L. I., with whom an intimate friendship sprung up, cemented by literary tastes and Liberal tendencies and studies. After his graduation, it was is delight to meet his friend on his paternal acres (for he, too, was a farmer's boy), especially on the Fourth of July. There they could emancipate their souls, ideally at least, by reading and declaiming the Greek of Eschylus, Prometheus Bound, from the cliffs overlooking the bay and sound which lay like a map or a picture before them. No situation could be more dangerous, and the would-be free Prometheus was soon bound. From beneath these cliffs, a beautiful spring, cold and clear as crystal and almost large enough to turn a mill, jumps from a clay bed that underlies the hills, and, after a rod or two of fresh life, is lost in the salt water of the bay. From this spring, a sister of his friend, also black-eyed, graceful, and indescribable, handed to her brother's visitor a cup of water fraught with a charm from which there has been no recovery. It was her fortune to compensate for the ills and disappointments of life by the only remedy known—a draught from the cup of love. She made law practice tolerable. They were married in the spring of 1859, and in that year a house, designed by them and by the sister who had originally brought him from the wilds to be educated, was placed on a square of ground on One Hundred and Sixteenth street, in New York city, commanding a fine view on the East River. Soon a garden and fruits made it a country house in the city. Here they lived, in one of the happiest of homes, for twenty years. Four children, of which three, a son and two daughters, hopefully survive, make a reality of life and love.

He took an activ part in politics as a Republican. While in college his antislavery sentiments had been a shadow over him in an atmosphere where little quarter was given to opposit views to the "Divine Institution." When the Republican party was formed he was just becoming of age, and went into it heart and soul, night and day, as a practical politician.

During the war he was in Louisiana on business, which gave him an insight into secession and the state of things that had preceded it.

He was displeased with the course of the Republican party after the war closed, and especially its financial management. He followed Horace Greeley as a Liberal Republican, and has since insisted upon an Independent Liberal party, which he thinks, for the present, should co-operate chiefly with the Democrats.

The subject of this sketch now livs on a farm on the Stamford Hills, Conn., just opposit the Oyster Bay, whence the happy, hopeful pair had started twenty years before. From the farm he travels to his office in New York, and returns nearly every day in summer (making eighty miles a day), besides the constant work at the office and at home in the evening. This is a laborious life; but it has its charms to him, especially the privilege of being a twilight, moonlight, and Sunday farmer. From his boyhood, he has always had a hand in the soil, and has from youth been an expert as a gardener and a fruit-grower. That has always been his amusement and out-door recreation. His vines and trees at Harlem were an ornament and a delight to the neighbors, more than one of whom shed tears when they were cut down to make way for "brown-stone fronts." Besides this, he tried an orchard at Oyster Bay, and five hundred trees landed with him on the Stamford farm, which promises well. His resting-place there is a grove of pines, from which he imagins there will be time in the afternoon of life to watch the Sound in the distance and the stars above—a time that now never comes to stay.

As a farmer he is practical and thrifty, and thinks that if there is anything he does understand, it is the manure question. He is ever ready to show that it is the bottom question, not only of farming, but of civilization, and is indignant at our city sewerage systems, which gather the gold of the earth to throw it into the sea.

As a lawyer he had done good and successful though mostly silent work. His position as office lawyer and counsellor in a large firm, where his brother Abram has always been the leading counsel in court, has kept him in the background apparently. But few hav really been more successful, and his judgment is greatly relied upon by those who know him best. He often acts as referee by consent of his professional brethren. His view of the legal profession is that it has no excuse for existence, except as it tends to make justice, peace, and harmony possible among men. As an attorney, he is not one who would be satisfactory as an instrument of a client's selfishness and malice. He is too apt to try both sides of the case, and tell the parties what they ought to do.

As a Liberal, his connection with the church was severed honorably and upon his own request. He has been activ and well known in Liberal movements in New York since 1868, and gradually his usefulness and reputation hav extended over the country. He has been brought to the front only by the necessities of the cause, and because he could meet the emergencies which arose. Thus he has become a leader in the Humanity Society and Liberal clubs of New York, and in the National Liberal League, of which he is now the president.

In general learning and scholarship he stands high among our younger Americans. He has continued his habits of study from his boyhood, as though that was the business of life. His reading familiarity with the classics and the most important modern languages has given him a wide field to gather from—how wide, his published lectures and his classification of the sciences giv good evidence. The sciences, philosophy, law, and literature are his employment and recreation. He is a constant worker, always at something, except when asleep. A carpet-bag of papers and books always goes with him, so that little time is lost by his daily travel.

As a speaker, he expresses contempt for what is commonly called oratory, but is earnest and convincing in his delivery. His home and family life is one of the happiest in the world. He enjoys the respect and confidence of those who know him, and has no enemies, except as they be the enemies of the Liberal principles he represents. How he is regarded by prominent Liberals may be inferred from such expressions as these:

1. Hon. Elizur Wright exclaimed, when Mr. Wakeman was elected his successor as president of the National Liberal League: "Now you hav the right man in the right place. He does nct fear gods or devils, or the consensus of the competent."

2. James Parton says of him: "He has the truth. He is the coming man."

3. Courtlandt Palmer said of his speech at Mrs. Erving's funeral: "Mr. Wakeman—in intellect a sage, in heart a woman, in soul a poet—delivered the most touching funeral address I ever heard."

4. Samuel P. Putnam says: "His published works are to constructiv Liberalism what Euclid was to geometry—its foundation."

5. Mrs. Augusta Cooper Bristol says: "He is the most universal man I ever met."

[My own opinion is that Mrs. Bristol has described him rightly as our universal man. He seems to be at home with everybody and every branch of life and learning.]

In Liberalism he has become known as one of its stalwart advocates. He is identified with some steps of great importance in its history in this country.

He has taken up Positivism where Comte left it, brought it down to the present time, freed it from the papacy with which its founder had identified it, reconciled it with Liberalism, and adapted it to a republican federal democracy.

From him came the suggestion of the new calendar (283) for the Era of Science and Man in his lectures on the "Harmony and Meaning of the Scientific Gospels." From him, too, came the idea of fully recognizing the emancipation of woman by the use of the "Mrs." for every woman of legal age.

His labors in the contest of liberty against Comstockism are too well known to be more than referred to here.

His work as one of the editors of Man is but the continuation of similar labors carried on silently for years. A list of his works published, in course of publication, I send herewith. T. C. Leland.

P.S.—This sketch was written hastily, at our request, by our friend Leland. The subject of which it treats has written his true biography in great and noble deeds in the service of humanity. The only value of the details given above will be the satisfaction to many of a most laudable curiosity concerning one they so ardently admire and love. Mr. Wakeman has hitherto suppressed all information about himself. In traveling about the country I found an almost painful desire to gain some knowledge concerning the one to whom thousands of eyes are turned with James Parton's as the coming man, and I determined either by hook or by crook to gratify it. As Mr. Wakeman's attempts to suppress me hav just fallen short of promising to do me bodily harm, I hav been and done it. GEORGE CHAINEY.

The Abolition of Legal Oaths.

[Although the following was written for Indiana (printed in the Indianapolis Herald) it will apply to all the states. It should be brought to the notice of every judge, district attorney, and legislator in the country.]

Is it not about time the law in our state requiring an oath to be administered in our courts of justice and other legal preceedings was abolished? The law itself I consider but a relic of a very dark and superstitious age. It is a law which has been handed down to the people of this generation only as a memento to remind them of the once supreme power in the world of priestcraft over the hearts and consciences of men. We should be bold and brave enough to repeal it, for it is certainly a blot upon our civilization, and a disgrace to every citizen of our commonwealth.

The law requiring the administration of our so-called legal oaths in the state of Indiana is retained, we are told, for the purpose of preserving the sanctity of our courts and to add to the security of our citizens as against any encroachments whatever in the exercise of their several rights by false swearing. But is any oath as now required by ourlaws in any of our courts of justice or other legal proceedings in our state possessed within and of itself of any such powers? I think not. How many men in the state of Indiana, I would inquire, hav there ever been who hav refrained from swearing falsely in a court of justice or in any other legal proceeding requiring an oath under our laws through fear of any punishment whatever of endless duration in another world? The man who is inclined to make a false oath for his own aggrandizement or another's harm, if placed upon his oath under our laws in any kind of legal proceedings, will swear falsely if it suits his purpose to do so, without any regard for any consequences which he might be threatened with in another life whatever. Such a man, however strongly he may believe in the doctrin of future rewards and punishments after death, being taught there is a bankrupt court in heaven through which he may pass and be forgiven of all his sins, even the one of false swearing, is always certain to defy even the fires of an orthodox hell under such circumstances in order that he may gain for himself his earthly desires.

A witness who can only be depended upon to tell the truth under the solemnities of an oath administered to him in a legal proceeding is certainly not a very reliable or trustworthy citizen by any means whatever. Such a one should be locked up in a reformatory for a period of time of sufficient duration to insure his complete regeneration as a moral man. I am truly glad, though, that the security of our lives and property in the state of Indiana does not altogether rest on the oaths of such men in our courts of justice and other legal proceedings.

An honest and truthful man, when called upon to act in the capacity of a witness in any kind of a legal proceeding whatever, under our laws is in need of the presence of no God to witness the truth of what he may be called upon to testify to, while one who is dishonest and is by his nature possessed of the low and vulgar instincts of a liar, all the gods in the universe would hav no weight with him in compelling him to tell the truth under such circumstances if a lie would answer his purpose better in accomplishing his own selfish and individual earthly ends. Even the gods are powerless in purifying the air of our courts of justice and other legal proceedings of the taints of wilful and malicious perjury on the part of dishonest and untruthful witnesses.

Judge Briggs, of Pennsylvania, sitting as a court in that state in the case of Lucas vs. Piper, in a motion for a new trial, a few days ago, said: "Something more is required to render one competent as a witness than belief in a supreme power, simply as a power or principle, which may be the resistless forces of natural laws as exhibited by the motion and operation of the elements, and to violate which will surely bring punishment here to the transgressor." How, I would inquire, does Judge Briggs know that "something more is required to render one competent as a witness than belief" in some power in the form of a law which will only "bring punishment here to the transgressor?" By what known law is he able to render so abstruse a decision? Even our best and most learned judges make decisions in our highest courts of justice which are often hard to be comprehended under the light of good law. Judge Briggs again says: "The belief required by our law is a belief in the existence of an omniscient supreme being, who will impose divine punishment for perjury either in this world or the next." The righteousness of such a law is here declared by this judge, in a nutshell, to be founded alone upon a matter of religious belief, and no more. Honesty in a witness, I suppose, must be treated by the law at a discount, and belief as the only thing to be required in getting him to testify to the truth in our courts of justice. Many of the world's best and noblest men hav lived and died without any belief whatever in the "existence of a supreme being," who stands ready to "impose divine punishment for perjury." Still, they regarded the truth as too sacred to ever invade its walls by falsely testifying in any judicial or legal proceeding. With such men, may it not then be said that their respect for the truth, and not their belief in any supreme being with power to punish perjurers, is what always governs them as witnesses in actions at law or in other legal proceedings? If it is, why should they be required by law to hav imposed upon them an oath under circumstances of any kind whatever? Can it be said that justice in any of our courts is powerless without the aid of such judicial oaths administered under the sanction of legislativ enactments? Surely not.

Mr. Greenleaf, in his treatises "On Evidence," says: "The very motiv of an oath, it being a religious and most solemn appeal to God as the judge of all men, presupposes that the witness believes in the existence of an omniscient supreme being, who is the rewarder of truth and the avenger of falsehood, and that in such a formal appeal the conscience of the witness is affected." Now, the Atheist believes in the existence of no "omniscient supreme being who is a rewarder of truth and avenger of falsehood," and why should he be called upon under the solemnities of such a Deistic oath to testify to the truth in a legal proceeding? Mr. Greenleaf was a Christian lawyer, and a man who was very decided in his views respecting every Christian obligation whatever. He was a man who believed that even men's consciences were governed by their belief in an over-ruling omniscience. Such an idea may be very good law under our present form of Christian civilization, but it is certainly to my mind very poor common sense. I for one do not believe in the existence of the Christian's God. I regard him only as an imaginary being, without any reality in fact whatever, and why then should my manhood be insulted by a law which, if it does not directly, indirectly demands of me, as a citizen of the state of Indiana, to submit my conscience regarding the truth or falsity of what I may be required to testify in a court of justice, or in any other legal proceeding, to such a standard?

Now, the question arises, if the law of our state imposing upon the witness the obligation of an oath was abolished, what should be the nature of the one to be substituted in its stead in order that the sanctity of truth in our courts of justice and other legal proceedings might be preserved? I would suggest that our legislature enact a law requiring all testimony to be taken without oath, but simply on affirmation, under the pains and penalties of perjury. Such a statute would but place all the citizens of the state, both Christians and Infidels, on one and the same equality on the witness stand. As the law now is, a part of them hav not the least respect for it, while those who do should honor the truth too highly to violate their own conscience, even if they did not heed the penalties it is supposed by them to inflict by their disobeyal of it, in some other life beyond the environments of this earth. If our courts of justice demand only the truth in deciding correctly between right and wrong, how can they reach it then by being clothed by law with sufficient power to inflict condign punishment on those who wilfully violate it, in a state's prison for a term of years? A penal statute of human enactment whose spirit reaches in its ways of punishments for its violation beyond the jurisdiction of the state may be with propriety classed among the vain and obnoxious laws of our age. No law can be expected to do so. It is the duty of the legislature to attend strictly to the affairs of the state and to go no further. Legislatures are human institutions and hav no connection whatever with the will of the gods. Every form of deities should be able to protect all their interests without the interference of men by legislativ enactments. No human law, however severe may be the punishments for their violation, can in any way affect the decrees of omnipotence. Therefore in order that we may the better secure the rights of every individual in the state, let us repeal all such iniquitous laws as are now found upon our statute books.

W. H. LAMASTER.

Monument to D. M. Bennett.

From the Investigator.

The great number of admirers of Mr. Bennett must be sufficient, if each one contributes but one dollar, to put the Monument Committee in funds, so that an early commencement may be made in the spring to carry forward the proposed tribute to the reformer who by his pen and other efforts did so much in the last ten years to advance the Freethought movement. We hope every Liberal who can will promptly contribute to this deserved testimonial in honor of the name and memory of a brave and faithful worker in our common cause.

Stephen Girard and his Wife.

With the malignance characteristic of the church and its votaries, the clergy of the country are in the habit of repeating to their people the slanderous lie that Stephen Girard ill-used his young wife, and George Alfred Townsend, known as "Gath" in his letters to the papers, recently repeated these miserable insinuations in a letter to the Cincinnati Enquirer, which a Philadelphia correspondent of the St. Louis Republican replies to as follows:

"I was struck with astonishment at 'Gath's' reference to the domestic relations of Stephen Girard. It is confessedly strange that the world knows so little respecting the private life of this distinguished philanthropist, especially since in these latter days the domestic concerns of all public men seem to be regarded as public property. How many thousands hav wondered why Girard established a princely college with such singular provisions left in his last will for its government! Every one is presumed to know that Girard College—the finest educational institution in the world, with a property the assessed value of which is $32,000,000—admits none but orphans, and that no minister or minister's son is permitted to enter any of its buildings or grounds. But why? 'Gath's' correspondence, which conveys some unjust insinuations against Girard, prompts me to giv the following information which I obtained while visiting the college in the early part of November last:

"Having several hours of leisure while in Philadelphia, upon the occasion referred to, in company with a resident of the place, I drove out to that renowned philanthropic memorial, and after inspecting the eight white granit buildings on the ample grounds, instituted an inquiry among old Philadelphians to ascertain if possible the motivs which prompted Girard in founding the institution, and the cause of his enmity toward all churches.

"The story, as I obtained it from unquestionably correct sources, is as follows: Girard was formely a devout Catholic whose contributions to the church at times were almost princely. He did not marry until many years of old bachelorhood had tinged his hair with gray, and but for a strange meeting would doubtless hav remained a celibate. Being the largest ship owner in the world, his business led him to all parts of the globe, and his name was familiar in every merchant port. On a public occasion, when a large body of merchants welcomed him home after a long cruise, the festivities of the reception turned from speech making to a grand ball, at which Girard saw and was introduced to the daughter of a prominent gentleman in Philadelphia, and this meeting, which had many singular features about it not necessary to be related, culminated in marriage. It is said by all those with whom I conversed on the subject that Girard's young wife was exquisitly beautiful and a lady of rare polish and education. His treatment of her, instead of being austere, as 'Gath' declares, was that of a proud lover, ever anxious to excite her favors by a bestowal of elegant gifts and a constant exhibition of loving tenderness. One year after his marriage, business called Girard to South America, where he remained nearly eighteen months, and upon his return he was greeted affectionately by his young wife, but her caresses were poison to his lips, for there were unmistakable evidences readily apparent that she was about to become a mother. I could add nothing to the facts of this sad story by dwelling upon the scene that followed. Girard's reproach was succeeded by a frank confession from his wife, who named their favorit pastor as the guilty companion. I am not prepared to say of what denomination Mrs. Girard was a member, but my impression now is that Girard had some time previously withdrawn fror the Catholic church for some just reason, and that both he and his wife had united with some Protestant sect.

"Girard could not forgiv his wife, and she, being a keenly sensitiv woman, was so conscience-stricken by her great crime that two months after the revelation she became insane and was carried to a madhouse. Here she languished for nearly two years, when death delivered her of her malady. The church of which she was a member took charge of her remains and gave them burial in a manner commensurate with the great wealth of her husband. A bill of the funeral expenses was afterward presented to Girard, but he peremptorily refused payment, and the matter was about to go into the courts. Discovering the attitude in which such a legal contest would place him, Girard paid the bill under protest, and then, feeling as though the church had stabbed him twice, he withdrew from activ life, and, realizing $18,000,000 from his shipping interests, he concluded to spend $8,000,000 of that sum in founding a college, which he intended should be a perpetual reproach to all churches and the followers thereof. His respect for society and his relations prevented him from exposing the secret which crushed his life, and thus speculation has been left to write the history of his domestic sorrows. In the front center of the main building of Girard college is a large picture of the philanthopist's faithful housekeeper, but no portrait of his wife was ever suffered to come inside the precincts which his will had sought to protect from ministerial eyes, and by which he has secured an intellectual inheritance to many poor but deserving orphan boys.

"Girard survived his wife fifteen years, and now lies under a marble sarcophagus in the main college building.

"I hav not written this for the purpose of resurrecting scandal, but to relieve the memory of a noble man from dishonest aspersions and to answer a question asked by thousands."

Letters from Friends.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 21, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed I send you $1.50 for Vol. IV. of "A Truth Seeker Around the World," and $1 toward the Bennett Monument Fund.

Yours truly, B. REDFIELD.

MANCHESTER, Jan. 22, E.M. 283.

MR. EDITOR: Please count me among the many mourners of the departed hero; at the same time you may count me a life subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER. Inclosed I send you $2.50 for the paper for 1883. I will send my mite toward a Bennett monument in time. Yours truly, J. U. SCHELLING.

MERRILL, MICH., Jan. 15, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2.50 to pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER for the present year.

No man regrets the death of Mr. Bennett more than I do. We must not allow THE TRUTH SEEKER to perish with him. Every Liberal in the country should feel the necessity of sustaining THE TRUTH SEEKER. Very truly yours, NELSON HUNT.

OAK POINT, WASH. TER., Jan. 8, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $10—$5 for the Bennett Monument Fund, $2 for the fourth volume of Mr Bennett's travels and postage for the same; also lithograph of Mr. Bennett. Balance apply on my subscription for THE TRUTH SEEKER. Hoping every Liberal will be punctual in paying up their dues. and all try to keep THE TRUTH SEEKER properous, I remain, Respectfully, HENRY LAWSON.

NEW HARTFORD, Jan. 28, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I think the tab on the wrapper of my paper, the glorious old TRUTH SEEKER—reading "January, 1883"—has been there quite as long as I wish; I therefore inclose $3 to hav you change the date so that it will read "January, '84." The paper is well worth the money, and if it cost double that amount I would hav it. I hav taken it a number of years. Very truly yours, J. P. RICHARDSON.

FONTANA, Jan. 22, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find order for $4—$2.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER for the present year, and $1.50 for the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World." I am much pleased with the books; would not be without them for three times their cost. I am truly sorry that our hero has left us, but there is one consolation, his works will liv as long as time lasts, and I think that will be quite a while. Yours truly, WM. NORRIS.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: It is with sorrow that I hear of your departed husband, yet we must try to liv. You can thank the clergy for speaking evil of you. They caused me to seek something to inform me to argue with them besides the Bible. They accused me of reading Infidel writings, and I searched for some and found THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I mean to take it as long as I can pay for it.

Yours for the cause of freedom and truth,

JAMES L. DAVENPORT.

CORVALLIS, OR., Dec. 25, 282.

MR. EDITOR: I think all who subscribed for the Round-the-World volumes surely want the letters from preachers and answers that hav appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER since the editor's return, with closing remarks, that those volumes may close the career of the noblest man that has ever lived. I send $5 for the Monument Fund, and if the Bennett Hall goes in $10 shares I will take one to start it, and more as the work progresses. B. F. HYLAND.

FRIEND, NEB., Jan. 12, 1883.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: It was with trembling fingers that I tore the wrapper from the number of THE TRUTH SEEKER which bore the tidings of the death of Mr. Bennett and found my worst fears verified. It cast a gloom over our entire household. We had hoped to meet Mr. Bennett in this world, as he was talking of coming West this winter. But it can never be now. We, too, lost a beloved husband and father last 22d of February, and will hav to ask you to discontinue his paper, which he had taken since it was first published in Illinois.

Inclosed find $5—$2.50 to renew my subscription, which expired the first of the year; $1.50 on my last volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World;" fifty cents for Mr. Bennett's lithograph, and the "Christian Religion," by R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Black, and others. J. W. GILBERT.

LORAINE, Jan. 23, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I can't express my grief in losing our beloved friend of humanity, D. M. Bennett. Long may his good work liv.

We hav a "one-horse" preacher in our town who gave it to THE TRUTH SEEKER last night. His labor was lost. No sinner came, so I thought I would try my luck to-day at the same place in getting subscribers for your paper, and send you four.

Yours, HENRY THIETTEN.

SULPHUR SPRINGS, IND., Jan. 6, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Since the sad news of the death of our beloved Bennett reached me, I feel a much stronger attachment to THE TRUTH SEEKER. Its presence and teachings fill to a great extent the vacancy caused by the death of its founder. I therefore inclose $3—$2.50 for the dear old TRUTH SEEKER for the year 1883, and 50 cents for the lithographic picture of D. M. Bennett. With my warmest sympathy for Mrs. Bennett, I remain

Your obedient servant, WM. H. HEDGE.

CANFIELD, Jan. 23, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Herein I inclose $3.50—$2.50 is to hav THE TRUTH SEEKER continued, and for the $1 please order the New York Sun to my address. I hav found the Sun treating the Liberals as fairly as any of the secular paper that I read. I hav for some years taken the Toledo Blade, but after reading its untruthful and brutal send-off to the dead editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, I hav concluded to stop taking it. I think many Freethinkers will drop it.

GEO. X. YOUNG.

REDDING, Jan. 16, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I notice the proposition to purchase a home for THE TRUTH SEEKER. The idea strikes me favorably, if it can be done; but, Mr. Editor, can such an undertaking be accomplished, considering the high prices in the city? If it can be, we Liberals would like to know the probable cost of the undertaking, so that we can govern ourselvs accordingly. If we can make it a success, I think I will try and scare up a "V" toward it. I would like to hear from others. H. N. P.

FORT WAYNE, Jan. 29, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I cannot express my feelings on hearing of the death of that hero of Freethought, D. M. Bennett. I thought how well Burns's epitaph for Gavin Hamilton would apply in my case—

"The poor man weeps; here Gavin [D. M.] sleeps,
Whom canting wretches blamed;
But with such as he, where e'er he be,
May I be saved or damned."

I am a poor hand to express myself on paper.

Fraternally yours, T. S. FROST.

NORTH LAWRENCE, Jan. 16, 1883.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: It is with sorrow that I write to you instead of your noble husband, for I cannot tell you the grief that was in my family when we got the paper with the announcement of the death of your beloved husband. It seemed as though we knew him, for we hav read so much of his works since he first started to write, for we were of the few that took the little TRUTH SEEKER when he began its publication in Paris, Ill.

You will find $2 50 to renew our subscription for another year, and $1 for the monument, from

Yours truly, HENRY CARDWELL.

ADRIAN, Jan. 22, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: It is with sorrow that I hear of the death of D. M. Bennett. I hav never seen him, but had great hopes of seeing him; now those hopes are gone forever. It was through him I was delivered from the thraldom of priestcraft. I am now seventy-two years old, and for more than forty-five years I had been a slave to the Christian church. But since the imprisonment of Mr. Bennett I hav thrown off all allegiance to the church. I signed the petition for Mr. Bennett's pardon, and the church blamed me very much, but that I care nothing for. Yours with respect, C. M. LACHE.

DUQUOIN, ILL., Jan. 23, 283.

DEAR MRS BENNETT: Inclosed you will find my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER for another year. I hav always been a reader of it from its commencement, and hav always welcomed its weekly visits with pleasure. When Mrs. Goddard read of Mr. Bennett's being sent to prison it was with streaming eyes. And the sudden announcement of his death in your issue of Dec. 9 h was surely a fearful blow to us. So also has been the tidings of the death of the two foremost Liberals of France, Gambetta and M. Paul Bert. Since reading of the death of Gambetta I hav almost felt that I would hav been willing to hav died in his stead, could that hav been so. France seemed to be needing him so much at the helm of state. Mrs. Goddard and myself were among the first in the secularist movement in England, and we hav been workers in the Liberal cause ever since, both in England and in this country. In your trials and afflictions you hav our most tender sympathy. We are satisfied that THE TRUTH SEEKER is in good hands, and that it will continue the good work Mr. Bennett had in view in starting it

Yours truly, THOMAS GODDARD.

BELLEVILLE, ONT, Jan. 19, 1883.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: I take great pleasure in inclosing a draft for $4—$2.50 for paper for current year, 50 cents for lithograph of your late lamented husband, if you think it safe to trust it through the mails, and $1 to assist in the good work of placing a monument in your beautiful cemetery (Greenwood) to perpetuate the memory of a man whose loss cannot, in my opinion, be replaced. I hope that all of his numerous friends will remain faithful to you and Mr. Macdonald, and do all they can to support both you and THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Yours faithfully and fraternally, J. IRBY ILES.

FILLMORE CITY, Jan. 22, 283.

MR. EDITOR: We were deeply moved by the news of the demise of our much esteemed friend, D. M. Bennett, and we extend our heartfelt sympathies to his bereaved partner, and hope that the tree of liberty so nobly defended by our martyred hero will spread until its branches shall overshadow every son and daughter of freedom and equal rights. We trust that though Mr. Bennett has departed from us, yet that THE TRUTH SEEKER which he founded and so much loved will prosper and continue to be as it has been—the leading Liberal paper in the world. Fraternally, JNO. KELLY,

GEO. C. VEILE.

HAVERHILL, MASS., Jan. 15, 1883.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: I find that my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER expires to-day, and I inclose to you $5—$2.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER this year, $1.50 for the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World," and $1 now toward the monument, although I think his monument is high enough now, built entirely by himself. He did a glorious work, and has only gone where he can do much more. He still livs, and his example, influence, and work will be the monument that will grow higher and larger from day to day as time passes. He was my brother and I am your brother; and with much fraternal regard I am

Yours for the truth, J. M. ORDWAY.

PERRYSVILLE, PA., Jan. 20, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $7, which appropriate as directed. To the Bennett Monument Fund: James Beveridge, $1; Euphemia Muir Beveridge, $1; Andrew Beveridge, $1; Isabella Bennett Beveridge, $1; total, $4. This donation to the Bennett Monument Fund is from me and my wife, from my brother Andrew and his wife. We are all old people, some of us nearly seventy years of age, but still working for ourselvs. We would hav been happy to subscribe five dollars each to that worthy fund if we had been able. As it is, we giv it very freely, and wonder why any Freethinker won't come forward at once with such a trifle as one dollar for such a noble cause. Your friend, JAMES BEVERIDGE.

CARROLLTON, ILL., Jan. 13, 282.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: It is with profound sorrow I write this short communication. I forbear to speak of your great misfortune. I can do nothing to help what is past, but I shall make an attempt to do a little for the future.

I inclose $2—$1 for your benefit, and $1 for your husband's monument; but I am in favor of Mr. Leland's motion that there be a hall put up for a home for THE TRUTH SEEKER, to be called the D. M. Bennett Hall, to keep his noble name in sight for generations yet to come. For such a purpose I will giv as liberally as I am able. You can call on me for $10 for that purpose, when you hav determined to build it. Fraternally yours, WM. BLACK.

WELLAND, Jan. 29, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find for the Bennett Monument Fund the following amounts, from the parties named:

I. C. Page, $1; Wm. Parker, 50 cents; A. H. Norris, $1: James Bridges, $1; Elwood Chantler, $1; Julius Chantler, $1; Thomas Ray, $1; John Ray, $1; Orias Rounds, $1; James Foster, 50 cents; Jane Foster, 50 cents; George Andrews, $1.

These trifling sums are given voluntarily to erect a simple memorial to mark the last resting-place of our departed friend, D. M. Bennett. He has built for himself a monument more durable than marble. We in this age are not trying to copy the example of the past in building pyramids or obelisks, neither are we following in the wake of old orthodoxy nor the wealthy citizens of the fashionable world. We want value for our cash, and let common sense decide what value is. I hav said "simple monument." If that is not enough, let it refer them to a Bennett hall in the city of New York, if it is only for a home for his beloved TRUTH SEEKER. It matters but little what his enemies say of him now; he is beyond their reach. They hav done their worst while he was living.

I merely mention my own views in regard to the movements on foot. I hav full confidence that the committee's judgment is quite equal to the undertaking, and I wish them every success. I send you $10. I think the parties would like to see their subscriptions acknowledged in THE TRUTH SEEKER.

JOHN RAY.

OAK POINT, Jan. 12, 283.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been taking THE TRUTH SEEKER over one year, and hav read it with great interest. You may consider me a life subscriber, and although I am in arears, I take this opportunity to renew. My means are limited, but I consider it a sacred duty to take at least one Liberal paper. By increasing the subscription list of a truly good paper, we are in a quiet way doing a great good—we are helping to cripple the power of priestcraft, the great enemy of humanity. Let us secure something better to leave to our children than the empty name of liberty. The news of the death of D. M. Bennett was a great shock to friends in this vicinity, and to none more than myself.

Yours for human progress, D. F. HOWARD.

WYANDOTTE, Jan. 26 E M. 283.

MR. EDITOR: I find that my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER is about out, and I cannot do without my Sunday Bible to read, so I send $2 50 to renew.

Mr. W. S. Bell, the eminent lecturer, was here a week ago and lectured in a large, cold hall to about a dozen people who were quite as cold as the hall. Eli Perkins or Jo Cook (one can lie as good as the other, only Eli is not as great a hypocrit as Jo) would draw a crowded house, for Eli lectured here night before last to a full house. But hav patience; it is a long lane that has no turn. The tables will turn by and by, whether through the influence of spirits or not, I can't say.

Please giv my regards to old man Winter.

Yours respectfully, J. A. DAVIES.

BLOOMFIELD, Mo., Jan. 16, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: It is with feelings of profound regret for the great head of our beloved publication, and sympathy for those of the family that are left, that I address you this, the first time since the death of D. M. Bennett, who was not only the head of THE TRUTH SEEKER, but head and front of all the advocates for religious liberty throughout the world. If my ability was equal to my desire, I would at once place THE TRUTH SEEKER on a basis that would insure success. But as necessity knows no law, I must govern myself by my means. Inclosed please find $5 to pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER, which I hope will still liv on until the work so nobly commenced and so energetically carried on by its great head shall fulfil his most sanguin expectations.

Yours for all truth, A. B. MEDFORD.

MARIETTA, Jan. 22, 1882.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: Inclosed we hand you post-office order for two dollars, as a small contribution of one dollar from each of us to aid in building a monument in memory of our friend and brother, your much lamented husband, D. M. Bennett. It is but a small amount toward building such a monument as he deserves. It should reach the clouds. but we trust he has built one for himself in the hearts of all the good and true of our land that will be more enduring than marble or granit.

His object seemed to be to make men good and happy here and now—in short, to make a heaven of earth; and truly, if all earth's inhabitants were only such as he, we might hav one.

We deeply sympathize with you in your sad bereavement. Most truly yours,

C. B. TUTTLE AND MRS. M. A. TUTTLE.

BOONTON, N. J., Jan. 15, 1883.

MRS. M. W. BENNETT: While spending last evening with Mr. Philip Wootton (my father-in-law), conversation turned upon the death of dear Mr. Bennett. Mr. Wootton cannot talk about your husband without becoming visibly affected. He expresses a heartfelt sympathy for you in your sorrow, and could either of us say one word, or do one kind act, that would bring your husband back to you, he would be with his friends to-day and around his own happy fireside. We do not believe that Mr. Bennett's work was done. Yet no man ever lived who has accomplished a nobler work. His influence will ever stand out as a beautiful and shining halo around the Liberal world.

Inclosed find $4, making $5 in all, toward the Bennett Monument Fund.

Yours in sorrow, NATH'L A. MYERS.

WILLIAMSTOWN, Jan. 20, 1883.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: I inclose $10—$2 for the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World" and postage, $3 to renew my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER another year, $1 for the Monument Fund, and the other $4 for your own benefit, if we can hav the book of his life the same as if the whole $5 went for the monument. It was with deep sorrow that we read the sad news of Mr. Bennett's death. It seemed as though it could not be, and so soon, too, after his return from his long and wearisome journey around the world! We did not favor his going, it seemed so perilous we were afraid he would never return; and it seemed cruel to deprive you of his society so long, and so soon, too, after the cruel and wicked imprisonment he had endured. We hope you hav the consoling belief that the separation his death has caused is not a final one, and that you will often feel his presence with you still to cheer and comfort you in your hours of loneliness and sorrow. ROBERT AND ASENAATH W. BEAVER.

PIKE, N. Y., Jan. 9, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed is $3 75, which will pay for my TRUTH SEEKER until Jan. 1, 1884, and leave one dollar, which I want applied toward a monument to commemorate the memory of that brave champion of freedom and human rights, D M. Bennett, whose loss we all so deeply feel. I am an old man—in my eightieth year—and hav long been a reader and admirer of his attempts to overthrow superstition and error and establish liberty and human rights. May the work so nobly begun fall into the hands of those competent to carry on the good work, and may it continue until liberty, virtue, knowledge, and freedom may be possessed by the masses throughout the world. If I am able when warm weather comes, will make an effort to add to your list of subscribers. I wish to do what I can while I am permitted to act.

My son, A. V. Slusser, adds another dollar, which he wishes applied to the Monument Fund.

Yours, etc., R. SLUSSER.

MANTENO, Jan. 30, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been a little interested in the discussions of Liberalism in THE TRUTH SEEKER by Brothers Lynn and Jamieson. The gravity and importance of the question of the destiny of man in the future is one in which every individual of the race has a deep concern. To know if after death we liv again is a question above all questions; and for Brother Jamieson to say, in substance, that continued life is but a figment of the brain—an illusion, or a myth—and to decide the matter so flippantly, that he knows "death ends all," is, to say the least, a monstrous assumption, and goes to prove that he is simply wanting in the dovelopment of the organ of spirituality. I would respectfully submit to him this question: Admitting that the belief that death ends all, and the belief that continued life is a fixed fact in the very nature and constitution of man, are matters merely of theory or speculation, which would he prefer to hav prove true when the time comes for testing the matter in his own personal experience? Respectfully yours, O. W. BARNARD.

CAWKER CITY, Jan. 23, 282.

MR. EDITOR: It is not often that I trouble you, but I do want to say to E. C. Walker's prohibition critics, Answer him, gentlemen; and then I do wish you could understand that your opponents do not defend a drinker in any wrong he may do. Now, you will admit that there is no harm in manufacturing or selling powder, opium, strychnine, revolvers, or clubs. but it is the wrong use they are put to. So it is with whisky. You seek to evade this issue by asserting that we hav "other prohibitory laws," and when called on to name them, you say men are prohibited from false swearing, stealing, murdering, and the like. Then you should prohibit the manufacturing and sale (hence, use) of tongues, property, and men. This would be effectual; but the cause, what about that? Think of the law with the bayonet dissuading a man from drinking or persuading another to drink. Ejected goodness and ejected badness are an upper and nether stone, that grind the liberty from a man, leaving him no choice, hence no virtue. Turning a man inside out is just as bad a turning him outside in.

Yours, D. G. VANDAMNET.

READING, PA., Jan., 22, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $5; $2.50 is to renew my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER, $1 for the Bennett Monument Fund, and 50 cents for a trial subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER.

I feel sorry that D. M. Bennett has departed this life. He was a good man—a noble worker for the good of humanity. He pleaded for justice, truth, and universal mental freedom. The world has lost one good man. He wrote a number of good books and tracts, in which he has given much valuable information and disclosed many truths and facts of different places and things, of the state and conditions of the rich and the poor, and the religions in the different countries—books, which if read by our orthodox friends, would giv them much valuable and truthful informati on.

It was through the honest and just D. M. Bennett that I started to think more for myself, and had my views changed about the different religions and creeds. I hope the good cause will not suffer any through the loss of our leader, but others will step out of the ranks to the front, and continue the work for the good of humanity.

Fraternally yours, H. B. WERNER.

DUBLIN, IND., Jan. 17, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I hav no words to express my sorrow and regret and, I may say, disappointment in the death of D. M. Bennett, not but that I was aware that he was approaching the evening of life. and was alike liable as all others to be overtaken by death, but that he was apparently enjoying good health within a short time before his death, which was so sudden and unlooked for. I cannot think of him but with admiration, that he was able to perform the great amount of writing he has since my first acquaintance with him through his paper, which was at the time of his imprisonment. When I think of the many volumes he has written in behalf of a much needed and good cause, with his trip around the world and answers to his many opponents in his able and pleasant way, I must say that I consider him second to none of the great benefactors of mankind. But he is dead! What a loss! And yet he lives, and will continue to liv in the hearts, minds, and memory of humanity.

I am aware that my subscription is out. I hav been holding back, hoping to send in some new names, but havn't succeeded yet. There is a great amount of Liberal feeling in this locality, but it needs expression. We hav most of the different sects of orthodox Christians here. They are greatly in the majority, which causes them that differ with the church to be quite timid in expression. We hav not been favored with a Liberal lecture for a long time, yet if we could hav a few good Liberal lectures, it would be a benefit to the cause. Although we hav no big money to offer, if any come this way, we will entertain as best we can.

Yours, MILTON THOMBURGH.

UNION CITY, Jan. 17, E.M. 283.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $3.50—$2 50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER and $1 for the Monument Fund. I am a little behind (but did not intend it) with my renewal. Thank you for sending it along regularly, for I should much regret to be deprived of it. I rejoice to learn that it is decreed that THE TRUTH SEEKER shall liv; this is, it seems to me, as it should be. The work and principles of its illustrious founder should by all means be perpetuated; this seems to be a necessity of the age. And I am glad that its editorial management has fallen into such able and worthy hands. This inspires confidence in its future success and usefulness. It is, it seems to me, eminently fitting to erect a suitable material monument to commemorate our fallen hero. But Mr. Bennett has reared for himself an enduring monument in the hearts of his countrymen. Where is the man who has so extensivly exposed fallacy and disseminated truth? I fail to name the man.

"Sons and daughters long shall tell
None did ever thee excel.
Fathers, mothers love thee well—
Son of liberty."

Mr. Bennett's impartial and truthful Around-the-World history, alone, is, it seems to me, an unprecedentedly efficient lever with which to lift the world out of the bondage of superstition, tradition, bigotry, and priestcraft.

And now, my friends, in conclusion, and at this late hour, I would say that I sympathize with all sympathizers and mourn with all mourners, over the seemingly irretrievable loss of that great and good man—a world's benefactor—D. M. Bennett.

MALDEN BURLINGAME.

KEWANEE, Jan. 13, 1883.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: I hav been a constant admirer of the noble, fearless manner in which your late husband, with undisputed ability, has worked so indefatigably and successfully, in awaking the public mind to the voice of reason, and which has enabled thousands to rid themselvs of those terrible terrors inculcated by Christian teaching and dogmas.

I felt Mr. Bennett's death deeply, not only from the fact of friendship induced by the pleasure of reading kindred sentiments, so well written, but as a loss to a class of our kind, which no other man so well able has the same opportunity to reach for their good.

I am relieved somewhat in believing the paper so well established and now so ably edited, with its hosts of latter time supporters and contributors, can and will be continued successfully. I feel a new duty in that direction as supporter, and which will undoubtedly be so general as to accomplish its permanence.

The paper he founded must be kept as his last memorial, no matter what others are inaugurated, not because of his memory only, but the good of this world's pilgrims requires it. I hav your late receipt for THE TRUTH SEEKER till January, 1884, and could not forego a wish to say to you, as so many kindred sympathizers hav done, that we also sympathize with you most sincerely; and with the best wishes to you and Mr. Macdonald, please accept the following acrostic. The first words of each line, you will see, briefly describe death.

Very truly yours, A. W. WOOD.

RESPECTFULLY INSCRIBED TO THE MEMORY OF DEROBIGNE MORTIMER BENNETT.

Death, thou fatal messenger, relentless, mighty king,
Ever sweeping over earth, with swift but tireless wing.
Rules by which we fondly hope our happiness to gain,
Our hopes so buoyant, wisest plans, to death are only vain.
Being must die in every clime, we bide it with its ill,
Innate seeds that change to death, no matter what our will.
Guardian, thou dread unknown, resistless secret power.
Nature's signet seals but once, and that in untold hour.
Estate, uncertain at the last, through every mortal life,

Monarch no better title holds, to 'scape the dreaded strife.
Over the rich as lowly poor, see dreaded tyrant bend,
Rulers like babes as powerless to Death who marks the end.
Titles are bubbles, thinnest air, the feeblest idle breath.
Infinit plans are fixed as fate, so well fulfilled by death.
Murderer gleaning nature's field, how can man change his doom?
Ever since man, the saddest cry is uttered at his tomb.
Reaching thus our mortal life, we sleep, we rest, we wait,

Battling no more delusions, which myths or ghosts create.
Earth's last sad scene is o'er, to him we sing as shorn,
Noblest martyr, sleep in peace, or wake when brighter morn
Numbers anew thy other life, where reason's voice can fall,
Eternally to praise good works, till reason reigns o'er all,
Throughout ocean, air, and earth, all space where stars can shine,
Time giving eclat to good works, whether human or divine.

Poetry.

Reason versus Christianity.

BY ROBERT SWAIL.

I.

What will you giv me in lieu of the treasure
That I hav laid up in the sky?
What will you giv for the long-hoped for pleasure
I'll enjoy in my mansion on high?

What will you giv me in place of my God,
My Jesus, my savior, my friend?
Oh, prove to me not that religion's a fraud,
That death will bring all to an end.

Oh, can I in place of my Bible, I pray,
Get a grander and better from you?
Produce yours e'er bidding me cast mine away,
E'er proving its pages untrue.

Religion's a home that has sheltered my head
From the cold and the fierce wintry blasts,
To ruin it do not so ruthlessly tread,
Ye god-smashing iconoclasts,

Unless you can build me a home more enduring,
More joyful and lovely by far,
My eternal bliss and riches securing,
Where misery never will mar.

. . . . . .

This is a poor, self-loving mendicant's wail,
Who clutches at gold in his sleep,
Who doth at the beautiful, bright morning rail,
Because it has caused him to weep.

He censures the sun because a bright ray
Did waken him out of a dream,
And chased all his pleasant delusions away,
Of his shining gold left not a gleam.

II.

Oh, what do you want, my dear Christian brother,
In place of a beautiful lie;
Must you hav a more lovely one than the other,
Will nought else your craving supply?

We're sorry to tell you that reason has not
Yet taken the golden-harp trade;
She's been busy cooling a hell that's too hot,
And in slaying the devils God made.

Finding ninety-nine went from a hundred to hell,
She, out of the tenderest love,
Just blew up your hell, and most shocking to tell,
Knocked the props from your mansion above.

We really are grieved that it could not be saved,
'Tis sad its supports blocked the way,
But when countless millions in hell were enslaved,
Thy little loss, what is it, pray?

To gain endless joy, would you giv your consent
To doom many millions to woe?
If thy selfishness reaches to that extent,
To hell you are fittest to go.

Men's hopes of a heaven we never could smother,
To lose it we are very loth,
But if to preserve it we must leave the other,
'Twill pay well to get rid of both.

Oh, the premiums of Reason are greater by far
Than you can from theology win,
Though no heavenly gate for one soul's left ajar,
She's no hell to dump ninety-nine in.

She'll lend you her light to explore for a life
Of eternal and exquisit bliss;
If you fail she'll help you to weather the strife,
In making the best use of this.

The Inquisitiv Youth.

From the Arkansaw Traveler.

"Come and let me talk to you, Willie," said the elder to Rev. Mr. Mulkittle's little boy. "You'll be a great man some day."

"Who was it that was turned to a barrel of salt?" asked the boy.

"You are wrong, my little man. No one was turned to a barrel of salt. It was Lot's wife who was turned to a pillar of salt."

"Was Lot mad?"

"I don't know."

"Did he sell the salt?"

"Oh, no; he was fleeing, and didn't stop."

"How fleeing? Catching fleas?"

"No, he was running."

"If your wife was turned to salt would you be mad?"

"Why, er, that is, if the Lord were to visit upon me such a misfortune, I should submit."

"Would you stop catchin' fleas and sell her?"

"That will do now, my son," exclaimed Mr. Mulkittle, "go and amuse your sister."

"Let him talk, brother," pleaded the elder. "He exhibits a vivacity that is quite refreshing."

"Was Lot a good man?" queried the boy.

"Yes."

"Was his wife good?"

"No, I think not."

"She was too fresh, wasn't she?"

"I don't know what you mean."

"If your wife was too fresh wouldn't you want God to turn her to salt?"

"No," said the elder turning away to avoid further conversation.

"Why wouldn't you?"

"I don't know."

"Why don't you know?"

"Because I cannot tell," replied the elder, abstractedly.

"Why can't you tell?"

"Hush, sir," demanded Mr. Mulkittle. "Brother Grention, don't answer another question. He'll wear you out."

TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. The Biographies of three hundred of the most distinguished teachers and philosophers (who are not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. By D. M. BENNETT. 1,075 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4,00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church; Their Crimes and Persecutions. Biographical sketches of prominent Christians. A companion book to "The World's Sages," etc. By D. M. BENNETT. 8vo., 1,119 pages. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. Vol. I. givs a full account of all the gods the nations of the earth hav worshiped, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 835 pages, 8vo. Vol. II. describes fully all the religious systems of the world, including Judaism, Mohammedanism, and Christianity; the latter occupying 372 pages, going fully into its merits. 949 pages. By D. M. BENNETT. Written in prison at Albany. In cloth, $3.00 per volume, or $5.00 for the two volumes; in leather, $7.00; in morocco, gilt edges, $8.00.

Supernatural Religion. An inquiry into the reality of divine revelation. Decidedly the most thorough and exhaustiv work on the claims of supernaturalism ever written. By F. W. NEWMAN, Emeritus Professor of the London University. 1,115 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $4.00; leather, $5.00; morocco, gilt edges, $5.50.

The Great Works of Thomas Paine. Including The Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Reply to Bishop of Llandaff, Letters to Mr. Erskine, Essay on Dreams. Letter to Camille Jordan, The Religion of Deism, Common Sense, The Crisis, and The Rights of Man; the whole preceded by the Life of Paine, and a steel-plate portrait. 800 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco; gilt edges, $4.50.

Analysis of Religious Belief. An examination of the Creeds, Rites, and Sacred Writings of the world. By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY, son of the late Lord John Russell, twice Premier of England. Complete from the London edition. 745 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The foregoing volumes are called "The Truth Seeker Library." If all are ordered together and sent by express, one dollar will be deducted from the price of each.

PAINE'S WORKS.

Paine's Theological Works, including The Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Letter to the Bishop of Llandaff, Reply to Mr. Erskine, Letter to Camille Jordan, etc., etc., with a life of Paine, and a steel-plate portrait. 12mo. In paper covers, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Paine's Great Works (complete) in one volume. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, $4.50.

Paine's Political Works, including Common Sense, The Crisis, and Rights of Man. Cloth, $1.50.

The Age of Reason. An investigation of true and fabulous theology. Without a peer in the world. Paper, 25 cents, or 5 for $1. Cloth, 50 cents.

The Age of Reason and An Examination of the Prophecies. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Common Sense. Paine's first work. 15 cents.

The Crisis. Containing numbers from I. to XVI. inclusiv. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Rights of Man. For the oppressed of humanity. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

THE

RELIGION OF COMMON SENSE,

BY

PROF. LIEBRECHT UHLICH,

OF GERMANY,

Price Twenty-five Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

HISTORICAL AND CRITICAL

Review of

THE SUNDAY QUESTION

WITH

REPLIES TO AN OBJECTOR.

By George W. Brown, M.D.

All time is too sacred to do wrong, no time is too sacred to do good. Price, 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

D. M. BENNETT'S WORKS.

A Truth Seeker Around the World. Four large volumes. With a steel-plate engraving of the author in Vol. I., and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts. Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. 1,075 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church; Their Crimes and Persecutions. 8vo. 1,119 pages. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. Two Volumes. Written in prison. In cloth, $3.00 per volume, or $5.00 for the two volumes; in leather, $7.00; in morocco, gilt edges, $8.00.

From Behind the Bars. A series of letters written in prison. Over 700 pages. Price $1.50.

A Truth Seeker in Europe. A series of letters written during a visit of ten weeks in Europe. Giving some account of the International Freethinkers' Congress held at Brussels, to which Mr. Bennett was a delegate, followed by a description of what he saw in England, France, Holland, and Italy. The letters from Rome alone are worth the price of the book. With a steel-plate portrait of the author. 850 papes. $1.50.

The Semitic Gods and the Bible. Treating upon the gods of the Semitic nations, including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, the Virgin Mary, and the Bible. To the latter 230 pages are devoted, showing that book to be a very inferior production for a first-class God. 333 large pages. Paper covers, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

Judaism, Christianity, and Mohammedanism examined historically and critically. It is thought to be the most damaging exhibit of Christianity that has appeared. 500 large pages. Price, $1.50.

Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, Essays, and Lectures. 700 pages. Paper covers, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

The Humphrey-Bennett Discussion. A debate on Christianity and Infidelity, between D. M. BENNETT and Rev. G. H. HUMPHREY. This book has had a very large sale, and is a splendid work for Freethinkers to loan to Christian neighbors. 550 pages. Price, $1.

Bennett-Teed Discussion. Between D. M. BENNETT and CYRUS ROMULUS R. TEED. Jesus the Lord God Creator of Heaven and Earth. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

What Objections to Christianity? A discussion between D. M. BENNETT and G. M. MAIR, divided into the following theses: 1. Christianity is neither new nor original, being borrowed or copied from much older systems of religion. (a) The belief in an offspring being begotten by a god upon a human virgin is nearly a thousand years older than the mythical story of Jesus and his virgin mother. (b) Other so-called saviors and redeemers hav been believed in and reported to hav been crucified and to hav died on the cross many hundreds of years before the same was said of Jesus. (c) There is not a dogma, rite, sacrament, or ceremony in Christianity that did not exist in pagan systems from five hundred to two thousand years before Christianity was known in the world.

2. Miracles and supernatural achievements hav been as fully and truly ascribed to other teachers and founders of religion as to Jesus.

3. The story of Jesus and his mission in the world is unhistorical; it is not corroborated by contemporaneous history.

BENNETT affirms; MAIR denies. This is an exhaustiv discussion. Price, $1.50.

Trial of D. M. Bennett in the United States Circuit Court upon the charge of depositing prohibited matter in the mail. This givs a full history of this celebrated case, and shows what monstrous injustice was perpetrated upon MR. BENNETT. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. 5 cents.

Interrogatories to Jehovah. Being 3,000 questions propounded to his Jewish Godship upon a great variety of subjects. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Deacon Skidmore's Letters. First Deacon of Zion Hill Baptist Church, giving many church incidents and his evolution from Christianity to Liberalism. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

STANDARD BOOKS.

Sold by D. M. Bennett 21 Clinton Pl., N. Y.

CYCLOPEDIAS.

The People's Cyclopedia of Universal Knowledge; 2 royal octavo vols.; over 1,000 pp. each, bound in leather, the whole the work of thirty of the ablest men of our times, treating upon almost every conceivable subject, and brought down to the year 1881; illustrated with numerous colored maps and over three thousand engravings; said to contain thirty thousand more articles than any other cyclopedia. The Appendixes alone contain a wonderful fund of knowledge, and among the subjects treated may be named the following: Biographical Classification of Distinguished Men, including Artists, Actors, and Novelists, Authors and Historians, Agriculturists and Manufacturers, Composers and Musicians, Engineers and Builders, Founders of Institutions, Explorers and Founders of Countries, Financiers and Capitalists, Inventors, Journalists and Publishers, Lawyers and Jurists, Lexicographers, Commentators and Philologists, Military and Naval Officers, Ministers and Theologians, Orators and Essayists, Philanthropists and Reformers, Philosophers and Physicians, Physicians and Surgeons, Poets, Scholars and Educators, Sovereigns and Rulers, Statesmen and Diplomatists. Distinguished Women, with a good showing of miscellaneous and scattering. Next follows a Dictionary of Literary Pseudonyms, alphabetically arranged; Origin of Familiar Words and Phrases; Societies and Institutions; Orthography, Punctuation, Correspondence; The Ruling Dynasties of the World; Historical Data of the Republics of History; Classification of Existing Sovereignties: Standing Armies of the World; The Lost and Ruined Cities of the World; Art Galleries of the World; Area, Population, and Wealth of Nations; Monetary Statistics of the World; State School Systems in the United States; Educational Statistics of Various Countries; Alphabetical List of all Inventions; Great Plagues and Distempers of History; Origin of Orchard and Garden Fruits; Governmental Support of Rulers; Banks and Banking; History of Presidential Elections in the United States; Chronological Outline of Historical Events from 1492 to 1882; Remarkable Trials; The Treaties of the World; Principal Bridges of the World; Interesting Geographical Tables; United States Census of Cities and Towns for 1880; Religious Newspapers of all Denominations: Religious Summaries for all countries; Currency, Stock, Insurance, and Interest; Practical and useful measures; Great Church Buildings of History; Great Libraries of the World; Salaries of United States Government Officers; Federal and State Judiciaries; United States Imports and Exports; State Officers' Official Time and Salaries, Fleetest Horses of Current Record; United States Postal Regulations; United States Census; United States Copyright Regulations; United States Patent Office; Business of the General Land Office; United States Public Land System; Table of United States and Territories; Statement of United States Public Debt; National Militia Laws of the United States; Army and Navy of the United States; Religious Denominations of United States and Canada; Our National Domain; Statistics of Cotton and Cereals in the United States; Statistics of the Daily Press of the United States; Marvelous Developments of the Great Western States and Territories; Outstanding Bonded Indebtedness; Indian Agencies and Census of the Indians; Recent Discoveries in Science and Explorations. This entire work by express for $15.00. Regular price $20.00.

Chambers's Encyclopedia of 1880, with Copious Additions of American Editors. In Fifteen Volumes, Octavo, entitled the "Library of Universal Knowledge." There is no Cyclopedia that outranks Chambers's, and to one who reads of American affairs, this is far better than the foreign editions. This very valuable work, of nearly one thousand pages per volume, is offered at the extremely low price of $1 per volume, or $15 for the entire set, the same by express; postage, 18 cents per volume additional. More information cannot be had for the money.

Chambers's Encyclopedia of English Literature. A Selection of the Choicest Productions of English Authors, from the Earliest to the Present time, Connected by a Critical and Biographical History. Elegantly Illustrated. Edited by Robert Chambers, Editor of the Edinburgh Journal. Two Octavo volumes in one. Rich and full gilt. 1400 pages. $4. Postage 44 cents.

Chambers's Information for the Million; or, One Thousand and one Things Worth Knowing. Comprising the History and Mystery of Everything Worth Knowing. 12mo. Price, 65 cents; postage, 11 cents.

The Same, in Acme Edition, 4 volumes, Plain Binding, at the low price of $2. Postage 34 cents.

The Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature; edited by John Kitto, D. D., F. S. A., assisted by noted Biblical writers. Illustrated by numerous engravings. Two volumes, 8vo., of over 900 pages, compact type. A valuable work. Price of 2 vols., $2 50. Postage, 34 cts.

The Handy Bible Cyclopedia and Bible Reader's Assistant, containing a new and complete Dictionary of the Bible, a complete Concordance to the Old and New Testaments, and an Explanatory Index to the Persons, Places, and Things in the Scriptures. Illustrated, vol., 12mo., 742 pages Price 75 cts.; postage, 14 cts.

The World's Encyclopedia of Wonders and Curiosities of Art, Science, and Literature, representing Physiology, Phrenology, Astronomy, Botany, Geology, Natural History, Ichthyology, Mythology, Mythology, Meteorology, Mineralogy, Chemistry, Zoology, Entomology, Biography, etc., etc.; and containing a full and Authentic Description of the Most Remarkable and Astonishing Places, Beings, Animals, Customs, Experiments, Phenomena, etc., of both Ancient and Modern times, in all Parts of the Globe; comprising correct accounts of the Most Wonderful Freaks of Nature and Arts of Man; with an Appendix, containing curious experiments and amusing recreations. By I. Platt, D. D. Illustrated with one hundred and forty engravings. Price, postage, 30 cts.

CHANDOS CLASSICS.

A series of standard works in poetry, history, and general literature. Fine binding.

	Price	Post
Legendary Ballads of England and Scotland. By John S. Roberts	.65	.08
German Literature. Richter, Richter, Zschokke. Tieck	.65	.0
Complete Angler. Isaac Walton and Charles Colton	.65	.08
Lives of Novelists and Dramatists. By Sir Walter Scott	.65	.0
Poetical Works of Eliza Cook	.65	.08
Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire. By Edward Gibbon. In four volumes	2 60	.32
Poetical Works of Charles Mackay	.65	.08
History of England. By Henry Halam	.65	.08
Lockhart's Spanish Ballads and Southey's Chronicle of the Cid	.65	.08
The Romance of History. England. By Henry Neele. Illustrated	.65	.08
The Romance of History. India. Hobart Caunter, B D	.65	.08
The Romance of History. Italy. C. Macfarlane. " " Spain. Don T. de Trueba	.65	.08
Doctor Syntax. His Three Tours in Search of the Picturesque, of Consolation, of a Wife. With colored illustrations	.65	.08
Homer's Iliad	.65	.08
" Odyssey	.65	.08
Life and Remains of John Clare. By J. L. Cherry	.65	.08
Selections from the Talmud. By H. Polano	.65	.08
Everyday Book of Modern Literature. By C. H. Townsend	.65	.08
Johnson's Lives of the Poets	.65	.08
Milton	.65	.08
Essays on Chivalry, Romance, and the Drama. By Sir Walter Scott	.65	.08

SHAKSPERE'S WORKS.

	Price	Post
Complete. Fireside Edition. Crown octavo. Large type. Morocco, gilt edges. Illustrated. With a full and Comprehensive Life, Notes, Glossary, etc	4 00	.32
Crown Octavo.	3 75	.48
The Avon Edition. Sheep, marbled edges, library style	3 00	.48
In three volumes. Comedies, Histories, Tragedies. Half Russia, gilt top	3 00	.48
The same, in cloth	2 50	.48
Dramatic and Poetic Works, complete in one volume. Illustrated, with life by Alexander Dyce. Sheep, marbled edges	2 50	.32
Scarlet Border Edition. Illustrated. Complete, red and green. Morocco, gilt edges	1 50	.20
Handy Volume, Shakspere complete, in 13 vols. Green cloth, red edges	5 00	.32
Arundel Edition. From the text of Clark and Wright. Illustrated	1 80	.24
In 8 vols., brown cloth, edited by Clark and Wright	1 80	.27
Complete from the text of Johnson, Stevens, and Reed. Octavo. Per Binding,	60	.10
Large quarto edition, bound in gold and black. Illustrated	1 [illegible]	[illegible]
Antiquarian Edition	[illegible]	[illegible]

STANDARD BOOKS.

Sold by D. M. Bennett, 21 Clinton Pl., N. Y.

DICTIONARIES.

Webster's Pocket Dictionary, 40,000 words. Illustrated. Price, 15 cts.; postage, 5 cts.

Webster's Dictionary, 50,000 words. Price, 25 cts; postage, 5 cts.

American Diamond Pronouncing Dictionary, 700 pages. Price, 30 cts.; postage, 5 cts.

The American Comprehensive Lexicon of the English anguage, on the basis of Webster, containing 50,000 words and much other information. 768 pages. Illustrated. Price, 50 cts; postage, 6 cts.

American Popular Dictionary, containing every useful word in the English language, and much other useful information. Price, 50 cts; postage, 8 cts.

The American Standard Dictionary, containing all needed English words, with the exact definitions, proper spelling, and true pronunciation, as given by Webster, Worcester, Johnson, and others, with Chronology, Grammar, Proverbs, Scriptural names, History, Laws Relative to Land, Interest, Census Returns, Debt, Population, Manufactures, Productions, Wealth, with Ancient Mythology, etc. Illustrated, 717 pages, 12mo. Price, $1; postage, 17 cts.

The Same, in leather binding, $1.75; postage, 18 cts.

The Useful Dictionary of the English Language, compiled by Austin Nuttall, LL.D., based on the labors of Webster, Worcester, Richardson, Goodrich, Johnson, Walker, Craig, Ogilvie, Trench, and other eminent Lexicographers. Comprising many thousands of new words, which modern Science, Literature, Art, and Fashion have called into existence and usage. 900 pages, 12mo. Price, 90 cts; postage, 14 cts.

The Same, half morocco, $1.25; postage, 14 cts.

Webster's Primary Dictionary, 65 cents; postage, 8 cts.

Webster's Pocket Dictionary, new edition, cloth, 70 cts.; postage, 8 cts.

The Same, roan flexible covers, 80 cts.; postage 8 cts.

The Same, with flexible covers and tuck, 90 cts.; postage, 8 cts.

Army and Navy Dictionary, cloth, 80 cts.; postage, 10 cts.

The Same, with tucks, $1.15; postage, 10 cts.

Common School Dictionary, 85 cts; postage, 10 cts.

High School Dictionary, $1.20; postage, 12 cts.

Academic Dictionary, $1.75; postage, 15 cts.

Counting House Dictionary, sheep, $3.00; postage, 20 cts.

Webster's Unabridged Dictionary. 118,000 words, 3,000 engravings; four pages Colored Plates; a Supplement of over 4,600 New Words and Meanings, including such as have come into use during the past fifteen years, many of which have never before been placed in any English Dictionary; also added, a New Biographical Dictionary of over 9,700 names of noted persons, ancient and modern, including many now living—giving Name, Pronunciation, Nationality, Profession, and date of each. Sheep, marble edges, plain or stamped sides, $10; (publishers' price, $12). Cloth, and in 3 vols., same price.

Half Turkey or Russia, extra marble edges, $11.50.

Full Russia, marble edges, $14.

Full Russia, vermilion edges, $14.50.

Turkey Morocco, vermilion edges, $14.50.

Turkey Morocco, gilt edges, $18.

These are usually sent by express, but if by mail, 80 cts. additional must be sent.

Webster's National Pictorial Dictionary, in one volume, 1,040 octavo pages, 600 engravings. Cloth, $4; Sheep, marble edges, $4.50; Half Turkey, vermilion edges, $5.50; postage, 40 cts.

Reid's English Dictionary, half Morocco. Price, 85 cts.; postage, 10 cts.

A Brief Biographical Dictionary, thoroughly revised up to the year 1880. Price, $1; postage, 14 cts.

Masson's French Dictionary (French-English and English French), with a list of the principal diverging derivations. Price, 75 cts.; postage, 9 cts.

Zahner's Dictionary of the English and German Languages, giving the exact meaning of English words in German, and of German words in English, with correct spelling, pronunciation, and definition. Price, 50 cts.; postage, 6 cts.

Dictionary of the English and Italian Languages, price, 60 cts. each; postage, 6 cts.

CHARLES DICKENS'S COMPLETE WORKS.

Illustrated. 12mo. 15 vols. Volumes bound uniform in green and gold. Large type. Comprising,

1 Pickwick Papers,
2 David Copperfield,
3 Martin Chuzzlewit,
4 Nicholas Nickleby,
5 Bleak House,
6 Little Dorrit,
7 Dombey and Son,
8 Our Mutual Friend,
9 Oliver Twist. Pictures from Italy, and American Notes,
10 Old Curiosity Shop, and Hard Times,
11 Tale of Two Cities, and Sketches by Boz,
12 Barnaby Rudge, and Edwin Drood,
13 Great Expectations, and Uncommercial Traveler,
14 Christmas Stories, and Reprinted Pieces,
15 Child's History, and Miscellaneous.

The above only in sets. By express, $12. By mail, $14.25

Dickens's Works in Single Volumes.

	Price.	Post.
Child's History of England	65	.11
Dickens-Collins Christmas Stories	65	.11
Martin Chuzzlewit	65	.11
Our Mutual Friend	65	.09
Oliver Twist	65	.12
Edwin Drood	65	.11
Charles Dickens's Parlor Album of Illustrations.	1 25	.15
Uncommercial Traveler	65	.10
Dombey and Son	25	.16
David Copperfield	75	.14

WAVERLEY NOVELS, BY SIR WALTER SCOTT.

Illustrated. 12mo. 12 vols. Uniform in green and gold. Large type. Comprising,

1 Waverly, and Woodstock,
2 Rob Roy, and Heart of Midlothian,
3 Bride of Lammermoor, Legend of Montrose, and Chronicles of the Canongate,
4 Peverill of the Peak, and The Betrothed,
5 Fortunes of Nigel and Count Robert of Paris,
6 Ivanhoe, and The Talisman,
7 Fair Maid of Perth, and The Antiquary,
8 The Monastery and the Abbot,
9 Guy Mannering, and Annie of Geierstein,
10 Kenilworth, and St. Ronan's Well,
11 Black Dwarf, Old Mortality, and Quentin Durwood,
12 Red Gauntlet, and The Pirate.

Sold only in sets. Sent by express for the very low price of $10. By mail, $12.

Macmillan Library. Edited by Charlotte M. Yonge. Large type, fine paper.

A Storehouse of Stories. 2 vols.
Ruth and Her Friends.
The Heroes of Asgarde.
When I Was a Little Girl.
Agnes Hopetown.
The Runaway.

The set by express for $4. By mail, $4.60.

ARLINGTON EDITION OF POPULAR WORKS.

Very fine binding.

	Price	Post
Schiller	.60	.13
Goethe	.60	.13
Milton	.60	.13
British Female Poets	.60	.13
Pope	.60	.13
Burns	.60	.13
Dante	.60	.13
Moore	.60	.13
Shakspere	.60	.13
Arabian Nights	.60	.13
Pilgrim's Progress	.60	.13
Robinson Crusoe	.60	.13

Red Line Edition of the Poets. 12mo. Illustrated. Colored covers, Embossed in Gold, Full Gilt, Red Border around the pages. A Beautiful Book, and remarkably cheap at 75 cents per volume. Postage 15 cents per volume extra. Every lover of poetry should have the entire set.

Milton,
Pope,
Byron,
Goethe,
Burns,
Dante,
Owen Meredith,
Jean Ingelow,
Tennyson,
Mrs. Hemans,
Schiller,
Scott,
Moore,
Poets of America,
British Female Poets.

STANDARD BOOKS.

Sold by D. M. Bennett, 21 Clinton Pl., N. Y.

	Price.	Post.
Dickens's Parlor Album of Illustrations	1 25	.14
Barberine; or, a Woman's Devotion. By Mary Nal Sherwood	60	.10
Sunshine in the Shady Place. By Edith Milner,	50	.09
Our Red Coats and Blue Jackets. By H. Stewart,	50	.10
Journey of Discovery	50	.08
Stars and Stripes in Rebellion	25	.07
Three Eras of New England and Other Addresses. By George Lunt	25	.09
Broken Bracelet and other Poems. By Mrs. C. H. W Esling	25	.08
Fancy's Frolic; or, Christmas Stories. By Harriet Farley	60	.09
Biographia Literaria; or, Biographical Sketches of my Literary life and Opinions. By Samuel Taylor Coleridge. Two volumes in one,	1 00	.15
Clever Jack and Other Tales. By Anne Bowman	75	.11
Famous Boys, and How They Became Great Men	1 00	.11
Famous Stories. By Various Authors. 2 vols.	1 70	.22
Balzac's Comedie Humaine	75	.10
Life and Times of Sir Walter Raleigh. By M. A. Thomson	75	.09
The Splendid Advantages of Being a Woman. By Charles J. Dunphie	60	.10
Blue and Red Light. By S. Pancoast, M.D.	50	.10
Scottish Life and Character. By E. B. Ramsay, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S.E., Dean of Edinburgh	75	.10
Home Scenes During the Rebellion. By Edgar Strebor	50	.12
Old Probabilities. By Josh Billings	75	.14
Rob Roy. By Sir Walter Scott	60	.08
Glendover. A Novel. By Deane Roscoe	50	.08
In the Camargue. By Emil Bowles	50	.08
How to Become a Carpenter	50	.06
Hyperion. A Romance. By Henry Wadsworth Longfellow	50	.06
Outre Mer. A Pilgrimage Beyond the Sea. By Henry Wadsworth Longfellow	50	.06
Willy Reilly. By Wm. Carleton	70	.12
Tom Brown's School Days. By Thomas Hughes,	75	.12
Last Days of Pompeii. By Sir Edward Lytton, Bart	75	.10
Scottish Chiefs. Miss Jane Porter	75	.12
Kenelem Chillingly; his Adventures and Opinions	80	.12
The Sketchbook of Geoffrey Crayon, Gent	75	.12
Ivanhoe. A Romance. Sir Walter Scott	75	.12
Peter the Whaler. Wm. H. G. Kingston	75	.12
Erling the Bold. R. M. Ballantyne	75	.12
Dick Chiverly; his Adventures and Misadventures	75	.13
Last of the Mohicans. J. Fennimore Cooper	75	.10
The Red Eric; or, the Whaler's Last Cruise R. N. Ballantyne	75	.12
Is the Pope Infallible? John Schulte, DD., Ph. D	50	.11
Life and Letters of Madam Swetchine. Count De Falloux	75	.09
Madam Swetchine's Writings. Count De Falloux	75	.08
Memoirs of Madam Desbordes-Valmore. With a Selection from her Poems	75	.10
Biography of Alfred de Musset. Harriet Preston	1 00	.12
Troubadours and Trouveres, New and Old. Harriet Preston	1 00	.10
Noctes Ambrosiane.. Christopher North	75	.08
" " " " Extra,	85	.11
Ante Bellum. Southern Life as it Was. Mary Lennox	50	.08
Spiritual Wives. Wm. E. Dixon	60	.13
Victor Latourette. A Novel. By a Broad Churchman	50	.09
Modern Diabolism. M. J. Williamson	50	.11
The Golden Tress. Translated from the French of Fortune Du Boisgobey	60	.11
Janet. A Novel	50	.09
For Each Other. A Novel	60	.08
Drawing-Room Plays. An Evening's Amusement	50	.09
Dickens and Collins's Christmas Stories	75	.11
Flemish Life, in Four Stories. By Hendrick Conscience	75	.15
Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1878	50	.31
Essays in Biography and Criticism. By Peter Bayne, M.A	1 00	.12
Complete History of the Great Rebellion in the United States. By Dr. James Moore	75	.11
Children of the Abbey	75	.12
Vicar of Wakefield	60	.09
A Good Fight and Other Tales. By Charles Reade	50	.08
The Book of the Ocean and Life on the Sea. Illustrated	65	.12
London by Day and Night. By D. W. Bartlett	65	.08
Paris with Pen and Pencil. " "	65	.08
Life of George the Fourth. By John Banvard	65	.12
Taine's History of English Literature	90	.11
Life of Bonaparte and the Bonaparte Family	65	.12
Flowers from Fairy Land. By Albert Smith	65	.08
Merry Rhymes and Puzzles	65	.09
Russian Fairy Tales	65	.12
Life of John C. Calhoun. By John S. Jenkins	65	.12
The Wooing of the Water Witch. By J. Moyr Smith	75	.12
The Prince of Argolis. By J. Moyr Smith	75	.10
Life and Letters of Lord Macaulay. By Trevelyan	1 00	.12
Hours with the Bible. By Cunningham Geike, D.D	65	.10
Biographical Sketches. By Harriet Martineau.	69
Man and Beast Here and Hereafter. By Rev. J. G. Wood	85	.12
Life of Gen. John C. Fremont. By Samuel M. Smucker	65	.12
Works of George Herbert in Prose and Verse	60	.08
Inexorable, or the Wages of Sin. Angelo	75	.08
Dancing Imps of the Wine. Angelo	1 15	.10
Adventures of an Atom. Angelo	1 15	.12
Dickens's Child's History of England	65	.10
Handy Bible Cyclopedia. By John Brown	75	.14
Lives of Jefferson Davis and Stonewall Jackson	75	.2
History of the Mexican War	75	.18
Life of Benjamin Franklin	75	.18
Life and Public Services of Daniel Webster	75	.18
Life of Thomas Jefferson	75	.18
Life of George Washington	75	.12
Life of Galileo	75	.0
How Women can Make Money, Married or Single	75	.13
History of Palestine. By John Kitto	75	.09
Life of Henry Clay	75	.12
Life of Alexander Hamilton	75	.12
Heroic Women of History	75	.12
John Smith and Pocahontas	75	.18
The Railroads of the United States	75	.14
Life of Pauline Cushman	75	.12
Secret Service in the Late War	75	.14
Personal Life of David Livingstone	75	.18
The Russo-Turkish War. Illustrated	75	.15
Twelve Years a Slave	75	.12
Life of General Jackson	75	.14
Our Boys in the Army	75	.18
Cook's Voyages Around the World	75	.10
The World in a Pocket-Book	75	.18
Life and Adventures of Haji-Babi	75	.12
Cattle and Their Diseases	75	.14
Napoleon and His Campaigns	75	.13
India, and the Indian Mutiny	75	.13
Stories of Infinity. By Camille Flammarion	75	.08
Modern Christianity a Civilized Heathenism	1 25
Physiognomy; or, How to Read Faces. By Mary O. Stanton	2 00	.12
Handbook of Christian Evidence. In two parts.	1 00	.08
Ancient Symbol Worship. Illustrated	3 00
Lives of the Popes	1 50	.12
Half-hours with Modern Scientists. Illustrated	1 50	.08
The Story of the Manuscripts. By George E. Merrill	1 00	.08
The Catechism of Positive Religion. By Auguste Comte	2 00
Kidder's Secrets of Bee Keeping. Cloth,	75
Paper,	50
The Institution of Marriage	2 25
Hafed, Prince of Persia: His Experiences in Earth and Spirit Life	1 75	.18
A Mad World and its Inhabitants. By Julius Chambers	1 25
French Wine and Liquor Manufacturer	3 00
Common Sense Theology. By D. Howland Hamilton	1 00	.08
Critical Essays on Physics, Metaphysics, and Ethics. By Lawrence S. Benson	1 50	.10
The Bible for Learners. With map	2 25
Xenophon's Complete Works. Nimmo Library	1 50	.20
Treasury of British Eloquence. Nimmo Library	1 50	.17
Byron's Poetical Works. Nimmo Library	1 50	.18
Fielding's Works. Nimmo Library	1 50	.19
Treasury of Modern Biography. Nimmo Library	1 50	.18
Treasury of English Literature. Nimmo Library	1 50	.19
Shakespere's Complete Works. Nimmo Library	1 50	.20
Defoe's Works. Nimmo Library	1 50	.20
English Essayists	1 50	.18
Homer's Iliad. People's edition. Illustrated	45	.07
Don Quixote. People's edition. Illustrated	45	.07
Arabian Nights Entertainment. People's edition. Illustrated	45	.07
Swiss Family Robinson. People's edition. Illus.	45	.07
Pope's Poetical Works People's edition. Illus.	45	.07

STANDARD BOOKS.

Sold by D. M. Bennett, 21 Clinton Pl., N. Y.

	Price.	Post.
Children of the Abbey. People's edition. Illus.	45	.08
Leary's Ready Reckoner and Form Book	25	.07
History of Greece. By Thomas Keightly	75	.12
Don Quixote	60	.13
Swiss Family Robinson	60	.08
Rollin's Ancient History. 4 vols	2 25	.22
Plutarch's Lives	1 65	.14
In the Forecastle. A Sea Tale	65	.13
History of the Mormons	75	.13
History of Australia	65	.12
History of California	65	.12
History of Oregon	65	.12
Taine's English Literature	65	.12
Dryden's Poetical Works	60	.12

Holiday Books for Children. Full of Pictures. Big Type. Heavy Paper.

	Price.	Post.
Tutti-Frutti. A Book of Child-Songs	$ 50	.08
Chatterbox. Colored Engravings	1 15	.16
A Christmas Box	90	.1
Chatterbox Stories of Natural History	65	.16
Chatterbox Junior	65	.17
Chatterbox	65	.16
Karl Frohlich's Frolics with Scissors and Pen	60	.12
Peep Show	65	.13
The Horn of Plenty	60	.15
Chatterbox Picture Book	65	.18
Sunday Chatterbox	75	.17
Chatterbox Junior No. 2	75	.17
Chatterbox Book of Birds	65	.15
Little Folks Play Book	65	.16
Young Folks Chatterbox	75	.16
Afternoon Tea	75	.09
Little Sunbeams	65	.09
Under the Window	90	.09
Bright Rays	60	.09
Little Buttercups	65	.14
Aunt Charlotte's Golden Gift	60	.14
Little Prattler's Picture Book	33	.09
Adventures of Don Quixote Junior	45	.08
My Little Keepsake	65	.12
Gift for a Good Child	75	.12
Rainbows for Children	45	.08
Santa Claus and St. Nicholas	65	.13
The Mischief Book	65	.18
Child's Own Story Book	30	.07
Our Chatterbox	30	.07
Little Lessons for Little Children	30	.07

The Magnet Handbooks. Paper. Price 10 cents each. Postage free.

How to Pronounce Difficult Words
How to be an Orator
How to Speak and Write
Slang and Vulgar Phrases
Bliss's Book of Magic
Lorento's Wizard's Guide
Ventriloquism Made Easy

The Magnet Handbooks. Paper. Price 15 cents each. Postage free.

French in a Fortnight
Grammar Made Easy
Singing Made Easy
Morsels of Mirth for Funny Fellows
Bashfulness Cured
Love-Making Secrets
How to Write Shorthand
Fortune Teller and Dream Book
Riddles, Conundrums, and Puzzles
Handbook of Good Manners
Confidential Advice to a Lover

The Magnet Handbooks. Paper. Price 25 cents each. Postage free.

Gymnastics Without a Teacher
Amateur Painter
Honest Abe's Jokes
American Reference Book
Ready-Made Autograph Album Verses
Hawthorne's Juvenile Speaker and Reader
The American Business Man
Common Complaints and How to Cure Them
Personal Beauty
Book of Knowledge
Practical Magician
American Horse-Owner's Guide
Taxidermist's Guide
Self-Defense
Choice Verses for Valentines, Weddings, Birthdays, etc.
Tricks and Diversions with Cards
Incidents of Camp Life
Comic Reciter
The Hunter's and Trapper's Guide
The Real Secret of Wooing and Winning
Dancing Without a Master
Book of Pantomimes
Parlor Pastimes
The Young Wife's Own Cook Book
The American Bartender
Burns's Guide to Phonic Shorthand
American Book of Genteel Behavior
The Art of Gold, Silver, and Copper Plating
Book of Useful Recipes

Cottage Library. Royal 32mo. Nearly 250 pages per volume. Nicely bound, with a steel portrait in each. 30 cents per volume; postage, 5 cents extra per volume.

Adventures of Carew, the King of Beggars	Dodd's Beauties of History
A Kiss for a Blow	Dodridge's Rise and Progress
Anecdotes of Lord Nelson	Don Juan
Anson's Voyages Around the World	Etiquette, or the Perfect Lady
Babes in the Basket	Exploits of King Arthur
Breakers Ahead	Fatherless Fanny
Brown's Concordance to the Bible	Five Nights of St. Albans
Childe Harold and Other Poems	Franklin's Works
Clater's Cattle Doctor	Gems of Thought
Comic Album and Comic Minstrel	History of Sandford and Merton
Destiny, or the Chieftan's Daughter	History of Henry, Earl of Moreland
Dialogues of Devils	Hober's Poems
Life of Napoleon Bonaparte	History of the Russian War
Life of Oliver Cromwell	History of England
Life of Rev Adam Clarke	The New Joe Miller
Life of Washington	The Inheritance, or True Love Wins
Man Demon	The Sprig of Shillelah
Mysteries of Udolpho	The Sea Lions.
Mysteries of New York	Tyltney Hall, or the Squire's Revenge
Old English Baron	The Swiss Family Robinson
Tales About Animals. Birds, and Fishes	The Modern Newgate Calendar
The Franco-Prussian War	The Old Manor House
The Blind Farmer	Tales of Battles by Sea and Land
The Romance of the Forest	Cottage Gardener
Shipwrecks and Disasters	The One-Handed Monk
Peter Simple	The Hungarian Brothers
Strum's Reflections. 2 vols	Wesley's Primitive Physic and General Receipt Book
Paley's Natural Theology	Young Man's Book of Amusement
Moore's Works	Young's Poetical Works
Shelley's Choice Works	Jacob Faithful
Wordsworth Poems
The Believer's Daily Remembrance

Red Line Edition of Poetry. Half Russia. Blue and Gold Backs. Marbled Edges. Illustrated $2 per volume. Postage 12 cents per volume.

Poetry of Flowers,	Byron's Poems,
One Thousand and One Gems,	Mrs. Hemans's "
Wordsworth's Poems,	Goldsmith's "
Milton's "	Shakspere's "
Tupper's "	Household "

Blue Bell Series. Bound in Blue and Gold.

Always Happy,	Helen and her Cousins,
The Favorite Scholar,	Private Purse,
Chit Chat.	Turns of Fortune.

The set by mail for $1.75.

THE SELF-HELP SERIES. By Samuel Smiles, L.L.D. Nearly 400 pp. Large type and fine paper.

	Price.	Post.
Duty, with Illustrations of Courage, Patience, and Endurance,	.75	.10
Self-Help, with Illustrations of Character, Conduct, and Perseverance,	.75	.10
Character,	.75	.10

WORKS OF ALEXANDER BAIN.

Logic Deductive and Inductive. New revised edition. 12mo	Cloth,	2 00
Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy. 12mo		1 50
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 12mo, 337 pages		1 50
Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. 12mo	Cloth,	1 50
The Senses and the Intellect. New edition. 8vo.	Cloth,	5 00
The Emotions and the Will. Third edition. 8vo.	Cloth,	5 00
Education as a Science. 12mo	Cloth,	1 75

STANDARD BOOKS.

Sold by D. M. Bennett, 21 Clinton Pl., N. Y.

	Price.	Post.
Our Family Doctor and General Receipt Book. By Henry S. Taylor, M.D	1 35	.19
Essays on Physiognomy. By John Caspar Lavater	3 00	.25
Scenery in Ireland, drawn by Thomas Creswick, R.A	1 25	.13
Home of Washington. By Benson J. Lossing	1 50	.2
Life and Campaigns of Gen. McClellan	60	.09
Constitution of Man. By George Combe	75	.09
Elyria. By Else Leigh Whittlesey	50	.10
Jean Ingelow's Poems. Full gilt	1 25	.18
Heptameron	1 50	.16
Decameron	1 50	.6
Our Village. By Mary Russell Mitford	2 25	.20
Dore Gallery of Bible Stories. By Josephine Pollard. Splendidly illustrated	2 25	.23
Vanity Fair. William Makepeace Thackeray	65	.12
Wood's Illustrated Guide to New York	75	.10
Anderson's Story Book	75	.10
" " Fairy Tales	75	.12
Life and Adventures of Valentine Vox. By Henry Cockton	1 00	.12
The Adventures of Gil Blas. By Tobias Smollet	1 00	.15
Mysteries of Paris. Eugene Sue	1 00	.15
Jack Sheppard. A Romance. By William Harrison Ainsworth	1 00	.12
History of Tom Jones. By Henry Fielding	1 00	.12
Harry Lorrequer. By Charles Lever	1 00	.16
Tales of a Grandfather. By Sir Walter Scott	1 00	.16
The Wandering Jew. By Eugene Sue	1 00	.14
Edgar A. Poe's Works. Illustrated	1 35	.16
Works of Rabelais. Illustrated by Dore	1 75	.16
The Struggle in Ferrara; A Story of the Reformation in Italy	25	.09
The Choice Works of Dean Swift	1 15	.14
" " Thomas Hood	1 15	.14
Snap; The Ox-Train Era. By T. B. Price	50	.09
Summer Boarders. By Adele M. Garrigues	50	.08
Endymion. By Lord Beaconsfield, K. G	75	.13
In the Sky Garden. By Lizzie M. Champney	90	.12
Humorous Readings. By Lewis B. Monroe	1 20	.11
Dialogues and Dramas. "	1 20	.11
Miscellaneous Readings. "	1 20	.11
Female Poets of America. By Rufus W. Griswold	3 00	.30
A Treasury of English Sonnets. By David W. Main	1 65	.18
Life and Writings of Lorenzo Dow	1 10	.22
Curiosities of Literature. By I. C. D'Israeli, with Curiosities of American Literature, by Rufus W. Griswold	1 35	.22
Cecil and His Dog. Illustrated	50	.08
The Three Brothers. By the Brothers Grimm	35	.06
The Golden Bird. " "	35	.06
Brave Little Taylor. " "	35	.06
King of the Swans. " "	35	.06
Parlor Letter-Writer and Dictionary of Synonyms	75	06
Ladies' Letter-Writer	50	.05
Ladies' and Gentlemen's Etiquette. By Jane Astor	75	.12
Gentlemen's Letter-Writer	50	05
Hand-Book of Etiquette	30	.05
Gentlemen's Hand-Book of Etiquette	50	05
Hand-Book of English Synonyms	60	.05
The Tribulations of a Chinaman. By Jules Verne	1 00	.14
Speeches of Chatham, Burke, and Erksine	1 50	.22
Undine and Lintram. From the German of Froque	65	.09
History of Charles XII., King of Sweden. By Voltaire	75	10
The Family Physician. By Dr. Faulkner	2 00	22
Wild Scenes and Wild Hunters. B. C. W. Webber	1 00	.14
Book of Scottish Anecdotes. By Alex. Hislop	1 25	.16
Byron's Poems and Dramas. Arundel edition	1 00	.16
Count Silvius. From the German of Geo. Horn	50	.10
Cookery, Medicine, and Farming	60	.1
A Voyage in the Sunbeam. By Mrs. Brassey	80	.13
For Mechanics, Millwrights, Machinists, Engineers, etc	1 00	.10
Common Sense Housekeeping. By Phillis Browne	50	.05
The Complete Cook Book. By Catharine Stewart	85	.11
Roman Catholicism, Old and New	50	.08
A Glossary of Scientific Terms	65	.06
Lamb's Tales from Shakespere. By Charles Lamb	90	.10
The Rogues' Dictionary. By Geo. W. Matsell	75	.07
Reminiscences of Saratoga. By Wm. L. Stone	60	.12
The Physician. Bound volume	25	.0
The New York Cook Book. By Marie Martinelo	85	.10
Life of Elizabeth, Queen of England. By Agnes Strickland	50	.20
The Serpent Charmer. By Louis Ronsselet	50	.27
Tennyson's Poems Complete. Illustrated	15	.22
Wars of the Jews, or the History of the Destruction of Jernsalem. By Flavius Josephus	1 00	.17
Antiquities of the Jews. By Flavius Josephus	1 00	.9
Works of Josephus. Translated by Wm. Whiston	2 00	.36
Public Addresses of John Bright, M.P. Edited by James E. Thorald Rogers	1 00	.20
The Cedars. More of Child Life. By Ella Gray	60	.09
The Italians. A Novel. By Frances Elliot	50	11
The Romance of the Forest. By Anne Ratcliffe	75	.10
Famous French Authors. By Theophile Gautier	1 5	.13
Gill's Life of Poe. Illus	50	.10
Public Life of the Earl of Beaconsfield. With portrait	75	.12
Speeches from the Dock, or Protests of Irish Patriotism	90	.14
Prince of Wales in India	65	.09
Ten Nights in a Bar Room	75	.08
Arabian Nights Entertainment	85	.12
Book of Nature. Intended especially for the married. Illus	1 00	06
The Rifle and the Hound in Ceylon. Illus	75	.12
Poe's Poetical Works. Half calf. Marbled edges	2 00	.09
Schiller's Poetical Works. Half calf. Marbled edges	2 00	.11
Goethe's Poetical Works. Half calf. Marbled edges	2 00	.12
Medicine Made Easy, or, Universal Health Book	75	.10
Pope's Poetical Works. Full gilt. Illus	1 25	12
Dante's Poetical Works. Full gilt. Illus	1 25	4
Cruden's Concordance of the Bible. Complete	1 25	.24
History of England. 2 vols. in one. By Thomas Keightley	1 00	.20
Poetical Works of Thomas Moore. Argyle edition Large octavo. Bound in green and gold. Red bordered pages. Full gilt. Illus	3 00	.32
Poetical Works of Dante. Argyle edition Large octavo. Bound in brown and gold. Red bordered pages. Full gilt. Illus	3 00	.31
Men Who Have Risen. A book for Boys	75	.09
Life of Davy Crockett	75	13
Elisha Kent Kane, and Other Explorers	75	13
Six Hundred Recipes	75	.13
Life and Reign of Nicholas-First of Russia	75	.14
Taine's History of English Literature. 2 vols	3 50	.32
Historical Connection of the Old and New Testaments. By Humphrey Prideaux, D.D. 2 vols	2 65	.32
Mystic London, or Phases of Occult Life in the British Metropolis. By Rev. Chas. Maurice Davies, D.D	85	.14
Buchanan's Domestic Medicine	1 50	.20
Whittier's Poems. Full gilt	1 75	.18
Swabian Stories. By Theodore Tilton	1 30	.2
Free Mason's Monitor. By Z. A. Davis	75	.10
Lectures on Art. By John Ruskin, M.A	75	.06
The Life of James a Garfield. By J. M. Bundy	75	.09
Owen Meredith's Poetical Works	1 25	.17
Home Comforts, or Things Worth Knowing in Every Household	85	.14
Common Sense in Business	1 00	.18
He Giveth His Beloved Sleep. Full gilt. Profusely illus. For our pious readers	1 25	.06
Nearer My God to Thee. Full gilt. Profusely illus. For our pious readers	1 25	.06
Oh Why Should the Spirit of Mortal Be Proud? Full gilt. Profusely illus. For our pious readers	1 25	.06
Breaking Waves. For our pious readers	1 25	.06
The American Farmer's Handbook. Sheep	2 25	.21
Californians and Mormons. By A. E. D. De Rupert	85	.08
Richard Wagner and the Music of the Future	1 00	.12
Grimm's Fairy Tales	65	.12
How to Cook. By Marion Holmes	85	.08
The Danites. By Joaquin Miller	50	.08
Recollections of Geoffrey Hamlyn. By Henry Kingsley	65	11
The Hillyars and the Burtons	65	.11
Leighton Court. A Country House Story	65	.11
Austin Elliot	65	.11
Ravensboe	65	.11
Love and Transfusion: A plea for the realization of known truth and righteousness. By Mary E. Tillotson	1 00
Shakspere's Sonnets	3 00	.20
The Science of the Bible; or, An Analysis of Hebrew Mythology. By M. Wood, M.D	3 00
Dictionary of the Bible. By Dr. Wm. Smith, LL.D	3 00
Marriage in the United States. By A. [illegible]	50	.08
The Bible of Humanity. By Joaquin Miller	3 00
Knight Templarism. Illus	1 00	.08

Gems of Thought.

IT has been proved by fluxionary calculus that steamships could never get across from the farthest point of Ireland to the nearest of Newfoundland! impelling force, resisting force; maximum here, minimum there; by law of nature and geometric demonstration: what could be done? The Great Western could weigh anchor from Bristol port—that could be done. The Great Western, bounding safe through the gullet of the Hudson river, threw her cable on the capstan of New York, leaving our still moist paper demonstration to dry itself at leisure.—Carlyle's Chartism (1839).

HE that is strong of any opinion must suppose (unless he be self-condemned) that his persuasion is built upon good grounds; and that his assent is not greater than what the evidence of the truth he holds forces him to; and that they are arguments, and not inclination or fancy, that make him so confident and positiv in his tenets. Now if, after all his profession, he cannot bear any opposition to his opinion; if he cannot so much as giv a patient hearing, much less examin and weigh the arguments on the other side, does he not plainly confess it is prejudice governs him? And it is not evidence of truth, but some lazy anticipation, some beloved presumption, that he desires to rest undisturbed in?—Locke's Conduct of the Understanding.

I CANNOT think any parent or instructor justified in neglecting to put this little treatis, "The Conduct of the Understanding," into the hands of a boy about the time when the reasoning faculties become developed. It will giv him a sober and serious, not flippant or self-conceited, independency of thinking, and while it teaches how to distrust ourselvs, and to watch those prejudices which necessarily grow up from one cause or another, will inspire a reasonable confidence by taking off a little of that deference to authority, which is the more to be regretted in its excess that like its cousin-german, party-spirit, it is frequently united to loyalty of heart and the generous enthusiasm of youth.—Hallam's Liberators of Europe.

YES, to partially adopt the phraseology of a writer in Macmillan's Magazine, I do refuse to see in God a being omniscient as omnipotent, who puts us into this world without our volition, leaves us to struggle through it as we can, unequally pitted against an almost omnipotent and supersubtle devil, and then if we fail, finally drops us out of this world into hell-fire, where a legion of inferior devils find constant and never-ending employment in inventing fresh tortures for us, our crime being that we hav not succeeded where success was rendered impossible. No high, no manly, no human thinkings are developed in the doctrin of devils and damnation. If a potent faith, it degrades alike the teacher and the taught, by its abhorrent mercilessness; and if a form instead of a faith, then is the devil doctrin a misleading sham, which frightens weak minds and never develops strong men.—Bradlaugh's Few Words About the Devil.

A YEAR ago, in this pulpit, I clearly abandoned the idea of a personal devil, and there was not a ripple of excitement. No one was sad when I announced that the devil was dead, no one put on mourning. In good truth I thought at the time some of the brethren seemed to be relieved. I said then, "The only devil in the universe is evil; eliminate evil and the devil is dead." Now a child can see that the antithesis of a personal devil is a personal God, and, that logically the two ideas stand or fall together. But when I come to say that it is irreverent and rash to limit the mysterious force which underlies all life by the terms of human personality, then those who raised no objection to the removal of a personal devil cry out in holy horror! Alas for their logical acumen!—Miln's Farewell Discourse.

A FARMER sows poor seed and neglects his hoeing and weeding into the bargain. The judgment goes working on every hour; but it is only when he reaps and comes to sell that the revelation of the judgment comes to him. Market-day is the judgment day in that thing. You build your well out of the perpendicular or with bad mortar. Probably it is "giving" all the time. Judgment is going slowly, inexorably on, from the moment you hav finished it. But you say, "Oh, it's a good enough well!" Some day it falls—that is the judgment day. A young man is idle or careless at his work, not very bad, but not up to the mark. He does not "take hold," barely earns his salary, hardly that. Some day a pinch comes, or a change; trade is bad; he is the first to go, or there is an opportunity for some one to rise, but he cannot hav the place. That is the judgment day to him.—Brooke Herford.

LUCRETIUS insisted that death, rightly looked on, was no fearful thing—scarcely a thing to be regretted. What was death? The separation of soul and body. And what was soul? When a child was conceived did some immortal spirit come racing through the sky to take possession of the growing germ? Not so at all. Soul was generated with body, and corresponded with body. In the human body there was a human soul. In an animal body there was an animal soul. A horse had not the mind of a man, nor a man the mind of a horse. The soul was born with the body and grew with its growth. Feeble, like its tenement, in infancy, it strengthened as the body strengthened, came to its maturity when the youth became a man, and, with the coming on of age, mind and limbs lose their power together.—Froude's Science and Theology.

THE highest intellects, like the tops of mountains, are the first to catch and to reflect the dawn. They are bright, while the level below is still in darkness. But soon the light, which at first illuminated only the loftiest eminences, descends on the plain, and penetrates to the deepest valley. First come hints' then fragments of systems, then defectiv systems, then complete and harmonious systems. Then sound opinion, held for a time by one bold speculator, becomes the opinion of a small minority, of a strong minority, of a majority of manhood. Thus the great progress goes on, till schoolboys laugh at the jargon that imposed on Bacon, till country rectors condemn the illiberality and intolerance of Sir Thomas More.—Macaulay's Essays.

Odds and Ends.

THE moon, like some men, is brightest when it is full.

AN American President's pay—$50,000 a year and bored.

THE real glove fight occurs when a woman tries to put a No. 6 glove on a No. 7 hand.

THE reindeer is swifter than the mule; but the mule can stand still and make himself more keenly felt.

SOME idea of the size of Queen Victoria's carriage can be formed from the report that at a recent review it took the British troops forty minutes to pass it.

ANOTHER "largest telescope in the world" has just been erected. It brings the moon so close that the man can be distinctly heard yelling, "Don't shoot."

A WOMAN may do many questionable things during her lifetime; but, when it comes to her wedding, she always stands up for the rite.—Yonkers Statesman.

IT is said that Arabi Pasha rode a led horse. This we should think was dangerous, for a led horse might run into bullets at any time.—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

WHY is a man ringing a bell for an auction like a church sociable? One makes a noise to get money, and the other makes an oyster get money.—Rochester Post-Express.

A MAN who crossed the Atlantic for the first time said he did not think he was much of a sailor at starting, but when he was one day out he felt as if he could heave up the anchor.

"PA," said a boy, looking up from his grammar lesson, "why am I a preacher?" "Why are you a preacher?" "Yes, sir." "You are not a preacher." "Yes, I am; for don't you see I'm a parsin'?"

SOME heartless wretch caught two cats, tied them by the tails, and flung them into the cellar of a church. The residents of the vicinity heard the noise the animals made, but thought it was the choir rehearsing.

A CHICAGO man offers a reward of ten dollars for the return of his umbrella, but of course the religious enthusiast who carried it away from prayer-meeting is not going to giv himself away for that money.—Chicago Chaff.

PEOPLE who are constantly inveighing against Mr. Vanderbilt, simply because he is rich and spends his money as he likes, should remember that some day they may be rich themselvs. Never strike a man when he is down.

"Do you subscribe to all the articles of the Athanasian creed?" was asked an old lady. "No, I don't! I can't afford it. There's a collection next week for the convention fund, and I can't do any more," was the reply.—Chicago Tribune.

OLD Mrs. B. came to town last week from Indiana, on an excursion, and when she was asked why she was in such a hurry to leave, she replied: "I've got to. You see as how I came in an exertion train and my ticket perspires to-night."

RECTOR (recently appointed to new parish, meeting old man): "Well, Thomas, this is a most healthy and beautiful spot, and people seem to liv to a great age here. I should think folks hardly ever die here." Thomas: "Well, sir, it's generally the last thing they do, sir, here."

MISERLY old fellow: "No, sir; I don't think Washington needs any subscription from me to build a monument with—I, for one, wear him always in my heart, sir." Solicitor of subscriptions: "Well, of all the tight places Washington was ever in, that beats them all."—The Judge.

"WHOSHE 'lected senator, Jim?" said one of two muddled individuals, as they came to the left face with a lurch in front of the bulletin, Wednesday. "Don' know which feller's 'lected," said the interrogated, blinking at the bulletin board; "but neceshary f' choice's got the most votes."

"THAT man is a phrenologist." "A phat?" asked Pat, puzzled. "Why, a man that can tell, by feeling of the bumps on your head, what kind of a man you are." "Bumps on me head, is it?" exclaimed Pat. "Begorra, then, I should think it would giv him more of an idea phat kind of a woman me wife is!"

A DARKY who had been owing one of our mercantile firms for a long time stepped into the store and said:

"Boss, I hears you is gwine to giv folks what owes you a 'lowance."

"Yes, yes; how much do you want to pay?"

"Don't wants ter pay nuffin, boss; come ter git de 'lowance—my wife wants a shawl!"

A SPRUCE and conceited young Mr.
Fell in love with another chap's sr.
With his sweet little cane,
At the end of the lane,
He met and he fain would hav kr.
But he trod on her train,
At the end of the lane,
And a slap on his face made a blr.
—Washington Republican.

A NEW rival brass band was hired to play at the funeral of a Connecticut deacon. They were playing a slow and solemn dirge at the grave, when suddenly the trombone man shot out a blast that started the hearse horses and broke up the whole procession. The leader, turning upon him fiercely, asked him what he was doing that for. He answered, with a smile: "Wall, I thought it was a note, and it wan't nothin' but a hoss-fly; but I played it."

WITH many a curve the trunks I pitch,
With many a shout and sally;
At station siding, crossing switch,
On mountain grade or valley,
I heave, I push, I sling, I toss,
With vigorous endeavor,
And men may smile and men grow cross,
But I sling my trunks forever!
Ever! ever!
I burst the trunks forever!

"VICTORIA"
MAGNETIC APPLIANCES

FOR THE TREATMENT OF ACUTE AND CHRONIC DISEASES IS UNEQUALED IN THE HISTORY OF MEDICAL THERAPEUTICS.

We hav repeatedly been asked what the difference is between the VICTORIA MAGNETIC GARMENTS and its other predecessors. We desire to be brief, and feel that this information is demanded at this time, as it has been asked over and over again.

At this point all comparisons end, and contrast begins.

The old garments were slow in their action. The VICTORIA is quick and sure.

The old garments lacked the power to giv more than temporary relief, while the VICTORIA penetrates the system, and permanently cures the trouble for which it is recommended.

The old appliances DID NOT HOLD THEIR MAGNETIC CURRENTS OVER THIRTY DAYS. The VICTORIA, however, is constructed on scientific principles, being permanent in force by the aid of its "ARMATURES," "VOLTAIC PILES," and "CONDUCTORS."

In brief the old appliances, like Stephenson's discarded engin, are switched off the track, while the VICTORIA goes on its way, winning golden opinions from a sorts of people.

Those who use these reliable and scientific goods can verify this fact, wherein lies the greatest danger that "HYPOCRISY IS THE TRIBUTE VICE PAYS TO VIRTUE," "IMITATION IS THE CONCESSION FAILURE MAKES TO SUCCESS."

NO INVALIDS NEED DESPAIR.

VICTORIA HAS NO EQUAL.

Send for circulars and price-lists to

Dr. Thayer,
455 Fulton Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Please write us a history of your case and we will giv you full information.

Don't waste time and money with vile patent medicin, which kills more than it cures. 13t2

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

THE HANDY
POCKET ACCOUNT BOOK.

Containing Four Parts, Each Important and Convenient For Pocket Use.

PART I.—Consists of simple, yet comprehensiv instructions, with plain examples and illustrations for keeping private accounts.

PART II.—Is a compilation of business forms, as notes, orders, due bills, etc., of rules for computing interest measuring land, corn, hay, etc.; of tables, as of weights and measures, populations of cities and countries, presidents, and parties, etc.

PART III.—Shows the importance of writing good letters an how to write them.

PART IV.—Consists of 48 double-columned blank pages on which to keep accounts.

Price, bound in flexible cardboard, 30 cents; in cloth, with pocket and flap, 40 cents. Sent postpaid on receipt of price. Postage stamps, in sums less than $1, accepted. Agents wanted. I will take back all books in good order that agents fail to sell and refund their money (according to the number returned), less postage or express charges. Address, F. O. JOHNSON,
6t7 Sharon, Wis.

Correspondence Wanted

With a lady, of Liberal views, from forty to fifty years of age. Please to address with full particulars as to person and circumstances. CRANSTON, 1t7 Box 9, Omro, Wis.

Correspondence.

A young man of Liberal views solicits correspondence with sensible, true-hearted ladies, between the ages of 19 and 30.

Object, to find a true companion. Ladies whom this may interest will please write.
Address CHAS. N. DOLBY,
2t7 Bellaire, Ohio.

WANTED.

A situation in any part of Texas, by a young man who is willing to turn his hand to anything that requires honesty and intelligence. Address, THOS. S. KNIGHT, 2t7 307 Market St., Galveston, Texas.

WANTED.

To hire a small house near New York in the country. Must be comfortable to liv in the year around, and rent low. On high ground, a little way out of a small village, on Long Island or in New Jersey. Main object a healthy location free from malaria, where weak lungs can recuperate. Address COUNTRY,
Care of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Me.

RELIGION THE GIBRALTAR
OF THE
World as Now Constituted,
By Geo. T. Bondies.

And a Lecture by W. T. Purviance, STYLED
Exceptions to the Character of Jesus Christ Considered as a Gentleman.

A Pamphlet of Sixty-six Pages, Large Print.
Price, Twenty-five Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, N. Y.

THE GOLDEN THRONE
By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."

A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full of progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.

PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE.

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Rubber Elastic Appliance, in 30 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for Circular. (Say in what paper you saw advertisement.)
Address CAPT. W. A. COLLINGS,
Smithville, Jefferson Co., N. Y.
pd1y6

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.

A TRUTH SEEKER
Around the World.

FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last word penned by the great author were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter. The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library. Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place,
New York city.

WARNING

Some months ago we were compelled to inform the readers of this paper that the genuin Wilsonia Magnetic Appliances were made only by us. We own the patent, and hav the sole right to make Wilsonia Appliances. We hav but one office in BROOKLYN, at 465 FULTON STREET.

Everyone knows that there are dishonest persons who will not hesitate to tell deliberate falsehoods for the purpose of gain. The man who deceives the sick and afflicted is a scoundrel. Do not be deceived. We never had an office in Court street. If you wish to get genuin Wilsonia Appliances write to us. "Wilsonia" has cured thousands, and is to-day doing a noble work for invalids. NOTE THIS. The INVENTOR of "Wilsonia" sold his patent and good-will to us, and he dare not make Wilsonia Appliances (except Ladies' Corsets) or any other magnetic garments.

For prices, etc., write to
Wilsonia Magnetic Clothing Co.,
25 E. 14 st. (near Br'dway), N. Y.

DR. FELLOWS,
Vineland, New Jersey,

A regularly educated and legally qualified physician and most successful, as his practice will prove, cures all forms of Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases. Spermatorrhœa and Impotency, as the result of self abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an External Application in from 30 to 90 days.

MIDDLE-AGED AND OLD MEN.

There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuation of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen, will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows's External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the organs.

☞ Consultation by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable, and correspondence strictly confidential.

PRIVATE COUNSELOR.

Sent to any address secretly sealed for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects and cure followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuinness. Should be read by all.

☞ Remember no medicin is given. Address DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey. Be sure and state in what paper you saw this.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 8. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY M. W. BENNETT. | New York, Saturday, February 24, 1883. | NO. 21 CLINTON PLACE, NEAR BROADWAY. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

THE French people refer to the Salvation Army as the "Anglican plague."

A PIOUS English lady residing in Greece gave a number of soldiers in the Greek army copies of the New Testament, and the Greek government has compelled the soldiers to return them.

BARNES, the evangelist, is about to leave American shores to tackle Satan and his hosts in the Old World. He will begin in London, but intends to go around the world before he returns to this country.

JOHN, a Scotchman, meeting James, was asked if he knew a certain Peter. "Ken Peter?" said he. "Hoot mon! fine dae I ken him. Him and me's sleepit thegither in the same kirk for the last twenty years."

A RELIGIOUS paper says that people who would never forgiv their own brother the most venial offense are quite ready to overlook mortal sins in a sensational revivalist who has got an oily tongue and a brazen face.

WIGGINS, the Canadian weather prophet who predicted a frightful and devastating storm for the first part of the present month, acknowledges that he erred in his prognostications. Thus he goes the way of all the prophets.

JUDGE JAMIESON, of Chicago, had forty divorce cases before him in one day last week. The work of putting men and women asunder, regardless of who hath joined them together, seems to flourish better in Chicago than in other places.

IT is reported that Moody and Sankey hav made many converts among the students of the Oxford and Cambridge universities, in England. If this is true, it goes to show that the young men of these colleges are being educated to very little purpose.

A SUNDAY-SCHOOL boy gave the following definition of faith, "It is feeling perfectly sure of a thing when you don't believe it, and believing a thing when you know it is a lie." Nothing that could be added to this would make the definition any clearer.

"WAS the election of Matthias justifiable?" is the question raised by the correspondent of a prominent religious paper. As Matthias was elected to take the place of Judas Iscariot in the company of apostles, it is rather late to go back on the returns of the election.

THE truth of the doctrin of purgatory as held by Roman Catholics is about to be tested in the courts. A man in Australia left $7,000 to be used to deliver his soul from that alleged state of existence, and the executor declines to pay the money without legal proof that it has been really earned.

A CLERGYMAN, whose identity is concealed by the descriptiv words "Congregational" and "eminent," is accused by the Christian Advocate of plagiarism, in the following terms: "His sermon contained but one quotation; that, however, began with the first word and ended with the last of the discourse."

PROF. HUXLEY has been appointed Sir Robert Rede's lecturer at Cambridge, England, during the present year. The professor's connection with Cambridge has recently become more close and authoritativ from his selection as one of the non-resident electors to the professorships of anatomy and physiology.

TALMAGE claims to hav evidence against twenty-two different preachers who hav stolen his sermons. If he can convict these ministers of theft it will throw enough discredit upon religious matters to satisfy even an Atheist, and that is what Brother Talmage is evidently trying to do.—Rochester Post-Express. In so far as THE TRUTH SEEKER may be called Atheistic, it is satisfied with the course Talmage is pursuing in the line referred to, and regards him as a valuable auxiliary in the cause of bringing fraud to the light.

THE Christian at Work thinks the Ritualistic churches in England are mere recruiting-grounds for Rome. Ingersoll has remarked that with a few more rites the Episcopal church would be Catholic; with a few less, nothing. Perhaps the Christian at Work agrees with him, though it does not say so.

AN English tourist in Russia noted that among the peasantry drunkenness is the prevailing vice; and the traveler is often humiliated to find a Tartar village clean and thriving, while an adjacent Russian hamlet is in ruinous decay. The truth is, the Greek popes do all they can to encourage drinking and holiday-making, whereas the Moslem priests discountenance both.

REVIVAL meetings hav been held at the M. E. Memorial church at White Plains, N. Y., recently. On Sunday evening, the 4th, several lads seated near the entrance made some noise. John Reid, a wealthy resident of the village, and a trustee of the church, started to reprove them for their misconduct. Mr. White supposed that Mr. Reid was leaving the church in disgust, and he called out loudly: "That's right, go out; go to hell if you want to."

ACCORDING to the London Graphic, a strange bait to catch newspaper subscribers has been offered by a new clerical Roman journal, Il Goffredo, whose promoters hav evidently taken a hint from the scandalous sales of religious indulgence in pre-Reformation times. Each annual subscriber will be entitled to 600 masses, to be celebrated by any priest they please, for the triumph of the church, while during the year the subscribers will also hav a chance in periodical lotteries for money prizes, to be spent on the same object. This program has, however, raised a storm in most clerical circles.

THE only way to handle a liar is to beat him at his own game. That is, of course, unless he is editor of a pious newspaper. He can't be beat. What started this item was reading about an American who had been to Europe, and who was telling a friend who knew he was a liar about his trip across the Atlantic, and how, on the 25th of the month "they encountered a swarm of locusts that carried every stitch of canvas off the ship." The listener looked thoughtful a moment, and then said, hesitatingly: "Yes, I guess we met the same swarm of locusts the next day, the 26th. Every locust had on a pair of canvas pants." The first liar went around the corner and kicked himself.—Peck's Sun.

THE Rev. Washington Gladden, formerly of Springfield, Mass., but now of Columbus, Ohio, thus pays his respects to one of Boston's great men: "Joseph Cook, after circumnavigating the world, during which time he succeeded in mystifying the Hindoos, stirring up the Mohammedans, and teaching the jugglers of Japan new tricks, had returned to Boston, kindled his kerosene torch, spread his samples, and began again to cry his wares in Tremont Temple. He had set himself up as a champion of the old orthodoxy against the new, but in so doing had simply substituted for the latter the old hard-shell Universalism. All the alteration he had made in the chief article of the new creed was that he had changed probation after death to probation after breath. What Joseph was doing was whipping the devil around the stump, and if, as in this instance, the stump was exceedingly small, the question arose with the spectator, Who was being the most hotly pursued?"

OUR esteemed cotemporary, the Animas Forks Pioneer, is away up there among the ankles of the angels. Its office is at the highest elevation of any in the world, being at an altitude of about 12,000 feet above the level of the sea. Its editor should open a half-way house between earth and heaven for the accommodation of those who are going ahead or backsliding, and keep a register of those going both ways. He sits in his easy-chair about two miles higher up toward the star-spangled cerulean than are any editors in Chicago, and nearly two miles and a quarter higher up than are the fellows in the editorial pits of Boston, New York, New Orleans, 'Frisco, etc. When we call on the editor of the Pioneer we shall hav to wear golden slippers and a long white robe, and will probably find him telephoning Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John as to their experience as tramps, Judas as to the silver market, and Daniel as to how he liked the show business. Hallo, up there!—Pomeroy's Democrat.

A CATHOLIC journal utilizes a recent wrestling-match in this city to point a moral and adorn a romance. It appears that one of the contestants in the match spoken of, finding that he was likely to be thrown, took the defensiv altogether by placing himself on his hands and knees and remaining in that position, thus defeating all the efforts of his opponent to overturn him. The match ended in a "draw." Allowing the man on his knees to represent the Christian, and the other athlete the powers of sin, the editor points out that if the believer would be invulnerable he should assume the attitude of the wary wrestler, evidently believing that if, in the contest between man and Satan, the man can succeed in bringing about a "draw," the issue will prove all that can be hoped for. If the editor had indicated how the Christian wrestler could hav got the better of his Satanic opponent he would hav presented to his readers a more hopeful aspect of the struggle.

A SERIES of revival meetings was in progress, and the subject of the evening was the book of Ruth. Among the congregation was a brother whom the sisters delighted to hear. His language was always flowery—grandly eloquent. Waiting for his chance, he at length arose and said: "Brothers and sisters, the subject of this evening is the book of Ruth. And do you know that I never turn to the book of Ruth without the thought coming to my mind that there it lies, like a beautiful jewel, between the ermin of the Judges and the purple of the Kings?" Such an exquisit bit of original thought did not fail to hav its effect upon his admiring hearers. Later in the evening an elderly clergyman came in, and after listening to the remarks for some time, arose and said, "My friends, whenever I turn to the book of Ruth I am always reminded of that beautiful quotation from Taylor, that it lies, like a beautiful jewel, between the ermin of the Judges and the purple of the Kings." And he sat down, blissfully unaware of the idol that he had smashed.

THE defalcations of Donald Smith Peddie, who made way with the funds of the Scotch "Dissenting Ministers' Friendly Society," prove, on more detailed examination, to hav been larger and more atrocious than was at first supposed. Peddie was not treasurer, but was the brother of the treasurer. Since 1849 he had been in the service of the society as its assistant and cashier. He had the handling of all the money that was lent out for investment. He reported to his brother the investments he made, generally telling him as to the character of the securities on which he loaned money. In many instances he simply took the money himself and gave the society bogus bonds and mortgages for it. His previous business had been that of a conveyancer and accountant, which gave him experience in the drawing of papers. He could thus work without having an accomplice to make out the papers for him, and it was thus that his detection was so long delayed. In this wicked manner Donald deliberately disposed of the funds intrusted to him. By promptly paying the interest on their "investments" as it fell due, he made his alleged securities answer the temporary purpose of good ones. The fact that his sinful course was allowed to run on as long as it did shows that the officials of the society were not very keen in the way they looked after their affairs. Of "investments" amounting to $150,000, only $25,000 are found to be good for anything. Donald fled, and it is thought he is in Spain. The old Scotchmen of the "Friendly Society" would like to lay hold of him and make an example of him.

News of the Week.

WAGNER, the great composer of music, is dead.

THE United States sent about $180,000 to the flood sufferers in Germany.

SIXTY-NINE men and one boy were drowned at Wilmington, Ill., on the 16th, by the flooding of a mine.

NEW YORK has had very dismal weather since New Year's. It has not neglected to rain on every Saturday for eight weeks.

JOHN L. MCDOWELL, treasurer of the Young Men's Christian Association at Altoona, Pa., has absconded with $400 belonging to the association, and between $30,000 and $40,000 belonging to other parties.

OBJECTION has been made to the new five-cent piece on the ground that the plain "V" on one side does not indicate its value, whether cents or dollars. The coinage has been stopped until the question can be settled.

THE "Church of the Transfiguration" in this city, better known as the "Little Church Around the Corner," was robbed last Saturday night of its communion service and considerable memorial plate, the money value of which was several thousand dollars.

THE floods in the Ohio valley hav been most disastrous. Ten thousand people in Cleveland are said to be left homeless, and much suffering has been caused in other districts. Money for the relief of the unfortunates is being raised in Eastern cities.

LEON LOUZON, of Troy, N. Y., has sued Father Huberdault, pastor of the French Catholic Church, to recover $10,000 damages for slander. Louzon alleges that the priest has charged him with leaving Canada on account of a theft he had committed, and with deserting his wife and family.

Two Chinamen in Philadelphia, between whom an old feud existed, determined to settle it in the prize ring with hard gloves, which they did on Saturday last. They fought eleven rounds in half an hour. At the end of that time one deliberately sat down upon the floor, with the remark, "Me catchy plenty," and the fight was over.

EDWIN D. MORGAN, ex-governor of New York, died at his home in this city on the 13th, aged 72 years. Mr. Morgan was elected governor of New York in 1860, by the Republicans, and United States senator in 1863. The office of secretary of the treasury was offered him by President Lincoln, but was declined. He was a nativ of Massachusetts.

SALMI MORSE gave notice last week that on Saturday night he would hav a dress rehearsal of his "Passion Play," and invited many guests, including the editors of most of the city papers. But the bigots were there ahead of the guests, who, when they arrived, found Passion Hall in the possession of the police, and a notice posted up stating that the rehearsal had been postponed. This was the work of Crosby and Comstock, the two men who hav appointed themselvs to protect the morals of the people of the United States. Hail, Columbia, happy land!

IN 1880 Samuel Hides, aged 77 years, a wealthy resident of Ballston Spa, N. Y., was induced by a clairvoyant, known as Mrs. Dr. Mann, to marry her upon her representing that the spirits had so ordered it. Hides was a firm believer in Spiritualism, and, acting under the supposed advice of spirits, he once dug for a mineral spring at Ballston, and found it 715 feet below the surface. It is now valued at $25,000. He consented to the marriage, and made a deed at her request, it is alleged, conveying the spring property to her. A short time after this Hides began an action to annul the marriage and set aside the conveyance, on the ground that he had been imposed upon. Judge Waite, the referee, strangely enough, decided in favor of Hides.

Communications.

Abraham Lincoln's Religious Belief.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I wrote a letter on Dec. 4, 1882, for the Liberal Age touching Mr. Lincoln's religion. I could not in that letter—a long one—conclude the whole subject of it, but will finish it in this. These two letters will, I think, settle in the minds of the people their opinions of Mr. Lincoln's ideas of religion forever.*

Let me say in the first place something in relation to Mr. Lincoln's mind—its qualities and characteristics. If there ever was a man who reqired precision and exactness of language to convey his clean-cut idea, it was Mr. Lincoln. There was in him a clearness and precision in language in all that he said; he was so clean and clear that he could not be misunderstood, nor long misrepresented. Mr Lincoln's ideas and language were clean-cut and deeply stamped, like golden eagles just dropped from the mint, ringing current upon the counters of the intellectual world; he required a certainty to a certain intent in every particular, as the foundation of his beliefs. Mr. Lincoln was a terribly secretiv man—a very cautious man—a man who kept his own thoughts; he was, generally speaking, as secretiv and reticent in his ideas, purposes, and intents as the eternal silences themselvs. If there ever was a man born of woman in this world who did not, as a general rule, let his right hand know what his left hand was doing, it was Lincoln. I would earnestly advise all men to read Holland's "Life of Lincoln," at pages 241–2, and to see for themselvs the estimate which the people of Springfield put on Mr. Lincoln; he lived in this city twenty-five years, and yet no two men, scarcely, agreed in their opinion of the man whom the world thought it knew so well. Had it not been for a few wise, and brave ones too, Mr. Lincoln would hav been in a hundred years or less a mere myth.

No man has better understood the qualities and charateristics of Mr. Lincoln's mind, in a special line, than the good Bishop Simpson. He says in his funeral oration over the dead body of the great emancipator this: "If you would ask me on what mental characteristics his [Lincoln's] greatness rested, I answer: On a quick and ready reception of facts, . . . and on a logical turn of mind, which followed sternly and unwaveringly every link in the chain of thought on every subject which he was called to investigate, . . . and by a determination to perceive the truth in all its relations and simplicity; and when found, to utter it." This is exact, true, and well said. These remarks—this oration—was made in Springfield, Ill., in 1865, when Mr. Lincoln was finally placed in the tomb. I now and here wish to pay the good bishop a deserved compliment. In the delivery of this oration at the tomb of Lincoln, the good bishop did not say a word about Mr. Lincoln's Christianity, as I now recollect it; he suppressed no truth and suggested no falsehood. Doctor Gurley, Mr. Lincoln's pastor at Washington, was in Springfield at the time, and Doctor Gurley and Bishop Simpson were seen, as I am informed, in a private conversation together, as supposed. These men knew—or had reason to know—Mr. Lincoln's religious views, and though they were under strong temptations to proclaim Mr. Lincoln's Christianity, if it was the case, to the world, yet their honor, their integrity, their manhood, and their love of truth, forbade it. All honor to such men who stand firm, when temptation—strong temptation—is trampled under foot, and truth thrown high in the sky. But no voice came from the silent tomb—from the nerveless and voiceless tongue of Lincoln—to the good men on that day to be telegraphed over the wires of the world that "I am a Christian." Here was the place and the time and the occasion, if ever, to proclain Mr. Lincoln's Christianity to mankind if such was the case. But the silences, the eternal silences, ruled and reigned supreme.

Bishop Simpson said that Lincoln searched logically for the truth, and when found, he had the courage to utter it. I wish to make an application of this truth. Mr. Lincoln did, in 1835–36, search for the truth, and found it to his entire satisfaction; and did declare his Infidelity by writing a little book against Christianity. Again, if Mr. Lincoln changed his views as expressed in 1835–36 he did it on logical investigation. If he did investigate that subject anew, who knows that fact? If he changed his original opinion he had the courage to utter it. Who knows that fact of change? If any one knows these facts, let him by all means tell it. Mr. Lincoln never investigated the subject but once, and that in 1835–36; he never changed his opinions from that year to the day of his death. I may here say that Bishop Simpson on that day—the day when he delivered his funeral oration at the tomb of Lincoln, in the presence of twenty or thirty thousand people—fell into terrible mistake. I heard Mr. Lincoln deliver a speech in this city in 1839 against Martin Van Buren and his administration. The speech was grandiloquent—a mere boyish effort, so to speak. Bishop Simpson takes that speech of 1839 against Van Buren and quotes it as delivered in 1859 against slavery and the slave power. Those who wish to investigate the subject will turn to Holland's "Life of Lincoln," at pages 534–5, and to Lamon's "Life of Lincoln," at pages 232–7. The most nicely critical and veracious biographer, Doctor Holland, then pays this high compliment to the speech of 1839, supposing it to hav been delivered in 1859—a speech against Van Buren in 1839—as a speech delivered in 1859 against slavery. Hear him: "No inspiration finer than this breathes in any of Mr. Lincoln's utterances. It almost seems as if an intimation of his life and death were given to him at the moment—as if a glimpse into his own and his country's future had been vouchsafed to his excited vision." This sounds most ridiculous to me, who heard the speech in 1839. This error is carried on in a book recently published in New York, called "The Lincoln Memorial Album" (see page 78). One more word about Bishop Simpson, and no more: he wrote the introduction to this memorial album, and in it he says no word about Lincoln's Christianity. Would to heaven that all Christians were such as this honest, truthful Christian man. All honor to him! The above errors were mere mistakes, accidentally and honestly made; but, were I to make such, hades would be my doom, because I am a Liberal in my religious views. I can do a Christian justice, but woe to me if I, though human, err.

I hav a good Christian neighbor who now, at least in spirit, is looking over my shoulder, saying: "Herndon, you are always invoking some person's word as proof of Mr. Lincoln's Infidelity. Why do you not quote something that Lincoln himself says?" In reply to my good Christian neighbor and friend, let me say: Now you hav asked of me a favor, and will you in return do me a similar kindness? I then shall willingly comply with the wish of my friend. In 1842 I heard Mr. Lincoln deliver a speech before the Washingtonian Temperance Society of this city. The original Washingtonians were men who had just crawled out of the gutter, with the mud and dirt fresh on their faces. Many of the Christians of this city twisted up their noses at the men who had risen up from degradation, struggling to be men once more. These men, as contended by the quasi aristocracy, were low men—base-born men, unfit to lecture to the elite of the city. This was the feeling here among the Christians somewhat. Mr. Lincoln delivered a lecture before that society, taking the part of the poor unfortunates in the fight. He scored the Christians for the position they had taken. He said in that lecture this: "If they" (the Christians) "believe, as they profess—that Omnipotence condescended to take on himself the form of sinful man," etc.* This was spoken with energy; he scornfully and contemptuously emphasized the words "as they profess." The insult was as much possibly in the manner of utterance as in the substance of what was said. I heard the criticisms of some of the Christians that night. They said the speech was an insult and an outrage. Remember, Mr. Lincoln was fresh from Menard county, where he wrote his work on Infidelity in 1835–6, his temperance lecture being in 1842. In this same lecture he said, in reference to denunciation by the temperance lecturer of the rum-seller, that it begot denunciation in return. His words are as follows: "To hav expected them not to meet denunciation with denunciation, crimination with crimination, anathema with anathema, was to expect a reversal of human nature, which is God's decree and can never be reversed." "But was not Mr. Lincoln a man of prayer?" asks my friend who is looking over my shoulder, and to whom I reply substantially in Mr. Lincoln's language just quoted: God's decree, and can never be reversed by human prayer. I quote from the original lecture, written out by Mr. Lincoln himself and published in the Sangamon Journal in 1842, and likewise from the Lincoln Memorial Album, pages 87–94. Mr. Lincoln, in his farewell address to the citizens of Springfield in 1861, says: "I hope you, my friends, will pray that I may receive," etc. He means those who believe in the efficacy of prayer as a means of moving God from his decrees. He does not say I pray. In his last inaugural he says: "Fervently do we pray." He means fervently do we as a people pray; he does not say I pray. It is my opinion that no man ever heard Mr. Lincoln pray, in the true evangelical sense of that word. His philosophy is against all human prayer, as a means of reversing God's decrees. If any man ever heard Mr. Lincoln pray, as the word "prayer" is understood in the Christian world, by all means let us hav the truth. When did he pray? Where did he pray? What was his attitude and position? What did he say?—and all about it. Let me say here that to pray is no evidence, of itself, of a man's Christianity; and yet it is important to know the truth in this matter. Let the witness write out a letter under his own hand and seal, and giv his honor as to the truth of what is said. By all means let the truth come, though the heavens fall.

Mr. Lincoln used to say to me that the great, leading law of human nature was motivs, and that at the bottom was pure selfishness; that all human actions, reflectivly speaking, were moved by motivs; "that negroes, like other people, act upon motivs." He has told me often that there was no freedom in the human will, and no punishment beyond this world. He denied God's higher law, and wrote on the margin of a newspaper to his friends in the Chicago Convention in 1860 this: "Lincoln agrees with Seward in his irrepressible-conflict idea; but he is opposed to Seward's higher law." This paper was handed to Judge Davis, Judge Logan, and other friends. I do not know the particular one this paper was handed to. Mr. Lincoln used to say, "What is to be, will be; and what is, is right—if men could only see all the facts and consequences at one good broad look." This was his fatalistic idea. In his last inaugural he said this: "Woe unto the world, for it must needs be that offenses come; but woe to the man by whom the offense cometh." What is the meaning of the words must needs? Needs means necessity. Then offenses of necessity must come, and there is no hope that they will not come, and no human prayers can arrest their inevitable coming. No Greek ever held firmer to fatalism, substantially, than Mr. Lincoln. Now what becomes of prayer?

I wish now to quote a somewhat lengthy extract from one of Mr. Lincoln's letters, written in 1864, to a lady, I think, in Philadelphia, by the name of Eliza P. Gurney. This extract proves his fatalism—his philosophy—and all that I hav ever said about it. The extract is as follows:

"The purposes of the Almighty are perfect and must prevail, though we erring mortals may fail to accurately see them in advance. We hoped for a happy termination of this terrible war long before this, but God knows best and has ruled otherwise. We yet shall acknowledge his wisdom and our errors therein; meanwhile we must work earnestly in the best light he givs us, trusting that so working still conduces to the great end he ordains. Surely he intends some great good to follow this mighty convulsion, which no mortal could make and no mortal could stay." (See the Lincoln Memorial Album, p. 338.)

Here, then, is the declaration of the perfect idea of God—that his ideas must prevail—that God knew best when the war should end—that he has ruled otherwise than men's wishes—reason, not revelation, is the best light he givs us—that no mortal could make this mighty convulsion, and no mortal could stay the great end he ordains. I infer, only infer, that Mr. Lincoln means by the best light he givs us that of reason; he does not say revelation—he does not say has given us, but givs us. The italics are mine in this letter wherever used.

Again, I wish to quote an extract from Mr. Lincoln's inaugural, the last one; it is as follows: "Both read the same Bible and pray to the same God; and each invokes his aid against the other. It may seem strange that any man should dare to ask a just God's assistance in wringing their bread from the sweat of other men's faces, but let us judge not lest we be judged. The prayer of both could not be answered. That of neither has been answered fully. The Almighty has his own purposes. Woe unto the world because of offenses, for it must needs be that offenses come, but woe to the man by whom the offense cometh." (See Arnold's Lincoln and Slavery, pages 625–7.)

Here Mr. Lincoln nails his religion and his philosophy on every man's door, and bids each read for himself under the severe penalties of ignorance and error. Take all these quotations from authentic documents, beginning in 1842 and running up to 1866, and you hav his religion and his philosophy. The tendency of Mr. Lincoln was to a scientific Materialism—evolution—though, if his Johnson letter be his convictions, without denying soul, heaven, God. His idea of God was a kind of "Sufficient Cause," a mere maker, and that is as far as human reason can reach, fully admitting the force of the argument of plans and adaptations in nature; it can logically climb no higher, struggle and toil as it may forever.

My good Christian friend, I hav now referred to Mr. Lincoln's religious ideas and opinions, and, to do this fairly, I hav quoted authentic documents, coming from Mr. Lincoln's own brain and pen; and now will you hav the kindness to show me by like documents when and where Mr. Lincoln believed in the fall of man, as related in the Bible; when and where did he believe that Jesus was the Christ of God, his truly and only begotten Son, as the Christian world contends; when and where did Mr. Lincoln believe in special revelation, special inspiration, special miracle, special providence, the efficacy of prayer as a means of moving God to alter his laws, ordinances, or decrees; and when and where did Mr. Lincoln change his religious belief, as uttered in 1835 down to 1866? Come, be fair and square. If you cannot produce such authentic documents, which proofs no one questions or disputes, then cease teaching the good people to believe a falsehood. Cease cheating the mind out of its wish for truth.

* When I laid down a proposition in my prior letter to you that had Lincoln said that God uttered the quotations which he uses that would hav been an admission, an acknowledgment of divine revelation, etc., I meant it would be inferentially so to some minds, but not so to all minds. Mr Lincoln cut up by the roots in these sentences such an inference, by not uttering the words, "God said it." Lincoln was wise, shrewd, foreseeing.

* The meaning of the whole sentence—a long one—is this: "If the Christians believe, as they pretend, that God condescended to take upon himself the form of man for man's sake, surely the Christians should stoop a little in this world to save the poor drunkards from utter and eternal ruin."

I wish to giv an illustration of the uncertainty and unreliability of those loose things that float around in the newspapers of the day, and how liable things are to be inaccurate—so made even by the best of men. Mr. Lincoln, in the morning he started for Washington to take the oath of office, and to be inaugurated as president of this great republic, gave a short farewell address to his old friends. It was eloquent and touching. That speech is copied in Holland's "Life of Lincoln," in Arnold's "Lincoln and Slavery," and in Lamon's "Life of Lincoln," and no two are exactly alike. Two of them substantially agree. If it is hard to get the exact truth on such an occasion as this, how impossible it is to get at Mr. Lincoln's sayings which hav been written out by men weeks and months after what he did say hav passed by! All these loose and foolish things that Mr. Lincoln is supposed to hav said are like the cords of driftwood, floating on the bosom of the great Mississippi, down to the great gulf of—Forgetfulness. Let them go.

It appears that in 1864, say in July, the colored people of Baltimore presented Lincoln with a superb copy of the Bible. One of the colored men who presented the Bible made some remarks at the time and on the occasion; and most undoubtedly Mr. Lincoln made a short reply. The supposed, the fraudulent, speech of Mr. Lincoln is copied in Carpenter's "Six Months in the White House," and in the Lincoln Memorial Album, and in McPherson's "History of the War," of which last I hav only a copy furnished me by a friend. No two of these exactly agree. Two of them substantially do. Now two things are certain: 1st. That Mr. Lincoln did not write it; and 2d. That some one did; and now the question comes, when was it written out? How long was it written out, as printed, after Mr. Lincoln did make his remarks in fact? My information is that Lincoln's remarks were made about July 4th, 1864; and that the speech—the supposed one—appeared in the papers about September the 5th, 1864—two months or more after the supposed speech was made. In that speech Mr. Lincoln is made to say this: "But for that book we could not know right from wrong." Does any human being, in his sane moments, believe that Lincoln ever uttered this insane speech? What did the whole race of man do to know right from wrong for a half million years or more before this book, this so-called revelation, was given to the world, if such was the case? What do those millions of people now living, who never heard of this book, do to know how to distinguish right from wrong? How about the hundreds of millions who hav died, who never heard of this book? How did the struggling race of man build up its grand civilization in the world before this book was given to mankind? A civilization quite as high in some respects as this existed before Moses and Jesus. Was Lincoln a fool, an ass, or a hypocrit, or a combination of them; or is this speech—this supposed—this fraudulent speech, a lie—a bald, naked lie?

I wish to make one more quotation, and then I shall be done with this subject, probably forever. It appears, only appears, from what is said below that Mr. Lincoln and a minister, whose name is kept in the dark, had a conversation about religion. It appears that Mr. Lincoln said that when his son—bone of his bone, flesh of his flesh, and blood of his own heart pulse—died, though a severe affliction, it did not arouse him to think of Christ; but when he saw the graves of so many soldiers—strangers to him—not in his nativ or adopted state—men who were not of his blood, bone, and warm heart pulse, that sad sight aroused him to love Jesus. I shall now quote the words as I find them in the Lincoln Memorial Album published in New York in 1882, page 336. Says Lincoln: "When I left Springfield I asked the people to pray for me. I was not a Christian. When I buried my son, the severest trial of my life, I was not a Christian; but when I went to Gettysburg and saw the graves of thousands of our soldiers, I then and there consecrated myself to Christ. I do love Jesus." It is a fine thing for the reputation of the "Illinois clergyman" that his name is to the world unknown. It is a most heartless thing, this supposed conversation of Lincoln with the Illinois clergyman. What! Lincoln feel more for the graves of strangers than for the death of his once living, loving, and lovable son, now dead, moldering to ashes in the silent tomb! This charge is barbarous, savage. To make Lincoln a lover of Jesus, whom he once ridiculed, this minister makes him a savage—just as he once was made a hypocrit to make him an Evangelical Christian, as was done by Dr. Holland in his "Life of Lincoln." I hav no word by which to utter my feelings that burst up as I read the above quotation; and did I express myself fully and freely, I probably should go too far. I, however, brand this "Illinois clergyman"—this person—as a liar, a wilful liar; a mean libeler of the great dead.

I wish, in conclusion, to make a correction, and it is this: In the Abbot letter, written by me in 1870, there was a typographical error in one word, and that one word I want changed. The word is one; it should read our. So the correct reading will be, "our great and good and merciful maker." Mr. Abbot, in the next issue after my letter appeared in the columns of his paper, corrected the error, and I hav done so several times since.

Springfield, Ill. W. H. HERNDON.

The Prohibition Question.

In my last letter to THE TRUTH SEEKER I did not intend to involve myself in a discussion on the Heywood question or prohibition, but in your issue of Jan. 13th my friend Walker takes such strong exception to some things I had said, that some explanation and criticism seem necessary. First as to Mr. Heywood, Mr. Walker says he has not forced any of his publications on me or any one else. I did not say he had done so; the individuals who send "rich and racy" literature over the country generally like a money compensation for their goods in advance, and probably Mr. Heywood would not try to "force" his business where it would not pay him.

I spoke of his contemptible effort to be considered a martyr because I cannot possibly conceive of any good motiv he had in doing what he has done. It is idle to speak of his honesty and sincerity; the fact remains that his methods are more than questionable, and to denounce and sneer at the honesty and loyality of Liberals because they do not espouse his cause is simply fanaticism run mad.

Perhaps Mr. Walker can see a great principle involved in this matter. I confess I do not see the ghost of one, and I believe that a large majority of the Liberals of this country do not, among whom are many second to none in their devotion to the true principles of liberty. I am proud that the good old truth seeker and truth teller, D. M. Bennett, ere he died, put himself on record as he did in this matter.

In the temperance field Mr. Walker evidently felicitates himself with the idea that he holds the lists against all comers, riding down (a la Don Quixote), horse and man, those who hav the temerity to enter from the opposite end.

Mr. Walker says it is an "absurd pretense" to say that the citizen would make a bad use of the right to choose his drinks. He does not say intoxicants; that would uncover his position; he merely says "drink," and sandwiches the word between "eat" and "wear" as often as possible, to giv it plausibility and catch the approval of many who do not giv the question much attention. Is it an absurd pretense? Let the thousands who are done to death every year in this country by choosing their own drinks, and the sickening aggregate of crime, solely and directly attributable to men choosing their own drinks, answer. Mr. Walker in his second affirmation says that each person has a natural right to obtain in an honest way such drink as they may require. I hold that no person has a natural right to do that which will make them offensiv or dangerous to society—no person has a right to spend for intoxicants, money which their families, their creditors, or those deserving of help or charity at their hands, hav a natural right to; for drinking liquor, I think I may say, in all cases involves some of these infringements on the rights of others. It seems far easier for some to see where the rights of the drinker or seller of liquor are invaded than those of society at large.

Mr. Walker would better the present conditon of things by giving the people:

1st. More accurate and extended knowledge of the laws of heredity. 2d. A keener realization of the terrible evils attending the drink habit. 3d. Bettered material conditions, lessened mental worry, libraries, reading-rooms, etc. These propositions sound very well in a general way, but let us see if they are or can be remedial in the matter. 1st. The laws of heredity, in so much as they apply to this question, viz., the transmission of certain appetites and propensities from parents to children, are generally understood, and hav been for many years, by the person of average intelligence. But what good does a knowledge of all this? what restraining influence does it exercise on the individual? I hav known men who gave as an excuse for their drunkenness, that they inherited the thirst for liquor and could not help it. 2d. Who knows better than the drunkard himself of the terrible effects of his habit? yet we see him not only sinking lower himself, but dragging down with him those who are unfortunate enough to be influenced by him. We see men of the finest intellect, and men who make the human mind and body the study of their lives, who hav a thorough understanding of the moral and physical effect of strong drink; we see such men as these add their full quota of victims. In view of these facts I think it is a little like mockery to ask for any more acute realization of the effects of alcoholic drinks. I claim that under present conditions, with a saloon on every corner and cross-roads, you cannot possibly giv a person, young or old, any moral training that will insure them from becoming a drunkard in after years. 3d. What prospect is there for a generally better condition of material things? I question if in this country people will average as well in this respect as they did fifty years ago. It is the old story so oft repeated in the human race, as population increases the struggle for existence grows harder. Libraries, reading-rooms, and art galleries are very good, but comparatively few places can afford to hav them, and where they do hav them the saloon flourishes next door, more than neutralizing all the good they can do. Mr. Walker, in order to prove that his argument is not a "dead negation," suggests a number of theories that will not produce the results that he claims, and in my judgment are unpractical and utopian. Mr. Walker affects to take it almost as a personal affront because Mr. Lake intimates that he stands up for intemperance. Now, while I hav no wish to purposely offend Mr. Walker, I propose to hold him to the responsibilities of his position. He asserts that any person has a natural right to buy liquor if they wish to; this process of reasoning of course implies just as good a right to sell. Mr. Walker chooses to plant his flag of personal liberty in front of the rumseller's shop, and say to the Prohibitionists, You must not interfere with this man's right to sell liquor; you may throw some tracts in through his doorway, treating on the physiological effects of liquor drinking, or tell the habitués of this place how much better off they would be to surround themselvs with better material conditions, but the right to sell liquor is sacred. If Mr. Walker is not "standing up" for intemperance, he is standing up for a state of things that begets it, and no amount of Jesuitical reasoning can extricate him from that position. There is one part of his duties as champion for the supposed rights of the liquor sellers which Mr. Walker has neglected; the business of liquor selling is heavily burdened with taxes and licenses, far beyond any other business of the same valuation in this country. Taxation that discriminates so oppressivly against any natural right is the essence of tyranny, and should be resisted. It is now in order and perfectly consistent with Mr. Walker's peculiar views on individual sovereignty for him to denounce this taxation, and preach a crusade in favor of its abolition, thus paving the way for conferring the boon of cheap whisky on the masses, putting it within the reach of the poorest. Mr. Walker refers me to Mr. Bradford's letter in THE TRUTH SEEKER, Dec. 16th. I will not enter into any discussion of it, only to say that a man who thinks the spirit and aspirations of a people that make possible the grinding tyrannies of a Bismarck, are superior to those of a race that first wrested from kings the assumed divine right to rule; that laid broad and deep and practical the foundations in our own country of the most spendid temple of liberty ever erected by man; such a man and myself are as wide apart as the poles in our interpretations of the lessons of history and our conceptions of liberty.

J. H. LYDIARD.

Long Lake, Minn., Jan. 26, 1883.

God and a Future Life.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav noticed much controversy, which at times approaches personal acrimony, in your columns with regard to mind and matter, what God should be properly termed, whether spirits generate from matter, whether nature is all there is of it, and so forth. For myself I am opposed to the cranky manner of people flying to the pen to cross swords with some one that writes something a little out of line with their own modes of thinking. I do not believe it is conduciv to growth and progress in harmony and use (I use the term use in the Swedenborgian sense). The fact is that at this crisis in the breaking up of the old crystallized elements of orthodoxy, people conceive all sorts of ideas and impressions by reason of their new fields of thoughts, which thoughts and impressions, I think, Liberals should read and weigh, if desirable, without flying into print with temper and the endeavor to belittle the writer; while to properly and in a true fraternal spirit meet and refute the seeming errors of others is perfectly right.

But to return to my texts. First, what and where is God? That question I once put to a great Baptist revival minister. He was an inspirational sort of a fellow, susceptible and subject to take on the spirit of his surroundings. The atmosphere about him being pretty well charged with Liberalism at that hour, he promptly replied to my query, "God is the soul of nature, and is everywhere present." That suited me well enough, and I did not press him for further argument upon the subject. But of all the controversialists upon the subject in your columns, the position of Miss Ella E. Gibson strikes me as nearest correct, as she has exactly voiced my own conception of the subject—that is, that God is "it." My own view is decidedly Pantheistic, i. e., all God, or God in all; the whole make-up of nature, both the life and the matter; all matter the body, and all life the soul.

Then, I say, as the elements of nature are not all positiv or male elements, but also passiv or negativ female as well, the two, harmoniously combining, produce "it"—nature, and thence God; the he "Gaud" of the Christians having died upon the cross and become defunct. But, second, do humans become spirits? I don't believe all do. There, now I'm in for it! But let me finish the sentence, anyway. I believe in evolution, slow-grinding, and the refining process of progression. I believe that nature (God) is progressiv; that also nature, through the physical man, occasionally grinds out a spirit; that a very great majority of mankind perish at death, the same as the majority of fruits, vegetables, and seeds; that they hav to go through nature's hopper again and again before they become survivists as spirits; that many will meet with great surprise by waking up and finding themselvs living identities, while the very greatest number will be more surprised that they never wake up any more at all. Spirit life may be spoken of in the words of Henry Ward Beecher's reply to the query, "What is genius?"—if you had it, you would not ask; if you hav not, and I tell you, you will not understand me.

Fraternally, Dr. Andrews.

So. Rockwood, Mich., Jan. 30, 283.

A Mining Swindle Foisted upon the People by the Methodist Church.

From Sunday's Sun.

"For the love of money," saith the apostle Paul, in his first epistle to Timothy, "is the root of all evil: which while some coveted after, they hav erred from the faith, and pierced themselvs through with many sorrows. But thou, O man of God, flee these things; and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness."

These words of St. Paul and the truths they convey are often brought to our minds, but they hav a special application to the story we now proceed to relate.

In the summer of 1878 the president of the East Tennessee Wesleyan University, the Rev. John F. Spence, D.D., was gratified to find that Col. H. G. Bixby, a Californian mining promoter and philanthropist, being a bachelor with no family, had conceived the idea of endowing that Methodist institution with the munificent sum of two or three hundred thousand dollars, payable in mining shares. The Rev. Dr. Spence brought the philanthropist to the Rev. Dr. Newman, of this city, he being distinguished alike as a financier, a preacher, and a friend of Gen. Grant; in fact, as a man wise as a serpent in the affairs of this world. There also accompanied him Prof. L. B. Caldwell, holding the chair of chemistry and mineralogy in the Methodist college.

What the philanthropist proposed was that he would giv the university 15,000 shares of stock for its endowment, provided the machinery of the Methodist church was used to work off the rest of the shares in a mine he controled. That mine was called originally the Isabella Mining and Milling Company, and it had been incorporated in the state of California with the usual nominal capital of ten millions of dollars, divided into 100,000 shares of $100 each. It was described as "a consolidation of eight very rich silver mines near Globe City, Arizona." Prof. Caldwell, as a mineralogist, vouched for the truth of all that was claimed for it. Untold wealth was there, only waiting for capital to get it out. Some encumbrances were on the property, Col. Bixby acknowledged, and $50,000 was needed to put the mine in working order. His proposition was to place the shares on the market at ten dollars each, but a certain proportion of them were to be reserved for "first comers," a little inside ring, in fact, who were to be allowed to come in on the "ground floor" at $5 a share.

Desiring to benefit the cause of Methodist education, the Rev. Dr. Newman stepped in on the ground floor with an investment of $1,000. Having confidence in his business judgment, Bishop Simpson followed with $600. The Rev. C. H. Fowler, D.D., LL.D., and the Rev. W. H. De Puy, D.D., the editors of the Christian Advocate, the official Methodist paper in this city, were also let in on the ground floor, and the clerical gentlemen generally at the Methodist Book Concern, 805 Broadway, chipped in likewise.

Under the heading of "A Noble Deed," the Christian Advocate editorially called attention to the project and to an advertisment signed by the president of the East Tennessee University, calling for purchasers of one thousand shares at $10 a share "in one of the richest and most desirable silver mines in the world." On the speculation the reverend president bestowed a first-rate puff as follows:

"The stock is believed, after thorough investigation by disinterested experts and the most careful judges, to be worth more than double the amount asked for it; but a limited quantity is placed on the market at this low rate ($10 per share, par value $10,000) for the purpose of raising funds to aid in paying for an exceedingly valuable mill, to be used at once in reducing the ore, more than six hundred tons of which hav already been quarried from the mines and are ready for the mills. Dividends on the amount of at least five per cent are expected by Nov. 1, and five per cent monthly thereafter. Those desiring to aid the university, and at the same time make a safe and quick-paying investment, should make immediate application to the undersigned, at 805 Broadway, New York."

"The mines hav been developed," said the editors of the Christian Advocate, "beyond the point of contingency concerning their almost unprecedented wealth in rich, accessible, free-milling silver ore, and large quantities of ore, worth from $200 to $3,000 per ton, hav been mined. The mills will be paying monthly dividends by next November." And they rounded off their little puff:

"Col. Bixby, whose name, character, and ability are of the highest order among the miners of California and Nevada, has given the university, in addition to the endowment (which will be ample—amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars), some stock with which the trustees can meet their share of the cost of completing the mills and of starting the works. Bishop Simpson, Dr. Newman, and other friends of the university hav done a good thing for the university in purchasing some of their stock; and, we doubt not, hav also done a better thing for themselvs. We congratulate East Tennessee Wesleyan University, soon to be named Bixby University—an honor, however, which Col. Bixby declines to accept before the trustees hav actually received their 'bullion.' We know several other schools for which we crave an equally valuable friend."

The 1,000 shares offered, it will be observed, were put at $10 each, and nothing was said about the ground floor stock, at $5 a share, held by the editors. In a later number of the Christian Advocate appeared an open letter from Prof. Caldwell, which was also distributed by the Methodist Book Concern's machinery, giving the most glowing account of the mine after long examination:

"I can see no reason why dividends may not be declared in November next, unless there occur some break in the line of transportation to the mines, by which a part of the machinery now under way might be delayed for a few days."

So heralded, so commended, and so engineered, of course the Methodists bit freely at the bait offered in the glittering Isabella mine shares. Col. Bixby, by his philanthropy and by provoking their greed, had enlisted in the work of getting rid of the stock the men who run the ecclesiastical and business machinery of the church. The preachers scraped together money to buy at $10 each shares which the clerical promoters got at the ground floor price of $5, and presiding elders pushed forward the sales. The result was that a large sum was raked in.

But November came, and the promised dividend of fifty cents a share was not declared. A year passed by, and there were no dividends. A committee went to Arizona to investigate the property, and as the result of their inquiries an adjoining mine was bought for $25,000. The company was reorganized under the name of the Globe City Mining Company; enough preferred stock was issued to pay for the property, and the holders of the Isabella shares received common stock, share for share, in the new concern. The additional mine purchased for $25,000 is now regarded as the richest asset of the great enterprise which started with a capital of ten millions. Something, too, may be got out of a mill in the Isabella, which cost $40,000. The bowels of the earth hav not yielded the promised bullion.

A Major Sisson, of Chicago, who is described as "an expert and particular friend of Dr. Fowler," was sent out to inspect the property, and he advised extensiv improvements, which required more money. Accordingly, Dr. Newman put up $1,000 additional. There was trouble about the management of the mill, and finally in March last all work on the mine was abandoned. It was given up as a worthless undertaking!

The truth is, Col. Bixby's Isabella mine was never worth anything. In the opinion of Mr. Newma, it was "salted" before the mineralogical professor, Caldwell, visited it. Mr. A. W. Hammond, who knows all about it, reports as follows:

"The Isabella mine was located, I think, in 1877, by Col. Bixby. A little 'pot hole,' twenty or thirty feet deep, was dug and baby drifts run, and that ended the development of this 'mine.' The hole was not so deep as to shade a man from the sun if he stood upright in it. When Bixby came East he brought the Isabella Mining Company in his satchel. The next time we saw him in Globe City he had brought Prof. Caldwell out to act as expert. The people in Globe City told the professor plainly that the mine was worthless. He talked with me about it, and I told him the same thing. Nevertheless it seems that he reported it a splendid property, and the stock was marketed, as has already been stated. The sale of the stock was not merely confined to the preachers. Business men of proved sagacity were bitten right and left. One of the big jewelers in this city is said to hav traded a lot of diamonds for the stock. When Col. Bixby first returned to Globe City he had a regular headlight stone in his shirt bosom. When he first came there he was as poor as a church mouse and not at all proud."

As to how many the victims were we get a hint from a remark of one of them, the son of the Rev. Mr. Russell, a Methodist preacher. His stock certificate is numbered 450. That means, said the reporter, at least 450 victims of the scheme.

"'Four hundred and fifty!' exclaimed Mr. Russell. 'My dear sir, that number doesn't begin to count them. They are legion. I was among the first purchasers. A whole army came after me.'"

Who is most responsible for the swindle? This is the question that agitates Methodist circles. The clerical promoters toss the burden from the shoulders of one to another. But really they are all in the same boat. They used their influence to sell to other preachers at $10 a share stock they got themselvs at $5 a share; and they urged the purchase both as a wonderfully rich investment and as a means of helping the cause of Methodist education. There seems to hav been some unloading from the inside.

It is asserted by Mr. Russell, above mentioned, that there was "a base and scandalous use of the organization of our denomination in forcing the rank and file of our ministers to put their hard-earned savings into this detestable swindle." But listen to his indignant exposition:

"The form of government of the Methodist Episcopal church invests the presiding elders with a terrible power over the destinies of a large majority of the preachers. In each conference, the bishop, with three or four of the presiding elders, forms what is called the 'cabinet.' The appointments to pastorates, which are made at stated intervals by the cabinet, usually follow out the recommendations of the presiding elders, each furnishing the bishop with a 'slate' for his own district. Nineteen-twentieths of the preachers do not know whether the next appointment will take them to a fat pastorate, with a $2,500 salary and a parsonage thrown in, or send them out to Murderer's Glen or Skunk's Hollow at a salary of $150 a year. The Rev. Mr. Graves was for four years a presiding elder in the New York East Conference. He was very activ in placing the Isabella stock on the market. Of course he did not say, 'Rev. Mr. So-and-so, you must take some stock,' or 'You must lend me money.' It was, 'My dear brother, this is a very worthy object. Bishop Simpson and Dr. Newman and all the leading men of the church are taking stock in order to help along the cause of that dear institution in the South, and it seems to me as if we ought to do something. I am credibly informed that the investment is a safe one and promises large profits. Mr. Cornell, Mr. Stout, and Gen. Fisk are warm indorsers of the enterprise, and if you were to put a few hundred dollars into the enterprise I know you would not regret it.' A 'political assessment,' so to speak, was levied upon the $200 or $300 they had managed to save out of the pittances of salaries which had been paid them."

The Rev. Mr. Graves now denies that he made such a use of his place, but a few days ago he said to a reporter:

"I never positivly advised anyone to put his money into the swindle, but when asked my opinion I hav repeated what I was told by Dr. Spence and Prof. Caldwell and Dr. Fowler. I hav pointed to the article in the Christian Advocate, and hav said (as I certainly thought) that it must, with such backing, be a safe and good investment. On these representations people, I am very, very sorry to say, hav gone in."

No wonder he is sorry. He certainly gave very bad advice, positiv or otherwise, and used his influence as a presiding elder to an ill purpose.

But what shall we say of the clerical editors of the Christian Advocate? They puffed the swindle, having been let in on the ground floor. Because the Methodist church had put them at the head of its newspaper organ their favor was purchased, and the Christian Advocate was used to victimize Methodists in all parts of the country—to push the sale of shares at $10 which the editors got for $5 or nothing at all. Even after the Isabella mine had proved worthless, the readers of the Christian Advocate were not warned. That religious paper held its peace, and many more gudgeons were caught. And Dr. Fowler, according to Dr. Newman, sold his stock, and made money out of it!

Is not a revival of good morals absolutely necessary among Methodist editors and presiding elders?

We hav only to add that the name of the East Tennessee Wesleyan University has not yet been changed to the Bixby University. Indeed, the philanthropic Col. Bixby seems to hav disappeared from the scene.

Actor Thorne's Funeral.

Charles R. Thorne, Jr., one of the most talented actors of the American stage, died in this city on the 10th inst. He was 46 years old. The funeral took place on Monday, the 12th. One day, about twelve years ago, Mr. Thorne, Stuart Robson, and Robert Craig, two other actors, were discussing the quiet burial of Charles Dickens, and fell to talking about unpleasant funeral sermons that had been preached over actors. Craig said that he would hav no clergyman speak at his funeral. "It was then," Mr. Robson said, "that Thorne, Craig, and I made a compact that whoever of us survived the others or another should do what could be done to keep the preacher away from the funeral. Thorne went to Europe; Craig died suddenly. His family insisted on having the usual religious services at the funeral. I told them of Craig's well-known wish in the matter, but they insisted. The minister who conducted the service was an educated man, but he had all the prejudices commoner in his profession then than now, and he immediately began to make an apology for the evil which this young man had committed in adopting a profession that had so many evil associations, while his talents in a respectable calling might hav brought him great honor. He thought that he was justified in asserting that in despite of this Mr. Craig might hav a hope of heaven.

"I told Thorne this when he returned from Europe, and it increased his feeling against such proceedings. He said he did not wish all sorts of people to be running to his funeral at the Little Church Around the Corner just because he was an actor, and the last word he said to his wife was: 'No preacher; tell Rob.'"

In accordance with this wish of Mr. Thorne his funeral was conducted. Mr. Robson stood beside the coffin and said:

"It was the often expressed wish of our dear friend, during the illness which resulted in his death, that no performance of a religious nature should be permitted at his funeral. In conformity with this desire, let us bid good-bye to him briefly and simply.

"This man had few enemies and many friends. Narrow men did not love him—generous men did. He was liberal to a fault, honest, manly, and true. Those who knew him best loved him best. Hot tempered at times—as all good men are—if led hastily into an injustice, he as quickly saw his error and rectified it.

"It is a source of gratification for us to know that he who lately feared death as the most dreaded of all evils, when the time came welcomed it with all the heartiness of his great nature. His end was peaceful and painless, and he died with the calmness of a sleeping child. He had few regrets for the past, and none for the future. If Charles R. Thorne had faults, I never saw them. My great love for the man clouded my judgment, perhaps—I could see only the good in him. Last Thursday I saw him for the last time. He asked me in a laughing way if I had any clearly defined ideas in respect to a future state. I replied as vaguely as I could that I supposed the subject was 'rather indefinit;' that the more I thought the less I knew, and several other current answers in popular use. He said that during his illness he had read liberally on this theme, and saw nothing more suitable to his views than the following lines: 'The future is a dark, impenetrable curtain which no human being has ever drawn aside and come back to tell the tale.'

"The conclusion of my brief task cannot be better reached than by the recital of the following beautiful words from the immortal master's 'Tempest,' which Mr. Thorne frequently recited with a tenderness which has not been equaled in our time:

> "'These, our actors,
> As I foretold you, were all spirits, and
> Are melted into air—into thin air,
> And like the baseless fabric of this vision,
> The cloud-capped towers, the gorgeous palaces,
> The solemn temples, the great globe itself;
> Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve,
> And like this insubstantial pageant faded,
> Leave not a rack behind. We are such stuff
> As dreams are made of, and our little life
> Is rounded with a sleep.'"

Mr. Robson then read this telegram from Col. Ingersoll:

"Say what your heart prompts. A few tears, a few words, a few flowers, are all that the living can giv to the dead. The tragedy has ended; the curtain has fallen; applause cannot lift it up again. But memory and hope remain. Giv my sincere sympathy to those who weep."

The pall-bearers lifted the coffin into the hearse, which was driven to the Grand Central depot. The train bore it to Woodlawn Cemetery. Here, without any words of commitment or farewell, it was placed in a receiving vault.

Liberal Notes from Illinois.

FRIENDS OF LIBERALISM IN ILLINOIS: Within the past three months I hav been in nearly every place I could reach by rail, between here and the Wabash, Ohio, and Mississippi rivers. And if there are any activ Liberals in that part of the state whom I hav not seen, I am sorry for it. I should certainly hav tried to hunt them up had they sent me a letter or postal, informing me of their whereabouts; unless so be that they resided so far away from the railroad that I could not reach them. I found some who professed to be Freethinkers in nearly every place I visited. Yet there were but comparatively few who dared to speak out and let their Liberalism be known, through fear of social ostracism. There were a few grand exceptions, whose names I would be glad to mention, were it not for occupying too much space. And there are many more who would be more outspoken were it not that they are tied to some secret society in which the Bible is used in administering their obligations. When they joined these societies or orders they were Deists; many of them were Christians, honestly or tacitly accepting the Bible as the revealed will of God. But they, being men of thought and brains, hav opened their eyes and seen the grander truths of nature and her laws; and as a consequence, they hav become Atheists or Agnostics. And then was when the shoe pinched, and their clothes became too small. They love the order to which they belong, but they hate the gag it has put in their mouths, which is choking their lips to silence in regard to their broader and happier views of life and humanity. Hundreds of my readers will appreciate the truth of what I am saying, and say that it is just what they would gladly hav said themselvs, had they only dared. To such I say, Strike for mental liberty, my brother! This thing cannot last much longer. Every secret society or order that uses the Bible on its altar, and compels its initiates to acknowledge a belief in an almighty God as a test of membership, I care not how beneficent that society may be in its charities, must either remove that book from its lodge work, and revise its rituals, by expunging from them every religious test, or it will inevitably be compelled to share the rapidly waning fortunes of an effete theology. I say this not as an enemy to secret orders, but as a friend. Pecuniarily my past three months work has been quite a loss to me. Railroad fares and hotel bills more than used up all of my sales of books, pamphlets, etc., so that I returned here with considerable less money than I started with. I met with some warm friends to the Liberal cause, and had many interesting experiences, which I should be pleased to relate had I time and space. A few years since, no man could hav made a similar trip with safety. He would hav been insulted and abused, and most likely mobbed. Yet although I expressed my sentiments freely on all suitable occasions, I met with no ill treatment. Occasionally some ignoramus would say to me, "Such a man as you ought to be shut up, and not allowed to speak." But to the credit of Christianity let met say: This class of believers are largely outside of the church, a kind of ignorant bigots, who, poll-parrot like, only utter the real sentiments of the priests. There are many such to be found outside of Egypt.

I scattered a streak of Liberal literature along my entire route, which will accomplish good results in the future. And I put in a new League in Carmi, that I hope may become a beacon light for Liberalism in that part of the state. Since my return to Duquoin, I hav been busy preparing for another trip. Sunday, P.M., Jan. 14th, under the auspices of the St. Johns League, I delievered an address to a large and attentiv audience, two of whom were ministers, one a Methodist, the other a Baptist. My subject was, "Is the Bible a True History?" my text, the story of creation. I should be pleased to speak in every town I may visit on my return trip toward the northern part of the state. There are several counties, east of the Illinois Central R. R., between here and Bloomington, that I hav not yet visited. I hope the Liberals who liv in that direction will write to me on reading this. Address me at Bloomington, Ill.,

From this time on I shall be arranging for holding the next Annual State League Convention, further particulars of which, as to time and place, I will make known to you in due season. I need a little help in carrying on this work. Friend Liberals, this is your cause as much as mine, so please to let me hear from you.

Remember that one dollar makes any man or woman a life member of the State League of Illinois. And every dollar of that money, and more with it, is expended in the interest of the League. Now let us all take hold and make the next State League Convention the best Liberal meeting ever held in Illinois. We can do it if we all try. I will send any one a cirtificate of membership, on receipt of their membership fee. We hav now 196 members, 42 of whom are ladies. Let us try to double this before the next State League Convention.

Since I wrote you last, a pall has shadowed our pathway. A brave soldier has fallen in the front of the battle! One in whom we had trusted to lead us on to victory! He has fallen with his face to the foe, and another has donned his armor, one in whom we can trust, for he has been already tried. Then let us all rally, and that too with renewed energy, around our new standard bearer. Let every reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER try to double its subscription list during the present year. This could be easily done if all would try. But if it is accomplished a large portion of the work has got to be done by the comparativly few.

Finally, let me say in conclusion that, while we all lament the loss of a dear and noble friend, champion, and brother, for such he was to every one who loves THE TRUTH SEEKER, let us move fearlessly and bravely on, rejoicing in the thought that, when the last battle for universal mental liberty has been fought and victory won, and when all of those who oppress, torture, and imprison their fellow-men for expressing their honest convictions of what is truth, right, and justice, shall hav been swept from the face of the earth, into the hades of oblivion, then, amongst the immortal names of those brave men and woman whose lives hav been devoted to the emancipation of our race from the thraldom of superstition and ignorance, which will grace the brightest pages of the coming history of the world, will be recorded the name of D. M. Bennett, the founder and editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Until further notice is given, please address me at Bloomington, Ill.

F. F. FOLLETT,
Sec. S. L. L. of Illinois.

The Nineteenth Century Club.

From the Tribune of Feb. 18th.

A wide toleration of opinion and belief is certainly one of the most striking characteristics of the age. It is true that the "odium theologicum" is still very bitter; but the church of to-day is not disposed [because unable] to persecute defections in faith and belief with the unrelenting hostility which was once characteristic of it. Whatever the theologians may say or do to each other, the common people are allowed a wide latitude of opinion. It is even possible to-day for the intelligent unbeliever and the devout believer to meet together in the same society and reasonably discuss the points on which they disagree. Whether or not this toleration is a good thing need not be discussed. But it may be noted as a fact. The Nineteenth Century Club, which has been recently formed in this city, is a conspicuous example of this toleration. While it is largely composed of ladies and gentlemen who are prominent members of the church and of society, there is in it also a respectable sprinkling of Agnostics and men who do not accept Christianity as a divine revelation. Its president openly avows himself a Freethinker, while among its vice-presidents may be found the names of some of the most prominent and orthodox clergymen of the city. The motto of this unique club is taken from "holy scripture:" "Prove all things; hold fast to that which is good." At its next meeting, on Tuesday evening, at the house of the president, Mr. Courtlandt Palmer, 117 East 21st street, the subject of "Freethought" will be discussed by the Rev. Dr. Rylance, of this city. It is expected that he will be followed in the discussion of the subject by the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, the Rev. R. Heber Newton, the Rev. Dr. J. P. Newman, the Rev. Dr. Gottheil, and other eminent clergymen. Such a club discussing such a subject would hav been an impossibility fifty years ago, and is an interesting sign of the times.

A Shot at the Mountebanks.

From the Herald.

Instead of being as pachydermatous as a rhinoceros Dr. Talmage suddenly proves to be very thin skinned. Else why the protest against Mr. Howson's alleged "make-up" after him? Mr. Talmage is overparticular. It is true that Mr. Howson's sole business is to amuse the public, but what else does Mr. Talmage try to do? Whether he is right in doing it is open to doubt, for nothing disgusts the ordinary churchgoer so much as undue levity in the pulpit. To joke about the Bible until the people roar with laughter is infinitly more harmful than to deny its inspiration. If orthodox ministers really believe that mankind are on the road to perdition, and that it is their mission to save sinners from the sulphurous flames, they ought to put on at least the semblance of seriousness when they discuss the subject. When the clergyman strains after something funny, like the end man of a minstrel troupe, the fires of the other world come to be regarded as no more alarming than the red blaze which lights up the dénouement of the stage tragedy.

Dr. Talmage might safely be indicted for keeping a popular place of amusement open on Sunday. The report of his last sermon is rather hotly peppered with the descriptiv "Applause," "Laughter," "Great Applause," which show that the audience had an uproarious and delightful time, in spite of the penal code, and that to hear Talmage preach is better than to go to a second-class comedy. He honored the cause of religion by saying, "I believe Samson slew a multitude with the jawbone of an ass, and he who assails the Bible is wielding the same weapon." His opinion of Mr. Newton is not very obscurely hidden under an impetuous denunciation of "these hybrid theologians, these mongrel ecclesiastics, these half-and-half evoluted pulpiteers." We venture to say that such language ought not to be used among gentlemen and could not be used by scholars. That a popular clergyman can indulge in it to the unbounded delight of his people, is a sign of the times over which we hav little cause for congratulation.

A Jewish rabbi, Rev. Dr. Brown, has successfully proven that there is just as much fun in the Old Testament as in the New. We hav heretofore regarded Dr. Talmage as the only one of the kind, and felt rather proud that there was not enough folly in the world to support his double. Dr. Brown, however, has suddenly attained a reputation for saying what ought not to be said, of which no one is likely to be envious. He had the appalling audacity to say in his dedicatory harang: "The congregation has taken a house that has been used by the Methodist Episcopal worshipers. Therefore, in business parlance, this is simply a reopening. The old firm consisted of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. Now the partnership is dissolved. The Son and the Holy Ghost hav stepped down and out, but the business will be conducted by the Father, the old head of the firm, the one you always hav trusted."

If this is the way in which our children are to be taught religious truth, then the less religious truth we hav the better. The decency of Infidelity is to be preferred to the indecencies of the pulpit. Clergymen may hunger and thirst after notoriety, and the world may laugh heartily over their grotesque attempts to attain it, but after all the community has a very slender respect for a man whose only means of influencing the masses consists of the buffoon's mask and the Chinese gong.

THE North American Review for March opens with an article on "Money in Elections," by Henry George, who brings to the discussion of that hackneyed subject a contribution full of originality, freshness, and keen insight; he points out with admirable clearness one source of our political ills, and proposes a remedy that seems both eminently practicable and efficient. Robert S. Taylor writes of the "Subjugation of the Mississippi," a work which, in his opinion, and in that of the Mississippi Commission, of which he is a member, can be accomplished only by employing, for the purpose of deepening and straightening the channel, the forces developed by the river itself. Moncure D. Conway contributes a very striking study of Gladstone as a man and a statesman, showing how even the more or less sinister moral and intellectual traits of his nature, quite as much as his pre-eminent nativ force and elevation of character, conspire to make him the foremost Englishman of his time. Hon. George W. Julian's "Railway Influence in the Land Office" is a grave, judicial exposure of the practices which, against the manifest intent of the law and the determinations of the highest courts, hav won for corporations millions upon millions of acres of the public domain. Richard A. Proctor writes of the "Pyramid of Cheops;" Prof. Wm. G. Sumner of "Protectiv Taxes and Wages;" Elizur Wright of "Some Aspects of Life Insurance;" and finally, there is a symposium on "Educational Need," by Prof. G. Stanley Hall, Prof. Felix Adler, President Thomas Hunter, and Dr. Mary Putnam Jacobi. Published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York, and for sale by booksellers generally.

"ANSWERS TO CHRISTIAN QUESTIONS." By D. M. Bennett. Price, 25 cents.

Translation.

The Tomb of Fanaticism.

[An examination of Lord Bolingbroke's doctrines. Written by Voltaire in 1767 and translated from the French by Avery Meriwether.]

CHAPTER XXVII.

THE MIRACLES.

After the oriental marvels of the Old Testament, and those in the New, God, carried to the top of a mountain by the devil, descends to change jars of water into wine; to blight a fig-bush, because, forsooth, the fig-bush fails to bear figs toward the end of winter; to put the devil into the bodies of two thousand hogs—after one has seen all these interesting performances, it is not astonishing that they should have been imitated.

Pierre Simon Barjona, it is well known, resuscitated a seamstress named Dorcas; it was well to do this for a woman who mended in charity the tunics of the faithful. But I shall not forget that Simon Pierre Barjona suddenly killed Ananias and his wife Sapphira, two good creatures, because it was thought that they had been so foolish as to give all their goods to the apostles. Their crime was that they had retained the means to meet their pressing wants.

O Pierre (Peter)! O disinterested apostles! You persuade, you direct us already to give up our goods! By what right do you thus take away the fortunes of a family? Here is the first example of the robbery committed by your sects, a robbery which should be repressed. Come to London and try the same game. You will see whether the descendants of Sapphira and Ananias would not report and the grand jury indict you. "But they have given their money with a free will," you reply. You have misled them and deprived them of their free will. You say to this, that they have retained something for themselves. Base robbers, you have committed the crime of just keeping them from starving! Were they obliged to tell you their secrets? Were a sharper to come to me and say, "Have you any money?" I would truly answer, "I have none." Here, in a word, is the most abominable miracle that can be found in the legends called the miracles. None of those which have been subsequently performed equal it; and if it was true it would be the most execrable of all truths.

It is good to have the gift of language; it would be better to have common sense. The fathers of the church should have less of the gift of language; they should speak less. This was not the case with Origen and Jerome, who understood Hebrew. Augustine, Ambrose, John, Chrysostom did not know a word of it.

We have already considered those beautiful miracles of the martyrs who allowed themselves to be decapitated as the crowning show. Origen, in his first book against Celsus, said that the Christians had visions; but he never pretended that they could raise the dead.

The Christians performed all their great works during the first century. St. John, for instance, who was buried in Ephesus, stirred continually in his tomb; this miracle was very useful up to the time of Augustus, the bishop of Hippus. Predictions and exorcisms were not wanting. Lucien himself renders the same testimony. In the chapter upon the death of the Christian Peregrinus, who had the vanity to burn himself, he does honor to truth—"Since this facile juggler has turned Christian, he is sure to make a fortune at the expense of fanatical fools with whom he has dealings."

The Christians were perpetually performing miracles, of which no Roman ever spoke. Those of Gregory the Thaumaturgist, or the Marvelous, were in fact worthy of his name. First of all, a beautiful old man descended from heaven to dictate to him the catechism which he was to teach. Having found a messenger, he wrote a letter to the devil. The letter reached its destination, and his Satanic majesty did not fail to do what Gregory ordered him to do.

Two brothers quarreled about the possession of a pond; Gregory dried up the pond in order to stop the contention. He met a coal-burner and made him a bishop. This is apparently since the times when the faith of the charcoal-burner passed into a proverb. But that miracle is not a great one; I hav seen bishops in my travels who knew no more than the coal-burner mentioned by Gregory. A greater miracle than this is that one day some pagans ran after Gregory and his deacon in order to harm them; in an instant they changed themselves into two trees. This juggler was a true Proteus. But what shall we call those who have written such ineffable stuff? And how is it that Fleury has copied this in his ecclesiastical history? Is it possible that a man who had some sense, and who reasoned passably well upon other subjects, would have reported with seriousness that God crazed an old man in order to prevent him from discovering Saint Felix de Nole in times of persecution?*

I am told that Fleury kept within bounds in writing; as for my part, I do not think it necessary to transcribe the follies which are injurious to divinity, that he was very culpable if he had copied this without believing it, or he was a fool if he had believed it.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Old Times Reviewed Again.

The hungry generations tread each other down and derive nothing from their predecessors' experience.

The newspapers of the day remark upon the late utterances of the Rev. Newton as though they are novelties from such a source as the pulpit, express their surprise, and when it is reported that nine-tenths of his hearers indorse his views their amazement is unutterable. While such Liberal and free thought suits the city, all through the country, at every cross-roads and hamlet, the Rev. Poundtexts, "who beat the pulpit drum ecclesiastic," thunder the doctrins of election, eternal damnation, and pure Bible-idolatry as much as ever, and their hearers are in the most profound ignorance of the advanced views held by their fellow-churchmen in cities. And they are carefully held in ignorance by their spiritual guardians. If a country editor by accident or design publishes in his paper an extract from "Bob" Ingersoll, he in the next issue apologizes with most abject servility. Such is the case all over the rural districts, with rare exceptions here and there.

In 1850–4 the name Colenso was seen and heard as often as that of Ingersoll is to-day. Bishop Colenso of the church of England gave to orthodoxy and Christianity then the most tremendous shock it ever received. He suddenly presented to the world several volumes containing the most thorough, searching, critical investigation of the Old Testament, and withal the most scholarly ever made. He took large portions of it, verse by verse, and exposed its absurdity, the utter impossibility of many of its most ordinary accounts of affairs. He was summoned before the Court of Arches and acquitted. The church of England, like the church of Rome, is not founded on Bible idolatry. The church is older than the Bible; receives, guards, corrects, defines, etc., within bounds. Thus it has even changed the seventh day of the fourth commandment to the first day. In this view the Bible is liable to respectful criticism and question by churchmen.

To this day Colenso is a bishop of the church of England, and a Christian believer. The great difficulty with Colenso, as to consistency, as I conceive, is this: He brings his reason to bear on texts, and, exposing their absurdity, dismisses them. Why not apply his reason as well to a few texts on which the whole scheme of Christianity rests? Thus we are approached by those who tell us the most amazing tale human imagination ever devised, viz., that the infinit being who holds in his hand the countless systems of worlds rolling in space begot a son, a few hundred years ago, by a virgin of an obscure people of western Asia. Now such a statement requires proof commensurate with its improbability, and this the more especially as the story was by no means new when applied to Jesus Christ. But for this incredulity might be annihilated in amazement. But when we ask for proof of the only fact that can establish this claim of Jesus to be the son of God, of this miraculous conception and birth, we hav literally nothing but the hearsay report of an old man's dream. Granting that Matthew wrote his gospel, he himself, according to it, knew Jesus first after he was arrived at thirty years of age. Should any venerable Joseph of to-day marry under the circumstances, and really repeat such a dream in testimony of such a birth, what credit could we giv to him or it? Does the removing of the story back eighteen hundred years, amid confusion and darkness, and coupling to it another statement, by another holy, inspired writer, Luke, who contradicts the first, and puts the birth of the son long after King Herod's death, and after his son Archilaus had reigned in his stead, been banished, and a governor, Cyrennius, was ruling, aid the first tale? "Lord God! thou art too hard for us—the poor creatures whom thou hast created. Command us, and we will do all within our power, but our beliefs we cannot control." And this is somewhat as poor Colenso prayed when the utter absurdity of Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, etc., became apparent to him.

Let any believer in scripture just begin to read Exodus with an inquiring, critical mind, as did Colenso Let any truthseeker who reads this go to some believing friend and put him upon the inquiry. Bear in mind that Moses says the Hebrews went down into Egypt seventy in number, and that he took out "604,000 men fit for war," with women, children, much cattle, and strangers—"a mixed multitude." There are five persons for every man "fit for war;" and this makes three million souls.

Egypt at one time had over seven million people, and Pharaoh says in the first chapter of Exodus that the Jews are "more and mightier than we." So he speaks to the midwives, who were two in number, and orders them to destroy the male children. The average of births is over one hundred per day, per million, so these two would be kept busy attending three hundred births, at least, per day.

Note also the rapid increase during four generations of not only the whole people from less than one hundred, but of each tribe. Thus Dan went down as one man, and came out in 217 years (the 400 years being from the promis to Abram) as 6,400 men (Num. xxvi, 43). So of the others.

Note that Aaron did and said in the presence of all (Ex. iv, 30). Yet they were scattered all over Egypt (v, 12). Suddenly they are all in Goshen (ix, 26).

Note that Pharaoh's magicians could equal all the miracles of Moses, except the Jews could beat them in the lice. All the cattle died of murrain (ix, 6). They are again killed by hail (ix, 20–22). All first-born of beasts are to be slain again (xi, 5), and in xii, 29, are slain. In xii, 30–51, all the Egyptians and Jews got up that night, and the Jews started off with the whole mixed multitude and cattle—three millions, remember! Reader, were you ever a soldier, and do you recall how long it took, what preparations, etc., to march through a rich, peopled land, not a desert? Yet these three million people started off after midnight, with all their cattle, children, etc., and hurried from Rameses to Succoth, thirty miles, before evening—went out "harnessed," or five abreast, thence to Ethan and to Pi-hahiroth, ninety miles in three days, space and time annihilated, rushing along regardless of the accidents of life, its necessities, three hundred births a day, wants of people and cattle. Their line must hav extended back to Rameses when they began to cross the Red Sea, yet Pharaoh and all his hosts, chariots, and horses chosen, and horsemen, notwithstanding the previous killing twice of every beast, start after them like one company trying to overtake another. Evidently the writer never saw a regiment in motion, else such blunders had never been committed. The three millions cross over dry shod where the sea is three miles wide, in the morning watch, and the Egyptians plunge after them. Then Moses calls on his people to stand and behold the glory of the Lord, forgetful of this greater miracle of the march. The hosts of Pharaoh are drowned, and Miriam and others dance and sing before the mighty multitude. In the midst of all these wonders the people grumble for water, with the Red Sea before them, and miracles abounding enough to freshen its waters. But they march to Elim, where there were twelve wells and seventy palm-trees to refresh and shade them (Ex. xv, 27). When Xerxes marched his great army of three millions he had to separate them and send them by various routes, because they drank up all the small rivers. Thirty days later we find them at Sin hungry and complaining, and there they began to feed on manna. What the cattle had we are not told (xvii). Moses strikes a rock whence flows water. Bible pictures usually represent this scene by a good-sized stone and a stream as large as one's arm, with a few persons standing about holding pitchers. About here the Lord got mad at Amalek, and swore to fight him forever.

But just let anyone bear in mind the multitude, men and cattle, their wants, habits, etc., and he will see ten thousand absurdities that will at once convince him, as they did Colenso, there was no need of inspiration to narrate them. Consider the size of the camp, the impossible duties of the priests, three only in number, required to kill some days hundreds of thousands of animals or birds, and eat large portions.

Let the believer in a God think of that eternal, ineffable being ordering, commanding, doing the things set down in these books—blowing a trumpet on Sinai, expostulating with Moses, calling him up and ordering him down to keep the people from coming up, "lest he break through upon them" like a mad animal.

One of the most remarkable of the actions detailed in the whole Bible is that of Joshua, where, after the miraculous crossing of Jordan, he circumcises some half million or more men and boys in a day, just as though it had been a matter of course.

In short, good friends, search the scriptures critically, for in them we shall find a great deal to wonder at of our own and our neighbor's stupidity—a great deal to admire and a great deal worthy of remembering forever.

Colenso says that upon the occasion of an alarm concerning a Zulu attack while he was in South Africa, he had a striking illustration of the utter absurdity of Moses's narrativ of the sudden exodus of the Jews from Egypt. Colenso's household was somewhere near forty in number, and the alarm was at night, and the order to depart imperativ. All the possible haste of people fleeing for their lives was made, and yet it took considerable time and was plainly evident that every additional soul but increased the confusion and delay.

A good-hearted, friendly old soldier friend and

---

* See the 16th and 17th books of Fleury in regard to those miracles (1767). Also the "Account of the Miracles performed by St. Medad in Paris," presented to the King of France, Louis XV., by a man named Carre de Montgeron, counsellor to the parliament of Paris. The convulsionairs performed or had seen more than a thousand miracles. Fatio and Dande pretended to resuscitate the dead so late as 1707. Did not the court of Rome canonize all those days on which miracles were performed in order to get money from the saints? And how was it that the miracles made us monks before the time when, under Henry VIII., all the instruments and abominable impostures of the saints were exposed to the public [1771]?

United States pensioner once came to pray with and for me. "Oh," said he, "I cannot rest and see you going to eternal damnation. I pray for you in the fields. You hav been such a friend to me when I was in need I feel I could giv my life to save your soul," and the good fellow burst out crying.

"Why do you think my soul will be damned?" I asked.

"Oh, you know; the scriptures say so. You are such an unbeliever."

"And do you believe the scriptures—every word of them?" I asked.

"Certainly! Every line and every word. If I could disbelieve one verse I could disbelieve it all," he replied.

"Come now," said I, "you hav come here to pray for me. Pray on. But after that I want you to listen to me. Will you?"

"To be sure I will."

So after his prayers I began to show him these things before mentioned. "Now, you hav been a soldier, good and faithful, for the whole war. You know how long it takes to march a few regiments over a creek. You know what one hundred thousand are, and what one million are. Do you really believe that Moses marched all these people and cattle over a desert country, old men, old women, mothers, babes, infants being born, as well as calves, every few minutes on the way, Moses talking to them, etc?"

The honest man became very pale. "Not without a miracle I can't believe it. I remember how long it took for us to cross a creek down in Georgia once."

"Very well. Then if God helped the Jews by a miracle he must hav also helped Pharaoh and all his hosts by a like miracle in their pursuit."

That fixed him. Never since has he believed so credulously in scripture. CLARKE IRVINE.

Implacable Infidels.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: It is evident that there are a few bigots of both Spiritual and Material proclivities in the Liberal ranks. What a pity the church is deprived of their congenial influence, and Liberalism obliged to bear the burden of their intolerance! If malcontents on either side can only answer sensible argument by sneers and denunciation, and cannot bear a critical discussion of the Spiritual question, they should go to the wall while brave men contend for the truth. THE TRUTH SEEKER of to-day takes the only consistent course for a Freethought journal, viz., "to giv all sides a hearing." Let the grand old TRUTH SEEKER still go on in its noble work of reform, and freely discuss all questions of vital interest to humanity, and it will command the respect of all true friends of the Liberal cause. Your Spiritualistic friend,

Norwich, Conn. BYRON BOARDMAN.

The Authorship of the Pentateuch.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: "The question whether the Pentateuch is documentary, and the question whether it is the work of Moses," says the Rev. Howard Crosby, "are entirely distinct from one another. Bancroft's 'History of the United States' is the work of Bancroft, but it comprises many documents written long before Bancroft was born. No one would, because of this fact, dare to impeach Bancroft's authorship."

The Pentateuch, as everybody knows, comprises the first five books of the Old Testament, as they were arranged by the compositors or by the intelligent printer who made up the first few forms of the Bible, and includes the essays entitled "Genesis," "Exodus," "Leviticus," "Numbers," and "Deuteronomy."

In the last chapter of Deuteronomy, sixth verse, we find the following item of news:

"And he [the Lord] buried him [Moses] in a valley in the land of Moab, over against Beth-peor; but no man knoweth of his sepulcher unto this day."

It will be noticed that this was written some time after the funeral. If Moses was the reporter on this sad occasion he ought to hav remembered the location of the cemetery where they buried him, and he would also probably hav mentioned some of the influential citizens who attended. He would further, in all likelihood, hav pointed out the place to his surviving relativs, so they might see that his grave was kept green. The idea, therefore, that Moses wrote that paragraph, it seems to us, must for the reasons indicated be given up.

If in an article in the Independent signed "Howard Crosby," we should find a passage like this: "And they buried your correspondent in a valley in Hoboken, over against Weehawken, and no man knoweth of his sepulcher unto this day;" and then if it should go on to say that Howard was the greatest prophet that had ever arisen in the United States, the fact that men are not in the habit of writing after they are dead, and that Howard Crosby is not a prophet, would lead us to believe that some one had been using his signature without his authority.

Mr. Crosby claims that documents written before Bancroft was born, and contained in his "History," are no evidence against his authorship of the work. In the case of Moses the objection is that some of the passages of which he is claimed to hav been the author were written after he was dead.

Mr. Crosby should read the Bible with Paine's "Age of Reason" convenient for reference, and under the light of Ingersoll's commentaries. Let him also subscribe for THE TRUTH SEEKER, and peruse it with diligence. If after a year of this course of study he still believes that Moses though dead still writeth, the only way left to get proper sense into his head will be to fire it in with a gun. G. E. M.

Paine's Monument.

In the Herald of the 12th is the following concerning Paine's monument in New Rochelle. From what we hav learnt from Capt. Loyd, who livs at New Rochelle, we believe Mr. Lester blameless in all but being a Presbyterian, and perhaps his environments are such that he cannot help it. The reporter shows his intimate knowledge of Paine's belief by saying he was an Atheist:

"In 1839 a straight shaft of granit was erected in Westchester county to mark the final resting-place of Tom Paine, the Atheist and patriot, who was buried on the farm, near New Rochelle, where he had passed the later years of his life. This monument was in time much defaced by vandals and relic hunters. Two years ago it was taken down, the broken corners rounded, the scars effaced, and the inscriptions recut. On May 30, 1881, it was rededicated. Since then rumor has stated that it has been again defaced, but a visit to the spot yesterday showed that this is untrue.

"The monument stands on the right-hand side of the road after leaving New Rochelle in the center of a plot of ground twenty feet square, protected on the sides and back by stone walls three feet high, and on the road front by an iron railing. It is in excellent order. The plot on which the shaft was erected is surrounded by the property of the Lester family. In a handsome house a hundred yards further up the road Mr. Simon Lester livs. He was originally a farmer, but has long since retired from activ work. He is now eighty-seven years of age, although his ruddy cheeks, dark hair scarcely touched with gray, and firm step would make him look not over sixty-five. He said yesterday to a reporter: 'I came here to reside in 1825, and from then on heard many remarkable stories of Paine from those who had known him intimately. After a while I became an elder in the Presbyterian church here. For this reason, I suppose, Mr. Paine's admirers, who knew he was buried near my property, hav accused me of being instrumental in the past vandalism. This is not true. I seldom speak of Paine, for the man is dead, and I let his memory rest. But for many years past I hav been beset by denunciatory letters from all parts of the country. I hav even received letters from England of the same tenor.

"'The truth is that it was I who cleared off the brush which had overgrown the plot, and with my own hands drove the four stakes in the ground, twenty feet east of the monument, which mark the exact spot where lie Tom Paine's ashes. The story that the monument had been egged recently is untrue. I hav passed the spot several times a day all my life, and never saw an egg mark on it. The only time it was defaced in my memory was about ten years ago, when some mischievous boys bespattered it with mud. As soon as we heard of this my wife took two servants with her and had the stone scrubbed clean.'"

As to Calendars.

There is, it seems to me, in the new Bruno chronology something necessarily linking itself with Christianity that is, to say the least, unpleasant. Only less distasteful than their treatment of the Jews in cutting off four thousand years from their record—virtually all of it—it is as if Christians should say to us: "After all, we made this date for you."

